TABLE OF CONTENTS

PREFACE

The third volume of the History of Dharmaśāstra was published in October 1946. In the brief preface to that volume I intimated that the remaining topics of Dharmaśāstra would be dealt with in one volume. But as I proceeded with the task I found that that was a miscalculation. To present in one volume all the topics that remained in the manner and on the scale that I had adopted in the first three volumes was found to be impossible. Besides, as my age advanced, I could not maintain the same speed and finish the whole history in a few years as I intimated I would do in the preface to the third volume. Therefore, I had to decide, however reluctantly, to spread the remaining work over two volumes. Owing to the scarcity of paper and paucity of skilled workers, this volume has been in the press for more than three years This volume deals with eight topics, viz Pātaka, Prāyaścitta, Karmavipāka, Antyeṣṭi, Āśauca, Śuddhi, Śrāddha and Tīrthayātrā. These subjects are of great interest to anthropologists. There was great temptation for me, when dealing with these topics, to indulge in dwelling upon similar beliefs, usages and rites described in such works as Frazer's 'Golden Bough.' For two reasons, however, I have rarely succumbed to this temptation. In the first place, there was the fear of increasing the bulk of the work which has already assumed enormous proportions. In the second place, dwelling on comparisons of ancient and medieval Indian usages and rites with similar usages and rites found elsewhere is liable to serious misunderstanding. Frazer's volumes are largely made up of materials concerning the beliefs, usages and rites of very primitive people. It appeared to me that readers of such comparisons might be led to think that people in ancient and medieval India were at a primitive stage of culture, while as a matter of fact they had a very high culture in most matters, although they retained certain beliefs and usages derived from remote antiquity. Many cultured societies retain some usages that belong to periods of antiquity. The queen in France was not to leave for a whole year the room in which the death of her consort was announced to her. Wretched old women deemed to be witches were prosecuted and sentenced to death in England up to the beginning of the eighteenth century, while Manu (IX. 290) more than two thousand years ago prescribed the mild punishment of a fine of two hundred paṇas for all incantations intended to destroy life, for magic rites and for raising ghosts and goblins. My main aim has throughout been to discover, collect, classify and interpret the facts of the various departments of Dharmaśāstra and my endeavour has been, as far as in me lies, to present the truth with detachment and intellectual integrity and without bias (except what might have been unconsciously engendered in my mind owing to my being born and brought up in a brāhmaṇa family) to show the continuity, the developments and transformations in Indian beliefs, rites and usages throughout the ages and, while bringing the past in its causal relations with the present, to indicate and suggest future trends and changes in these matters. †

The fifth and last volume will mainly deal with the following subjects vratas and utsavas, śānti rites, kāla and muhūrta; paurāṇa-dharma, the influence of the Pūrvamīmāṃsā and other śāstras on dharmaśāstra; the cosmological, religious and philosophical background of dharmaśāstra; the fundamental aspects of our culture through the ages; the impact of modern social and other ideas and trends on the dogmas and ideals of dharmaśāstra and the future of the latter This by itself is rather an ambitious programme. Now that I am over seventy-three years of age and suffering from several ailments I have misgivings whether I would be able to write this last volume and publish it while all mental and physical faculties are sound I am myself extremely anxious to write this last volume as early as possible and bring to a conclusion an undertaking to which I have devoted all my leisure for over thirty years regardless of monetary losses and bodily ailments. With that object in view I have given up either entirely or very largely most of my other activities and engagements and have thereby offended many of my friends.

This volume also is full of quotations, references to inscriptions and judicial decisions. The reasons for this have been stated at length in the preface to the second volume and therefore they need not be repeated here. The list of additions to this volume is much larger than in the preceding volumes. I may be pardoned for frankly stating the reason. The first and second volumes of the History of Dharmaśāstra were published so far back as 1930 and 1941 respectively. No second edition of these has yet been called. It seems to me quite possible that during my life-time no second edition of the volumes of the History, or at least of this volume, might appear. Therefore, I tried to incorporate by way of additions such information as had escaped me while the work was being written in order to make it as complete as possible.

† Prof. J. B Bury, a distinguished Professor of History in the Cambridge University, thought that freedom from bias was not possible and was not also desirable, since a man writing history completely free from bias would produce a colourless and dull work Vide 'Selected Essays' (edited by Harold Temperley, 1930) p. 70

I now discharge the pleasant duty of acknowledging my obligations to others Bloomfield's Vedic Concordance, the Vedic Index of Professors Macdonell and Keith, and the volumes of the Sacred Books of the East have been very useful in preparing this volume as in the case of its predecessors. Paramahamsa Swāmī Kevalānanda Sarasvatī of Wai has been a tower of strength in all matters of doubt and difficulty and has helped me by offering prompt guidance in solving some intricate problems. I am highly obliged to Mr. S. N. Savadi of the Bhandarkar Oriental Institute, Poona, for help in the correction of proofs and to Mr. P. M. Purandare, Advocate (O. S.), Bombay High Court, and Tarkatīrtha Raghunath Shāstri Kokje of Lonavla for reading the printed sheets as they came and making valuable suggestions.

It is difficult to name all those who in various ways, during the progress of this volume for over six years, kindly rendered assistance, but I should like to make special mention of Prof. K V. Rangaswami Aiyangar, Mr. A. N. Krishna Aiyangar, Dr. A. S. Altekar, Dr. S K Belvalkar, Prof. G. H. Bhatt, Mr. Bhabatosh Bhattacharya, Mr. N. G. Chapekar, Dr. R. N. Dandekar, Mr. D. B Diskalkar, Dr. G. S Gai, Prof. P. K. Gode, Tarka-tīrtha Laksmanashāstrī Joshi, Mr. G. H. Khare, Pandit Balacharya Khuperkar, Dr. Umesha Mishra, Dr. V. Raghavan, Prof. L. Renou, Prof. H. D. Velankar. Thanks are due to these scholars and many others for help and interest in this volume. I am conscious that in spite of so much help and generous encouragement from friends there are in this volume several mistakes, the sole responsibility for which rests on my shoulders. In a work replete with thousands of quotations and references it is quite likely that many slips have escaped my attention. § For these and for the elision of a few diacritical marks and the displacement of parts of Sanskrit letters in the process of printing the indulgence and forgiveness of all readers are sought. I sincerely thank the Manager of the Aryabhushan Press Poona, for carrying out the work of printing this volume with care in spite of difficulties caused by paper and labour shortage.

§ I take this opportunity of correcting two mistakes that I regret I committed in the third volume of the History of Dharmaśāstra. In note 1886 on p 968 (of vol III) I refer to a work of Mr Batuknath Bhattacharya that contains a full treatment of Kalivarjya. I suggested in that note that Mr. Bhattacharya probably retouched his thesis after 1937 though it was written in 1933, in view of the fact that he referred to the Smrtimuktāphala (which was published in 1937 by Mr Gharpure) Through oversight I forgot that Mr. Bhattacharya had expressly stated that he used the transcript of a ms of the Smrtimuktāphala specially made for him. Therefore, I was wrong in my surmise that he probably retouched his thesis and I must say that the thesis as published in 1943 is the same as that written in 1933 for the Jogendrachandra Ghose Research Prize The second mistake refers to Dr. U. N Ghosal on p 32 (of vol III) I stated 'it is not possible to hold as Jayaswal, U Ghosal and others do that the theory of social contract was the earlier one and the theory of divine right of kings was later on propounded by the Manusmrti to support the brāhmana empire of Pusyamitra' In writing this sentence my memory was at fault I find that Dr. Ghosal does not hold the view that I attributed to him. In the 'Indian Historical Quarterly' (vol 23, pp 68-70) Dr Ghosal justly protests against my bracketing him with Jayaswal, but I cannot help observing that the last sentence in the paper shows unexpected acerbity In his whole career as a writer Dr Ghosal was not probably guilty of a single slip and could not therefore bring himself to believe that my mistake might have been bona fide.

some important Sanskrit works and authors referred to in volume IV

N. B.—Some dates, particularly of ancient works, are conjectural and disputed by several scholars. Most of the dates about authors from the 8th or 9th century refer to the probable periods of their literary activity except in the case of a few authors such as Śankarācārya and Vidyāpati.

4000 B. C.–1000 B. C.—The period of the Vedic Samhitās, Brāhmanas and Upanisads. Some hymns of the Ṛgveda, of the Atharvaveda, and in the Taittirīya Samhitā and Brāhmana may possibly go back to a period earlier than 4000 B. C. and some of the Upanisads (even from among those that are regarded by most scholars as the earliest ones) may be later than 1000 B. C. Some scholars have criticized me for ascribing the vedic samhitās to such an early date as 4000 B. C. Time and health permitting, I may have to deal with this question in a separate work after I finish the 5th and last volume on which I am now engaged.

800 B. C.–500 B. C.—The Nirukta of Yāska

800 B. C.–400 B. C.—The principal śrautasūtras (of Āpastamba, Āśvalāyana, Baudhāyana, Kātyāyana, Satyāṣādha and others) and some of the gṛhyasūtras (such as those of Āpastamba and Āśvalāyana)

600–300 B. C.—The Dharmasūtras of Gautama, Āpastamba, Baudhāyana, Vasiṣṭha and the Gṛhyasūtras of Pāraskara and a few others.

600 B. C.–300 B. C.—Pāṇini

500 B. C.–200 B. C.—Jaimini's Pūrva-mīmāmsā-sūtra

500 B. C.–200 B. C—The Bhagavadgītā

300 B. C.—Vararuci Kātyāyana, author of Vārtikas on Pāṇini's sūtras

300 B. C–100 A. D.—Arthaśāstra of Kautilya (rather nearer the former date than the latter)

200 B. C.–100 A. D.—Manusmṛti

100 A. D–300 A D—Yājñavalkyasmṛti
100 A. D.–300 A. D.—Viṣṇudharmasūtra
100 A. D.–400 A. D—Nāradasmṛti
200 A D–400 A.D—Śabara's bhāṣya on Jaimini's Pūrva-mīmāṁsā-sūtra (rather nearer the former date)
300 A. D.–500 A. D—Bṛhaspati-smṛti on Vyavahāra and other topics (not yet found) Extracts on Vyavahāra were translated in S B E. vol 33 and extracts on many topics of Dharma were collected by Prof. Rangasvami Aiyangar and published in Gaikwad Oriental series 300 A D.–600 A. D—Some of the extant Purāṇas such as Vāyu, Viṣṇu, Mārkaṇḍeya, Matsya, Kūrma 500 A D–550 A D—Varāhamihira, author of Pañca-siddhāntikā, Bṛhatsaṁhitā, Bṛhat-Jātaka and other works
600 A D.–650 A. D.—Bāṇa, author of the Kādambarī and Harṣacarita
650–665 A. D.—Kāśikā, commentary by Vāmana and Jayāditya on Pāṇini's Aṣṭādhyāyī 650–700 A. D.—Kumārilabhaṭṭa, author of Tantravārtika and other works.
600 A. D–900 A. D—Most of the smṛtis such as those of Parāśara, Śaṅkha, Devala and some of the Purāṇas such as Agni, Garuḍa.
788 A. D.–820 A. D.—Śaṅkarācārya, the great Advaita philosopher
800 A. D.–850 A D—Viśvarūpa, the commentator of Yājñavalkya-smṛti
825 A D–900 A. D—Medhātithi, a commentator of Manusmṛti
966 A. D.—Utpala composed his commentary on the Bṛhajjātaka of Varāhamihira 1000 A D–1050 A. D.—Dhāreśvara Bhoja, author of numerous works
1080 A. D.–1100 A. D.–-Vijñāneśvara, the author of the Mitākṣarā commentary on Yājñavalkya-smṛti
1080 A. D.–1110 A D Govindarāja, a commentator of Manusmṛti
1100–1130 A D—Lakṣmīdhara, the author of a vast digest on Dharmaśāstra called Kalpataru or Kṛtyakalpataru 1100–1150 A D—Jīmūtavāhana, author of the Dāyabhāga, Kālaviveka and Vyavahāramātṛkā.
1100–1150 A. D Bhavadevabhaṭṭa, author of Prāyaścitta-prakaraṇa and other works 1110 A. D–1130—A. D Aparārka, Śilāhāra king, composed a commentary on Yājñavalkyasmṛti
1127 A. D.–1138 A. D—Mānasollāsa or Abhilaṣitārtha-cintāmaṇi of Someśvaradeva

1150 A.D.–1160 A.D.—Rājataranginī of Kalhana

1150 A.D.–1180 A.D.—Aniruddhabhatta, author of Hāralatā and Pitrdayitā

1150 A D.–1200 A.D.—Smrtyarthasāra of Śrīdhara

1200 A.D.–1225 A.D.—Smrticandrikā of Devannabhatta

1150 A.D.–1300 A.D.—Kullūka, a commentator on Manusmrti

1175 A.D.–1200 A.D.—Halāyudha, son of Dhanañjaya and author of Brāhmanasarvasva

1260 A D.–1270 A.D—Caturvargacintāmani of Hemādri

1275 A.D.–1310 A.D.—Śrīdatta, author of Pitrbhakti, Samayapradīpa and other works

1300 A.D.–1370 A.D—Candeśvara, author of Grhastharatnākara, Vivādaratnākara, Krtyaratnākara and other works

1300 A.D.–1380 A.D.—Sāyana, compiler of bhāsyas on Vedic Samhitās and Brāhmanas

PĀTAKA, PRĀYAŚCITTA AND KARMAVIPĀKA

CHAPTER I

The Article on sin in Hasting's Encyclopædia of Religion and Ethics (vol 11) will clearly show how the idea of sin varies from religion to religion, from age to age and from country to country. We are concerned here with the growth and development of the doctrine of sin in India from Vedic times to the medieval digests and commentaries on Dharmaśāstra

Sin (pātaka) is a word that belongs to the terminology of religion rather than to that of Ethics [1] It is very difficult to define sin. In a general way it may be said that it is an act which is regarded as a wilful rebellion against or disobedience of some law supposed to be laid down by God or Revelation; it is opposition to the will of God manifested in an authoritative work or at least failure to abide by the regulations contained therein.

1 In these days many people, both in the East and the West, question the very existence of sin As Barbour puts it in his 'Sin and the new Psychology' (p 19) "The feeling is gaining wide acceptance that there is no such thing as sin in the Christian sense. Evil may encompass a man's life and bring disaster to his personality, but it is not sin It is psychic evil that can be explained by psychic causes and perhaps cured by psychological therapy .. Many say 'nothing is right and nothing is wrong Every thing is the result of complexes' It has resulted in an easy tolerance of sin" Sir Oliver Lodge in his article on 'Christian Doctrine' in the Hibbert Journal for 1903-4 at p 466 says 'The higher man of to-day is not worrying about his sins at all, still less about their punishments His mission, if he is good for anything, is to be up and doing and in so far as he acts wrongly or unwisely he expects to suffer' The followers of Cārvāka who was the prince of Atheists in ancient India used to say 'man should live among pleasures as long as life lasts, he should feed himself sumptuously (lit. should drink ghee) even by borrowing money from others There is no coming again into the world after the body is reduced to ashes by cremation'.

The Ṛgveda is full of fervent and heart-felt expressions of the sense of sin and betrays intense desire on the part of the sages of old to be free from it The idea of sin in the Ṛgveda is bound up with the conception of ṛta. The conception of ṛta cannot be discussed here in detail But a brief statement is absolutely necessary in order to be able to convey what the Vedic doctrine of sin was [2]

Ṛta had a threefold aspect It means 'the course of nature' or 'the regular and general order in the cosmos'; with reference to sacrifice it means 'the correct and ordered way of the cult of the Gods', and thirdly, it also means the 'moral conduct of man'. A few passages to illustrate these three aspects of ṛta may be cited here Ṛg. IV 23 8–10 are[3] three verses in which the word ṛta occurs no less than twelve times and which breathe the all-pervading influence of ṛta throughout the universe 'Plentiful waters (or riches or gifts) belong to ṛta, the thought (or laudation) of ṛta destroys crooked acts (sins), the brilliant and rousing hymn of praise to ṛta pierces the benumbed ears of man The props of ṛta are firm, its (physical) manifestations are many and lovely for the sake of the body (i e man) Through ṛta they (people) desire food The cows (sun's rays) entered ṛta by ṛta He who wins over ṛta acquires it For the sake of ṛta (heaven) and earth are wide and deep, the two highest cows (i e Heaven and Earth) yield milk (desires or rewards) for the sake of ṛta ' Some other passages are. 'The Sindhus (rivers) follow the ṛta of Varuṇa' (ṛtaṁ sindhavo Varuṇasya yanti, Ṛg. II 28 4), similarly Ṛg I. 105 12 (ṛtamarṣanti sindhavaḥ), The wheel of ṛta (i e the year) revolves round the Bloomfield (pp 12, 125 ff), 'Religion and philosophy of the Veda and Upanishads' by Prof A. B Keith (pp. 35, 83–85 &c.), 'The Vedic idea of sin' by Dr. Henry Lefever (1935) One regrets to observe that Bloomfield's work is marred here and there by a certain levity of thought and expression out of keeping with the seriousness of the subject sky with twelve spokes (dvādaśāram . .. varvarti cakram pari dyām-ṛtasya, Ṛg. I 164 11), 'the dawn, the daughter of heaven, correctly follows the path of ṛta ... ...' ('ṛtasya panthānam-anveti sādhu', Ṛg I 124 3); the young woman (Uṣas) does not destroy (or come in the way of) the light of ṛta (Ṛg I 123 9); the sun is the bright and lovely face of ṛta (Ṛg VI. 51. 1. 'ṛtasya śuci darśatam-anīkam); 'the path of ṛta became united with the rays' (Ṛg. I 136 2); 'when exhilarated by drinking this (Soma) Indra released for the sake of ṛta the concealed host of cows' (Ṛg. I. 121 4, probably a reference to drought and subsequent rainfall).

Many of the principal gods of the Vedic pantheon are described as the guardians, promoters or charioteers of ṛta. Mitra and Varuṇa rule over all the world by ṛta (Ṛg V. 63 7, ṛtena viśvaṃ bhuvanam vi rājathaḥ); Mitra and Varuṇa, the protectors of ṛta, occupy a chariot (Ṛg V. 63 1), Mitra, Varuṇa, and Aryaman are said to be charioteers of ṛta (yūyamṛtasya rathyaḥ, VII 66 12); they and Aditi and Bhaga are protectors of ṛta (Ṛg. VI 51 3) Agni is called 'the charioteer of ṛta' (rathī ṛtasya, Ṛg. III. 2 8), the protector of ṛta, in Ṛg. I. 1 8, III 10.2, X. 8.5, X 118.7 and ṛtāvān (in Ṛg IV. 2.1). Soma is styled the protector of ṛta (in Ṛg. IX. 48 4, IX 73 8) and is said to support ṛta (IX. 97.24 ṛtam bharat subhṛtam cārvinduḥ) In Ṛg. VII. 66.13 the Ādityas[4] are said to be ṛtāvan (acting according to the fixed order of nature), ṛtajāta (sprung from ṛta) and ṛtāvṛdh (augmenting or rejoicing in ṛta) and further they are said to be fierce haters of anṛta (what is opposed to ṛta).

Ṛta is distinguished from sacrifice (yajña). It is not any particular sacrificial rite itself nor the institution of sacrifice. It stands for the ordered course of sacrifice in general In Ṛg. IV. 3.4. Agni is styled ṛtacit (conversant with or observing ṛta) and is invoked to know the ṛta (of the sacrifice); in several verses we meet with the words 'ṛtena ṛtam' (e. g. in Ṛg IV. 3.9 ṛtena ṛtam niyatam-īḷa ā goḥ', V. 15.2 'ṛtena ṛtam dharuṇam dhārayanta yajñasya śāke, V. 68.4 ṛtam-ṛtena sapantā 'conforming to or joining ṛta with ṛta', where 'ṛtena' appears to mean the correct course of sacrificial rites and 'ṛtam' the settled order in the universe. Soma is said to be the thread of ṛta spread on the daśāpavitra (Ṛg. IX. 73.9 'ṛtasya tantur-vitataḥ pavitra ā). In

Ṛg. I 84.4 it is said 'O Indra, drink this (soma) that is extracted ..the streams of the bright (soma) flow towards thee in the seat of ṛta' (i e. in the soma sacrifice) Vide also Ṛg IV 1 13—(asmākam-atra pitaro manusyā abhi pra sedur-ṛtam-ā susānāh) 'in this world former men, our ancestors, approached ṛta etc ', Ṛg I 71 3 (dadhannṛtam dhanayannasya dhītim-ādidaryo)' Ṛg. X 67 2 (ṛtam śamsanta ṛju dīdhyānā yajñasya dhāma prathamam mananta) 'the Angirasas,, declaring the ṛta and reflecting straightforwardly first thought of the abode of Yajña', Ṛg. X 37 1 (maho devāya tad-ṛtam saparyata, 'offer this ṛta to the great God')

The conception of ṛta as a moral imperative occurs in several passages Ṛg I. 90 6 (madhu vātā ṛtāyate madhu ksaranti sindhavah) 'the winds carry sweets, the rivers do the same to him who keeps ṛta', Ṛg V 12 2 'O Agni, that knowest ṛta, know ṛta alone (in me) .I shall not resort to magic either by force or by duplicity, I shall conform to ṛta of the reddish bull (i e of Agni)[5]; Ṛg. X 87 11 'O Agni! may the evil spirit who injures ṛta by anṛta be thrice bound in thy fetters' Yama in rejecting Yamī's advances says (Ṛg X. 10 4) 'What indeed we never did before (shall we do it now?); shall we who have spoken ṛta (so far) now speak anṛta ?' (ṛtā vadanto anṛtam rapema)

In two or three instances ṛta appears to be almost personified and invoked as a divinity. 'O Agni! for us offer sacrifice to Mitra and Varuna, to the gods and to the great (bṛhat) ṛta' (Ṛg I 75 5). Similarly, in Ṛg X. 66 4 the great (mahat) ṛta is mentioned alongside of Aditi, Heaven and Earth, Indra, Visnu, the Maruts &c.

Ṛta and satya were distinguished in several passages of the Ṛgveda For example, Ṛg. V. 51 2 speaks of the Viśve Devas as 'ṛtadhītayah' (whose thoughts were fixed on ṛta) and 'satyadharmānah' (whose characteristic is truth or whose dharmas are true). In Ṛg. IX 113.4 ṛta and satya both occur and appear to mean almost the same thing In Ṛg X. 190 1 ṛta and satya are distinguished as having sprung from 'tapas'. Ṛta involves a wider conception and satya had originally a restricted meaning (viz truth or static order). The word anṛta, however, is the opposite of both ṛta and satya as may be seen from Ṛg X. 10.4, Ṛg VII. 49.3 (Varuna who marks the satya and anṛta of people), Ṛg. X. 124.5 (Varuna who separates anṛta by means of ṛta). Gradually, however, the word ṛta receded into the back-ground and satya took its place even in Vedic literature, though here and there (as in Tai. Up. II 1 and I.9.1) both ṛta and satya are found in juxtaposition.

The sages of the Ṛgveda were acutely conscious of sin or guilt and pray to the gods, particularly to Varuna and the Ādityas, for forgiveness and for being freed from the consequ-ences of sin In this connection they employ numerous words such as āgas, enas, agha, durita, duskṛta, drugdha, aṃhas. A few examples of the employment of these words may be cited here. The most frequent words are āgas and enas, both of which appear to import sin in its deepest and most ethical sense. Ṛg. VII 86 is a hymn to Varuna in which there are several verses that breathe a deep and heart-felt consciousness of guilt. The sage begins in verse 3 by saying that all wise men of whom he inquired told him the same thing viz. 'Varuna is angry with you'. Then the sage proceeds 'O Varuna! what is that great guilt (āgas) (of mine) whereby you desire to injure your worship-per and a friend? Declare that to me, then I shall quickly approach thee with an obeisance and be free from sin (enas). Cast away from us the transgressions (drugdha) of our father and those that we committed in our own person;...free Vasistha (from guilt) like a calf from the rope (that binds it)'. In Ṛg. VII. 89.5 (almost equal to Atharva-veda VI. 51.3) the sage says 'whatever transgressions (abhidroha) we who are mere men have practised as against the divine hosts and whatever dharmas laid down by you we may have confounded through our ignorance (or heedlessness) do not destroy us on account of that guilt (enas).' It will be noticed that in these verses the words āgas, abhidroha and enas are employed in the same verses and therefore practi-cally mean the same thing. In Ṛg. II. 27.14 the sage prays 'O Aditi! O Mitra! O Varuna! take pity on us though we may have committed some sin against you'. In Ṛg. II. 28 5 Varuna is implored to loosen sin (āgas) from the devotee just like a girdle. Ṛg. VIII. 45.34 states: 'O Indra! do not kill us for one sin, for two sins or three sins or for many (āgas).' In Ṛg II. 29.1 the Ādityas are implored[6] 'cast away from me sin (āgas) as a woman who gives birth to a child in secret'. For some other passages in which āgas or its opposite anāgas occurs, vide Ṛg I. 162.22, I. 185 8, II.29.5, IV. 12.4, IV 54 3, VII. 51 1, VII. 57 4, V. 85.7, VII. 87 7, VII. 93 7, X 36 12, X. 37 7 and 9. Āgas and enas are employed in the same verse, Ṛg. IV.12.4 'O Agni! Whatever sin (āgas) we may have committed through heedlessness make us free from it before Aditi and loosen from us our sins (enas) from all sides'.

Some more passages about enas are Ṛg VI 51 7 'May we not have to enjoy (i e suffer for) the enas committed by another and Ṛg VI. 51 8 'Whatever sin be committed by me I shall remove it by obeisance', Ṛg VI. 74 3 'O Soma and Rudra! Loosen from us and cast away from us whatever sin attaches to our person'; Ṛg VII 20 1 'Indra is our saviour even from a great sin'; vide also Ṛg I 189 1, II. 28 7, VII. 52 2 The word 'agha', also seems to mean sin 'Apa nah śośucad-agham' (may our sins perish) is the refrain of Ṛg. I 97. 1–8. 'O gods! May your fetters and may sins (aghāni) be far away from us' (II 29 5, in which verse in the first half 'āgah' occurs), X 117 6 (kevalāgho bhavati kevalādī) 'one who simply eats food alone (without offering to others) reaps only sin'.

Another word is amhas. The following passages may be cited. In Ṛg II. 28 6 Varuna is implored 'remove amhas (sin) as one removes the rope from the (neck) of the calf; one has not the power even to wink without you (your favour)' [7] It should be noted that in the preceding verse (II 28 5) already quoted the simile of the girdle is employed with regard to āgas. 'May Indra take us away from aṁhas as persons on both sides (of a river) call one who is going in a boat' (Ṛg III. 32 14), 'No evil caused by the gods or by men reaches him from any side who worships Agni with fuel, oblation or sacrifice[8]' Ṛg VIII. 19. 6, 'May Aditi, the mother of the affluent Mitra and Varuna, save us from all sin' (Ṛg. X. 36. 3).[9] Ṛg. X. 36. 2 also prays Heaven and Earth, the upholders of rta, to protect the sage from 'amhas'. Vide also Ṛg X. 126. 2.

Another important word is vrjina which is often placed in opposition to sādhu or rju. The Ādityas are said to 'see inside

(the hearts of men) sins as well as good (thoughts and actions)'[10] and it is added that everything though far-off is near to them who are kings. In Ṛg. II. 27. 2 the Ādityas are called 'avṛjināh' (free from vṛjina). The Sun is said to maik among men their right and sinful deeds (Ṛg. IV 1 17). The same words (ṛju martesu vṛjinā ca paśyan) occur in Ṛg VI. 51. 2 and VII. 60.2 about the Sun.

The word 'anṛta' is often used in the Ṛgveda. It has already been shown how Varuna is said to mark the satya and anṛta of men In Ṛg. VII 60 5 it is said 'these gods, Mitra, Aryaman and Varuna mark (or know) many sins; they flourish in the abode of ṛta' Ṛg. VII 66 13 calling Mitra, Varuna and Aryaman haters of anṛta has already been quoted (in n. 4).

The word 'durita' is sometimes used in the sense of sin In Ṛg I 23 22 the waters are invoked as follows:[11] 'O waters! carry away from me whatever sin may exist in me, whatever transgressions I may have been guilty of as regards my sensual appetite or whatever falsehood I may have uttered'. Here all three words 'durita, droha and anṛta' are brought together and convey almost the same idea, viz. sin or guilt against the law of the Gods. In Ṛg I. 185 10 Heaven and Earth are called father and mother and are invoked to save the worshipper from durita (sin) which involves blame (pātām-avadyād-duritād) 'Avadya' means 'garhya' acc. to Pān. III. 1. 101. Ṛg. VII. 82. 7 states 'Him neither aṁhas (sin) nor durita nor worry reaches from anywhere to whose sacrifice you go, O Mitra and Varuna!'. In Ṛg. X. 126. 1 'amhas' and 'durita' are brought together (na tam-amho na duritam devāso asta martyam) In Ṛg VIII 67 21 the words amhati and rapas[12] seem to be employed in the sense of sin. 'Duskṛta' (evil deed) is used in the sense of sin in Ṛg. VIII. 47. 13 and in Ṛg X 164. 3 Agni is implored to keep far away from the worshipper all sins[13]. The word 'pāpa' generally[14] occurs in the Ṛg. in the sense of 'sinner' (Ṛg. VIII. 61. 11, X. 10 12, IV. 5. 5) or 'sinful' or 'evil' (Ṛg X 108 6, X. 164 5, I. 129. 11) In Ṛg VII. 32. 18, VII. 94 3, VIII. 19 26 'pāpatva' occurs and appears to mean 'sinfulness' In the Brāhmanas 'pāpam' (neuter) occurs in the sense of 'sin' as in Śat Br. XI. 2 7. 19; vide also[15] Ait Br 33. 5 In the Upanisads 'pāpam' means 'sin' (e g in Tai Up II 9, Chāndogya IV 14. 3). Certain important modifications of the doctrine about sin and Karma were introduced in the Upanisads and the Bhagavadgītā, which will be discussed later on.

In spite of the voluminous references to the consciousness of guilt and sin in the Ṛgveda and to the transgression of divine laws briefly indicated above, European scholars were not wanting who boldly affirmed that the idea of sin was altogether unknown to the Ṛgvedic sages. Vide S B E vol I p XXII where Max-Müller replies 'the gradual growth of the concept of guilt is one of the most interesting lessons which certain passages of these ancient hymns can teach us'

How sin arises in the individual mind has been a difficult problem at all times[16]. Men are conscious of the sins they commit, though they may have no definite conclusions or theories about the origin of sin In the Ṛg VII. 86 6 a sage[17] pleads with Varuna that sin is not due to a man's own power, but it is rather due to fate, to surā (intoxicants), to anger, dice or heedlessness and even dream state leads one to commit what is not right In the Kausītaki-brāhmanopanisad (III 9) it is stated · 'the Lord of all makes that man perform good works whom He desires to raise to higher worlds

16. Christianity seems to have solved it by stating that the source of actual sin is the Devil (Matthew 13 39) and by the legend of Adam's Fall (vide Romans 5. 12 'as by one man sin entered into the world and death by sin') it affirmed that there was a dose of original sin in all men In modern times many people don't accept the idea of 'original sin', for example, Sir Oliver Lodge says (in his article on 'Christian Doctrine') in Hibbert Journal for 1903-4 at p. 466 "As for 'original sin' or 'birth sin' or other notion of that kind that sits absolutely lightly on him (the man of to-day) As a matter of fact it is non-existent, and none but a monk could have invented it' than these and He makes that man commit bad deeds whom He wishes to drag down'.[18] Here it appears to be suggested that some men are chosen by God for being saved and some are chosen for being damned. This sounds like the Calvinistic doctrine of pre-destination. In the Bhagavadgītā (III. 36) Arjuna questions Śrīkṛṣṇa as follows: 'impelled by whom does a man commit sin as if constrained thereto by force, even though he does not desire to do so'? The answer given is (III. 37) 'it is lust and anger springing from the element (guna) of rajas (passion) that are the enemies of man in this world. In another place the Bhagavadgītā (XVI. 21) says 'this[19] is the three-fold door or entrance to Hell that is ruinous to the self viz. lust, anger and greed; therefore a man must shun these three.' But it must be said that this does not go to the real root of the matter. The question is why should carnal lust, anger or greed themselves arise in the mind of man. The only answer that is indicated is in accordance with the tenets of the Sāṁkhya philosophy viz. that there are three gunas, sattva, rajas and tamas which combine in various proportions in different men and that it is rajo-guna that is the cause of man's sinfulness In the Śānti-parva, chap. 163, it is stated that there are thirteen very powerful enemies of men beginning with anger (krodha) and kāma (lust) and it is said that krodha springs from lobha (covetousness), which latter arises from ignorance (verses 7 and 11). But there is no satisfactory discussion of the origin of ignorance in that chapter. Gautama 19.2 observes[20] that 'man in this world is polluted by a vile action such as sacrificing for a man unworthy to offer a sacrifice, eating forbidden food, speaking what ought not to be spoken, neglecting what is prescribed and practising what is forbidden'. Yājñavalkya III. 219 prescribes: 'by omitting to do what is ordained, by resorting to what is condemned (prohibited) and by not controlling the senses, man incurs fall (i e sin)' Manu XI 44 and Śāntiparva 34 2 are similar verses The Mitākṣarā explains that matters ordained are such as performing Sandhyā (morning and evening adorations) and Agnihotra and what are condemned are such actions as drinking liquor Viśvarūpa explains that patana (fall or sinfulness) in Yāj III. 219 is not used in the technical sense attached to that word by Gautama 21 4 viz 'to be a patita means to be deprived of the right to follow the lawful occupations of twice-born men,' but it is used only in the sense that the man so acting (as mentioned in Yāj III. 219) becomes liable to undergo prāyaścitta and that the words of Gautama (21.4) are restricted only to what are called mahāpātakas The word pātaka is derived from the causal of the root 'pat' Vide Medhātithi on Manu XI 54 'pātakaśabdaḥ pātayatīti vyutpattyā sarva-vyatikrameṣu vartate' and Madanapārijāta p 786 In ancient works the word patanīya (meaning the cause of patana) has been employed as in Āp Dh S. I. 7 21 7 The Pr V (p 35) paraphrases patanīyāni by 'pātakāni' and derives it from the root 'pat' (patatyanena iti patanīyam) with the addition of the termination 'anīya' according to Pāṇ III 3 113 The word occurs also in Yāj II. 210, III. 297, Śaṅkha quoted by Viśvarūpa on Yāj. III. 237 (in prose) and other smṛtis

The enumeration of sinful acts and the classifications of sins into several degrees or grades has gone on from very ancient times In the Ṛg X 5 6 it is said[21] 'the wise made (lit chiselled) seven limits, the man who goes against even one of them becomes sinful' The Nirukta (VI. 27) explains that the seven sins indicated in this verse are 'theft, violating the bed (of the guru), murder of a brāhmaṇa, murder of a bhrūṇa, drinking of liquor, continual performance of the same sinful act, telling a lie as to a sinful matter'. Ṛg VII. 86 6 quoted above (in n 17) makes it clear that drinking surā and playing with dice were regarded as sinful. From the Tai. S. II. 5 1. 2, V 3 12 1-2, Śat Br XIII. 3 1 1 and other Brāhmaṇa texts it appears that the murder of a brāhmaṇa was generally regarded in early vedic times as the gravest of all sins, though in the Kāṭhaka saṃhitā (31. 7) it is stated that there is no sin as heinous as killing a bhrūna which is even worse than brāhmana murder)[22]. The Tai. Br. in detailing the story of Ekata, Dvita and Trita who was made a scapegoat for keeping off sins, enumerates the following sinners, viz. sūryābhyudita (one who sleeps on when the sun rises), sūryābhinimrukta (one who slept when the sun set), one who has black nails or teeth, agradidhisu (one who married a younger sister while the elder sister was yet unmarried), the elder brother remaining unmarried even though a younger brother has married, one who allows his sacred sacrificial fires to be extinguished, the killer of a brāhmana.[23]. It may be noticed that most of these occur almost in the same order in Āp. Dh. S. II. 5. 12. 22 where it is[24] said that though

22. Bhrūnahan is either a killer of a learned brāhmana or the killer of a foetus when its sex is not known. Vide H of Dh vol II, p. 148n and vol. III p 612n for quotations and explanations. It may be noted that the four main prohibitions contained in the Decalogue (Exodus, chap 20 13–16 and Deut. 5. 17–20) against killing human beings, theft, adultery and bearing false witness are to be found in all well-known religious or moral codes.

The story of Trita is briefly referred to in the Atharvaveda (VI. 113). The germ of it is found in Rg VIII 47.13 quoted above in n. 13.

24. अभिनिम्रुक्ताभ्युदित–कुनखिश्यावदाग्रेदिधिषू–दिधिषूपतिपर्याहितपरीष्ट–परिवित्त-परिविन्न-परिविविदानेषु चोत्तरोत्तरस्मिन्नशुचिकरानिर्वेशो गरीयान् गरीयान्। आप II 5. 12 22. It may be noted that both brothers (elder and younger) and sisters (elder and younger) were held guilty of sin in case of supercession in marriage. परिवित्त and परिविन्न often mean the same thing (viz. an elder brother before whom a younger brother marries or consecrates sacrificial fires) Vide Manu III. 171-172. Acc. to Manu III. 173 a didhiṣūpati is one who feels love for his brother's widow and has intercourse with her under the system of niyoga. परिविविदान is the same as परिवेत्ता अग्रेदिधिषु or-षू is explained by Devala and by Aparārka p.451, by Haradatta on Gaut. 15.15 and Mit. on Yāj. III. 26 as 'a younger sister who marries before her elder sister' and दिधिषु or दिधिषू is the elder sister who is thus superceded by a younger one In Āp the word पति is to be connected with both अग्रेदिधिषू and दिधिषू. The Amarakośa explains दिधिषू differently. शङ्खस्मृति (17. 43–44) makes even the father or other guardian for marriage getting a younger son or daughter married before an elder one and the priest officiating at such a marriage equally guilty 'परिवित्तिः परिवेत्ता यया च परिविद्यते। व्रतं संवत्सरं कुर्युर्दातृयाजकपञ्चमाः॥'.

these actions are not to be styled patanīyas according to Āp. yet they cause impurity which being greater and greater in each succeeding one requires higher and higher penances. Āp adds a few more sinners to those in the Tai. Br viz didhiṣupati (husband of an elder sister whose younger sister was married before her), paryāhita (an elder brother before whom a younger brother kindled fires), parivividāna (a younger brother who takes his share of the ancestral property before his elder brother), parivinna (an elder brother before whom a younger brother takes away his share of the ancestral property). The Chāndogya Upanisad[25] (V. 10. 9.) quotes a verse that declares that the five great sinners are the thief of gold, the drinker of surā, the violator of the guru's bed, the murderer of a brāhmana, and one who associates with any of the preceding four. The Br. Up. (IV. 3. 22) mentions as great sinners the thief and the murderer of a bhrūna.

Coming to the sūtras there is great divergence as to the classification of sins and the enumeration of sins in each class. The Āp. Dh. S. divides sins into two classes viz. patanīya (those that cause loss of caste), asucikara (those that cause impurity, though no loss of caste is caused). Āp. Dh. S (I. 7.21.7–11) states that patanīya sins are theft (of gold), crimes whereby one becomes an abhiśasta, complete loss (by neglect) of the Vedic learning that one secured by study, destruction of a foetus, incestuous connection with relations born of the same womb as one's father or mother and with the children of such persons, drinking of surā, intercourse with persons with whom intercourse is forbidden, intercourse with the female friend of one's female guru (mother &c) or with the female friend of one's guru (father &c.) and with the wife of any stranger, constant commission of immoral acts (adharma) other than those already mentioned. Āp. Dh S. I. 7.21.10 notes that, according to some, intercourse with a woman who is not the wife of a guru is not a patanīya sin. Among acts which render a man impure are (Āp. Dh. S. I, 7. 21. 12–18) the cohabitation of an Ārya woman with śūdras, eating the flesh of forbidden animals such as that of a dog or a human being or village cock or pig or other carnivorous animals, eating the excrement of human beings, partaking of food left by a śūdra, and cohabitation by Ārya men with apapātra women.[25] According to some, those acts that are declared to be aśucakara are also patanīyas. Āp. Dh. S. (I. 7.21.19) states that acts other than those enumerated are also aśucikara. Āp. Dh. S. (I. 9. 24.6–9) enumerates those who are abhiśasta, viz. one who slays a person belonging to the first two varṇas (viz. brāhmaṇa and kṣatriya) who had studied the Veda or who had been initiated for the performance of a soma sacrifice, one who kills a mere brāhmaṇa (though he may not have studied the Veda or be not initiated for a soma sacrifice), also one who destroys the embryo of a brāhmaṇa even though its sex be undistinguishable, or slays a woman who is an ātreyī (in her monthly course). The Vasiṣṭhadharmasūtra divides[27] sinners into three classes, viz. those who are enasvins, those guilty of mahāpātakas and those guilty of upapātakas (I. 19–23). Among those who are styled enasvinaḥ are those mentioned in Āp. Dh. S. II. 5.12.22, with this difference that the 'brahmojjha', who is included among 'patanīyas' by Āp. Dh. S. I. 7. 21. 9 is put among 'enasvins' by Vasiṣṭha. In Vas. 20. 4–12 special prāyaścittas for each of these 'enasvinah' (ordinary sinners) are prescribed. The Mahāpātakas (mortal sins) according to Vasistha are five, viz (violating) a guru's bed, drinking of spirituous liquor, murder of a bhrūṇa (a learned brāhmaṇa), stealing gold from a brāhmaṇa and associating with a patita. Those guilty of upapātakas (minor sins) are: He who forsakes sacred Vedic fires, he who offends a guru, an atheist, he who earns his livelihood from atheists, and he who sells the soma plant. The Baudhāyana Dharmasūtra[28] (II. 1) divides sins into patanīya, upapātaka and aśucikara. Among the first it cites making voyages by sea, stealing the property of a brāhmaṇa or misappropriating a deposit, giving false evidence regarding land (dispute), trading with merchandise of all descriptions, serving śūdras, begetting a son on a female of the sūdra caste and begetting a child (either male or female) from her[29]. The upapātakas, acc. to Baud. Dh. S. (II. 1. 60–61), are: intercourse with females who must not be approached, cohabitation with the female friend of a female guru or with the female friend of a male guru or with an apapātra woman or with a female outcast, following the profession of medicine, officiating as a priest for a village, living by dramatic performances, following the profession of a teacher of dancing or singing or acting, tending cows and buffaloes[30] and similar (low occupations) and fornication. Among aśucikara (causing impurity), Baud. Dh. S mentions gambling, black magic, subsisting by gleaning corn fallen in the field by one who has not consecrated sacred fires, subsisting by begging on the part of one who has returned to his home after finishing Vedic study, staying for more than four months at his teacher's seminary on the part of him who has finished his studies, teaching one who has finished his studies, gaining livelihood by astrology. Gautama (21. 1–3) appears to include among pataniyas the usual five mortal sins and also some of those that are mentioned by Āp. Dh. S. (I. 7. 21. 9–11) and Vasistha I. 23 (such as nāstika) and adds a few more (such as not casting off persons guilty of pataniyas, forsaking blameless relatives and instigating others to commit acts causing loss[31] of caste.

29 That this is the correct translation of Baud and not the one in S. B. E vol. XIV p. 216 'becoming thereby her son' is clear from Manu III. 16 'शौनकस्य सुतोत्पत्त्या तदपत्यतया भृगोः' Saunaka condemned the begetting of a son from a śūdra female (and not the begetting of a daughter), while Bhrgu condemned the begetting of a child (whether male or female did not matter).

30. It must be supposed that these lists relate to brāhmanas and kṣatriyas alone Trading with merchandise or tending cows could not have been regarded as pataniya for Vaiśyas since trade and tending cows have been always prescribed as their special avocations. Vide Āp. Dh. S II, 5. 10. 7, Gaut. X 50, Manu X 79, Yāj. The above statement about the classification of sins and their inclusion among the several classes or grades of sins will show that among the early sūtra works there was no general agreement about the nature and number of mahāpātakas, upapātakas and other classes of sins, even though as early as the Chāndogya Upanisad the mortal sins had been declared to be five. It must be supposed that that Upanisad represented only one school of thought in the times of Āp., Baud. and Gaut, who did not entirely accept the tradition of that Upanisad, but followed other divergent ideas. It is impossible to suppose that the verse quoted in that Upanisad is later than the Dharmasūtras of Āp., Gaut, Baud, and Vas

It appears that Kātyāyana[32] divided sinful acts into five classes viz. mahāpāpa (mortal sins), atipāpa (the highest sins than which there is nothing worse), pātaka (sins similar to mahāpātakas), prāsaṅgika (due to association or contact) and upapātaka (minor sins). The Bhavisya-purāna also says that those sins that are declared to be equal to mahāpātakas (by Manu and others) are called pātakas Vrddha-Hārīta also (IX. 215–216) speaks of five kinds viz. mahāpāpa, pātaka, anupātaka, upapāpa and prakīrnaka (miscellaneous) and states (IX. 216–218) that those sins which are said to be like mahāpātaka are pātakas, that anupātakas are sins lesser than pātakas, that upapātakas are lesser than pātakas and prakīrnaka sins are the least sinful of all. The Visnudharmasūtra (33 3–5) speaks of nine kinds of lapses viz. atipātaka, mahāpātaka, anupātaka, upapātaka, jātibhraṁśakara (effecting loss of caste), saṅkarīkarana, (rendering one as degraded as a man of a mixed caste), apātrīkarana (rendering the perpetrator unworthy of receiving a gift), malāvaha (causing defilement) and prakīrnaka (miscellaneous). Atipātakas, acc. to Visnu Dh. S 34.1, are sexual intercourse with one's mother, daughter or daughter-in-law and the only expiation for them is entering fire. Manu omits the separate mention of atipātaka and anupātaka and includes most of them under those that he designates as equal to one of the four well-known mahāpātakas. Kātyāyana quoted in the Prāyaścittamuktāvali of Divākara (folio 3 a) adds sexual intercourse with one's sister as atipātaka to the three mentioned by Visnu

Hārīta Dh. S (it appears) quoted by the Mit knew[33] of a variety of pātakas called anupātaka, but from the way in which the several pātakas are arranged it looks as if atipātaka in Hārīta was a lesser sin than mahāpātaka Manu (in chap XI) refers to all the kinds of pātakas found in the Visnu-dharmasūtra except atipātakas Usually five mahāpātakas have been enumerated from the days of the Chāndogya Up (quoted on p. 12) viz brāhmana murder, drinking spirituous liquor, theft (generally understood as theft of brāhmana's gold), sexual intercourse with the wife of a guru and association with the perpetrators of any of these four (for a year[34]) Vide Vas I 19–20, Manu XI 55, 180, Yāj III. 227, 261), Visnudharmsūtra 35 1–5, Vrddha-Hārīta IX 174. Manu mentions certain sins as equal to Mahāpātakas which are styled anupātakas by the Visnudharmasūtra chap. 36 The most elaborate treatment of all kinds of sins in the smrtis is found in Manu, Yāj and Visnu There is difference of opinion even among these three on certain points For example, Manu[35] XI. 56 says that forgetting the Veda, reviling the Vedas, giving false evidence, slaying a friend, eating forbidden food and food that is unfit for eating or should not be eaten, are lapses similar to drinking surā; while Yāj. III. 228 states that three out of these (viz reviling the Vedas, slaying a friend and forgetting the Veda studied by a person) along with the reviling of a guru by attributing false faults are similar to the murder of a brāhmana. The result is that there is an option as to the expiation to be prescribed for these sins.

It would be desirable to give some details as regards each of the mahāpātakas and then to desciibe the other varieties of sins and then to set out the expiations prescribed for all of them. It should be noted that both the secular law of penalties and the ecclesiastical rules about expiations made a difference between a sinful act intentionally committed (kāmatah) and one committed through ignorance or heedlessness and between an act done only once (sakrt) or done repeatedly (asakrt)

Brahmahatyā Hatyā or vadha (killing) is applied to an act which immediately or after some time results in causing loss of life directly without the intervention of any other cause.[36]. The Agnipurāna (173 1), the Mit , the Prāyaścittaviveka (p 47) and other works define what is meant by vadha A man may be the cause of the death of a brāhmana in five ways, viz. he may himself kill (i e. he becomes the kartā), he may incite another to kill (prayojaka) by ordering that other to do so (as a king or noble by ordering his servant) or by imploring another to kill and giving advice about the killing, he may encourage another to kill by his own approval (anumantā), or by helping the killer when he wavers or by offering protection to the killer against others (anugrāhaka) and by becoming a nimitta.[37]

The Mit on Yāj. III. 227 and 243 (quoting verses from Paithīnasi) explains all these at length. For the definition of anugrāhaka it relies on a verse of Manu ' Where many persons are armed and have a common purpose in view, if even one of them kills a person, all of them are guilty of murder ', which is very much like sec. 34 of the Indian Penal Code. This distinction into several degrees of killers is an ancient one and is based on Āp Dh. S. II. 11. 29. 1-2 ' He who[38] instigates, he who approves, and he who commits an act—these share its results in heaven and hell; but he amongst these who contributes most to the accomplishment of the act obtains a greater share of the results. A maraṇāntika[39] is defined by Mit. as one that angers another (who is a brāhmaṇa) by rebuking or beating or depriving him of wealth and the like and in whose presence and on account of whom the brāhmaṇa that is angered kills himself. The Mit. quotes a verse of Viṣṇu and also another verse (without name) on this point. If a person kills a brāhmaṇa boy whose upanayana had not been performed he was yet regarded as guilty of brāhmaṇa murder.[40] The Sāmavidhāna Br. I. 7. 5, Āp. Dh. S. (I. 9. 24. 6–9), Vas. 20. 34, Manu XI. 87, Yāj. III. 251 hold that killing even a kṣatriya or vaiśya who had studied the Veda or had been initiated for a soma sacrifice rendered the killer guilty of brahmahatyā, as also the killing of the foetus (of brāhmaṇa parents) whose sex was unknown and of a woman who was an ātreyī.[41] Killing a brāhmaṇa woman other than an ātreyī or other than the wife of a sacrificer engaged in a soma sacrifice was only an upapātaka, as Manu (XI. 66) and Yāj. (III. 236) lay down. Viśvarūpa on Yāj. III. 264 says that no prāyaścitta can expiate the sin of killing a woman intentionally. In the case of the three varṇas other than that of brāhmaṇa some smṛtis like that of Cyavana[42] laid down other mahāpātakas in addition to the five, viz. punishing one who should not be punished and fleeing from the battle-field are additional mahāpātakas for kṣatriyas, employing false balances and weights for vaiśyas, the selling of flesh, injuring a brāhmaṇa, sexual intercourse with a brāhmaṇa woman, the drinking of the milk of a kapilā (dark-brown) cow in the case of śūdras. If a brāhmana or any other human being or a cow died while a competent doctor was administering treatment to them by means of drugs, oils or food, or cauterization by cutting or by opening a vein the medical man incurred no sin[43] But if a quack pretending to know medicine administered such treatment and death followed, Yāj. II. 242 prescribed various punishments. If a brāhmana administers moderate corporal punishment to his son, pupil or wife for some fault and the son or pupil or wife suddenly dies he incurs no sin, according to the Bhavisyapurāna and the Agnipurāna.[44] Gautama (II 48–50), Āp. Dh S I 2 8. 29–30, Manu VIII. 299–300 (=Matsyapurāna 227. 152–154), Visnu Dh. S 71 81–82, Nārada (abhyupetyāśuśrūṣā 13–14) lay down that the punishment should be administered with a rope or bamboo slip on the back (but never on the head or chest) and Manu (VIII 300) provides that if these restrictions were violated the punisher would incur the same guilt or punishment as a thief. Vide H. of Dh. vol II. pp 362–363 for this topic

One important question that very much exercised the minds of ancient and medieval Dharmaśāstra writers is whether a man can kill a brāhmana ātatāyin in self-defence without incurring any sin or punishment by the king. There is great divergence of views on this point, which has been dealt with at some length in H of Dh vol II pp. 148–151 and vol. III pp. 517–518. The conclusion of the Mitākṣarā appears to voice the views of most writers that, if a brāhmana comes as an ātatāyin (as an incendiary, as a poisoner, as a kidnapper of women or with the intention of killing or wresting a field), then in self-defence one may oppose him without incurring any sin, but that if the brāhmana offender meets death though the defender did not desire to kill him (but only to stop him by causing injury short of death), the

Surāpāna (drinking of surā) has been held to be a mahāpātaka The word surā occurs several times in the Ṛgveda (e g. Ṛg I. 116 7, I. 191.10, VII. 86 6, VIII. 2 12, X 107 9) Ṛg. VII. 86 6 quoted above (in note 17) clearly indicates that surā was looked upon by the Ṛgvedic singers as a cause of sin just as much as gambling Ṛg. I 116 7 (śatam kumbhān asiñcatam surāyāh) read with Ṛg I 117.6 (śatam madhūnām) implies that madhu (honey or some sweet substance) might have been used in preparing surā Soma was a beverage to be offered to the gods and to be drunk by the brāhmaṇa priests and was sharply distinguished from surā (e g in Tai S II 5 1 1, Vāj S. 19 7, Śat Br. V. 1 5 28). The last furnishes the striking antithesis 'soma is truth, prosperity, light, and surā is untruth, misery, darkness'. It appears that long before the Kāthaka Samhitā brāhmaṇas had come to regard the drinking of surā as very sinful [XII 12 'therefore the brāhmaṇa does not drink surā (with the idea) that (by drinking it) he may become affected by sin'][46] The Chāndogya Up. (V. 10.9) speaks of the drinker of surā as a patita, while in V. 11 5 king[47] Aśvapati Kaikeya makes the boast before the five learned brāhmaṇas that had come to him for the knowledge of Ātman Vaiśvānara that in his kingdom there was no thief and no drinker of madya. Though Manu XI 54 enumerates the drinking of surā among the five mahāpātakas, Yāj. III. 227 speaks of the madyapa (drinker of madya) as one of the five great sinners. Therefore we must explain what is meant by surā and when surāpāna becomes a mahāpātaka. By Manu XI. 93 surā is said to be the refuse of food and Manu XI. 94 states that surā is of three kinds, viz that prepared from molasses, that from flour and that from madhūka flowers (or from honey). There is a great deal of discussion about surā in many of the digests and the propositions established by most of them are[48]: (1) that all the three higher varnas are forbidden to drink the surā prepared from flour and drinking it is a grave sin (mahāpātaka) in the case of anyone belonging to the three first varnas, (2) All intoxicants (madya) are forbidden to brāhmanas at all stages of life (Gaut. II. 25 'madyam nityam brāhmanah' and Āp. Dh. S. I 5. 17–21); but a brāhmana drinking surā of the gaudī or mādhvī kind would not be guilty of mahāpātaka but of anupātaka (acc to Visnu); (3) that intoxicants other than surā prepared from flour are not condemned for ksatriyas and vaiśyas; (4) the śūdra was not forbidden to drink any kind of intoxicant (including surā made from flour); (5) brahmacārins of all varnas studying the Veda had to abstain from intoxicants of all kinds. The Visnu Dh. S. (22 83–84) specifies ten kinds of madya (intoxicants) prepared from dates, jack fruit, cocoanuts, sugarcane &c and Pulastya quoted by the Mit on Yāj. III. 253, by the Prāyaścittaprakarana of Bhavadeva (p 40), the Prāyaścittaviveka of Śūlapāni (p. 90), Pr. Prakāsa (folio 69 b) refers to eleven kinds of madyas apart from surā (dvādaśam to surāmadyam sarvesām adhamam smrtam). Vide H of Dh. vol. III pp 964–966 for further discussion on intoxicating drinks,

The Mit points out (on Yāj III. 253) that the prohibition against drinking surā applies to boys who have not yet been invested with the sacred thread and also to unmarried girls, since Manu XI 93 makes no distinction of sex but only forbids to the three first castes the drinking of surā and since the Bhavisyapurāna[49] expressly forbids to a brāhmana female the drinking of surā The Kalpataru appears to have held otherwise. But a woman and a minor had to undergo lesser prāyaścitta as will be shown below. Vas 21 11 and Yāj III 256 state that the wife of a brāhmana, ksatriya or vaiśya who drinks surā (made from flour) would not reach the worlds of her husband and she would become in this world a bitch or a sow[50] The Mit. remarks[51] on this verse that though a śūdra is not forbidden to drink surā even the śūdra wife of a brāhmana should not drink surā

Drinking surā means taking it down the throat Therefore if a man's lips only touch surā or if surā enters his mouth but he spits it out, then there is no drinking of surā (i. e no mahāpātaka) and he would have had to undergo in such a case a light expiation for the touch of surā[52].

Steya (theft). In order to constitute theft as a grave sin according to the commentaries the theft must be of a brāhmana's gold of a certain quantity Steya is defined by Āp Dh S I. 10 28 1 as[53] 'a man becomes a thief by coveting another's property (and taking it) in whatever situation he may be (without the owner's consent)' Kātyāyana (810) defines[54] it as 'depriving a man of his property, whether clandestinely or openly and, whether by night or by day, is known to be theft'. Vyāsa defines it similarly. Vācaspati in his bhāsya on Yogasūtra II. 30 defines steya as taking property from another in a manner that is not allowed by the śāstras (steyam-asāstra-pūrvakam dravyānām paratah svīkaranam). Though Manu (XI. 54) and Yāj (III. 227) simply employ the word 'steya' (theft) or 'stena' (thief) yet in speaking of the prāyaścitta for steya Manu (XI. 99 'suvarnasteyakrt') and Yāj. III. 257 (brāhmanasvarnahārī) add the qualification that he should be a thief guilty of stealing gold (from a brāhmana, acc. to Yāj). Vas. 20. 41 and Cyavana (q by Pr V. p. 117) mention 'brāhmana-suvarna-harana' as a mahāpātaka and the Sāmavidhāna Br. (I. 6. 1) also employs the words 'brāhmanasvam hrtvā'. Vide Samvarta 122 and Viśvāmitra (q. by Pr. V. p. 108). A further qualification was added by Viśvarūpa (on Yāj III. 252 'anākhyāya &c), the Mit. (on Yāj. III. 257), the Madana-pārijāta (pp 827-28), Prāyaścittaprakarana (p. 72), the Prāyaścittaviveka (p 111) and other commentators that the gold stolen must be at least sixteen māsas in weight, otherwise there is no mahāpātaka[55]. So, if a man steals gold belonging to a brāhmana which is less than 16 māsas or steals gold of any weight (even more than 16 māsas) from a non-brāhmana (i. e. from a ksatriya or the like) he would be guilty only of a minor sin (upapātaka). The Mit relies on the verses of Yāj. I 362-363 for the technical meaning of suvarna (as 16 māsas) There was no guilt of theft acc. to Vārsyāyani if (Āp. Dh. S. I 10. 28.2) a person took only a small quantity of cereals ripening in pods (such as mudga, māṣa and gram) or took grass for his oxen while he was going (in a cart.[56]) According to Gautama 12.25 a man may take (without permission and without incurring the guilt of theft) for the sake of cows and for the sake of śrauta or smārta fires grass, fuel and flowers of trees and plants as if they were his own property and the fruits (of trees and plants) that are not fenced around. Manu VIII. 339 (=Matsya 227. 112-113) is almost like Gaut 12.25 and Manu VIII. 341 adds that a traveller of the three higher castes may, if his provisions have run short, take (without fear of punishment) from another's field two sugarcane stalks and two mūlakas (esculent roots).

Gurvaṅganāgamah (sexual intercourse with the wife of the guru). Manu (XI.54) employs this word, while Yāj. III. 227 and Vas. 20.13 speak of the offender as gurutalpaga (who violates the bed of the guru) and Vas. I. 20 mentions the sin as 'gurutalpam'

Samvarta[57] 160 and Parāśara X. 13 (employing the words 'pitrdārān samāruhya') convey that the primary meaning of guru here is 'father' as stated by the Mit. on Yāj III. 259. Acc to many digests such as the Mit and the Madanapārijāta p 835 gurvanganā means one's own mother Bhavadeva in his Pr. Prakarana and holds that 'gurvanganā' or 'gurupatnī' means not only one's mother but also one's step-mother of the same varna as the father The Madanapārijāta (p. 835) holds the same view as the Pr V The Pr. M. p. 73 finds fault with Bhavadeva (author of Prāyascitta-prakarana) and also with the Pr V. that held the view that sexual intercourse with one's Vedic teacher's wife was also a mahāpātaka. The Pr. M. relies on Yāj. (III. 233) where there is an express extension of the sin of gurutalpagamana to intercourse with one's teacher's wife, or one's daughter and other nearly related women. This would have been unnecessary if gurutalpa was primarily meant to include the teacher's wife; while the Pr. V. relies upon Gaut. II. 56 ('the ācārya is the most eminent among gurus, some say that the mother is so'), Visnu Dh. S. 31. 1–2 'three persons are atigurus (exceed even guru in their greatness) viz. the mother, the father and the ācārya and Devala who mentions eleven persons as gurus. The Pr. M. does not seem to be quite correct since the Pr. V. ultimately (pp. 134–135) states its final view that guru here means only the father and not the ācārya and others and that Visnu Dh. S. 36. 4–8 holds that sexual intercourse with the wife of the teacher and several other women relatives is an anupātaka.

Mahāpātakasaṁsarga—Association with those who are guilty of the four mahāpātakas has already been described in H. of Dh. vol. III. pp. 614, 944. Gaut. 21.3, Vas. I. 21–22, Manu XI. 180 (=Śāntiparva 165. 37), Yāj. III. 261, Visnu Dh. S 35.3, Agnipurāna 170. 1–2 prescribe briefly that one who closely associates or dwells with any one of the four grave sinners for one year himself incurs mahāpātaka[60] and they add that this applies when a man occupies the same conveyance or same seat (as the sinner) or dines in the same row (with the sinner), but that if a person enters into spiritual relationship (such as that of teaching the Veda to the sinner or learning it from him or of officiating as a priest for him or allowing him to officiate as a priest for himself) or into a sexual or matrimonial alliance with him (i. e. a man who cohabits with a woman that is a grave sinner or if a woman cohabits with a male that is a great sinner or if a man marries the daughter of a patita or if a woman marries a bridegroom that is patita) that person becomes guilty of mahāpātaka at once. Bṛhaspati speaks[61] of nine kinds of saṁsarga (contact or association) out of which the first five were treated as light sins, but the other four were serious viz. occupying the same bed or seat, taking food in the same row with the sinner, cooking food in the sinner's cooking pots or partaking of food prepared by him, being his sacrificial priest or employing him as one's sacrificial priest, being the sinner's teacher of the Veda or employing him as one's teacher of the Veda, sexual intercourse, taking food with him in the same pot. The Pr Prakāśa (folio 74a) holds that samsarga is of three kinds, the highest, middling and lowest. The first includes four viz. yonisambandha (marriage), srauva (i e that due to sacrificing for a sinner or making him a priest), maukha (about learning or teaching Veda) and eating of food from the same vessel (ekāmatrabhojana), the middling is of five kinds viz. using the same vehicle, seat, bed or coverlet, eating in the same row and learning the Veda together (sahādhyayana) The lowest is of various other kinds such as intimate talks, touching, cooking food in the same vessel, eating food at his house, receiving a gift from him &c Adhyāpana in order to be a great sin must relate to the Veda, and so also yājana must relate to such Vedic sacrifices as Darśapūrnamāsa, Cāturmāsya, Agniṣtoma Helping a mahāpātakin to perform the five daily yajñas or teaching him the aṅgas (metrics, grammar etc.) and the śāstras is only a minor sin. Parāśara[62] (XII. 79) states that sins are transferred (or spread) from man to man like a drop of oil on water by sitting or sleeping together or by using the same conveyance or by speaking with or dining in the same row. Devala and Chāgaleya q. by the Mit. on Yāj. III 261, the Pr. Prakarana (p. 101), the Pr. V. (p. 145), the Par M. (II. part 1. p 28) and others contain similar verses. Acc. to Pr. Prakāśa (folio 75a), in order to become patita one must simultaneously practise these four together, if practised separately, there is no pātitya but only doṣa. Parāśara (I. 25–26) states that in the Krta age a man became patita by speaking with a patita, in Tretā by touching him, in Dvāpara by partaking of food prepared in his house and in Kali by actually committing a sinful act and that in the Krta age a district was abandoned (if any one therein became patita), in Tretā the village, in Dvāpara the family (of the patita was abandoned) and in Kali only the actual perpetrator himself (is abandoned as patita). It is clear from this that such contacts with a patita as speaking with him,[63] touching him or eating food (in the house of a patita) were not regarded as involving a man in the same sin as that of the actual perpetrator. Speaking, touching and eating are also actions (karman) and Parāśara did not include them in the word 'karmanā' which refers only to the actual perpetration of a murder, surāpāna etc. Therefore when some writers include such contacts as eating or touching under 'karmanā' they put two meanings on the word karman in Parāśara viz. perpetration of a murder or the like and also doing some of the acts (touching, eating) which are forbidden to be done in reference to a perpetrator by some smṛtis. This is a procedure which is against the maxim of the Mīmāṁsā that the same word conveys only[64] one sense in the same context The reasonable inference from the words of Parāśara is that merely touching a mahāpātakin or eating food in his house did not involve the toucher and eater in pātitya. In spite of this medieval writers gradually extended the scope of saṁsarga in a spirit of exclusiveness and of over-emphasis on ideas of ceremonial purity - For example, the Smṛtyarthasāra[65] (p. 112) remarks that he who associates with the person that associates with a mahāpātakin has to undergo half the expiation that the first associator has to undergo. But that work does not go beyond this. The Mit. (on Yāj III. 261) appears to hold that the associator even though he does not become patita is liable to undergo expiation and that even the 4th and 5th associators in a series are liable to undergo expiation

So Viṣṇu prescribes that pātitya results at once from the first kind of samsarga referred to above तत्र पञ्चमहायज्ञादिविषय याजनं लघु। अङ्गशास्त्राध्ययनं लघु। दुहितृभगिनीव्यतिरिक्तो परिणयो लघु.॥ पतितेन सहैकपात्रे अन्नव्यतिरिक्तसक्त्वादिभक्षणं लघु॥ प्रा. प्रकाश folio 75a.

though it is lesser and lesser[66]. The Pr. Prakarana (p 109), Pr V. (pp 169–170) and the Pr T. (p 547) quote certain verses of Āpastamba and Vyāsa which very much widen the circle of saṁsarga. Āpastamba-smṛti[67] (III. 1–3) states. 'if a cāndāla stays in the house of any one of the four castes without being known, the latter on coming to know of the fact should undergo expiation, which is Cāndrāyana or Parāka for a member of the first three varnas and Prājāpatya for a śūdra. Those who partook of cooked food in that man's house should undergo Krcchra; one should prescribe one half of Kṛcchra for those who took cooked food in the house of the 2nd associator and for those who partook of cooked food in the house of these last one-fourth of Krcchra is prescribed'. So besides the original associator three more in succession were held to be liable for prāyaś-citta. Mercifully they stopped at the 4th from the original associator A few writers took a more reasonable view. The Par M (II part 2, p 90) remarks[68] that Parāśara did not prescribe any expiation for saṁsarga (with those guilty of grave sins) with the idea that in the Kali age there is no blemish of saṁsarga and that it is on account of this that in the enumeration of things to be avoided or not allowed in the Kali age (Kali-varjya) another smṛti includes 'pollution through contact with a sinner' (as a Kalivarjya). The Smṛtimuktāphala (Prāyaścitta pp. 897–98) echoes the very words of Mādhava and quotes further authorities on the point[69]. The Nirṇayasindhu[70] holds that though there is blame in association with a patita the associator does not himself become patita. As Yāj III. 261 employs the word 'vatsaram' and as the accusative of time is, acc. to Pāṇini, to be used only when there is 'atyantasaṁyoga' of time and space (distance) it follows that the associator who is to undergo penance for contact must have been day and night in contact for a year. Devala employs the word 'sārvakālikam' in this connection.

Though many crimes do not in so many words come within the words of the definitions of the mahāpātakas the smṛtis extend by analogy the same condemnation as the mahāpātakas in three ways. For example, Yāj. III. 251 expressly states that one who kills a kṣatriya or vaiśya engaged in (soma) sacrifice or a foetus or an ātreyī woman has to undergo the same expiation as for brāhmaṇa murder (therefore this is vācanikātideśa). Yāj. III. 232–233 extends the sin of gurutalpa-gamana to intercourse with several near female relatives (such as mother's or father's sister). This is extension by tādrūpya. The smṛtis declare many actions as equal to (sama) mahāpātakas in general or as equal to one of the mahāpātakas. This is atideśa by sāmya. A few words must be said on this topic. The general rule is that the expiation for those lapses that are declared to be equal to a mahāpātaka is less than (i. e. half of) what would be prescribed for the mahāpātaka itself[71]. And the penance for those that come under atideśa of the vācanika or tādrūpya kind is three fourths of that for the mahāpātaka itself. But it has to be noted that there is divergence of views about these in the sūtras and the smṛtis Acc. to Gaut 21. 10 giving[72] false evidence, backbiting about another's guilt that will reach the king, falsely accusing one's guru with a grave sin or crime are equal to mahāpātaka. In Manu XI 55 (=Agnipurāna 168. 25) the last two of these three and false statement about one's caste or learning or family (i e. saying that one is a brāhmana when one is not) for securing prosperity or eminence are stated to be equal to brāhmana's murder. Acc to Yāj. III 228 falsely charging one's guru is equal to brahmahatyā and false statement about one's caste or learning is equal to drinking surā (Yāj. III 229), while acc. to Visnu Dh. S 37. 1–3 the three sins mentioned in Manu XI. 55 are to be included among minor sins (upapātakas), while giving false evidence is declared by Visnu to be equal to drinking surā (36. 2). No useful purpose would be served by dilating at great length on the divergences of smṛtis on what lapses are equal to one of the Mahāpātakas. The digests explain that where the same lapse is described as equal to surāpāna by one smṛti and as equal to brāhmana-murder by another the idea is that there is an option as to the penance prescribed for that lapse. Therefore only the remarks of Manu and Yāj. will be set out here. Manu XI. 56 (=Agnipurāna 168. 26) prescribes that forgetting the Veda (already studied), reviling the Vedas, giving false evidence, killing a friend, eating forbidden food or food that should not be eaten, these six are equal to surāpāna. Vide Yāj III 228 already referred to above. Manu XI. 57 holds that stealing a deposit or a man or horse or silver or land or diamonds and other gems is equal to the theft of brāhmana's gold. Yāj. III. 230, Visnu Dh S. 5 383, Agnipurāna 168. 27 are to the same effect. Acc to Manu XI. 58 (= Agnipurāna 168 28) carnal intercourse with a sister by the same mother, with maidens, with females of the lowest castes (like Cāndālas), with the wife of a friend or son is declared to be equal to the violation of a guru's bed. Yāj. III. 231 is practically the same (but he adds intercourse with a sagotra woman to the list). Gaut. 23. 12 and Manu XI. 170 are very similar. Yāj. III. 232–233 declare that a man who has sexual intercourse with a sister of his father or mother, with his maternal uncle's wife, with his daughter-in-law, with a co-wife of his mother, with his sister, with the daughter or wife of his Vedic teacher or his own daughter, is guilty of being a violator of the guru's bed and should have his penis cut off and be killed (by the king) and the woman concerned, if she was a willing party, should also be killed. Nārada (strīpumsayoga, verses 73–75)[73] states: "If a man has sexual intercourse with any of these women viz. mother, mother's sister, mother-in-law, maternal uncle's wife, father's sister, a wife of the paternal uncle or of a friend or of a pupil, a sister, sister's friend, daughter-in-law, daughter, the wife of one's Vedic teacher, a woman of the same gotra, one who has come for protection, a queen, an ascetic woman, one's wet-nurse, a woman performing a vrata and a brāhmana woman, he becomes guilty of the sin of the violator of the guru's bed (i. e. incest). For that crime no other punishment is laid down except that of the cutting of the penis." These two, Yāj. and Nārada, show that excision of the organ and death are both the expiation and the punishment for this crime. The Mit. (on Yāj III. 233) adds that this punishment applies only to the offenders other than a brāhmana, since Manu (VIII. 380) prescribes that a brāhmana offender should not be punished with death whatever sin or crime he may have committed and that he is to be banished from the country unhurt and is to retain all his wealth. The Visnudharma-sūtra (36.4–7) adds a few more women to the list of Yāj and Nārada (such as a woman in her monthly illness, the wife of a learned brāhmana or of one's sacrificial priest or of one's Upādhyāya).

These lapses described above from false accusation against the guru[74] (Yāj. III. 228 or Manu XI 55 to Yāj. III 233 or Manu XI 58) and said to be equal to some mahāpātaka or other are designated as pātakas by Vrddha-Hārita (IX. 216–17) and by the Mit. (on Yāj. III 233) and as anupātakas by the Visnudharmasūtra (36.8). Gautama[75] (21.1–2) adds a few more to the list of pātakas or patitas viz. he who has connection with the female relatives of his mother or father or with sisters and their offspring, a thief of gold, an atheist, one who constantly repeats censured acts, one who does not cast away a patita or who abandons blameless relatives or those who instigate others to commit pātakas. These pātakas are less than mahāpātakas in their culpability and greater than upapātakas.

Upapātakas (minor sins). The number of these has greatly varied from time to time and from smrti to smrti. Vas I 23 speaks[76] of only five upapātakas viz. forsaking the sacred fires (after beginning Agnihotra), offending the guru, being an atheist, taking one's livelihood from an atheist, selling the soma plant. Śātātapa as quoted by Viśvarūpa on Yāj. III. 229–236 mentions only eight. Baud. Dh. S. (II 1 60–61) mentions a small number as upapātakas. Gaut. 21.11 states[77] that the guilt of upapātaka attaches to those who have been declared to defile the company at a Śrāddha dinner and have been named above before the bald man (in Gaut. XV. 18), killers of kine, those who forget the Veda, those who pronounce Vedic texts for these last, Vedic students who break the vow of chastity and those who allow the time for upanayana to pass without performing it. Śankha quoted by Viśvarūpa on Yāj III 229–236 mentions only 18 upapātakas and styles them upapatanīyas The longest lists are contained in Manu XI 59-66, Yāj III 234-242, Vrddha-Hārita IX. 208-210, Visnudharmasūtra 37 and Agnipurāna (168 29–37). III. 229–236, who omits one verse commented on by the Mit. viz 'śūdrapreṣyam' &c. which contains five): slaying kine, being a vrātya (i. e. one whose upanayana was not performed at the prescribed age), theft (other than that of brāhmana's gold or other than what is described as equal to theft of the mahāpātaka type), non-payment of debts borrowed (and not satisfying the three debts due to gods, sages and pitṛs), not establishing the śrauta fires (even though one has the capacity to do so); selling what ought not to be sold (such as salt); parivedana (a younger brother's marrying before an elder brother or establishing sacred fires before him); learning (the Veda) from a paid teacher; teaching the Veda for payment; adultery (with women other than those referred to in guru-talpagamana or those lapses equal to it); an elder brother's remaining unmarried when a younger brother has married; usury (i. e taking more interest than is allowed by the smrtis); manufacture of salt; killing a woman (of any caste, except an ātreyī); killing a śūdra; killing a ksatriya or vaiśya (who is not initiated for a śrauta sacrifice); maintaining oneself on wealth which is condemned; atheism (denial of the soul and a world after death); giving up the observances peculiar to one's status (e. g. a vedic student having sexual intercourse or one guilty of brāhmana murder or the like giving up the performance of the expiation already begun); sale of one's children; theft[80] of corn, inferior metals (like lead and copper) or cattle; officiating as a priest at a sacrifice for those who are not entitled to sacrifice (such as śūdras or vrātyas &c); driving out of the house one's father, mother or son (without a proper cause such as that

mentioned by Gautama 20.1); the sale of a tank or of a park intended for a charitable object (though not actually dedicated to the public), ascribing demerits to an unmarried girl (or interfering with her private parts by means of a finger or the like); officiating as a priest (at the marriage) of one who though a younger brother marries before an elder brother, giving one's daughter in marriage to one who marries before his elder brother; cheating or following crooked ways (except against one's guru, which is equal to surāpāna), giving up an observance voluntarily undertaken[81], cooking for the sake of oneself only (and not for deities, guests &c, which attitude is condemned by Ṛg X 117 6 and Manu III 118), sexual intercourse with a woman (even one's own wife) who is given to drinking wine, giving up the Veda already learnt so as to forget it by the study of other subjects); not tending one's śrauta or smārta fire, abandoning one's son[82], not maintaining one's relatives (such as the maternal or paternal uncle, when one has the means), cutting down a big tree for fuel (to be used only in cooking one's food[83]), maintaining one's self on one's wife (i e on her immoral earnings or by means of her strīdhana) or by killing animals or by herbs (used as charms), setting up of machines that cause death or injury to beings (such as for pressing oil from sesame or for crushing sugarcane stalks); addiction to the vices (declared to be eighteen by Manu VII. 45–48); selling one's self (as a slave for money), being the servant of a śūdra, friendship with low persons, intercourse with a woman of a lower caste (either as a wife or as a concubine); living outside of the four āśramas[84], fattening oneself on food charitably supplied by others, studying the works of false śāstras (such as those of atheists like Cārvāka); holding the office of the superintendent of mines (of gold and the like); sale of one's wife

The above list, though long, is not thoroughly exhaustive Vas I 18 quoted above mentions several persons as enasvinah (who acc. to Viśvarūpa on Yāj III. 229–236 are upapātakinah), some of whom (such as one who is asleep when the sun rises or sets) are not included by Yāj. in his list of upapātakas. Though almost all of the upapātakas listed by Yāj occur in Manu (XI 59–66), yet some of them such as 'abhicāra' (performing a sacrifice like Śyenayāga for the destruction of an enemy), 'mūlakarma' (employment of herbs for bringing under one's control a person) are not noted by Yāj The Mit on Yāj. III. 242 observes that some upapātakas if repeatedly indulged in make a man patita (as provided by Gaut 21. 1) Viśvarūpa, therefore, derives upapātaka as one 'that may become a pātaka by constant addition (upacaya) or by constant practice' (upetya[85]).

Manu XI. 67 (=Agnipurāna 168[86]. 37–38) and Visnu Dh. S. 38 1–6 mention certain lapses as 'jātibhramśakara' (that cause the loss of caste) viz giving pain to a brāhmana (by means of a stick or by the hand), smelling things which ought not to be smelt at (such as garlic, ordure &c.) and smelling spirituous liquor, cheating (saying one thing and doing another), an unnatural offence with a man (or beast also, acc to Visnu) According to Manu XI 68 (=Agnipurāna 168 38–39), killing a donkey, a horse, a camel, a deer, an elephant, a goat, sheep, fish, a snake or a buffalo must be known to be saṅkarīkaraṇa (reducing one to a mixed caste). Visnu 29. 1 says that sankarīkarana is the killing of village or forest animals. Manu XI. 69 holds that accepting presents from condemned men (such as those mentioned in Manu IV. 84), trading, serving śūdras and speaking a falsehood make a man unworthy to receive gifts (apātrīkarana). The Visnu. Dh. S. 40. 1 adds 'maintaining one's self by usury' to these. Manu XI. 70 prescribes that killing insects, small or large, or birds, eating any thing kept close to spirituous liquors, stealing fruits, fuel and flowers and unsteadiness of mind are malāvaha (which make a man impure). Viṣṇu Dh. S. 41. 1–4 are similar. Visnu Dh. S. 42. 1 says all other lapses not specifically mentioned in the several kinds are styled miscellaneous (prakīrnaka) Vrddha-Hārīta (IX. 210-215) specifies several lapses as prakīrnaka viz. cutting big trees for fuel (used for cooking one's food), killing insects, big and small, eating of food that has become uneatable owing to bhāva[87] (i e its resemblance in colour or flavour to some forbidden food or because it is offered with disrespect) or kāla (food on ekādasī or in an eclipse, or in a mourner's house &c or that is stale) or kriyā (action, such as food served with the bare hand or seen by a patita, cāṇḍāla or a dog &c); theft of clay, skin, grass, wood, over-eating, falsehood, restlessness about pleasures, sleep by day, spreading false rumours; making others hear false rumours, eating at another's house, sexual intercourse by day, seeing women in their monthly illness or just after delivery, looking at others' wives; sexual intercourse on a fast, on a śrāddha day, on a parvan day; service of a śūdra; friendship with the low, touching the leavings of food; broad laughs with women, talking at random (or love prattle), looking at women that have untied their hair It will be noticed that some of these like the cutting of big trees for fuel, service of a sūdra, friendship with low persons have been already included by Yāj under upapātakas

Having dealt at length with several classes or grades of sins, we have now to address ourselves to the question of the consequences of sins and the means recommended or adopted for removing sin and its consequences.

It has already been shown above how the sages of the Ṛgveda prayed to the gods, particularly to Aditi, Mitra, Varuna, the Ādityas and Agni to free them from āgas or enas etc. They often say that they violated the dharmas or the vratas (ordinances) of the gods and implore forgiveness They were afraid of the consequences of their guilt, viz. the god's anger. They thought that when God was angered by their transgressions he smote them with adversity, destruction, disease and death. For example, they prey 'whatever ordinance (vrata) of yours we may violate every day like subjects (in the case of a king's ordinances) do not subject us to your death-dealing blow' (Ṛg I. 25 2), 'O Varuna! whatever transgression we men have committed towards the divine host and whatever rules of yours we may have confounded through heedlessness, do not, on account of that sin (enas),' strike us down' (Rg. VII. 89.5)[88]. In Rg X. 89.8-9 it is said that Indra hurls his sharp and deadly weapon at those who break the settled order (dharman) of Mitra, Varuna and Aryaman. The gods are implored to save the worshipper from the deadly attacks of the wolf and from sinking into a pit (in adversity) in Rg. II. 29.6. In Rg. IX. 73.8 it is said that the wise God has his eye on all worlds and he pierces in pits those who do not observe his ordinances and who are therefore not liked by him[89]. On the other hand, when God is pleased with the worshipper, he is implored to lead the latter by the path of virtue (Rg. I. 189.1), to confer happiness on the worshipper's offspring (Rg I. 189 2, IV. 12.5) and to bestow wealth on him (Rg VIII. 45 40).

In the Rgveda the first means of removing the consequences of sin appear to be prayers for mercy and for the remission of sin as in Rg. VII. 86. 4–5, VII. 88. 6–7, VII. 89. 1–4 (where 'mṛlā suksatra mrlaya' is the refrain of all four verses). Even in the Rgveda water was supposed to remove sin, e g. I. 23. 22 says 'O water! carry away whatever sin (durita) may exist in me'. This shows that sin was supposed to have physical effects like a disease, which were removed by water. Sacrifices were offered to the gods in order to win their favour and in order that the sacrificer may be freed[90] from the consequences of even grave sins. The Tai S. V. 3. 12 1-2 and the Śat. Br. XIII. 3. 1. 1 (S. B. E. vol. 44 p. 328) state that the gods redeemed themselves from all sin by means of this (Aśvamedha sacrifice), they even redeemed themselves from the sin of brāhmana murder. That a confession of sin was deemed to remove sin is illustrated in a striking way by what happened in the Varunapraghāsa (one of the cāturmāsya sacrifices). In that[91] sacrifice the wife of the sacrificer had to confess whether she had any lovers and if she felt ashamed to reply in so many words she had only to raise up in her hand small pieces of grass blades to indicate the number of lovers, if any. If she confessed she had to recite the verse, Vāj. S III 44 and was allowed to take further part in the sacrifice If she concealed the truth, it was stated in the Tai. Br that evil would befall her near and dear relatives (her son or husband). It is said by many European scholars who have written on the religion of the Veda that sacrifice became a sort of magic rite to wrest from gods or independently of them what the worshipper desired (e g. see Keith's Religion and Philosophy of the Veda and Upanishads pp. 260-268)[92] But this is an over-statement When initiated for a sacrifice the sacrificer and his wife had to observe a fast or live on a low diet, both were called upon to observe many strict rules such as telling the truth, they had to make large preparations and spend wealth on the materials and the fees to the priests. These things were deemed to cleanse the mind and soul of the taint of sin. There is no reason to suppose that it was only the ritual that was thought to bring about the desired result (and not all the other matters referred to above).

We shall now discuss the prescriptions of the sūtras and smṛtis about the consequences of sins.

In this connection the doctrines of Karma and Punarjanma must be well remembered The details of the origin and development of those doctrines will be discussed in a later section. Here it is enough to state the few main propositions of the doctrine of Karma The fundamental proposition is that cause and effect are as inseparably linked in the moral sphere as assumed in the physical sphere by science. A good action has its reward and a bad act leads to retribution. If the bad actions do not yield their consequences at once or in this life, the soul begins another existence and in the new environment undergoes suffering for its past bad deeds The theory of karma and

92. Christ gave a model prayer to his disciples in Luke 11 2-4 and Matthew 6. 9-13, where after invoking the heavenly Father the first thing asked for is the daily bread, then the forgiveness of sin and deliverance from evil Pious Christians have an easy and complacent self-assurance of getting the things prayed for, since Christ himself has said that they have only to ask and it shall be given to them (Luke 11 9) This also is a sort of magic but it is simple as compared with elaborate Indian sacrifices It seems rather perverse for a Christian who believes in Luke 11 9 to say that if an Indian believes that a sacrifice will yield some reward it is all magic and nothing more.

the theory of transmigration of souls (of pre-existence and post-existence) are inextricably mixed up in Indian thought from at least the ancient times of the Upanisads. The general rule is that Karma, whether good or evil, cannot be got rid of, except by enjoying or undergoing its consequences. This is said by Gaut. 19. 5, Mārkaṇḍeya-purāna and many other works. 'Because the deed does not perish' Gaut.[93]; 'whatever human action it may be, whether good or evil, it cannot be got rid of except by enjoying its consequences; know from me that a man gets rid of good and evil deeds by enjoying (their consequences)'. This doctrine is based on the Sat. Br. V. 2 2.27, Br. Up IV. 4 and VI. 2, Chān. Up. III. 14, and V. 3–10, Kaṭha 5. 6–7 and other Upanisad texts.

Therefore they say, 'a man is born again in that world for which he has worked.' 'According as a man acts and according as he believes so will he be; a man of meritorious acts will be meritorious, a man of evil deeds sinful He becomes pure by pure deeds and evil by evil deeds. And here they say that a person consists of desires And as is his desire, so is his will; and as is his will, so is his deed; and whatever deeds he does that he will reap' (Br. Up. IV. 4. 5); 'a man is made up of will; whatever he wills in this world the same he becomes after departing from this world' (Chān. Up. III. 14. 1); 'some human beings enter the womb in order to have an embodied existence; others go into inorganic matter (the stump of a tree and the like) according to their deeds and according to their knowledge' (Katha Up. 5. 7).[94]

'Actions done by a man do not perish unless they (i e. their consequences) are enjoyed even after crores of years, (the fruits of) actions whether good or evil must of necessity be enjoyed[95].'

Vide also Āp. Dh. S. II. 1. 2. 2-7 and Viṣṇu Dh. S. XX. 47 'just as a calf finds out its own mother from among thousands of cows, so actions done in a former life unerringly reach the perpetrator thereof.'

But this general principle was modified in various ways by the smṛtis and later writings. Gautama 19.11[96] (=Vasiṣṭha 22.8) states· 'Reciting the Veda inaudibly (japa), austerities, a sacrifice, fasting and giving gifts are the means of expiating that (i e. a blamable act)' Vas. 20. 47 and 25. 3 lay down 'A sinner is freed from sin by tormenting his body, by austerities, by reciting the Veda and also by making gifts' and 'those who are constantly engaged in prāṇāyāmas (suppression and regulation of breath), reciting purificatory texts, giving gifts, offering sacrifices, muttering sacred texts will undoubtedly be freed from sins'. Manu III. 227 observes. 'by confession, by repentance, by austerity, by reciting Vedic texts (sacred Gāyatrī or other texts), a sinner is freed from guilt and in case of difficulty (i. e. if he is unable to perform austerities or to recite Vedic texts) by liberality'. Similar provisions occur in Parāśara X. 40, Śātātapa I. 4, Saṃvarta 203, Hārīta (q. in Pr. T. p 467), Yama, (q. in Pr. V. pp 30, 31), Bhaviṣyapurāṇa (q. by Pr. V. p. 31)

Before proceeding with the subject of prāyaścittas we shall speak briefly about the other means of reducing the consequences of sin And first comes confession With reference to the confession of paramours by the wife in the Varuṇapraghāsa, the Tai. Br. (I. 6. 5. 2)[97] says 'He makes the wife confess, thereby he renders her pure and then he leads her to penance'. The Śat. Br. (II. 5. 2. 20) puts it in this form 'for when confessed the sin becomes less, since it becomes truth'. This was a confession before God (Fire) and men (the priests) to restore one to divine forgiveness and favour As regards several lapses, confession was part of the procedure prescribed for atoning for the sin.

CHAPTER II

MEANS OF REDUCING CONSEQUENCES OF SINS

Confession—In Āp. Dh S. I. 9. 24. 15, I. 10. 28. 19, I. 10. 29. 1 it is prescribed that the person undergoing a penance for being an abhiśasta or for unjustly forsaking his wife or for the murder of a learned brāhmana has to declare his misdeed while begging for alms to support himself. The Vedic student who was guilty of sexual intercourse had also to proclaim his lapse while begging at seven houses (Gaut, 23.18, Manu XI 122)[98]

Repentance (anutāpa)—Manu[99] XI. 229–230 (=Visnudharmottara II. 73 231–32) provide: "The more a man's mind loathes his own evil deed the more does his body become freed from the unrighteousness (committed by him). If after committing a sin a man feels repentance for having done it he becomes free from that sin. He becomes purified only by the resolution of ceasing to sin and thinking 'I shall not do so again".[100] The Visnupurāna II. 6.40 lays emphasis on repentance and humble devotion to Krsna. Pr. V. (p. 30) quotes a verse of Angiras 'A man after committing sins, if he is consumed by repentance and is sorry day and night (for his misdeed), is purified by prānāyāma'. The view of digests like the Pr. Prakāśa is that 98 Confession of sins has played a prominent part in early and medieval Christianity. For example, (First epistle of) John I. 9 says 'If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins and cleanse us from all unrighteousness'.

99. Manu XI. 229 also occurs in ब्रह्मपुराण 218. 5.

100. Compare Christ's call to repentance in Matthew 4. 17 and Mark I 15 and his last words (in Luke 24 47) that 'repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations'. शोचेत मनसा नित्यं दुष्कृतान्यनुचिन्तयन्। तपस्वी चाप्रमत्तश्च पापेभ्य. स प्रमुच्यते ॥ इति कल्पतरूद्धृतवाक्येन तपस्विपदोपादानात् ।...पुनरङ्गिराः। विकर्मणा तप्यमान पापाद्धि परिमुच्यते। इति। अत्रानुतापमात्रस्य पापनाशकत्वानुपपत्ते- पापनाशकप्रायश्चित्ते अधिकारिविशेषणत्वेन पापनाशप्रयोजकत्वमुक्तम्। विष्णुरपि। मन संतापनात्तीव्रमुद्वहेच्छोकमन्तत. ।...अत्र सर्वत्रानुतापस्य विहितत्वेन नखानि निकृन्तति इत्यादिवद् दीक्षितत्ववैराग्यवच्चाधिकारिविशेषणत्वमेव । प्रा. प्रकाश folio 11, यम । पश्चात्तापो निवृत्तिश्च स्नानं चाङ्गतयोदितम्। नैमित्तिकानां स्वातन्त्र्ये तद्विधि- स्यादनर्थक ॥ महाक्लेशसाध्यं हि प्रायश्चित्तम्। अल्पक्लेशा हि पश्चात्तापादय । तै. प्रायश्चित्तफले कृते प्रायश्चित्तविधिरफल इति स्पष्टम्। अपरार्क p 1231.

repentance by itself is not enough to destroy sins, but that repentance renders the sinners fit to receive penance, just as paring the nails and the like make the person intending to perform a Vedic sacrifice fit to be a dīkṣita Yama quoted by Aparārka (p 1231) states that repentance and stopping from repeating the sin are merely the aṅgas (subsidiary elements) of prāyaścittas and cannot independently take the place of penances.

Prāṇāyāma (restraint of the breath) Vide H of Dh. vol II p 317 for a description of this Manu XI. 248 (which is the same as Baud. Dh S IV 1 31, Vas. 26 4, Atri II. 5, Sankhasmrti XII 18-19) lays down 'sixteen prānāyāmas attended by the Vyāhrtis and the Pranava (omkāra), if performed every day, would purify after a month even the murderer of a bhrūna (a learned brāhmana)'. Visnu Dh S. 55.2 (in prose) is to the same effect. Vas 26 1-3 provide that on the proper performance of three prānāyāmas all the sins committed by day or in the night are at once destroyed Yāj. III 305 states that for the removal of all sins, of upapātakas and of sins for which no special expiation is provided by the texts one hundred prānāyāmas should be performed. This refers to sins not known to others for which expiation is to be performed secretly. Baud Dh. S (IV 1 5-11) provides for varying numbers (3, 7, 12) of prānāyāmas to be spread over one day to a year for different kinds of sins ranging from the eating of the food of a śūdra to brāhmana murder This whole passage is quoted by the Mit on Yāj III.305 which points out the kinds of sins it deals with The Agnipurāna 173.21 has the same half verse as Yāj. III 305 (first half)

Tapas (austerity) Even Ṛg X 154 2 speaks of tapas as leading to heaven and as unassailable. The Chān. Up V 10 1-2, Mundaka Up I. 2 10-11 place tapas over yajña Gaut 19 15 says that celibacy,[101] truthfulness, bathing thrice daily (in the morning, at noon and in the evening), wearing wet clothes (till they are dried on the body), sleeping on the ground (on a raised part or altar) and fasting constitute austerities Baud Dh S III 10 13 adds to these 'ahimsā' (non-injury to any being), asteya (not depriving any one of his property) and guru-śuśrūṣā (attendance upon a teacher) Gaut. 19 17 states that the periods for which tapas is to be observed are a year, six months, four months, three months, two months, one (month), 24 days, 12 days, 6 days, 3 days, a day and a night (according to the nature of the sin). Manu XI. 239-241 declare that those guilty of mahāpātakas and others guilty of evil deeds are freed from sins by well-practised tapas and that whatever sins are committed by people in thought, word and bodily actions are all quickly burnt by tapas This doctrine is shared by the Jainas as stated in the Uttarādhyayana XXIX 27 'by austerities he cuts off karman' (S B. E. vol 45 p. 166).

Homa (sacrifice into fire). The Tai. Ā. (II 7-8) describes[102] the kūsmānda homa and dīksā and II. 8 prescribes that the man who regards himself as impure should offer a sacrifice with the kūsmānda mantras (mentioned in Tai Ā. II. 3-6, viz 'yaddevā deva-hedanam' (Vāj. S 20 14-16 = Tai. Ā. II. 3.1) The Mahārnava-karmavipāka (folio 8 a) prescribes the procedure of Kūsmānda homa taken from Jamadagni which is brief. It is as follows.— After shaving the hair on the head and the moustache and taking a bath in holy water one should offer the ājyabhāgas and then offer oblations of clarified butter with the three Anuvākas beginning with 'yad devā devahedanam,' and then he worships fire with the verses beginning with 'Vaiśvānarāya pratipādayāmi' He then offers samidh with the mantra 'yadadīvayam' and then he repeats the Jayā mantras. He has to observe the rules for a dīksita viz not eating flesh, avoiding sexual intercourse, not telling a falsehood and not sleeping on a cot. He has to subsist on milk (if he is a brāhmana), on barley gruel if a ksatriya and on āmiksā if he is a vaiśya. The Kūsmānda-homa as prescribed by Baudhāyana is a longer one The Baud. Dh. S. III. 7 1 prescribes that he who considers himself impure should offer burnt oblations reciting the kūsmānda mantras, that he who has had forbidden intercourse becomes even like a thief or even like a slayer of a learned brāhmana and that (by performing homa with kūsmāndas) he becomes free from any sin that is less than the murder of a learned brāhmana Yāj III. 309 provides that whenever a twice-born man feels himself mixed up in heavy sins he should perform a homa with sesame with the sacred Gāyatrī mantra. The Mit following a verse of Yama says that one lakh of offerings of sesame must be made. Both Manu XI. 34 and Vas 26 16 say that a brāhmana becomes free from all distrasses by Vedic recitations (japa) and sacrifices (homa). When the wife confessed to the existence of a paramour, the Śat. Br. II. 5 2. 20 states that she made an offering into the Dakṣiṇāgni with the mantra (Vaj S. III 45) 'whatever[103] sin we have committed, whether in the village, in the forest, in society or by the organs of sense, we cast that away by this sacrifice, svāhā.' Both Manu (VIII. 105) and Yāj (II, 83) prescribe that when a witness tells a falsehood in order to prevent an accused person from being sentenced to death, he should offer for expiating his perjury an oblation of boiled rice to Sarasvatī There are other homas also prescribed such as the Ganahoma, in which such verses as 'agne naya supathā' from the Taittirīya sākhā are recited (Mahārnava).

The old idea of sacrifice seems to have been that it was propitiatory in character Sacrifice was not demanded or required by God. Sacrifice was probably regarded as a gift which pleased God, induced Him to forgive a man for his transgressions and enabled erring man to regain God's favour which had been lost by some shortcoming or some sinful act Sacrifices therefore had an expiatory or cleansing function or character. Sacrifices may be performd by offerings either an animal (meant as substitute for the sinner himself who had forfeited his life for his sins and transgressions) or a burnt offering or any other thing offered to God and then distributed to others.

Japa (muttering of Vedic passages as prayers) Japa is of three kinds, vācika (audibly uttered), upāmśu (inaudibly uttered) and mānasa (mentally revolved), each succeeding one being ten times superior, acc to Laghu Hārīta IV. p 186, (Jīvananda I).[104] Śabara (on Jai. XII. 4. 1) distinguishes japa from stuti, the former being simply an utterance or recitation of a mantra or mantras[105]. Inaudible japa is praised[106] in Śāṅkhāyana Br. 14. 1. The Āśv. Śr I. 1 20 provides that japa, anumantrana, āpyāyana and upasthāna are uttered upāṁśu. The Āp. Śr (24 1. 8–10) provides that mantras from the Ṛgveda and the Sāmaveda are uttered in sacrifices loudly and that passages of the Yajurveda are muttered upāṁśu and the Tai. Prātiśākhya 23. 6 states that upāṁśu recitation is made by means of the effort of speech organs but without sound (i. e. in a very low voice) and without the mind being directed (to utterance with udātta and other accents) i e. 'Karaṇavad-aśabdam-amanah-prayogam-upāṁśu'. Gaut. 19. 12 (= Baud. Dh. S. III. 10 10 = Vas 22 9) prescribes the following Vedic texts as purifiers: Upaniṣads, Vedānta texts, the Saṁhitā texts of all the Vedas (and not the padapātha or kramapātha), the Yajus texts in which the word 'madhu' occurs, the Aghamarṣaṇa hymn (Ṛg. X. 190 1–3), the Atharvaśiras, (the anuvākas called) Rudras, the Puruṣa hymn (Ṛg. X. 90), the two sāmans called Rājata and Rauhiṇeya, the Bṛhat-sāma and the Rathantara, the Puruṣagati sāman, the Mahānāmnī verses, the Mahāvairāja (sāman), the Mahādivākīrtya (sāman), any of the Jyeṣṭha sāmans, the Bahiṣpavamāna (sāman), the Kūṣmāṇḍas, the Pāvamānīs (Ṛg. original idea of japa was highly spiritual. Deep knowledge of the Upanisads and other texts would have made the soul pure and enabled it to realize the supreme reality and induced in the mind love of all human beings as sparks of the one Divine Essence. Japa at the highest level was contemplation of God and endeavour to attain unity with God The habit of repeating the sacred texts should lead to maintaining the soul in the presence and thought of God Japa demands three things, purity of heart, detachment and placing oneself in the hands of God

Manu XI. 46 provides that a sin unintentionally committed is expiated by the recitation of Vedic texts as prayers, but that which men in their folly commit intentionally is expiated by prāyaścitta

The अघमर्षण is highly eulogized as a destroyer of sins like Aśvamedha in Manu XI 259-60, Visnu Dh S 55.7, Vas 26 8, Baud. Dh S. IV 2 20. Rudras are the eleven anuvākas of Tai S IV 5. 1-11 beginning with नमस्ते रुद्र मन्यवे Acc. to Haradatta the two Sāmans Rājata and Rauhina are sung on the Rk verse 'Indram naro nemadhitā havante' (Rg. The बृहत्साम is sung on the verse त्वामिद्धि हवामहे (ऋ VI 46 1, Sāmaveda Pūrvārcika No. 234), the Rathantara on the verse अभि त्वा शूर (ऋ VII 32 22, Sāmaveda Pūrvārcika 233) In the भगवद्गीता X 35 SrīKrsna puts the Brhatsāma as the foremost among Sāmans (बृहत्साम तथा साम्नां) Purusagati Sāman is sung on the verse 'Ahamasmi prathamajā rtasya,' (Sāmaveda, Aranyakānda VI 1 594) महानाम्नी verses are those beginning with विदा मघवन् विदा which occur in the ऐ आ IV, in the जैमिनीयसंहिता of the सामवेद (ed by Dr Raghuvira) and in other संहिताs The महावैराज (सामन्) is sung on the verse पिबा सोममिन्द्र मन्दतु त्वा (ऋ. VII 22 1, सामवेद पूर्वार्चिक 398, उत्तरार्चिक 927), the महादिवाकीर्त्य is sung on विभ्राड्बृहत्पिबतु सोम्य (ऋ. X 170 1, सामवेद अरण्यकाण्ड 628, उत्तरार्चिक 1453), about the ज्येष्ठसामानि हरदत्त mentions two interpretations (of the तलवकार शाखा and छन्दोगs), one holding that they are sung on उदु त्य (Rg I 50 1, सामवेद पूर्वार्चिक 31) and चित्रं देवाना (Rg I 115 1), the other that they are three Sāmans sung on मूर्धानं दिवो (Rg VI 7.1, सामवेद पूर्वार्चिक 67, उत्तरार्चिक 1140) Maskarin holds that ज्येष्ठसामानि are those sung on the verses शं नो देवी-(Rg X. 9 4) and चित्रं देवाना (Rg I 115 1) The बहिष्पवमान is sung on उपास्मै गायता नर. (Rg IX 11 1, सामवेद उत्तरार्चिक 651, 763) Vide H of Dh vol II pp 1169-1170 for further details of the बहिष्पवमान For the कूश्माण्डमन्त्र, vide तै आ II. 3-5 पावमान्य are the verses about soma in the 9th Mandala of the Rgveda Sāvitrī is the famous Gāyatrī mantra (Rg. Manu II 85–87 (which are the same as Vás. 26 9–11 and Visnu Dh S 55. 10–21) lay[108] down: 'the performance of japa is ten times more efficacious than the sacrifices (like Darśapūrnamāsa) prescribed by the rules (of the Veda), japa when carried on inaudibly is a hundred times superior (to sacrifices) and mental revolution of mantras is a thousand times superior The four pākayajñas [109] (Vaiśvadeva, bali, daily śrāddha, and honouring guests) together with the Vedic sacrifices do not come up to even the 16th part of japa. A brāhmana attains perfection (the highest goal) by japa; he may or may not engage in other duties (such as Vedic sacrifices), a brāhmana befriends all creatures'. Great eulogy is bestowed on the inaudible japa of the Gāyatrī mantra (Rg III. 62 10) for which pp. 303–305 of H of Dh. vol. II may be consulted Where no particular number is specially mentioned the recitation of a mantra is to be performed a hundred times.[110]

Manu[110a] XI. 261–262, Vas 27 1–3, Angiras 101 and other works go so far as to assert that the fire of Veda study consumes guilt caused by evil deeds just as a fire burning strongly consumes even green trees or that a brāhmana who remembers Rgveda (studied by him) is not tainted by any guilt, though he may have destroyed the three worlds and have eaten the food of any person whatever But these are simply laudatory (arthavādas) and are not to be taken literally, as Vas. 27. 4 [111] (=Angiras 102) gives the warning 'one should not become addicted to (or take pleasure in committing) evil deeds relying on the power of the Veda (stated in some smrti passages). (The effects of) actions done through ignorance and negligence are alone consumed (by Veda study) and not those of other actions (intentionally done).'

Many smrtis such as Manu XI 249–257 (which are almost the same as Visnudharmottara II. 74. 4–13), Vas 26. 5–7 and 28 10–15 (the former of which are the same as Manu XI 249–251), Visnu

'Even a drinker of surā becomes pure if he mutters the hymn (seen) by Kutsa[113], the three verses beginning with 'prati' (Ṛg VII. 80 1–3) seen by Vasistha, the Māhitra hymn (Ṛg X 185), the verses called Śuddhavatīs (Ṛg VIII 95 7–9 where the word 'śuddha' occurs 13 times in different connections). Even he who has stolen gold (of a brāhmana) instantly becomes free from guilt if he once mutters (the hymn) beginning with 'asya vāmasya' i e. Ṛg I. 164 1–52), and the Śivasankalpa (Vāj S XXXIV. 1–6). The violater of a guru's bed is freed from sin if he repeatedly recites the hymn beginning with 'havispāntam' (Ṛg. X 88 1–19) and the hymn beginning with 'na tam-amho' (i e. Ṛg X 126 1–8), the hymn beginning with 'iti' (i e. Ṛg X 119) and the hymn addressed to Purusa (Ṛg X 90) He who desires to do away with sins, great and small, should mutter during a year the verse beginning with 'ava' (i e 'ava te helo varuna namobhih' Ṛg I. 24. 14, Tai S I. 5 11 3), or the verse 'yat kim ca' (Ṛg VII 89 5) or the verse 'iti vā' (Ṛg X 119 1) That man who, having accepted a gift that ought not to be accepted, or having eaten forbidden food, mutters the hymn beginning with 'tarat sa mandī' (Ṛg IX 58 1–4)[114] becomes pure after three days He who has committed many sins becomes pure if he recites for a month the hymn beginning with 'Somā rudrā' (Ṛg VI. 74 1–4) and the three verses beginning with 'Aryamanam' (Ṛg. IV 2 4–6) while he bathes in a river (and not in a pond or other reservoir of water). One guilty of a grievous offence should mutter the seven verses beginning with 'Indram' (Ṛg I. 106 1–7) A twice-born man removes even very great guilt by offering clarified butter for a year (in fire) with the mantras for the Śākalahomas (Vāj S VIII 13) or by muttering the mantra 'nama id-ugram' (Rg. VI. 51. 8) One who is stained by mortal sin becomes pure if with a concentrated mind he attends cows for a year, reciting the Pāvamānī hymns (the whole of Rg. IX) and subsisting on alms [114a]

So much importance and such occult powers came to be attached to the words of the Rgveda that the Rgvidhāna of Śaunaka (which is later than Manu) concerns itself with prescribing numerous hymns of the Rgveda for the removal of various diseases, of sins, for the conquest of enemies

The Sāma Br I. 5 2 says [115] generally that when no particular hymns are prescribed for the removal of sins Vedic mantras are powerful and become purifiers if accompanied by tapas and the Sāmans may be repeated for the same purpose from ten times as the minimum to 100 times as prāyaścitta. Gautama 19. 13 prescribes the kind of food on which one should subsist when one is engaged in japa viz. one was to live on milk alone, to eat vegetables only, to eat fruits only, to live on barley gruel prepared from a handful of grain, to eat gold[116], to eat clarified butter, and to drink soma and so forth. Gautama 19. 14 further lays down that all mountains, all rivers, holy lakes, places of pilgrimage, the dwellings of sages (rṣis), cowpens and temples of the gods are places (which help to destroy sin).

As the Veda could be studied in and after the sūtra period only by the male members of the first three classes, the japa of Vedic texts for the removal of sins was not possible for śūdras; therefore, the Mit. (on Yāj III. 262) says that although the śūdra (and women and those born of pratiloma marriages also) has no adhikāra (power or capacity or authority) for the recitation of Gāyatrī and other Vedic mantras, still the śūdra and women after revolving in the mind the name of the deity put in the dative case can engage in japa with the word namah (i e he can only utter the words 'namo namaḥ' and not om &c)

114a. In Rg. I. 106. 1–7 the first six verses have the refrain त्वे विश्वस्मान्नो अंहसो निष्पिपर्तन ('May you take us beyond all sin').

115. अनादेशे मन्त्रा बलवन्तस्तपोन्विताः पावना भवन्ति। आपन्न. प्रायश्चित्तं चरेत्। अभ्यास' साम्नां शतं दशावरम्। सामविधानब्रा I. 5 2–4.

116. 'To eat gold' is explained by हरदत्त as 'सर्पिरादौ हिरण्यं निघृष्य प्राशनं हिरण्यप्राशनम्'.

as stated by Gaut Dh S. X 66-67 and Yāj. I. 121[117]. When Manu IV. 80 says 'let him not explain to a śūdra the sacred law (dharma) nor impose upon him a vrata' all that is meant is, according to the Mit on Yāj III. 262, that it applies only to a śūdra who does not wait upon or serve higher varnas Similarly, when Gaut IV. 20 says that those born in the inverse order are outside the pale of the sacred law, the meaning is that samskāras like upanayana are not to be performed on them. The mystic syllable 'om' is said by Āp Dh S (I. 4 13 6) to be the door to heaven and was to be employed before the recitation of any Vedic passage The Yogasūtra (I. 27) avers that om (called pranava) is expressive of the idea of God and that the repetition of om and revolving the meaning of it in the mind lead to concentration.[118]

Not only were certain Vedic hymns and passages recommended for recitation with the object of removing sins some works, particularly the Purānas, proposed an easy way for all viz. that the remembrance of God Nārāyana (or Hari or Krsna) removed all sins The Brahmapurāna (chap. 176) contains a stotra (hymn of praise) of Visnu, which when recited is said to free a man from all sins (mental, vocal or bodily). The Pr. V. p 31 quotes a verse from the Bhavisyapurāna[118a] and three verses from the Visnupurāna as follows.—'even a great sin is removed by (the resolve of) not doing it again, by gifts, by confessing it to others, and by meditation (on Visnu) and not only by prāyaścittas' (Bhavisya); 'of all the expiations (for sins declared by the sages) such as tapas (Cāndrāyana and others) and other actions (japa, homa, gifts) the meditation on Krsna is the highest. If a man remembers Nārāyana in the morning, at night, at twilight, at midday and the like, he at once secures the removal of sin' (Visnupurāna). The Brahmapurāna[119] (216. 87–88) gives expression to a popular belief as follows:—"Men, even after committing sins many times through folly, do not go to Hell if they prostrate themselves before Hari who destroys all sins. Those men also who always remember Janārdana even by roguery go to the world of Visnu after death" The Visnupurāna affirms that those who contemplate upon the mantra of twelve letters (viz. 'om namo bhagavate Vāsudevāya') do not return to the cycle of births and deaths. The great power of mantras is mentioned in the Ādiparva (161. 14) by Kuntī. The Nrsimha-purāna in chap. 18 eulogises the mantra of eight letters (om namo Nārāyanāya) and chap. 63.6, states "what is the use of many mantras and the performance of many vratas, when the mantra 'om namo Nārāyanāya' is capable of securing all desired objects". The mantra of five letters 'namah Śivāya' is dealt with in Lingapurāna (pūrvārdha, chap. 85) and Saurapurāna 65. Brahma-purāna speaks of vaidika mantras and āgamokta mantras (41. 63). The Nityācāra-paddhati (p. 67) says that it is necessary to understand the meaning of vedic mantras in śrauta rites but in smārta rites it is not so.

Dāna (gifts). Gaut. XIX. 16 provides[120] that gold, a cow, a dress, a horse, land, sesamum, clarified butter and food are the gifts (that destroy sin) and may be optionally undergone as penance if no express mention is made thereof. Vas. quotes several verses on gifts one of which (29. 16) states: "whatever sin a man distressed for livelihood commits he is purified from that by giving land even if it be as small in extent as 'gocarma' "[121]. Visnu Dh S. 92.4 is to the same effect. Samvarta[122] (204) prescribes that the gifts of gold, cow and land quickly destroy sins even if committed in former lives Medhātithi (on Manu XI. 139) remarks that the verse implies that as to sins arising from injury to living beings gifts are the principal expiations. The subject of dāna has been dealt with at length in H. of Dh vol II pp. 837–888 A few further remarks may be made here In many inscriptions and copperplate grants of lands or villages the donor usually states that the grant is made for the increase of the merit of himself and of his parents (e g. E. I. vol. XI. p. 219 at p 221). Bṛhaspati[123] as quoted in the Madanaratna (vyavahāra p 66) expressly provides that in land-grants the king should state that he made the gift for securing merit to his parents and to himself[124]. The Rājataranginī (I. 143)[125] refers to the founding of vihāras (monasteries).

Upavāsa (fasting). Fasting strictly means total abstinence from food and drink, but generally it means light diet restricted in quantity and also as regards the nature of the articles taken. Even the Tai S. (I. 6. 7 3–4) refers[126] to three ways of observing vrata on the days of the Darśapūrṇamāsa-iṣṭi either by subsisting only on food available in the village or on forest food or partaking of no food at all. Gaut 19 11 includes upavāsa among the several means of removing sins Tapas is also one of such means acc. to him. But in Gaut. 19 15 as stated above, Gaut includes fasting (anāśaka) among 'tapāmsi'.

124. In Europe the same practice prevailed in the middle ages. 'The founder (of monasteries) constantly tells us that this sacrifice is made for the atonement of his own sins and those of his progenitors and kinsfolk'' G. G. Coulton in 'Five centuries of Religion' (1936) vol III p. 27. Redemption of sin by monetary payments or by leaving property to the churches and monasteries was a very firm belief in the Middle Ages in Christian countries, so much so that men who had earned properties made large gifts to the church when the prospect of death was near and vast estates accumulated in the hands of churchmen, which led to the passing of the Statute of Mortmain in England.

Haradatta explains upavāsa[127] as giving up the eating of boiled rice (bhaktatyāga) and adds that upavāsa is again included under tapāṁsi to show the great importance attached to it. Haradatta notes that a predecessor of his relying on a Purāṇa passage explained upavāsa in Gaut. 19.11 as 'restraint of senses'. In many of the Gṛhya sūtras upavāsa means only eating light food prepared from corn usable in sacrifices (such as rice) once in the day excluding vegetables, māṣa (pulse), salt and flesh (compare Gobhila gr. I. 5 26, Khādira gr II 1.4 and 6, Kauśika-sūtra I. 31-32, Kāthakagṛhya 46.2[128]). The Bṛ. Up IV. 4. 22 closely associates 'anāśaka' (fasting) with tapas as a means to the mystic realisation of the Supreme Soul[129]. Jaimini (III. 8. 9-11) appears to regard fasting as tapas[130]. Manu XI 203 (=Viṣṇu Dh. S. 54.29) provides that fasting (for a day) is the penance for omitting the rites ordained by the Veda (such as the Darśapūrṇamāsa sacrifice and the performance of sandhyā adoration) and for neglecting the special duties of a snātaka (laid down in Manu IV. 34 ff). When a person was observing a fast he had to avoid doing certain other actions. Acc to Devala a fast becomes bereft of its good results by drinking water often, by chewing tāmbūla, by sleep in the day-time and by sexual intercourse[131]; but the Garuḍapurāṇa I. 128. 6 and Bhaviṣya-purāṇa (I. 184 27) allow even when one is fasting the use of flowers, ornaments, rich clothes, garlands, unguents, applying collyrium to the eye and the cleansing of teeth. Dakṣa quoted by the Par M states that if a man observes a fast for the day and night on the day on which the sun first turns towards the north or south, or on the Visuva day (day of equinox), and on an eclipse of the sun or the moon and bathes he is freed from all sins[132]. Manu XI 166 (=Agnipurāna 169.31) prescribes a fast for three days as a penance for theft of grass, firewood, tree, dry food (i e. grains of rice), jaggery, clothes, hide and flesh. The Anuśāsanaparva (106 1) remarks[133] that men of all varnas and even Mlecchas thought highly of fasts and that chapter contains an exaggerated eulogy of fasting Almost all religions (except Zoroastrianism) such as the Hebrew, Christian (in Lent) and Moslem (in Ramjan) emphasize the necessity of fasting as a discipline or as a preparation for penitence The Bhavisya-purāna (I, chap 16, 12–14) states that those who have not kindled sacred fires can please the gods by vratas, restraints, gifts and particularly by upavāsas and points out (verses 18–22) what substances (eatables) should be given up from the first to the 15th tithi in each fortnight In the Śatapatha Brāhmana and the śrauta and grhya sūtras the word upavasatha is used in the sense of 'upavāsa' and is derived from 'vas' (to dwell) with 'upa'. Vide H of Dh. vol II. p 1010 and n 2276 for the Śat Br. The Khādira gr II. 1 4, Gobhila gr I. 6 2, Kauśika-sūtra I. 31 employ the word upavasatha Āp Dh S. II 1 1 4–5 prescribe an upavāsa for husband and wife on parvan days and if they cannot totally abstain from food they should eat only once by day food proper for upavāsa Aparārka p. 199, Smr C (śrāddha p 355) and Krtya-ratnākara quote a verse from Vyāsa deriving the word upavāsa[133a]. The Āp Dh S. II. 5 9–13, Baud. Dh II. 7 32, Vas 6 21 and Śān gr. II 16 5 have the same verse viz. 'an āhitāgni, a draught ox and brahmacārin, these three fulfill (their work) by eating, they cannot fulfill their duties by non-eating'. This is explained as not applying to prāyaścittas (Baud. Dh Ś II. 7 34) and to fasts on Ekādaśī. The Śāntiparva 323 17 states 'Just as a dirty garment is afterwards cleansed by water, so to those who are heated in (the fire of) fasting inexhaustible happiness for a long time comes.' Śānti 79 18, however, says 'merely emaciating the body by fasting is not tapas, but ahimsā, truthfulness, freedom from cruelty, restraint and compassion are tapas'.

Tirthayātrā :—Pilgrimage will be dealt with exhaustively in a later section. It was believed that going on a pilgrimage and bathing in such holy rivers as the Ganges freed a man from sins. Visnu Dh. S. (35.6) lays down that those guilty of mahāpātakas may become pure by Aśvamedha sacrifice or by visiting all the sacred places on the earth. Devala says that a man removes the consequences of such grave sins as the murder of a brāhmana that he may have committed unintentionally by the performance of great sacrifices or by going on a pilgrimage. Parāśara (XII. 58 ff) prescribes[134] pilgrimage to see Rāma's bridge to Lankā for a murderer of a brāhmana who has studied the four Vedas. Devala states: 'a man becomes freed from sin by approaching holy places and shrines, brāhmaṇas that practise austerities, that all rivers that fall into the ocean, all great mountains, all shrines and all forests are holy.' The Matsyapurāṇa (184 18) says that a heap of sins as big as the mountain Meru or Mandara becomes destroyed when man reaches Avimukta (Benares). The Kūrmapurāṇa[135] (pūrvārdha 29.3) says 'I do not see any other expiation for destroying all sins in the Kaliyuga for all beings except Benares'. Even in the times of the Peshwas of Poona pilgrimage was prescribed for brāhmana murder (vide 'Selections from Peshwa Records,' vol. 43 p. 107) and the brāhmaṇas were ordered that after the sinner performed the penance they were to dine with him and recognize that he had been purified In an order dated śake 1659 (1737 AD) the Peshwa Bajirao the first informs the Deshmukhas, Deshpandes and Mukadams that four brothers named Zende approached him with the story that their father was born when their paternal grandmother lived with one Pilaji Zende after she became a widow and that she intended to remarry that man but that had to be postponed owing to famine, that the caste meeting were prepared to take them into the Prakāśa quotes a verse from the Bhavisya-purāna about the penance for brāhmana murder to the effect that for him who dwells to the north of the Vindhya mountain Parāśara prescribes the sight of Setubandha as a penance and then remarks that a man from the north of Vindhya has to travel 360 yojanas to reach Setubandha and that since 360 Prājāpatya penances are declared to be enough to remove the sin of brahmahatyā, it impliedly follows that each yojana towards a tīrtha is equal to one Prājāpatya. The Smrtyarthasāra (pp. 149-150) quotes several verses from the Purānas stating that gods like Brahmā, Visnu and Śiva, great sages like Bhrgu, Vasistha and Viśvāmitra, great kings like Hariscandra, Nala, Sagara obtained greatness by means of tīrthas and that Pāndavas, Śrī Krsna, Nārada, Vyāsa and other sages engaged in pilgrimages for securing kingdoms and for removal of evil fortune. This subject of tīrthas will be dealt with at length in a separate section.

CHAPTER III

PRĀYAŚCITTA; ITS ORIGIN, DERIVATION AND MEANING

It is now necessary to turn to prāyaścittas as removers of sin. A number of subjects will fall to be treated here.

First, an attempt must be made to understand the etymology and meaning of the word 'prāyascitta' in ancient times There are two forms of the word, prāyascitti and prāyascitta, which occur in Vedic works without distinction of meaning and both forms are fairly old, though prāyascitti appears to be the older of the two The form prāyaścitti frequently occurs in the Tai. S (as in II. 1.2,4, II. 1 4.1, III. 1.3 2-3, V 1.9.3, V. 3 12.1)[136a]. In some of these passages no question of sin arises. The word means 'doing some thing which would get rid of some accidental happening or mishap such as the breaking of an ukhā (a pot or saucepan for boiling or cooking) or the sun's losing its brilliance.' In Tai S. V. 3.12.1 the word is used in the sense of an expiation for a sin. So even in very old books the word had two shades of meaning. The Kausītaki[137] Br. (vi. 12) states: "they say 'whatever mistake or excess occurs in the sacrifice that affects the priest brahmā, that he treats with the threefold learning (i. e. the three Vedas)". The word also occurs in the Atharvaveda XIV. 1 30, Vāj. S. 39.12 (in close proximity to niskrti), in the Ait. Br. V 27, in the Śat. Br. IV. 5. 7.1, VII. 1.4 9, XI. 5.3 8, XII. 4.1 6 and in other works also The form prāyaścitta occurs in Kausītaki Br. V. 9, VI. 12 and elsewhere. The Āśv. Śr. III 10.38 and Śānkhāyana Śr. III 19.1 respectively employ the words prāyaścitti and prāyascitta[138]. In Pār gr I.

10 the form 'prāyaścitti' is employed. Jai. in several places employs the word prāyaścitta (as in VI 3 7, VI 4.10, VI 5.45 and 49, XII 3 16). Śabara[139] on the last sūtra (XII 3.16) explains that the prāyaścittas (in the Śruti texts) are of two kinds, viz some are meant to make good the defect in the procedure and materials of sacrifice which arises or befalls through some neglect or heedlessness, while others are subsidiary parts of a rite when an occasion arises i e they are undertaken to atone for not doing what is ordained or doing something which is forbidden (e g non-performance of daily Agnihotra even though the sun rises) The Śat. Br[140] XII 4 and Ait Br. 32 2–11 provide some interesting and amusing examples of the mishaps for which prāyaścittas are provided e. g when a vicious boar, ram or dog runs between the sacrifical fires, or if Agnihotra milk gets spilled while the cow is being milked or if the milk pot is turned upside down or if it were to break or if the cow were to lie down while being milked, or if the fire were to go out after the first libation is offered etc Vide also Mānava-gṛhya I 3, Hir. gr I. 5 1–16, Bhāradvāja gr II. 32, Kauśika-sūtra 46. 14–55, Āśv Śr III 10 and Āśv gr. III. 6–7 for similar occurrences and prāyaścittas The Mahābhāṣya on Pān. VI. 1.157 explains[141] both prāyaścitti and prāyaścitta on the analogy of the word Pāraskara Prāyaścittas may be said to be, in the language of the Mīmāṃsā, either kratvartha or puruṣārtha The former are prescribed in the Śrautasūtras. It is the latter kind of prāyaścittas that are generally dealt with in Smṛti works on prāyaścitta In this work the prāyaścittas mentioned in Śrauta works are passed over, as they have either been mentioned in vol. II. or were of rare occurrence even in olden days.

Most digests and commentaries derive the word prāyaścitta relying on a verse (attributed to Angiras[142] by some) from prāya (meaning 'tapas') and citta (meaning resolve or firm belief), the idea being that prāyaścittas are so called because of their association with or emergence from a resolve to undergo tapas or because of the firm belief that it will be a means of the removal of sin. Various other derivations are suggested by some writers. The Bālambhattī[143] on Yāj. III. 206 quotes a half verse to the effect that 'prāya' means 'sin' and 'citta' means 'purification', which had been quoted by Paksadharamiśra[144], Bhaktūpādhyāya and the Todarānanda, but the Pr. M. (p. 2) says that the source or authenticity of that verse is doubtful. Hemādri refers to an unnamed bhāsyakāra's explanation viz. 'prāya' means 'destruction' and 'citta' means 'joining together' and prāyaścitta means the making good what is lost and that the word denotes a naimittika action on sin.

The Par. M. quotes a smrti text[145] and says that that is prāyaścitta whereby the 'citta' (the mind) of a repentant sinner is made generally (prāyaśah) free (from emotion i. e brought to a normal state) by the parsad (assembly of learned brāhmanas). Here 'prāyah' seems to be taken as equal to 'prāyaśaḥ' and 'citta' has its usual sense. In Sāyana's[146] comment on the Sāmavidhāna Br I 5 1 another derivation is suggested viz that 'prāyah' is composed of two parts 'pra' and 'ayah' and means 'happening or finding' (of the non-performance of what is ordained) and 'citta' means 'knowledge'; and so religious observances after knowing a certain happening are called prāyaścittas. The Pr Vi p 3 and Pr. Tattva p 467 quote Hārita and give[147] yet another derivation (from 'prayata' pure and 'cita' collected), in accordance with which 'prāyaścitta' means such actions as tapas, gifts and sacrifices whereby a man becomes purified (prayata) and destroys his accumulated sins ('cita' being equal to 'upacita'), just as clothes are made clean by the employment of salts, moist heat, putting in boiling water on a fire, and washing in water Hence, as the Mit says, the word prāyaścitta conventionally[148] denotes a certain act or rite of the naimittika type (since it takes place only when an occasion arises) intended for the destruction of sin (and therefore being desired for removal of sin it may also be called kāmya) The Par. M quotes verses from Brhaspati's[149] work of which the section on prāyaścitta holds at the beginning and at the conclusion thereof that prāyaścitta is naimittika[150] (to be performed when a cause 150 Actions are divided into three kinds, nitya, naimittika and kāmya Nitya acts are those like sandhyā-vandana (which are obligatory and performed daily as a duty and which if not performed lead to sinfulness), naimittika are those acts which have to be done only on some occasion (as a bath on an eclipse) and kāmya rites are those which are performed out of a desire to secure some object (as the sacrifice called putresti for a son), Manu in XI 53 says 'therefore (because of the remnants of the guilt of or occasion arises). Jābāla q in the Pr. Prakāśa holds that prāyaścitta partakes of the nature of both naimittika and kāmya actions. The Pr. Prakāśa finds fault with the definitions of prāyaścitta proposed by the Kalpataru, Śūlapāni and others and ultimately arrives at the conclusion that those alone are prāyaścittas which are so spoken of by the learned, just as on Jaimini II. 1.32 (tac-codakesu mantrākhyā) Bhattācārya explains that mantras are those which the respectable yājñikas and those who studied the Vedas so designate[150a]

Sins as stated by Brhaspati[151] and others are of two kinds, viz. intentionally committed and unintentionally committed.

Great divergence of views has prevailed from very ancient times as to whether prāyaścittas can destroy sins intentionally committed Manu XI. 45 and Yāj. III. 226 are positive that sins committed unintentionally are destroyed by prāyaścittas or by the study of the Veda The difficulty arises about sins committed intentionally or with full knowledge. Gaut. (19. 3–6 = Vas. 22. 2–5) states two views,[151a] one holding that prāyaścitta should not be performed since deeds (here sinful deeds) are not destroyed (except by experiencing the consequences thereof), the other view holding that prāyaścitta should be per-crimes in former lives men are born blind or idiots &c.) penances must always be performed for the sake of purification, because those whose sins have not been expiated are born with disgraceful marks.' Though Manu employs the word 'nityam' here, what is meant is that when a sin is committed, a prāyaścitta must necessarily be performed and it is not left to the volition of the sinner whether to perform it or not Vide Mit on Yāj III. 220 But it does not follow from this that if prāyaścitta for removing a sin is not performed, another sin is thereby committed, for in that case there would be anavasthā (regressus ad infinitum) formed (for the removal of the effects of sin). The latter relies upon certain indications in Vedic passages. Gaut. relies upon four such passages. The first says"[152] 'after performing the punaḥstoma[153] one can come back to (become fit for) soma sacrifice (i. e. for Vedic rites in general). Another indication is· 'after performing Vrātyastoma (one becomes fit for Vedic sacrifices).' A third is: 'He, who offers the Aśvamedha sacrifice, crosses beyond all sin, beyond brāhmana murder'. The fourth is· one should make a person charged with grave sins perform the Agnistut Vasistha also (20 1–2) gives expression to the two views about the efficacy of penances.[154] Manu XI. 45 (latter half) states, that according to some, prāyaścittas may be prescribed for the removal of intentionally committed sins from indications contained in the Vedas. It cannot be said that these Śruti passages are mere arthavādas (i. e laudatory texts). They must really be taken, though expressed in the form of ordinary arthavādas, as laying down (a vidhi) that one desirous of destroying his sins should perform Aśvamedha and the other sacrifices mentioned In this case the maxim of rātrisattra[155] applies (vide Jai. IV. 3. 17–19). There are certain sattras (sacrifices extending over more than twelve days) called Trayo-

Yāj I, 38 provides vrātyastoma for patitasāvitrīka. daśarātra, Caturdaśarātra and so on. All these are called rātrisattras. With reference to these a Vedic passage says 'those who approach (i. e. perform) these rātrisattras attain stability (long life or super-eminence)'. In the text prescribing the rātrisattras there is no mention of any special reward for performance. Therefore 'stability' (pratisthā) contained in the passage must be held to be the reward of the performance of rātrisattras and not mere heaven (which is the reward of all sacrifices for which no special reward is mentioned, according to Jai. IV. 3. 15-16). The same maxim applies to passages like Yāj III. 226 which say that sin is removed by penances[156]. Medhātithi draws attention to the story in the Tai. S. VI. 2.7 5, Kāthaka S. VIII. 5, Ait Br 35.2 that Indra consigned yatis to Sālāvrkas (dogs or wolves) and had to perform the rites called Upahavya to get rid of the sin. Manu states his own opinion in the next verse (XI. 46) that sins committed unintentionally are destroyed by the recitation of Vedic texts and sins committed intentionally through folly are destroyed by various prāyaścittas. Yāj. III. 226 (latter half) appears to hold that prāyaścittas do not destroy sins intentionally committed, but the sinner undergoing the prescribed penance becomes fit to be associated with other people on account of the texts (laying down the prāyaścittas); but Yāj. implies, it seems, that the results of sin intentionally committed (such as Hell and the like) are not got rid of. Manu XI. 189 prohibiting social intercourse with sinners who have not performed penance practically conveys the same idea as that of Yāj in III. 226 (latter half). Yāj. III. 220 observes that a man guilty of pātakas should perform prāyaścitta for his own purification (here and in the next world); in this way (i. e if he performs penance) his inner soul recovers its composure and the people also become satisfied. This verse puts in a nutshell the purposes of prāyaścittas as conceived by the smrtis, viz. purging of sin (or purification), the satisfaction of the sinner's mind, admission to intercourse with all people. Chāgaleya[157] holds that prāyaścittas free the sinner from the consequences of sins committed unintentionally, but no penance exists which frees a man from the consequences of sins knowingly committed except in the case of upapātakas and in suicides or attempts at suicide. The Par. M. (II. 1 pp 200-201) cites a verse of Jābāli and verses of Devala setting forth the two views about the efficacy of prāyaścittas, while it also cites the view of Baudhāyana-smṛti that there is no prāyaścitta for sins committed knowingly and the view of Angiras that the penance is double in the latter case[158]. Angiras further says that prāyaścittas do destroy the sin arising from committing acts that are forbidden and the like, just as the rising sun removes darkness Manu XI. 47 provides· 'A twice-born man having become liable to perform a penance (for a sin), whether he committed it through fate or by some act committed in a former existence, must not have intercourse with virtuous men until he performs the proper penance.' Āp. Dh. S (I. 9 24 24–25) provides 'If a man slays a guru (father, Vedic teacher &c) or a brāhmaṇa who has studied the Veda and finished the ceremonies of a soma sacrifice he shall live according to these very rules (contained in Āp. Dh. S I. 9. 24. 10–32) until his last breath He cannot be purified (of the sin of the murder of a guru or learned brāhmaṇa) in this life But his sin is removed (at his death)'.[159] It appears to follow from Āpastamba's words that penance ending in death destroys the sin. The same was the view of Aṅgiras, Yama and others.

In this conflict among the authors of smrtis the solution proposed by the Mit. on Yāj III. 226 has been accepted by most medieval writers and is as follows[160]. The potentialities and consequences of sins are twofold, viz those leading to Hell and the others preventing intercourse with members of the society to which the sinner belongs Therefore, even though a prāyaścitta may not be efficacious to prevent the first mentioned consequence (viz fall into Hell), there is nothing improper in prāyascitta being effective in removing the obstacle to association with other people. As to sinful acts that are not pataniya (do not cause loss of caste) prāyaścitta does destroy such sinfulness as expressly stated by Manu. XI. 46. Even as to sins that are pataniya and are committed intentionally, if a penance ending in death is undergone as laid down by Manu XI. 73, Yāj III 247–248 and Gaut 22. 2–3 for brāhmana murder; Manu XI. 90–91, Yāj III. 253, Gaut 23 1 for drinking surā; Gaut 23 8–11, Manu XI 103–104 and Yāj. III. 259 for sexual intercourse with the guru's wife; Manu XI. 99–100 and Yāj. III. 257 for theft of brāhmana's gold; then the sin is destroyed as stated by Āp. Dh S I. 9 24 25 and I 10. 28.18 quoted above When Manu says (in XI. 89 latter half) that there is no penance for the sin of slaying a brāhmana intentionally, the proper interpretation of this read along with Manu XI. 46 quoted above is not that there is total absence of prāyaścitta in such a case, but that ordinary prāyaścittas (such as those in Manu XI. 72) would not do in such a case, but only very heavy ones that would end in death. Medieval digests like the Prāyascitta-muktāvali (folio 32a) hold that according to the Kalivarjya section penance ending in death is forbidden in the case of brāhmana sinners and therefore a

The Par M. (II part 1 pp 201–203) sets out this view of the Mit and appears to hold it itself. It sets out another view also. Those who hold this latter view read Yaj. III. 226 as 'kāmatoऽvyavahāryastu' with an avagraha. The meaning then is that one who has performed the penance prescribed for a sin does not fall into Hell, but he cannot be allowed to associate with good men (śistas) if he is guilty of a wilful sin. There is a verse of Manu (XI 190 = Visnu Dh. S. 54.32) that one should not associate with those who slay children, who return evil for the good done to them, who slay those that come for protection and who kill women, even though they might have become purified by undergoing the appropriate penance. There is a similar verse of Yāj III 298 on which the comment of Vijñāneśvara is most interesting as indicative of the spirit of our medieval writers who were always oppressed by the might of words (Vedic or smrti) deemed as authoritative. The Mit remarks [161] 'the prohibition (contained in Yāj. III, 298) is based on the text alone (and not on logic or reasoning). What cannot a text do? There is nothing too heavy for a text. Therefore, even though a light penance is prescribed for slaying an adulterous woman, still there is a prohibition against associating with such slayers based on the words of the text'.

Even Śankarācārya relies on these words of Sabara in his bhāsya on Vedāntasūtra III 4 32. When Yāj I 58 says that a son born of a brāhma form of marriage renders 21 generations holy (10 paternal ancestors, ten descendants and himself) Viśvarūpa says that this is all laudatory of the brāhma form and not to be taken seriously as it would be contrary to the doctrine of Karma, but then he turns round and says that it may be taken literally as stated by those who know Mīmāmsā 'स्तुतिमात्रमेतद्भूतानां भाविनां पावनानुपपत्तेः। उपपत्तौ वा कृतनाशाकृताभ्यागमप्रसङ्गात्। यद्वास्तु फलविधि । विवाहविशेषस्य फलविशेषापेक्षत्वात्। न चागमानुसारिण्यर्थेऽनुपपत्तिरिति शक्यं वक्तुम्। तथा च नैयायिका —न हि वचनस्यातिभारोऽस्तीत्याहु'।।' विश्वरूप on या I. 58. Vide Aparārka on Yāj II. 73–75 (p. 673) who says that one man's merit (punya) cannot be transferred to another and that Yāj. II. 73–75 are simply intended to frighten away witnesses from perjury as Nārada (ṛṇādāna 200) clearly states.

This maxim is taken from the bhāsya of Śabara and is a favourite device with all Dharmaśāstra writers from Viśvarūpa downwards to justify any statement of the smrtis however illogical or exaggerated it might appear to be. The Pr. T. (pp. 544–545) quotes [162] the Mit. about the two śaktis of sin and its remarks on Yāj III. 298 and does not approve of them, relying on the words of Brhaspati that no decision should be arrived at on the bare words of the śāstra, but it should also be supported by reasoning and that the words 'slayers of women' do not refer to adulterous women but to innocent women (such as the wives of one's enemies). Nārada (sāhasa, verse 11) holds that those who are punished by the king with a fine of the first or second (madhyama) kind can be allowed to associate with other members of society but those who are awarded the highest fine should not be spoken to by others [162a]. Those who take the view of the sinner's inability to associate with other men even after undergoing penance rely also upon Vedānta-sūtra III. 4. 43 (bahis-tūbhayathāpi smrterācāracca). The Par. M. very rightly points [163] out that the sūtra refers to those who after going in for life-long celibacy abandon the duties of that stage of life (āśrama) and that it does not refer to householders and quotes a verse of Kauśika in support. The Smrti-muktāphala (Pr., pp. 867–868) refers to this discussion contained in the Par. M. The Pr. M. (p. 7) appears [164] to hold that the great Śankarācārya explained

Vedāntasūtra III 4. 43 after reading Yāj III 226 as 'kāmatos vyavahāryastu' and that those who fell from the vow of life-long celibacy (either as naisthika brahmacārins or as sannyāsins) were to be excommunicated (and not to be associated with) The printed editions of the bhāsya contain no express quotation of Yājñavalkya's verse, but from the fact of his quoting Atri's verse it is possible to hold that Śankarācārya understood Yājñavalkya as the Pr. M. says he did.

A question may naturally be asked: why should it be accepted that penances destroy sin (as stated in Yāj III 226). The answer is: what[165] actions are grave sins or minor sins or not sins at all is laid down by the śāstra (śruti and smrtis) For example, it is not clear to ordinary people why being an officer over mines or making friends of low people or being a servant of a śūdra should be a sin at all But the smrtis say so. If the smrtis are to be relied upon for determining what acts are sinful, then it follows as a matter of course that the same smrtis which speak of penances as removers of sins must also be accepted and that no other means for determining the efficacy of penances can be appealed to So also the Bhagavadgītā (IV 37) states that the fire of spiritual knowledge consumes all (accumulated, sañcita) actions (and their consequences).

Many of the sins (though not all) for which penances are provided in the smrtis are also offences punishable by the king or State For example, murder, theft, incest, perjury are acts punishable by the State in almost all countries even now and were so in ancient and medieval India Persons guilty of these were also liable to undergo prāyaścittas. It is probably due to this double liability that punishments for crimes in ancient and medieval India were light as compared with the heavy punishments for even trifling crimes inflicted in western countries only a century or two ago But there are other acts which are not punishable by the State now and were not probably punished even in ancient or medieval India by the king. For example, forgetting Veda studied by a person, not tending Vedic fires consecrated by a person himself, sleeping till after sun-rise and sleeping at sunset are pātakas, acc to Vas I 19 and some of those are upapātakas acc to Yāj III. 239. It does not seem likely that an Indian king ever punished any person for these. On the other hand, obstructing the road, prying when the king is taking his meals, sitting before the king on one's haunches, speaking loudly before the king are among the fifty chalas of which the king could take cognisance suo motu and award suitable punishment (vide H. of Dh vol III p. 266). But there is nothing to show that such actions ever fell within the purview of the rules about prāyaścittas. The important questions are: What was the relation of the rules about prāyaścittas which were to be prescribed by a pariṣad (a meeting of learned brāhmanas) to punishments by the king as regards actions which were both pātakas inviting penances and crimes entailing punishments by the King? Which of these two sets of rules was earlier? Were penance and punishment cumulative or alternative? It is difficult to give definite opinions on these questions. We know that prāyaścittas like Aśvamedha are spoken of even in the Tai S. We also know that the praśnavivāka (which is quite close to prādvivāka in derivation and meaning) occurs in the Vāj. S. XXX. 10 and Tai Br. III. 5. 6. Therefore it follows that judicial functions were very early separated from the executive functions of the king. The reference to the ordeal of fire in the Tāndya Br 14. 6. 6 (vide H. of Dh. vol. III p. 361) and the grasping of a red-hot hatchet in the hand by a person accused of theft and his being killed show that ordeals were administered and the punishment for theft was death. Bṛhaspati, quoted in the Vivādaratnākara, says 'When a man of good character and a diligent reader of the Veda has committed theft he shall be kept in prison for a long time and shall be caused to perform penance after having been compelled to restore the goods' (S. B. E. vol. 33 p. 362 [166]).

The pariṣad made its own rules about prāyaścittas and the king awarded punishments. Which set of rules was earlier it is difficult to say. The king did not very probably interfere with the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the parisad and the brāhmanas helped the king in the administration of justice by being judges and by advising him as to the punishments to be imposed (vide

It is possible that this verse means that a learned brāhmana who has been well conducted but fell a victim to the temptation of theft should not be jailed for a long time because jail life torments his mind and therefore he should be made to restore stolen property and given penance.

Visnu Dh. S. V. 194). Gautama VIII.1, echoing the words of the Śat. Br. V. 4. 4 5, observes:[167] 'the king and the brāhmana with profound learning uphold the moral order in the world (or are upholders of the sacred law). The Āp. Dh. S. (II 5. 10. 12-16) contains very important information: 'The ācārya shall order those who, while participating according to the śāstras (in the privileges and responsibilities of their castes), have gone astray through the weakness of their senses to perform penances according to the dictates (of the smrtis) commensurate with their (sinful) acts. If they transgress their ācārya's order he shall take them to the king. The king shall send them to his purohita proficient in dharmaśāstra and the science of government. He (purohita) shall order them to perform (proper penances) if they are brāhmanas. He shall reduce them by forcible means except corporal punishment and slavery.' So this passage shows that the king helped in carrying out prāyaścittas. Nārada includes 'neglect of penances' among matters solely dependent on the king (prakīrnaka, verse 3) and not on complaints by private individuals. Devala[168] probably conveys the real position when he says: 'The king is the giver of krcchras (i. e his consent is required for actually undergoing the prescribed penances), the learned man who has studied Dharmaśāstras prescribes the prāyaścitta, the sinner carries out the penance and the king's officer sees to the safe performance of the prescribed penance' Parāśara VIII. 28 says 'an assembly should point out the proper penance after getting the permission of the king, it should not be done without reference to him, but slight penance may be done without informing him'. The Par. M. II. part 1. p. 232 explains that this applies to prāyaścittas for sins like govadha or those that are greater than it. Devala[169] also has similar verses.

Parāśara VIII. 29 states that the king also should not ignore the parisad and should not by himself prescribe penance. Paithīnasi quoted by the Dandaviveka (p. 76) provides[170] for both prāyaścitta and punishment and from the tenor of the verse it appears that both were to be enforced by the king. The position is tolerably clear as to medievel times One feels great hesitation in stating definitely the relation of punishment to penances and the king's position as to both in ancient times. Āp. Dh. S. I. 9. 24. 1-4 provide[171] that one who kills a ksatriya or a vaiśya or a śūdra shall respectively give one thousand cows, a hundred cows and ten cows for the purpose of removing the enmity and that in each of these cases one bull was to be given in addition for the purpose of expiation. Āpastamba does not expressly state to whom the cows were to be given. The commentator Haradatta explains that they were to be given to brāhmanas. Manu XI. 127, 129, 130, and Yāj III. 266-267 have similar provisions but in the chapter on penances. On the other hand, Baud. Dh. S. I. 10 23. expressly states that the cows are to be given to the king. As both the words 'vairaniryātanārtham' and 'prāyaścittārthah' are employed by Āp. it may be said that the cows were to be made over to the king even according to Āpastamba. The cows were to be made over to the king for bestowal on the family of the murdered person to mollify them and if they refused to receive them the king was ot to retain them for himself but was to distribute them among brāhmanas. We know that Manu (IX. 243-245) provides that the fine recovered from a man guilty of mortal sins was not to be taken for himself by the king but was to be offered to Varuna and thrown into water or was to be distributed among learned brāhmanas. Manu IX. 236 provides that for those who were guilty of the four grave sins (brāhmana murder &c.) and did not undergo penance for the same the king should inflict corporal punishment (branding on the forehead) together with fine in accordance with the śāstra. Manu IX. 237

(= Matsya 227 164) and Visnu V. 4–7 say that on the forehead a mark of female private parts with red-hot iron should be branded in the case of incest, the mark of a tavern flag in the case of drinking surā, the mark of dog's foot in the case of theft (of brāhmaṇa's gold) and the mark of a headless trunk in the case of a brāhmaṇa-murder. Manu IX. 240 further prescribes that men of all castes guilty of the four mahāpātakas committed unintentionally that perform the proper penance should not be branded on the forehead by the king but should be awarded the highest fine Manu IX. 241 and 242 provide that a brāhmana guilty of these grave sins unintentionally may be punished with the middle amercement (if he himself be possessed of good qualities) but if he was guilty of the grave sins committed intentionally he should be banished from the kingdom being allowed to take with him his wealth and paraphernalia; while persons other than brāhmanas when guilty of grave sins unintentionally committed were to be deprived of all their wealth and if guilty intentionally they were to be sentenced to death. These verses show that though prāyaścitta be performed persons guilty of grave sins were liable to undergo punishment and if no penance was performed then they were liable to branding and also fines etc Manu XI. 56 provides that bearing false witness is similar to the drinking of surā and Manu XI. 57 and Yāj. III. 230 hold that misappropriation of a deposit is like the theft of gold Visnu Dh. S (V 169) provides that the misappropriator of a deposit was to be made to return the deposit or its price with interest and was to be punished like a thief by the king and V 179 that a false witness had all his property confiscated. These instances establish that both fines by the king (i. e rāja-danda) and penances prescribed by the assembly of learned men (i. e parisaddanda or daiva danda) had to be undergone by those guilty of some grave sins that were also looked upon as crimes In some cases the penance and the punishment were the same For example, Gaut 23 10–11, Vas. 20. 13, Manu XI 104, Yāj. III 259 and several other smrtikāras prescribe for incest the penance of the excision of the testicles and penis and proceeding toward the south or south-west till the body falls Nārada as quoted above prescribes for incest the punishment (daṇḍa) of the excision of the testicles The Mit. on Yāj. III. 233 quotes Nārada and remarks that the punishment of excision and death prescribed by Yāj III. 233 applies only to non-brāhmaṇas and that in such cases the punishment of death itself is the prāyaścitta There were works like the Madanapārijāta[172] (p. 827) and the Mitākṣarā that held that the prohibition against corporal harm to brāhmaṇas (Manu VIII. 380) applies only to matters other than prāyaścittas and that since the Manusmṛti itself (XI. 100) states that a brāhmaṇa guilty of theft of brāhmaṇa's gold may go to the king with an iron club and have his head smashed by the king, the death of a brāhmaṇa as a penance for theft by being struck with a club presented by himself was not ruled out. In some cases punishment by the king was deemed to have purged a man of sin and no penance seems to have been thought necessary, as Manu VIII. 318 (=Vas 19.45) says 'men that commit sins and are punished by the king become purified and reach heaven like good men who perform meritorious deeds.' The Mit on Yāj. III. 259 explains that this holds good only where the punishment is death, as in the case of incest noted above. Āp. Dh. S. II. 10 27. 15–16 provide [173] that a person guilty of slaying a man, of theft and of forcible seizure of land was to be deprived of his wealth by the king and was to be sentenced to death and that if the offender was a brāhmaṇa he was to have a piece of cloth tied over his eyes for the whole of his life (i. e. he was not to be sentenced to death). It appears that in very ancient times as provided by Āp. Dh. S. I 9.25.4 the thief approached the king [174] with a club (of iron or khadira wood) on his shoulder and announced his guilt, when the king struck him with the club; on his being killed he became free from guilt. This was a penance as well as a legal punishment. Manu has a similar rule in his chapter on punishments (VIII. 314–316) providing that the thief should carry a weapon (called musala) or a club of khadira wood or a double-edged śakti or an iron staff and that if the king strikes him once with the club and he is killed or if he is not killed but is allowed to go half dead and lives, the thief is freed from the guilt. The Mit. on Yāj. III. 257 quotes a prose passage from Śankha and a verse from Samvarta (122) to the same effect Manu in the chapter on penances (XI. 100–101 = Agnipurāna 169. 20–21) provides the same procedure for theft as a penance. Vas 20. 41, Yāj. III. 259, Visnu 52. 1–2 and Parāśara XII. 69–70 provide a somewhat similar penance for the thief of brāhmana's gold. Vasistha introduces an important change viz, that the king hands over to the thief a weapon made of udumbara wood (or probably of copper) with which the thief is to kill himself. It appears that gradually the king gave up this unpleasant method of awarding punishment personally Nārada[175] (pariśista, verses 46–47) provides that after the thief comes running to the king and announces his guilt, the king was to touch him (with the club, as a symbolic gesture) and then let him off and the thief became freed from sin by his confession of guilt. It has to be remembered, however, that the thief had to restore, even when he underwent penance, stolen property, as stated by Manu VIII. 40, Yāj. II. 36 and 270, Brhaspati and by digests[176] like the Pr. Prakarana If it were impossible to make the thief restore the stolen property the king had to make it good from his own treasury[177] (Gaut X. 47, Śāntiparva 75. 10, Kautilya III. 16) or he had to make his officers[178] entrusted with the duty of preventing thefts pay the price of the stolen property (Āp Dh. S. II. 10. 26. 8). Vide for further details H. of Dh vol. III pp. 166–168. It appears that the actual carrying out of the sentence of death was later on assigned to Cāndālas as stated by Manu X. 56 and Visnu Dh. S. 16. 11 (vadhya-ghātitvam cāndālānām).

Another point to be noted is that as regards the awarding of punishments and prescribing of penances, the matters to be considered were the same viz. whether the lapse was intentional[179] (kāmataḥ) or unintentional (akāmataḥ) or whether it was the first offence or whether it was repeated and what the circumstances as to the time, the place, the caste, the age, the capacity, learning, wealth were. Compare Kauṭilya IV. 10, Gaut. XII. 48, Manu VII. 16 and VIII. 126, Yāj I. 368, Visnu V. 194, Vas. 19. 9 about punishments with Baud.[180] Dh. S. I. 1. 16, Yāj. III. 293 (= Atri verse 248 and Agnipurāna 173. 6), Angiras 143, Viśvāmitra, Vṛddha-Hārīta IX. 297, and Vyāghra as regards penances It is on account of this close connection between punishments and penances that the Prāyaścittatattva, after quoting Devala to the effect that if a man makes no move for taking prāyaścitta for one year, he has to undergo double penance thereafter and to pay a double fine to the king, remarks that the maxim is that prāyaścittas are to be moulded on the lines of punishments[181]. The Pr. M. (pp. 124–125) quotes Kāśyapa who provides a penance for one that causes mischief to a well, public park, bridge, rampart wall or a temple or idol, then quotes Visnu V. 169 which prescribes the highest fine for a breaker of idols, Manu IX 285 which provides a fine of 500 puṇas for a breaker of idols and re-instatement of the idol by him and then remarks 'dandavat prāyaścittāni bhavanti'. Nārada divided sāhasa into three kinds viz prathama, madhyama and uttama, the last of which consisted in killing a person with poison or weapon, adultery and rape and injury to life He then provides that when offenders guilty of the first two kinds were punished by the king, they became fit for association with the people, but that one guilty of the uttama-sāhasa, though punished by the king, was not fit even to be talked to (Nārada, sāhasa, verse 11).

The king had jurisdiction[182] to punish sinners if they did not agree to undergo the prāyaścitta prescribed by the pariṣad but it is extremely doubtful whether he exercised that jurisdiction in all cases Society or the caste also had a weapon in its hand viz that of excommunication by ghatasphota if one guilty of a grave sin refused to perform the prāyaścitta prescribed (i e. it was jātidanda). Vide Gaut 20 2–9, Manu XI 182–185 and Yāj III. 294 and II. of Dh vol II p 388 and vol. III p. 1009–1010 for the rite of ghatasphota and re-admission to caste after ghatasphota Many of the prāyascittas prescribed for the grave sins were terrible (such as throwing oneself into fire, drinking boiling surā or water or cow's urine or milk or ghee for drinking surá, Manu XI 73, 90–91, 103 &c) and were to be self-inflicted and were not to be prescribed by the parisad as the words of Manu in XI. 73 'icchayātmanah' and 'prāsyed-ātmānam-agnau vā' clearly convey and as some of the digests expressly provide[183] In order to enable a man to become fit for intercourse with his caste men he had to give a dinner to them or distribute sweetmeats even after undergoing prāyascitta So it follows that a man guilty of a crime was liable to three burdens, punishment by the king, penance prescribed by learned brāhmanas and giving dinner or sweetmeats to castemen Vide H. of Dh vol. II. p. 971.

The literature on prāyaścittas is vast in extent, since in ancient times they loomed very large in the popular mind. Out of the 28 chapters of the Gautamadharma-sūtra, ten (i. e. more than one-third of the whole) are devoted to penances. Out of the 30 chapters of the printed Vasistha-dharmasūtra, prāyaścittas cover nine (20-28) Manu devotes verses 44 to 265 (in all 222) of chapter eleven to penances and the Yājñavalkyasmṛti containing 1009 verses deals with prāyaścittas in 122 verses (III. 205-327). Several printed smrtis such as those of Angiras (168 verses), Atri (chapters 1-8), Devala (90 verses), Brhad-Yama (182 verses), Śātātapasmrti (in 274 verses) from the Ānandāśrama collection of smrtis alone deal only with prāyaścittas. Many other smrtis and several purānas, such as the Agni (chap 168-174), Garuda 52, Kūrma (Uttarārdha 30-34), Varāha 131-136, Brahmāṇḍa (Upasamhārapāda chap. 9), Visnudharmottara (II 73, III 234-237) contain hundreds of verses on prāyaścittas. Besides commentaries like the Mitāksarā, Aparārka, Par. M. and others and digests like Madanapārijāta (pp. 691-994), there are special digests dealing with prāyaścittas alone such as Hemādri on Prāyaścitta (which is of doubtful authenticity), the Prāyaścittaprakarana of Bhavadeva, Prāyaścittaviveka, Prāyaścittatattva, Smrtimuktāphala (prāyaścitta section), Prāyaścittasāra (part of Nrsimhaprasāda), Prāyaścittamayūkha, Prāyaścittaprakāśa (ms. in the Anūp Sanskrit library, Bikaner, No. 2610), Prāyaścittenduśekhara of Nāgojibhatta, which have been utilised in this work. The most elaborate treatment is found in Prāyaścittaviveka, Par. M. II parts 1 and 2, and Prāyaścittaprakāśa.

The commentators discuss the question about the persons who have adhikāra (capacity) for having penances prescribed for them Since Manu XI. 44 (prāyaścittīyate narah) and Yāj III. 219 (narah patanam-rcchati) both employ the word 'man' without [184] any qualification, the commentators and digests say that penances are meant for men of all varnas, for all persons born of unions in the reverse order (pratilomajas) and for even cāndālas. Yāj. III. 262 states that a śūdra sinner though he has no adhikāra (for recitation of Vedic mantras and homa), yet becomes purified by undergoing the observances (except japa and homa) for the periods prescribed. Angiras[185] provides that penance may be administered to a śūdra devoid of japa and homa. Even as to japa and homa there were works like the Madanapārijāta p. 749 and Vy. M (p. 112) that relying on a verse of Parāśara VI. 63-64 held that a homa could be performed for women and śūdras in the ordinary fire through a brāhmana[186]. The Pr. V. relies on Manu X. 62 and a prose passage of Devala for the proposition that even Cāndālas have to perform penances, if they act contrary to the rules and prohibitions laid down for them Since the non-performance of what is prescribed and doing what is forbidden lead to sin, the person guilty of these or the person who has a desire to destroy his sins is a person entitled to perform prāyaścitta, as also one who repents of his guilt.

Before going into the subject of the several prāyaścittas prescribed for each grave or minor sin, some questions of a general character have to be disposed of.

Some smṛtis like Bṛhad-yama III. 1-2 and Śankha state that a boy over five years of age and less than eleven years old, if guilty of some pātakas such as drinking surā, has not to undergo penance personally, but his brother, father or other

This is पराशर VI. 63-64 (the printed edition in B. S. Series reads व्रतं चैव स्नान तीर्थ जपस्तप). It is rather inexplicable how while Nīlakantha in his Vyavahāramayūkha holds, relying on Parāśara, that the dattahoma may be performed by a śūdra or a woman through a brāhmana, the Prāyaścittamayūkha of the same author propounds a different view in the words 'एतेन यन्महार्णवमदनरत्नयो. स्त्रीशूद्रादेर्विप्रद्वारा समन्त्रकौ जपहोमौ भवत इति तत्परास्तम्' (p 13) Did the author change his views or is the text of one of the two Mayūkhas tampered with by his successors? The प्रा प्रकाश (folio 30 b) explains Parāśara VI. 63-64 in a different way It says that the verse does not lay down generally that a woman or any one else can in every case have a homa performed for her through a brāhmana, but that where in a rite japa and homa are obligatory and the person concerned is unable to perform japa and homa in person there alone he can appoint a brāhmana as pratinidhi अस्य प्राप्तेषु जपहोमादिषु अशक्तौ विप्ररूपप्रतिनिधिनियममात्रार्थत्वात्। प्रायश्चित्ताङ्गजपहोमयोस्तु निषेधादेवाप्रवृत्तेस्तत्र तस्याप्रवृत्तिः। ..एतेन यन्महार्णवमदनरत्नयो. स्त्रीशूद्रादेर्विप्रद्वारा समन्त्रकौ जपहोमौ भवत इति तत्परास्तम्! प्रा प्रकाश folio 30 b relative or friend has to undergo it for him and that if a child is less than five then whatever act it may do it is not deemed a crime, nor is it a sin and it is not liable to any legal penalty nor to any[187] prāyaścitta. The Mit. (on Yāj. III. 243) comments that these verses are not meant to prescribe a total absence of prāyaścitta in the case of children of five or less but are meant to convey that they are not liable for the full prāyaścitta prescribed for a sin. Its argument is that the texts lay down generally without any reference to the stage of life that a brāhmaṇa should not be killed or that a person belonging to the three higher castes should not drink surā.[188] Hence any one of whatever age who is guilty of having done such prohibited acts is liable and the words of Gaut. II 1 and of Kumāra are to be interpreted as not excusing altogether the drinking of surā by a child but as referring to minor lapses. Bṛhaspati expressly states that the dictum about a child being allowed to eat what it likes is confined to such matters as will not fall under grave sins.

It has already been stated above (n 180) that the prāyaścitta to be undergone depended upon many circumstances such as the time, the place, the age &c. And first as to age, several smṛtis[189] provide that a man 80 years old or a boy less than

16 years of age, women and diseased persons should be liable only to half the prāyaścitta (prescribed for able-bodied men) The Mit on Yāj III 243 quotes a verse of Sumantu that for a male below twelve and above eighty years of age the penance is half (of that for ordinary men) and one fourth for women within the same limits and a verse of Visnu that for women, old men and diseased persons half the penance should be prescribed and for boys (before upanayana) only one-fourth. Some say that for boys less than five the penance is one-fourth Cyavana (prose) prescribes half prāyascitta for boys, old men and women and declares that a person is a bāla up to 16 years and a man is to be regarded as similar to a bāla after 70. Kātyāyana provided generally that the fines to be levied from females were to be half of those leviable from male offenders as regards all offences and when the punishment for a male would be death, a woman criminal was to be punished with the cutting of a limb (nose, ears &c)[190]

The difference between a sin committed unintentionally (akāmatah) and the same sin committed with full knowledge (kāmatah) is this that for the latter the prāyascitta is double of what is prescribed for the former as provided by Angiras,[191] Vyāsa and the Agnipurāna. As Yāj. III. 226 employs the word 'ajñāna' in the first half and the word 'kāmatah' as its opposite in the second half instead of the word 'jñānatah' it follows that Yāj. makes no difference between the consequences of jñāna (knowledge) and kāmanā (desire).

The caste of the offender as well as of the victim made a difference in the prāyaścitta as well as in the legal punishment. Vide H. of Dh vol. III pp. 395–399 as to punishments for crimes dependent on caste. Visnu[192] provides that the prāyascitta for a ksatriya, vaiśya and śūdra sinner should be respectively ¾, ½ and ¼ of what is prescribed for a brāhmana sinner. The Agnipurāna says[193] the same thing. The Par. M II. 1. p. 231 quotes the Caturvimśatimata[194] to the same effect. The Mit. on Yāj. III. 250 explains that the verse of Caturvimśatimata applies to all cases except where any one of the four sāhasas is committed by a man of a lower caste as against one of a higher caste. Brhad-Yama (IV. 13–14) in prescribing penance for the killing of a cow provides the same scale of 4, 3, 2, 1 for the four varnas Angiras (verse 3) prescribes the penances of Krcchra and Cāndrāyana for a brāhmana partaking of the food of an antyaja, half of these for a ksatriya or vaiśya guilty of the same. Yāj II. 206–207 provide that the punishments for defamation depend upon the higher or lower varna or caste of the offender as well as of the person defamed and that if a ksatriya or vaiśya defames a brāhmana the fines are respectively twice or thrice as high as the fine for a brāhmana defaming a brāhmana and conversely if a brāhmana defames a ksatriya or a vaiśya the fine is reduced by half in each successive caste. The Mit quoting Angiras says that the rules about punishments apply to prāyaścittas for slaying a person i e. if a brāhmana slays anybody and a certain penance is prescribed for him, then a ksatriya killing the person would have to perform double the penance prescribed for the brāhmaṇa and a vaiśya offender three times as much[195] It may be pointed out here that though the smrtis provided for different punishments according to the castes of the offender and of the person wronged and though some commentaries and digests went into all those details for the sake of presenting a complete statement or digest of the smṛti material, such discriminatory punishments had mostly ceased to be enforced by the rulers from about the 12th century A. D. at least, as stated by the Smṛticandrikā, the Madanaratna (vyavahāra) and the Sarasvatīvilāsa. Vide H. of Dh. vol. III p 512 note 924 for the relevant quotations from the three works. Since, as stated above (n. 181), prāyaścittas were to be moulded on the lines of legal penalties, it appears that the discriminatory treatment about prāyaścittas depending upon the varna of the sinner must also have gradually fallen into disuetude with the disappearance of the more severe prāyaścittas and the substitution of cows and monetary equivalents in later digests. And some digests expressly state this to have been the case in relation to prāyaścittas. For example, the Pr Prakarana, after quoting Gaut. 22. 14-16 about the prāyaścitta for killing a ksatriya or vaiśya or śūdra under certain circumstances, remarks that in its day those prāyaścittas were no longer part of the practices of the people.[196]

Whether an act made a man liable to undergo prāyaścitta depended in some cases on the country also. For example, marrying a maternal uncle's daughter was and is allowed in certain countries and among certain castes in the Deccan and Southern India on the ground of custom, but such a practice was severely condemned by Manu XI. 171-172 and Baud Dh S. I 1 17-24 and other smṛtis. Bṛhaspati refers to this custom as prevalent among southerners and states that in these countries persons following it are not liable to undergo prāyaścitta or penalty (at the hand of the king). Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 462 for Bṛhaspati's verses.

Severity and extent of prāyaścitta depended also on the question whether a sinner had repeated the lapse or was a first offender. The Āp Dh S (II. 10. 27. 11-13) prescribes that a brāhmana who has once committed adultery with a married woman of equal class shall perform one-fourth of the penance prescribed for a śūdra having intercourse with a woman of the three upper castes, that for every repetition (of the crime) one fourth of the penance must be added and if (he commits adultery) for the fourth time, the whole penance (of 12 years must be performed [197]). The Mit on Yāj. III. 293 remarks that for a sin that is committed knowingly the prāyaścitta is double of what is prescribed for the same sin if committed unintentionally and that if a sin is committed intentionally and is repeated then for the repeated lapse prāyaścitta is four times as much as that for the same deed done unintentionally. Similarly, the āśrama to which the sinner belonged made a difference in the prāyaścitta as stated by Angiras 'when persons in other āśramas are guilty of sins for which penance is prescribed if committed by householders, then the prāyaścitta is increased in the same proportion that is laid down for śauca (bodily purity [198]). Manu V. 137, Vas. VI. 19, Viṣṇu Dh. S 60 26, Śaṅkha 16. 23–24 provide that Vedic students, forest hermits and sannyāsins have respectively to perform twice, thrice and four times as much śauca as is prescribed for householders (e. g. by Manu V. 136 =Viṣṇu 60. 25).

One convenient and merciful rule laid down by the smṛtis was that if a man died in the midst of the period for which penance had to be performed (sometimes it extended to twelve years or more) he became free from the sin here and in the next world as stated by Hārīta, Vyāsa and Yama [199].

Though the smṛtis have entered into very great details about the prāyaścittas for different individual lapses, still they cannot be supposed to have dealt with every lapse. Therefore,

Gaut. (19. 18–20) provides that these acts (viz Vedic recitation, tapas, fasting, gifts &c) may be optionally performed, when no (particular penance) has been prescribed, that for grave sins difficult penances and for trivial faults easy ones may be prescribed and that Krcchra, Atikrcchra and Cāndrāyana are penances for all sins [200] Manu XI 209 (=Visnu 54 34) provides that for the expiation of offences for which no particular atonement has been prescribed, let (the parisad) prescribe a penance after considering the (offender's) strength and the nature of the offence. Parāśara (XI. 55–56) provides that the recitation of the Gāyatrī ten thousand times is the best penance for all sins and that Cāndrāyana, Yāvaka, Tulāpurusa and serving cows destroy all sins Yāj. III. 265 provides that a man is purified from all sins by undergoing the penance for cow-killing or by Cāndrāyana, observance for a month of the milk vrata or by Parāka. Manu XI. 117 provides for all upapātakas except the sin of sexual intercourse by one who is in the stage of Vedic student the penance prescribed for govadha or cāndrāyana.

One guilty of a sin, even though he may himself be a learned man, should approach an assembly of learned brāhmanas and after making some present (a cow or the like) announcing the nature of his lapse seek their decision about the proper penance for his lapse (Yāj. [201] III 300 and Parāśara VIII. 2) The Mit, Par. M., Pr. S and other digests quote long passages in verse from Angiras [202] who provides that the sinner should not conceal his lapse and lose time; he should bathe with his garment on, and with the garment still wet approach the assembly and should prostrate himself on the ground Thus the elders of the assembly ask the man prostrating himself before them 'what is your business, what is the trouble and what do you seek from us'. The assembly then asks him to go aside a little and debate among themselves what the penance should be, considering all the circumstances of time, place, nature of the lapse, age &c Then one of them at the desire of the assembly should declare the assembly's decision as to the proper penance after citing the smrti passages and reducing the penance in view of the weakness and other circumstances of the offender. It has already been stated that the parisad acted under the direction of the king in matters of prāyaścitta and that the king was not to interfere with the decision of the assembly. The principal stages in a penance were four viz. approaching the parisad, the declaration of the appropriate penance by the parisad, the actual performance of the penance declared and the announcing of the sinner's freedom from taint (Angiras q. by Pr. Prakāśa folio 27a 'upasthānam vratādeśaścaryā śuddhiprakāśanam । prāyaścittam catuspādam vihitam dharmakartṛbhih ॥").

It is not necessary here to set out the details of the constitution of the parisad, of the qualifications of the śistas who were to be the members of the parisad and their privileges and duties These points have already been discussed at length in H of Dh. vol. II. pp. 966–974. A few matters not stated there are mentioned here Caste exclusiveness and pride had gone so far that Parāśara (VIII. 25) and the Caturvimśatimata quoted by Par M. state that a dvija though he may be of bad character is to be honoured and not a śūdra who may have controlled his senses, that the advice of a śūdra even though learned and devoted to the knowledge of the śāstras should not be accepted like sacrificial food when licked by a dog[203]. Parāśara (VI. 55–57) provides that the assembly should take compassion on the weak, on boys and old men and should reduce the penance, but not otherwise and that if learned men through affection, greed, fear or ignorance reduce the penance that should be prescribed they themselves incur the sin[203b]. Devala says the same and adds[204] that the reduction in the penance should not be directed by one man alone or by a person ignorant of Dharmaśāstra and that it is only a number of brāhmaṇas who are proficient in Dharmasāstra that are entitled to reduce the penance through compassion for the sinner. The decision of the assembly should be unanimous[205] as far as possible

If the learned brāhmaṇas of the assembly knowing the proper prāyaścitta do not declare it in the case of those who are distressed by their own sin and seek direction, they incur sin similar to that of the seeker after proper penance[206].

CHAPTER IV

PENANCES FOR PARTICULAR SINS

It is now proper to turn to the penances prescribed for individual sins of different types (grave sins, minor sins and the like). It may be noted that the smṛtis contain numerous prāyaścittas for the same sin and that it is often difficult to reconcile all the dicta The commentaries and digests such as the Mit and the Prāyaścitta-viveka therefore try to assign to each penance an appropriate provision, looking to all the circumstances noted above (i.e they are bent on 'visayavyavasthā').[206a] In this work, it is not necessary to set out in detail the numerous penances for numberless lapses that are prescribed in the several smrtis and digests. In the Śabdakalpadruma (part III) there is an analysis from the Prāyaścitta-viveka alone of the several lapses, the penances for them, the number of cows to be donated as substitutes, the monetary equivalents when even cows cannot be donated and the daksinā in each case, which occupy pages 321 to 364. Setting out all these lapses together with the penances for them would only be a matter of academic interest and of no practical value, as almost all the prāyaścittas have become antiquated and are hardly ever performed now except in the form of gifts of cows or money to brāhmanas, pilgrimages and recitation of Vedic mantras or japa of the names of some favourite deity such as Visnu or Śiva. Therefore only a few typical sins alone will be taken for treatment here and later on a list of all penances with brief descriptions will be furnished.

First come the Mahāpātakas. Śankha [207] (17. 1-3) prescribes the following penance for the four mahāpātakas: the sinner should bathe thrice every day, should erect in a forest a cottage thatched with leaves, should sleep on the ground, should subsist on leaves, roots and fruits, should enter a village for alms all the time declaring his misdeed, should eat only once a day. When the 12th year passes in this way, the thief of gold, the drinker of surā, the murderer of a brāhmana and one who is guilty of incest become free from sin. Visnu Dh S. 34.1 speaks of sexual intercourse with one's mother, daughter or daughter-in-law as atipātaka and (34.2) provides that there is no penance except entering fire for this grave sin. The Bhavisyapurāna, Hārīta and Samvarta (q. by the Pr. V p 43) say the same But other smrtis like Manu XI. 54 and Yāj III. 227 treat mātr-gamana as a mahāpātaka (gurutalpa-gamana) and intercourse with the daughter or daughter-in-law as equal to violating guru's bed (Manu XI. 58, Yāj. III. 233–234). Therefore we begin with the mahāpātakas the first of which is the murder of a brāhmana Gaut. 22 2–10, Āp Dh. S I. 9. 24 10–25 and I. 9 25 12–13, Vas 20. 25–28, Visnu Dharmasūtra 35. 6 and 50. 1–6 and 15, Manu. XI. 72–82, Yāj III 243–250, Agnipurāna 169. 1–4 and 173 7–8, Samvarta 110–115 and many others prescribe various penances for brāhmana-murder. As the treatment of Manu is tolerably long, an analysis of it alone will be given here. Manu as stated by the Bhavisyapurāna (quoted by Kullūka on Manu XI. 72–82, Aparārka p 1055 and Pr V. p 63) speaks of 13 separate penances for brahmahatyā[208]. The general rule was that for a man of any class who is directly guilty of intentional murder of a brāhmana the penance was to end in death[209]. The thirteen penances as set out by Govindānanda in his commentary (called Tattvārthakaumudī) on Prāyascittaviveka (p 63) are as follows :—

(1) The murderer of a brāhmana should construct a hut in a forest and dwell therein for twelve years, should subsist on alms and should carry a piece of the head-bones of the murdered man on a staff. This is a very ancient penance and other smrtis add some details. For example, Gaut 22 4 provides that the sinner should submit to observances meant for a Vedic student (such as not partaking of flesh, honey etc. stated in Gaut. 22. 19), should announce his sin and enter a village only for begging alms. Yāj. III. 243 prescribes that the sinner should have a piece of the head-bone in the hand (left) and another placed on a staff (in the right hand) and that he should eat a moderate quantity (i. e. only once a day). The carrying of the piece of the head-bone in one hand is not meant for begging alms therein but only as a symbol. There was some divergence of views on this point[209a]. Āp Dh. S. I. 9. 24. 14 further provides that he should beg for alms at seven houses in only a broken reddish vessel (of clay or copper) and wear a piece of hempen cloth round his waist that will reach a little above his knees and that if he got no food at the seven houses he had to go without food that day and that he should protect cows and may for that purpose (for taking them out for grazing or bringing them back) enter the village again. The Mit. (on Yāj. III. 243) adds that the staff with head-bone on and the head-bone carried in the left hand are merely symbolic (in order to remind him and others of his being guilty of brāhmaṇa murder), that he should on seeing an ārya avoid his path (Gaut. 22. 5), that he should keep standing by day and only sit down at night (Gaut. 22. 6) and bathe thrice in the day (Gaut. 22. 6). It is added by the Mit. that, if the murdered brāhmaṇa's head-bone cannot be had, that of any other brāhmaṇa would do. The Mit. adds that this vrata[210] for twelve years propounded by Gautama, Manu, Yājñavalkya and others is one and not different for each smṛti and therefore all the details that are not opposed to each other should be included. Aparārka p. 1053 (on Yāj. III. 243) relies on the 'sarvaśākhāpratyayanyāya'[211] and states that there would be an option where the details of several smrtis are in conflict. It was Viśvarūpa[212] on Yāj. III. 237 who held that the procedure prescribed by each smrti was separate and that all details taken from different smrtis were not to be mixed up. According to the Mit. and Kullūka (on Manu XI. 72) this vrata for 12 years is appropriate in the case where a brāhmana is murdered unintentionally and Kullūka quoting Angiras provides that for intentional brāhmana murder the penance will be double (i. e. 24 years). The Mit (on Yāj. III. 243) states that this observance for twelve years applies only to one who was himself directly the murderer of a brāhmana and that the anugrāhaka has to undergo only 9 years' vrata, the prayojaka only six years, the anumantā only 4½ years and the nimittin only three years. It is further provided by the Mit. (on Yāj. III. 243) following a verse ascribed to Manu (not found in the printed text) and Devala[213] that if a man commits several murders of brāhmanas one after another, and performs penance at one time for them, for two murders he has to undergo the penance for 24 years and for three murders 36 years and when he commits the 4th murder there is no penance (but only death is the penance). The Pr. T. (p. 468) on the other hand,[214] following the Bhavisya-purāna holds that one performance of the 12 years' penance is enough penance for the murder of several brāhmanas, on the analogy of the Ksāmavatī isti (Jai. VI. 4. 17-20) which is performed when both the purodāśas and the house are totally burnt up by accident before the oblations are offered. The Pr. Prakāśa (folio 19 a) also says the same and adds that Devala's verse is to be interpreted as laying down that repetition of the same sinful act is more blamable. If the murderer of a brāhmana was a ksatriya or a vaiśya or a śūdra he had to perform the penance above described respectively for 24, 36 or 48 years. (Smrtyarthasāra p. 105). Instead of staying in a hut for twelve years he may stay at the end of a village or a cowpen and should tonsure his head and the hair on the lips or he may stay in an hermitage or at the foot of a tree and should devote himself to doing good to brāhmanas and cows and should observe celibacy (Manu XI. 78 and 81). At the end of 12 years he destroys the sin of brāhmana-murder.

(2) According to Ap Dh. S. I. 9.25.12, Gaut 22. 3, Manu XI. 72, Yāj. III. 248, if a ksatriya intentionally killed a brāhmana he may at his will enter a fight and if he were killed by his opponents who knew that he was a brāhmana murderer or even if he was wounded and left unconscious on the field but subsequently recovered he should be free from the sin of brāhmaṇa-murder.

(3) According to Āp. Dh. S. I. 9.25.13, Vas. 20. 25-26, Gaut. 22.2, Manu XI. 74, Yāj. III. 247, he may cut off with an axe his hair, skin, blood, flesh, muscles, fat, bones and marrow and offer them into an ordinary fire kindled by him for the purpose and offer these eight offerings into it for Death[215] (Mrtyu) as the deity and then throw himself into fire (thrice with head downwards, according to Manu XI. 73). This penance is for intentional murder of a brāhmaṇa by a ksatriya acc. to the Madanapārijāta and Bhavisyapurāna q. by Pr. Prakāśa folio 95 a.

(4)—(8) The murderer of a brāhmana may perform the Aśvamedha sacrifice or Gosava or Abhijit or Viśvajit or the threefold Agnistut (Manu XI. 74) The Aśvamedha could be performed only by a king or an emperor (samrāj). The others could be performed by any one belonging to the three higher classes This applies only where the murder was unintentional as stated by Kullūka following the Bhavisyapurāna.[216] Visnu dharmasūtra (chap. 35 last verse) states that all persons guilty of any of the mahāpātakas are purified by the performance of Aśvamedha or by going to all the tīrthas on the earth.

(9) Manu XI. 75 provides that for the removal of the sin of brahmahatyā, the sinner may walk one hundred yojanas, subsisting on limited food, controlling his senses and reciting one of the four Vedas. Kullūka says that this applies only where the killing is unintentional and the victim is a mere brāhmana by caste (i. e. has not studied the Veda &c.). For yojana, vide H. of Dh. vol. III. p. 145 note 185.[217]

(10) Manu XI. 76 provides that the murderer of a brāhmana may make a gift of all his wealth to a brāhmana who has studied the Veda.

(11) Manu XI. 76 and Yāj III 250 provide that the murderer may donate to a worthy brāhmana (who has studied the Veda and whose character is good) as much wealth as would suffice to maintain the latter throughout his life and a house with all paraphernalia. This is the view of Govindānanda. But the Mit. on Yāj. III. 250 appears to hold that Nos 10 and 11 are not separate penances It combines the two into one, viz. that if the murderer has no offspring then he was to donate all his wealth or if he had offspring he was to donate a house with paraphernalia. This explanation is certainly preferable. The Smṛtyarthasāra (p 105) states that if the murderer is devoid of qualities but is well-off he may give a house and lands sufficient for the maintenance of a worthy brāhmana or he may donate a house with appurtenances or if he be childless all his wealth.

(12) Manu XI. 77[218] and Yāj. III. 249 provide that the murderer subsisting on sacrificial food (such as nivāra, milk or ghee) should follow the course of the (holy) river Sarasvatī in all its branches. This, acc. to the Bhavisyapurāna and Kullūka, applies where a mere brāhmana by caste (without Vedic learning) is killed intentionally by a man who is himself rich but has no vedic learning. The words 'pratisrotah sarasvatīm' have been variously explained. Medhātithi explains as above. Aparārka, Sarvajñanārāyana and Rāghavānanda explain that the murderer should follow the course of the Sarasvatī in the opposite direction from the sea to its origin. This appears to be a better explanation, since it brings out the force of 'pratisrotah' more clearly.

(13) It is provided by Manu XI. 77 and Yāj. III. 249 that the murderer should recite in a forest thrice the saṁhitā text of the Veda, while subsisting on limited food. The express mention of saṁhitā text precludes the pada text or krama. The Bhavisyapurāna and Kullūka hold that this penance is proper where a mere brāhmana by birth (without Vedic learning) is killed unintentionally.

Manu XI. 79, Yāj. III. 244 and 246, Vas. 20. 27-28 and Gaut. 22. 7-8 and 11 mention three more penances, but they are not independent ones (as is made clear by Śankha). If a murderer, while undergoing the 12 years' penance, fights him who attacks a brāhmana and saves him (or fights for the king, acc. to Vas.) or dies in the attempt, he becomes at once free from the sin and if he lives after the fight he had not to continue the penance for the whole period. The same applies to the saving of 12 cows by the murderer by putting his own life in danger[219]. Similarly, if a murderer fights a marauder depriving a brāhmana of all his wealth and restores the wealth to a brāhmana or dies in the attempt or is severely wounded (thrice acc. to Yāj, Vas and Gaut.) and is unable to restore the wealth to the brāhmana he becomes free from the grave sin of brāhmana murder.

Manu XI. 82, Yāj III. 244, Śaṅkha and Gaut 22.9 lay down that if the murderer of a brāhmana announces his sin when the king and priests have met together for the ceremonial bath after the Aśvamedha sacrifice and being permitted by them bathes along with them, he becomes free from the sin.[220] According to Haradatta this is an independent penance, while according to the Mit on Yāj III. 244, Aparārka p. 1057 and others it is not so but is to be performed while undergoing the 12 years' penance.

Yāj. III. 245 provides that if the murderer treats and cures a brāhmana or a cow (or cows) lying helpless on the public road suffering from a long-standing and serious ailment he becomes free from the sin.

Parāśara (XII. 65–67) prescribes for brahmahatyā the penance of going to the sea and Rāma's bridge, begging and declaring on the way one's sin, walking without an umbrella or shoes and residing in cowpens, forests, tīrthas and river streams; on seeing the setu he was to bathe in the ocean and on return to feed brāhmanas at a dinner and to donate 100 cows to learned brāhmaṇas.

There are other penances for brahmahatyā mentioned by Jamadagni, Atri, Kaśyapa and others quoted by Aparārka (pp. 1064–1065) and others which are passed over here for want of space.

If a brāhmana killed his own father, mother, full brother, his teacher of the Veda, a brāhmana who has studied the Veda or has consecrated sacred Vedic fires, he had to undergo penance till his last breath (acc. to Pr. Prakarana p. 13 quoting Bhaviṣya-purāna, Pr. V. pp. 70–71, Smṛtimuktāphala Pr. p 873 quoting Dakṣa III. 27–28 and Āp. Dh. S I.9 24). If a man killed a priest that was engaged at a soma sacrifice the penance was double (Yāj III. 252). The Pr. Prakarana (p 13) says that this means that the murderer should perform 12 years' penance and then donate cows[221] in proportion to the difference between his age at the time of finishing twelve years and 120 years (which is regarded as the highest limit of life). If a person strikes a brāhmana intending to kill him but only injures him he should perform the vrata for brahmahatyā (acc. to Yāj. III. 252, Gaut. 22.11). The Mit. explains that this is an extension (atideśa) of the rules about brahmahatyā and so the penance is a little less than the full one (i. e. 9 years). Where certain sins are said to be equal (sama) to brahmahatyā or surāpāna, the penance for them is half of what is prescribed for the latter. If a person intending to commit suicide by entering water or fire or by hanging himself or by taking poison or by falling from a precipice or the dome of a temple or by cutting his belly with a weapon or by fasting, does not die, but luckily lives, he has to undergo a prāyaścitta for three years (acc. to Pr. Prakarana p. 15). Vas. 23. 18-19 and Parāśara XII.5-8 prescribe other prāyaścittas for such persons (who are styled 'pratyavasita'). Pr. Prakarana (p. 15) and Pr. V. (p. 75) quote two verses of Yama[221a] for nine kinds of pratyavasita and prescribe Cāndrāyana or two Taptakrcchras for them.

If a ksatriya, vaiśya or śūdra intentionally and directly killed a brāhmana, the expiation was death, but otherwise each had respectively to undergo twice, thrice or four times as much prāyaścitta as a brāhmana sinner would have had to undergo for killing a brāhmana.[222] Conversely, if a brāhmana killed a ksatriya or vaiśya or a śūdra the sin was only an upapātaka (acc. to Yāj. III. 236 and Manu XI. 66), unless the ksatriya or vaiśya victim was engaged in performing a soma sacrifice (Sāmavidhāna Br. I. 7. 5, Yāj. III 251, Vas. 20. 34) when the penance was heavy. Yāj. III. 266-267, Manu XI. 126-130 and Āp. Dh. S. I.9.24. 1-4 prescribe other penances for killing a ksatriya, a vaiśya or a śūdra. The penance for a ksatriya

Women victims were placed on the same footing as kṣatriya, vaiśya and śūdra males (Yāj. III. 236 and Manu XI 66), except the cases where the woman was an Ātreyī or pregnant or in her monthly illness (Gaut 22 17, Āp Dh. S. I. 9. 24. 5 and 9, Baud. Dh. S. II. 1.10, 12–13, Vas 20 34, Viṣṇu Dh. S. 50 7–9) or the wife of a twice-born performing a soma sacrifice, when the penance was heavy (like the one for brahmahatyā) The period of soma-yāga was reckoned from the Dīkṣaṇīyā iṣṭi to the Udavasānīyā (acc to the Mit) or up to the end of avabhṛtha bath (acc. to Aparārka). For killing women guilty of adultery the penances were higher and varied according to the caste of the paramour and of the woman (vide Gaut 22.26–27, Manu XI. 138, Yāj III. 268–269).

Manu (XI. 208=Viṣṇu Dh. S 54 30) and Yāj III. 293 prescribe that for threatening to beat or strike a brāhmana the penance is kṛcchra, for striking him it is Ati-kṛcchra, for shedding his blood a Kṛcchra and Atikṛcchra. The Sāmavidhāna Br. I. 7. 4 prescribes other penances (i. e. recitation of certain sāman texts) for these.

Gaut. 23.1,[223] Āp Dh S. I 9 25.3, Baud. Dh. S. II. 1. 21., Vas. 20.22, Manu XI. 90–91, Yāj. III. 253 and Bṛhaspati prescribe that if a brāhmana drinks intentionally spirituous liquor prepared from flour even once he has to undergo a penance that ends in death, viz. he has to drink that liquor boiling hot or to drink boiling hot cow's urine, milk, ghee, water or liquid cow-dung, and when his body has been completely scalded thereby and he dies he becomes free from that sin. Some like Haradatta on Gaut. 23 1 hold that this horrible penance is meant for one who knowingly and repeatedly drinks surā (manufactured from rice flour). Manu XI. 92 and Yāj. III. 254 prescribe another penance in place of the one ending in death viz. that the sinner should eat during one year (during three years, acc. to Yāj.) once (a day) at night the (boiled) small grains of rice, or oilcake, should wear clothes made of cow's hair, should have matted hair on his head and carry a flagstaff (with a wine cup thereon). The same rules apply to a kṣatriya or vaiśya drinking surā (manufactured from rice flour). Only they have as stated above (in note 192) to undergo three-fourths and one-half respectively of the penance for a brāhmaṇa sinner. This penance was to be undertaken after vomiting the contents of the stomach. According to the Madanapārijāta (p. 818), Pr. V. p 104, Pr Prakaraṇa p. 43, Mit. (on Yāj III. 24) and other works the twelve years' penance is meant for one who drinks surā (made from flour) through ignorance or force. According to Gaut 23. 2-3, Yāj. III 255, Manu. XI. 146, Atri 75, for drinking intoxicants or human semen, ordure or urine through ignorance a person of the three first classes had first to undergo the penance called Taptakṛcchra and then his upanayana was again performed. Vasistha 20.19 prescribes for drinking any intoxicant unintentionally the penances of Kṛcchra and Atikṛcchra, the drinking of ghee and the performing of upanayana again. There is great divergence of views about Manu XI. 146 and Yāj III. 255 which is passed over here. Bṛhaspati[224] quoted by the Mit, Aparārka and others prescribes that a brāhmaṇa who drinks surā prepared from raw sugar, flour and honey (or madhūka flowers) should respectively undergo Taptakṛcchra, Parāka and Cāndrāyaṇa. This light penance is restricted acc. to the Mit. and others to cases where surā is drunk for curing a malady which no other medicine could cure. If a brāhmaṇa drank surā (not manufactured from flour) or any other intoxicant, various easy penances were prescribed for him (such as undergoing Cāndrāyaṇa on a river falling into the sea, feeding brāhmaṇas and donating a cow and a bull to the brāhmaṇas, Parāśara XII 75-76). Vide Yāj. III. 255 and the Mit thereon. Kṣatriyas and vaiśyas incurred no sin by drinking intoxicants other than surā (made from flour) and the śūdra incurred no sin even by drinking surā of the paistī variety. The Mit (on Yāj III. 243) holds that since Manu XI. 93 generally forbids the drinking of surā on the part of brāhmaṇas, kṣatriyas and vaiśyas the prohibition applies even to boys who have not undergone the rite of upanayana and girls who are not yet married and adds that for drinking surā the child has to undergo only one-fourth penance (for 3 years) if the offence was unintentional and double of that (6 years) if it was intentional (vide also Pr. prakaraṇa p 48). The Kalpataru, it appears, held, relying on Gaut II. 1 ('before upanayana a child may do as it pleases as regards behaviour, speech and eating'), that no sin (doṣa) was incurred by a child before upanayana and by a girl before marriage for drinking surā. The Pr. V (p. 104) and Pr. Prakāśa criticize the Kalpataru for this view.[225] As Bṛhaspati states (vide n. 188 above) the license allowed by Gautama is limited by the Mit and other digests to the partaking of sour or stale drinks and the like and is not extended to drinking surā which is a mahāpātaka. Jātūkarṇya[226] (q. by the Par. M.) provides that if a boy whose upanayana has not been performed drinks an intoxicant (madya) through foolishness, his father, mother or brother should perform three kṛcchras as an expiation for him. Aṅgiras (Jiv. p. 557), Āpastamba-smṛti III. 7, Laghu-Hārīta 34–35, Bṛhad-yama III. 1–2 also provide that a pratinidhi (brother, father, friend) may undergo an expiation for a boy who is himself unable to do so or is less than eleven and above five years of age.

The Āśv. gṛ. (I 22 22–26)[227] prescribes what is to be done and what is to be omitted in punar-upanayana. It provides that the rites of the cutting of the hair and the production of intelligence are optional, there are no express rules about giving the person in charge (of the deities) and as to the time, and the verse to be recited as the Sāvitrī is Ṛgveda V. 82.1 instead of the usual Gāyatrī (tatsavitur-vareṇyam, Ṛg. III. 62.10)

Vasistha 20.18 quotes Manu XI. 151 on this point[228] and Visnu (Dh. S. 51.4-5) in prose is to the same effect. Visnu (Dh S. 51. 2-3) provides Cāndrāyana for drinking any of the (twelve) unclean excretions of the body (Manu V. 134) or any of the several kinds of intoxicating drinks and for eating garlic or onion or red garlic or any plant having a similar flavour or the flesh of village pigs, of tame cocks, of apes and of cows and then adds (in sūtra 4) that they (the sinners) must undergo fresh upanayana also The smrtis provide different prāyaścittas for various lapses about drinking and eating such as drinking water from a pot which had already been used for holding surā, for drinking water from the water vessel of a cāndāla or of a washerman or from a śūdra's house or for drinking milk which should not be drunk (Gaut 17.22-26, Yāj I. 170, Manu V. 8-10), for eating forbidden food, which must be passed over here, because[229] they are too many and too various and depend on circumstances for their application as observed by the Pr. V and because they are now of academic interest alone. Some reference, however, may be made to show how some of these lapses were treated. Śankha states that there are many articles that are allowed or forbidden to men, particularly to brāhmanas and in cases of transgressions the decision rests with the śistas (the parisad of respectable people). Brhaspati[230] (quoted by Aparārka) prescribes that in the case of the partaking of things that should not be licked or drunk or eaten or in case of taking in human semen, urine or ordure, the penance of a cāndrāyana is the purification Some of the sages such as Samvarta, Śankha-likhita took a lenient view, prescribed Cāndrāyana even for eating cow's flesh and human flesh[231]

The general rule stated by the Sāma Br. I 5 13, Manu XI. 160 and others is that one desirous of inner purity should not eat forbidden food, that if he eats it through ignorance he should make efforts to vomit it and if that is impossible he should quickly take some prāyaścitta (which is slight in the case of ignorance). It may be mentioned that even from very ancient times exceptions were recognised to the prohibitions against the partaking of forbidden food The Chāndogya Upanisad (I. 10)[232] narrates the story of Usasti Cākrāyana, who when the country of the Kurus had been devastated by hailstones (or by locusts), begged (along with his very young wife) of a chief eating beans and took from the latter the beans that had been put away for the chief (and so were ucchista), but when asked to take water for drinking meant for the chief replied that if he drank of it he would be drinking what was unclean, since he could get water whenever he liked. This Vedic passage indicates that even unclean things may be eaten when there is distress (āpad) or danger to life, but that when there is no distress or danger even one who has knowledge of brahmavidyā should not violate the injunctions of śāstra about eating. The Vedāntasūtra (III.4 28) has an aphorism on this incident Manu X.104 provides that he who, when in danger of losing his life, accepts food from any person whatsoever is not tainted by sin as the sky is not tainted by mud Manu then refers (X. 105–108) to the stories of Ajīgarta who, when famished, approached for slaying his own son, of the sage Vāmadeva who when tormented by hunger desired to eat the flesh of a dog in order to save his life and did not sully himself, of Bharadvāja who when distressed by hunger along with his son in a lonely forest accepted many cows from the carpenter Vrdhu (Brbu?) or of Visvāmitra who, well knowing what was right or wrong, proceeded, when tormented by hunger, to eat the haunch of a dog, receiving it from the hands of a Cāndāla[232a]

For eating the flesh of various birds Visnu Dh. S. 51. 29 and 31 and others prescribe fasting for three days or one day and also for eating several varieties of fish (Visnu 51.21).

We may now revert to the penances for the other Mahāpātakas. It has already been seen how the thief that had stolen a brāhmana's gold of a certain weight was to approach the king with a club (p. 73 above). Even Ap. Dh. S. I 9.25.4 refers to this and prescribes as an option (Āp Dh. S. I.9 25.6–7) entering into fire as an expiation for theft or starving oneself by reducing the intake of food. Therefore, the penance for the theft of brāhmana's gold of the weight of 80 raktikās or more (Manu VIII. 134 and Yāj I.363) was death for the offenders of all varnas, except a brāhmana offender, who clad in rags (or bark garment) was to undergo a penance in a forest for twelve years of the same kind as for brāhmana murder (Manu XI. 101) or for the drinking of surā prepared from flour (Yāj III. 258). The offender may also give as much gold (if he is rich) as his own weight or as much wealth as would be required for the maintenance of a brāhmana's family for the latter's lifetime (Yāj. III 258 and Mit. thereon) The Āp Dh. S. I. 9 25 8 provides the observance of the penance of Krcchra for one year (as defined in Āp Dh. S I 9 27 7–8) and quotes a verse "those who have committed a theft (of gold), drunk spirituous liquor, or had connection with a guru's wife, but not those who have slain a brāhmana, shall eat every fourth meal-time a little food, bathe thrice a day, pass the day standing and the night sitting; after the lapse of three years they cast off their sins."[232b] The digests contain numerous and varying expiations for theft depending upon the weight of gold stolen, upon the qualities of the man robbed and of the thief, upon the caste of both, upon whether it is a first offence or a repeated one, on the price and nature of the thing stolen and on the time and place and so on Vide Pr V. pp. 117–127, Pr. Sāra p 49, Madanapārijāta pp 828–834, Smrtyarthasāra pp. 108–109, Smrtimuktāphala pp 883–885. These have to be passed over here for reasons of space.

or any other non-brāhmana, the expiation would be as one for an upapātaka Manu (XI 162–168 = Matsyapurāna 227. 41–47) and Visnu 52. 5–13 prescribe various penances such as krcchra for a year for the theft of corn or cooked food or wealth; cāndrāyana for abducting men and women (slaves) or for appropriating a field or house and the water of wells and cisterns; sāntapana for thefts of objects of small value; pañcagavya for stealing eatables of various kinds or a vehicle or a bed or a seat or flowers or roots and fruits; fasting for three days and nights in the case of theft of grass, wood, trees, dry food, molasses, clothes, leather (or armour) and flesh, subsisting for twelve days on small grains of rice for stealing gems, pearls, coral, copper, silver, iron, bell-metal or stones, subsisting on milk alone for the theft of cotton, silk, wool, animals with cloven hoofs (cows &c.) or uncloven hoofs (horses &c), birds, perfumes, medicinal herbs or a rope (used for drawing water). It must be remembered as stated above (p. 74) that the thief had to restore to the owner the thing stolen and then undergo a penance (Manu XI.164 and Visnu Dh S 52.14) and Medhātithi (on Manu XI. 164) adds that if he is unable to restore the thing (or its price) the penance is to be double. Besides, in certain cases of theft if corporal punishment or death was not inflicted by the king, the thief was fined eleven times the price of the thing stolen (Manu VIII. 321, 323, Visnu Dh S. 5.82)[233]

Steya (theft) is of two kinds, by force (such as robbery and dacoity and called sāhasa) and by clandestine means. In the former case the penance goes on increasing (twice, thrice) according as the offender is a ksatriya or vaiśya (parsadyā brāhmanānām, quoted above, Par. M. II part 1 p.231) In the case of theft by clandestine means if the owner whose gold or wealth is stolen is a brāhmana and the thief a ksatriya or vaiśya, then also the penance must be higher than for a brāhmana thief (since, as, Nārada says in his chapter on sāhasa verse 16, the wealth belonging to idols, brāhmanas and kings is the best) But conversely, if the owner of stolen property is of lower class than the thief then the verse of Brhad-Visnu ('vipre tu sakalam deyam,' quoted above in note 192) will apply.

The penance for incest with the guru's wife was prescribed from very ancient times as follows: Gaut.[234] 23. 8–11, Āp. Dh. S. I. 9.25. 1–2, Baud. Dh. S. II. 1. 14–16 (almost in the same words as in Gaut), Vas. 20. 13–14, Manu XI. 103–104 prescribe that the offender shall confess his guilt and then extend himself on a red-hot iron bed or embrace the red-hot iron image of a woman or having himself cut off his organ and testicles and having taken them in his joined hands may walk straight towards the south or south-west until he falls down dead and that he becomes purified by death. According to the Mit. on Yāj. III. 259 the three are not distinct penances, but that two of them, viz. embracing the red-hot iron image of a woman and sleeping on a bed of red hot iron form one penance. The words of Yāj. no doubt convey that the two together are one penance (viz. sleeping on red hot bed and clinging to a red hot image). Others like the Madanapārijāta (p. 837), Medhātithi[235] on Manu XI. 103 do not accept this interpretation. The latter moreover relies on Gautama who employs the word 'vā' (or) in the two latter of his three sūtras on this point. The Pr. V. (p. 138) points out this difference between Gaut. and Yāj. Manu XI. 58 and 170–71, Yāj. III 231, Saṁvarta 159 regard sexual intercourse with a friend's wife or a maiden of a higher caste and the wives of one's son or of sagotras and women born of the same womb (sister &c.) or with an antyaja woman as equal to gurutalpagamana and the penance is only a little less than for the latter. Manu XI. 105 and Yāj. III. 260 prescribe a penance (other than one ending in death), viz. that the sinner should dwell in a tenantless forest, allow his beard to grow, should wear tattered garments and practise Prājāpatya Kṛcchra for one year (three years acc. to Yāj.). The commentators say that this was meant where the sin was committed by mistake. Manu XI. 106 and Yāj. III. 260 provide another penance viz. Cāndrāyaṇa for three months, Manu prescribing that the sinner should subsist on sacrificial food (fruits, roots or nīvāra grain) or on barley gruel and Yāj. adding that he should recite for the three months the Vedasaṁhitā The commentators say that this applies in cases where the guru's wife is of a lower varna or of the śūdra class.

Parāśara (X 10-11) provides three different prāyaścittas, viz. excision of the organ, three kṛcchras or three cāndrāyaṇas if a man commits incest with his mother, sister, or daughter and in X. 12-14 prescribes other penances for adultery with other near female relatives The Mit on Yāj. III 259 quotes Śaṅkha for twelve years' penance for all four kinds of Mahāpātakas, which applies acc to it to intercourse with guru's wife of the same class. It is not necessary to quote further smṛti passages which vary greatly as to the extent of the penance Manu XI 178 (= Viṣṇu Dh S 53. 9 = Agnipurāṇa 169 41), Śānti 165 29 state that the sin which a twice-born man commits by sexual intercourse for one night with a vṛṣalī[236] (a cāṇḍāla woman) is removed by him by the penance of subsisting on alms for three years and reciting mantras (like the Gāyatrī). Āp. Dh S. I 9 27. 11 has a somewhat similar verse about a brāhmaṇa's intercourse with a śūdra woman[237]. Yāj III. 233 prescribes for women death as a legal penalty and the same prāyaścitta as for a male if a man has sexual intercourse with his paternal or maternal aunt, or daughter-in-law, maternal uncle's wife and others (enumerated above) with their consent Manu XI. 175 (= Laghu-Śātātapa 155 = Agnipurāṇa 169 38) holds that a brāhmaṇa, who has sexual intercourse with a cāṇḍāla woman or mleccha woman or dines with cāṇḍālas or mlecchas or accepts gifts from them, has to perform penance as if he were patita if he unknowingly did these things, and becomes like them by committing these sins knowingly Compare Vasiṣtha 23 41, Viṣṇu Dh. S 53 5-6.

If a woman be guilty of a Mahāpātaka the general rule stated by Manu XI 176 (latter half), Kātyāyana and Bṛhaspati[238] was that whatever penance was prescribed for a male in cases of adultery with other's wives the same was to be administered to women in case of adultery with males. cular case the rule about half penance being prescribed for women did not hold good when a woman with full knowledge committed adultery and half penance was to be prescribed only where the adultery was through mistake. A similar rule was laid down by Angiras[238a]. If a woman became patita and did not undergo prāyaścitta she could be excommunicated by the process called ghataspho̤ta (described in H. of Dh. vol. III pp. 615-616 and 1009). But there was a difference between a male and a woman in this respect. A woman, however, was not to be altogether abandoned on the street and left to fare for herself, though she be patita, but she was to be lodged in a cottage thatched with grass near the house and was to be guarded against further lapses and given bare maintenance (enough to keep body and soul together) and (dirty) clothes (Yāj. III. 296, Manu XI. 176). There were certain acts, however, which were specially condemned in women (Yāj. III. 297) viz. sexual intercourse with a man of a lower class, causing abortion and killing the husband. Vas. 21. 10 provides[239] that four classes of women may be altogether abandoned (and not given even starving maintenance &c) viz. a woman who has sexual intercourse with (her husband's) pupil or with his guru or one who kills her husband or one who sexually approaches a man of a lower degraded class. Women, however patita they may be, were to be dealt with as stated in Yāj. III 296 even if they did not perform any penance. Vas. 21.12 states that women of the brāhmana, ksatriya and vaiśya classes, if guilty of sexual intercourse with a śūdra, can be purified by penance if they do not give birth to a child, but not those others (who give birth to a child born of the condemned connection). Vide H. of Dh. vol. III pp. 946-949 for penance and other matters in relation to adultery by men and women.

It is now necessary to turn to the penance for association with those that are guilty of grave sins (mahāpātakas). Manu XI. 181, Visnu Dh. S. 54 1, Yāj. III 261 provide that whoever associates with (for a year, acc. to Yāj.) a person guilty of one of the four mahāpātakas has to undergo the vrata (the observances) prescribed for that grave sinner in order to free himself from the sin of association Kullūka, the Pr sāra (p. 61) and others state that the penance here referred to is the one for twelve years and not death since it is the word vrata that is employed by Manu and vrata does not ordinarily convey the idea of death.[240] If the association was due to ignorance the penance was half. Vyāsa prescribed [241] for the knowing associator ¾ ths of the penance provided for the sinner himself. According to the Pr. V (p 171) there was no difference in the extent of the penance for association with a sinner in the case of a brāhmana [242] and a śūdra, though in other cases penance was reduced by one quarter for each varna. If the association was for less than one year, then the penance was proportionately reduced. Not only was the patita condemned but even his son born after he became patita and he was excluded from inheritance. But the daughter of a patita was treated differently and she could be married without any stigma being attached to the husband. Vide Vas. 13 51–53, Yāj. III. 261, Baud. Dh. S II 1. 73–74, Hārita q by Pr V. p 174 and Pr prakarana p 110 and H of Dh vol III. pp. 614–616.

Visnu Dh S (chap 36) speaks of certain sins as anupātakas which are declared by Manu (XI. 55–58) and Yāj (III. 228–233) to be equal to or like one or other of the mahāpātakas and provides that those guilty of them become pure by Aśvamedha sacrifice or by resorting to pilgrimages It has also been seen that such sins are removed by the penances that are slightly less (i. e. by ¼th) than those for the mahāpātakas themselves

The penances for upapātakas must now be briefly dealt with. The number of upapātakas is very large and it is of no practical importance to deal with each of them separately First of all, some general rules about them will be stated and a few of them that are of some importance will be dealt with individually. The Sāmavidhāna [243] Br. (I. 5.14) states that on committing several upapātakas a man becomes pure by reciting thrice the whole of the veda while fasting. Manu XI. 117, Yāj. III. 265, Visnu Dh. S. 37 35 prescribe that purification from all classes of upapātakas (except the sin of the avakīrṇin) is effected by the same penances that are prescribed for govadha or by cāndrāyana or by subsisting on milk alone for a month or by Parāka or Gosava. The digests prescribe that Parāka is meant for him who is strong enough to undertake it, Cāndrāyana for him who is weak, Gosava for him who repeatedly commits the same upapātaka or is guilty of several at the same time (vide Pr. Prakāśa, folio 122 a).

Govadha stands at the head of upapātakas in Manu, Yāj., the Agnipurāna (168 29-37). Several smrtis provide different penances for the sin of killing a cow. Gaut. 22. 18 prescribes[244] the same penance for govadha as for killing a vaiśya (Gaut. 22. 15) viz. staying for three years in a forest, subsisting on alms, observing celibacy and donating one hundred cows together with a bull. In Āp. Dh. S. I. 9. 26. 1 for killing a milch cow or a full grown ox the penance is said to be the same as for killing a śūdra Vas. 21. 18 provides that if a man kills a cow he should cover himself with the raw hide of the cow (that is killed) and should observe Krcchra or Atikrcchra for six months. Manu [245] XI. 108-116, Visnu Dh. S. 50. 16-24, Samvarta 130-135, Parāśara VIII. 31-41 (q. in Smrtimuktāphala p. 875, prāyaścitta section) prescribe elaborate observances as penances for govadha Yāj. (III. 263-264) provides four separate prāyaścittas, viz (1) the killer of a cow should control his senses for a month, should subsist on pañcagavya (cow's urine, cow-dung, milk, curds and ghee), should sleep in a cowpen, should follow the cows so penned (by day) and at the end of a month donate a cow; (2) or he should perform Krcchra penance while sleeping in a cow-pen and following cows by day; (3) or should perform an atikrcchra in the same way; (4) or should fast for three days and donate ten cows together with one bull. Śankha provides[246] that the killer of a cow should fast for 25 days and nights subsisting on pañcagavya, should tonsure his head together with the top-knot, should wear as an upper garment cow-hide and should follow cows, lie down in a cow-pen and donate a cow. Some of the smṛtis and digests declare that the penance differed according as the cow that was killed belonged to a learned brāhmaṇa or to a mere brāhmaṇa by caste, to a kṣatriya or vaiśya or śūdra For example, Devala (q. by Pr. V. p 202) states that if a cow belonging to a brāhmaṇa were killed, then the sinner should wear as upper garment that cow's hide for six months, should bring fodder for cows, should imitate cows, should subsist on barley gruel, should move among cows and then he becomes free from the sin. Śātātapa (q. by Pr V. p 203) states that one killing the cow of a vaiśya should subsist on pañcagavya for a month, should recite the Gomatī-vidyā[247] and stay in a cowpen for a month. Viśvāmitra (Pr. V. p 203) says about the killer of a cow belonging to a śūdra that he should undergo four kṛcchras if he kills intentionally and two if unintentionally. The Gomatī-vidyā as quoted by Aparārka (p. 1102), the Madana-pārijāta (p. 862) and Pr T. p 522 (which takes it from the Prāyaścitta section of the Kalpataru that takes it from Yama) is a laudation of cows: 'cows always emit fragrance, they have the smell of guggulu (bdellium), they are the support of beings, they are a great blessing, cows are (yield in their milk) the best food and the best offerings for gods; they are purifiers of all beings and offerings ooze from them; they please the gods in heaven by the offerings (of milk and ghee) that are rendered pure by the mantras recited over them; in the agnihotra (keeping up the sacred fire) of sages cows help to bring about homa; cows are the holy and eminent protection for all beings; cows are extremely holy and most auspicious; cows are blessed; salutation to cows that abound in wealth and are called saurabheyī! salutation to the cows that are holy and the daughters of Brahmā. Brāhmaṇas and cows are (really) one family divided into two parts, in one (brāhmaṇas) reside the (vedic) mantras and in the other reside offerings (to Gods of ghee &c)." The Pr. prakaraṇa [248] (p 33) says that Kātyāyana, Gautama, Saṃvarta, Parāśara and other sages prescribe differing penances for govadha, which are to be explained away by reference to the killing being intentional or unintentional or to the fact of the cow being owned by a brāhmaṇa engaged in a soma sacrifice or by a brāhmaṇa who has studied the Veda with the six auxiliary śāstras, or by the fact that the cow was useful for the homa of a brāhmaṇa possessed of good qualities or was a pregnant cow or of the kapilā (brown or tawny) variety. It adds the important statement that in its days such cows being not found in ordinary life it is not necessary to expressly assign to each of those texts its appropriate subject matter.

Yāj. III. 284, [249] Saṃvarta 137, Agnipurāṇa 169.14 provide that if a cow or bull dies while being treated with medicine or while an attempt is being made to help the cow in delivery, or being branded (as a treatment) there is no sin. This applies as an exception in all cases of injury or death of brāhmaṇas, cows or other animals Parāśara (IX. 4 ff) and Aṅgiras (q by Pr. T. pp 526–527) prescribe $\frac{1}{4}$, $\frac{1}{2}$ and $\frac{3}{4}$ of the prāyaścitta for killing out-right a cow, if the death is due to putting an obstacle in the cow's or bull's free movement or to tying it up or to yoking it with thongs. Before undergoing a penance for govadha, the sinner had to make good the price of the animal to the owner, according to the Brahmapurāṇa and Parāśara.[250]

The Sāmavidhāna Br (I 7.8) prescribes that on killing any animal (except a cow or bull) the guilty person should fast for one night and recite the sāmaveda verse 'Agnis-tigmena' (I. 1 3 2) Āp. Dh S (I 9.25.14) provides for killing a crow, a chameleon, a peacock, a chakravāka, hamsa, bhāsa, a frog, ichneumon, musk-rat, a dog the same penance as for killing a śūdra. Gaut 22 19–22, 24–25, Manu XI. 133–137, Yāj III. 269–274, Visnu Dh. S 50.25–32, Parāśara VI. 1–15 prescribe several penances for killing an elephant, a horse, a tiger, a monkey, a cat, a serpent and numerous other animals, which are passed over here Some smrtis such as Samvarta 10 and Paithīnasi make a difference between grāmya and āranya (forest) animals, in each class seven being specificed by Paithīnasi[251] The great concern of the sages for anything possessed of the principle of life or growth went so far as to prescribe the penance of reciting one hundred rk verses if a man cut off big trees (like mango or jack-fruit tree) or shrubs and creepers, except for purposes of sacrifices or agriculture[252] (Manu XI. 142, Yāj III. 276, Vas 19. 11–12) These provisions tended against wanton destruction of trees, shrubs and forests that are so beneficent to humanity and lend a charm to the landscape.

It is remarkable that in case a man was bitten by a harlot or a monkey or an ass or by a dog or jackal or a camel or a crow he had to perform (in addition to the pain of the bite) prānāyāma while standing in water and to drink ghee for purification (Manu XI. 199, Yāj. III. 277, Vas 23. 31) Parāśara V 1–9 prescribe elaborate rules of purification for bites by wolves, dogs and jackals (such as a bath and japa of Gāyatrī &c).

PĀRADĀRYA (adultery with another's wife)—is a minor sin (acc to Yāj III. 235, Manu XI. 59). This excludes intercourse with guru's wife and other intercourse declared to be like gurutalpagamana or with cāndāla women (Manu XI. 170–172, 175, 178, Yāj III. 231–233, Vas XX. 15–17 and XXIII. 41) Āp. Dh S. I. 10 28 19 is very severe on a male adulterer who transgresses his vow of loyalty to his wife; one who proves false to his wife shall put on the skin of an ass with the hair turned outside and beg at seven houses saying 'give alms to him who played false to his wife'. This should be his livelihood for six months". Conversely, Āp. (I. 10.28.20) provides that if a wife plays false to her husband she should perform for as many months (i. e. six months) the twelve night krcchra penance. In another place Āp. Dh. S. (II. 10. 27. 11) states that if a brāhmana commits adultery once with a married woman of equal class he shall perform one-fourth of the penance prescribed for an outcast. Gaut (22 29–30, 34) provides penances for two years generally and three years if the woman be the wife of a learned brāhmana. The Mit. on Yāj. III. 265 quotes numerous texts dealing with the penance for adultery that does not amount to a mahāpātaka and tries to evolve order by assigning to each its proper province. This is passed over here. A woman guilty of adultery with a male of the same or higher caste than herself had to undergo the same penance as a male adulterer (Manu XI 176 and Bṛhaspati), but if she committed adultery with a male of lower caste, then the penances differed as stated above (vide Vas. 21. 1–5 and Saṁvarta 167–172). Bṛhadyama IV. 48 states that adultery in the inverse order of classes is a grave sin, but adultery in the anuloma order of classes entails different penances for purification from it.[253]

Vrātyatā (failure to have upanayana performed at the right time)—A person whose upanayana is not performed at the proper time is called vrātya or patitasāvitrīka. Vide Āśv. gr. I. 19. 5–7, Āp Dh. S I. 1. 1. 22–26, Baud. gṛ. III. 13. 5–6, Vas. XI. 71–75, Manu II. 38–39, Yāj I. 37–38. The penances also such as the performance of Vrātyastoma and Uddālakavrata (Vas. XI. 76–79, Gaut. 19 8) are prescribed by some of these works, while Manu XI. 191 (=Visnu Dh. S. 54. 26–27=Agnipurāna 170. 8–9) prescribes a milder penance of three krcchras and then Upanayana is to be performed again. Vas. XI. 77 describes Uddālakavrata as follows: 'for two months he should subsist on barley gruel, for a month on milk, for half a month on āmiksā, for eight days on ghee, for six days on food obtained without begging or asking for it, for three days on water and he should observe a complete fast for one day.' Āp. Dh. S (I. 1.1. 24–27) prescribes another penance for vrātyatā. For vrātya or patitasāvitrīka, vide H. of Dh. vol II. pp. 96, 376–379. Haradatta as Vratalopa (non-observance of the vow of celibacy on the part of a brahmacārin). A Vedic student who has sexual intercourse with a woman is technically called avakīrṇin The Tai. Ā. II. 18 contains the penance for avakīrṇin first promulgated by Sudeva Kāśyapa[254]. Āp Dh S. (I. 9. 26. 8-9) provides[255] that such a student shall offer to Nirrti (goddess of Hell or death) an ass according to the manner of Pākayajñas and that a śūdra shall eat the remainder of the offering. Jaimini (VI. 8 22) provides that the offering is to be made in the ordinary fire (laukikāgni) and not in the consecrated Vedic fire.[256] Vas. (23 1-3) prescribes 'if a Vedic student approaches a woman, then he should offer an ass to the goblins (rakṣas) in a forest where four roads meet, kindling an ordinary fire or he may offer an oblation of boiled rice to Nirrti and throw into the fire four oblations of that food saying 'To lust, svāhā; to him

III. 12 contain similar provisions, Gautama adding that he shall beg for a year at seven houses with a red vessel (earthen) in his hand and proclaim his misdeed. The Baud. Dh S. and Pār gr furnish elaborate details. The former states that the Paśupurodāśa may be offered to Raksas or to Yama or he may offer on the Amāvāsyā at night two offerings of clarified butter in fire after performing the preparatory rites of a darvi-homa and that he may then invoke fire with the verse (Tai. Ā. II 18) 'Sam mā ciñcantu marutah &c.' (may the Maruts grant me long life and strength).

If an ascetic reverted to the life of a householder, Samvarta (171–172) prescribes the penance of krcchra for six months[257]. Such a man is called pratyavasita. The pratyavasitas are said to be of nine kinds[258] by Yama (22–23), Brhad-Yama (3–4) and others viz. those who turn back from water, fire, halter (by means of which they wanted to kill themselves), those who revert back from the stage of sannyāsa or from a fast (unto death), or from poison, precipice or sitting dharnā and those who (desiring to commit suicide) strike themselves with a weapon (but are not killed), these nine are called pratyavasita and are beyond commerce with people, become pure by the penance of Cāndrāyana or two Taptakrcchras. Vrddha-Parāśara quoted by Par. M. and Prāyaścitta-muktāvali provides that sannyāsins, who revert to the life of the householder, are to be treated as cāndālas even after undergoing penance and their children born after they fall from the ascetic stage are to be made to dwell among cāndālas. This explains the harsh treatment alleged to have been meted to the great saint Jñāneśvara and his brothers at Paithan in the 13th century. A person who after becoming a sannyāsin reverts to another āśrama or acts contrary to the Elaborate purifications are prescribed for removing the taint of touching certain men, unclean objects like bones (Manu V. 87), women in their monthly illness or within certain days after delivery and animals (like dogs, village pigs, cocks, crows). They have to be passed over here for reasons of space. But a few passages may be cited by way of sample. Gautama[259] (14. 28) provides that on touching patita, cāṇḍāla, a woman freshly delivered, a woman in her monthly illness, a corpse, or on touching any one who has touched any one of these or any one who is the third in contact, the purification is brought about by a bath with the clothes on. Manu V. 84 and Yāj III. 30 contain similar provisions The Pr. V. (pp. 495–499) discusses the question whether sparśa[260] (touch) means direct touch or includes even indirect touch and ultimately arrives at the conclusion that indirect touch also is included and cites Āpastamba-smṛti in support that if a brāhmana and a cāndāla or the like are both seated on the same branch (without actually touching each other) the brāhmana can become purified only by a bath. A verse quoted as Yājñavalkya's by Pr. Prakarana[261] p. 110 (not found in the printed text) states · 'on touching a cāndāla, pukkasa, mleccha, bhilla, a pārasīka (one coming from Persia) and the like and persons guilty of grave sins one should bathe with the clothes on.' The Sat-trimśan-mata[262] provides 'on touching

Bauddhas, Pāśupatas, Laukāyatikas, atheists and those who follow forbidden actions, one should plunge in water together with the clothes on. On touching a caitya tree (such as a fig tree round which a platform is built), a funeral pile (or brick altar prepared in the śrauta rite called Agnicayana), a sacrificial post, a cāṇḍāla, one who sells the soma plant, a brāhmaṇa should enter water with the clothes on.' Samvarta [263] requires a dvija to sip water on touching a shoemaker, a washerman, a vena (Manu X 19, 49, one who beats drum &c.), a fisherman, a dancer (naṭa) and Śātātapa [264] provides that if any limb of a dvija (except the head) is touched by one who colours clothes, a shoemaker, a hunter, a fisherman, a washerman, a butcher, a ṭhaka (Thug), an actor, one who allows sexual intercourse in the mouth, a dog, a prostitute allowing men of all varnas to visit her, an oil-grinder, the keeper of a tavern, an executioner, a village pig or cock, he should wash the limb with water and perform ācamana. If the head is touched by any one of these, then he should bathe. In this connection it may be noted that Hemādri quotes (on p. 38) the Garuḍapurāṇa and (on p. 316) Parāśara for the 16 castes in a village that were treated as cāṇḍālas in the matter of touch, speech or sight. Devala (q. by Hemādri on prāyaścitta p. 312) says that Cāṇḍāla and Turuṣka (Turk) are equally low. The chapter on untouchables in the 2nd vol. of the H. of Dh pp. 165–179 may be consulted in this connection. On pp. 175–176 of the same work references are given to verses of Atri, Śātātapa, Bṛhaspati and others stating that no purification is required on the ground of untouchability in the case of religious festivals and marriage processions, in battle, in the case of fire or invasion and similar calamities. By no stretch of imagination can these verses be restricted to the untouchability arising from death or birth as some propose to do. The words are too sweeping for this explanation and there being no untouchability on birth for any one except the mother and persons in mourning not being likely to join religious festivals and marriage processions those verses cannot be so construed

The smrtis were very keen on keeping a high ideal before brāhmanas as regards receiving gifts The Sāma Br. (I. 7. 1-2) prescribes that if a brāhmana receives a gift from a ksatriya when not in distress (or difficulty) he should eat only one meal by day for a month and recite the Sāma verse 'mahat tat somo mahisaścakāra' (Sāmaveda I 6. 1. 5. 10, No 542) for one month, while standing in water and if he accepts a gift from any one else from whom he should not accept it, he should undergo krcchra penance and recite the sāma verse 'trikadrukesu' (Sāmaveda I.5 2.3 1, No 457) Yāj I. 140 provides that a brāhmana should not accept a gift from a king who is parsimonious (or greedy) and acts against the dictates of sāstra and Manu XI. 194 (=Visnu Dh. S 54.24) provides that a brāhmana becomes free from the sin of the acceptance of a thing which should not be accepted or of the acceptance of a gift from a condemned donor by reciting the Gāyatrī three thousand times (in a month) or subsisting on milk alone or staying in a cowpen for a month. It may be noted that Manu X. 102-103 and Yāj III. 41 allow a brāhmana when in distress to accept a gift from anybody or to take food from anyone whatever or to maintain himself by teaching any one whatever and state that he is not tainted by sin in so doing, since he is like fire and water (like that of the Ganges) and since it is unreasonable (or impossible) to assert that what is pure can be sullied. Manu X. 109, however, regards acceptance of a gift from an unworthy (or low) person as worse than teaching an improper person or officiating for him A brāhmana was not to sell things declared to be unfit to be sold by him such [261a] as sesame, oil of sesame, curds, bees' wax (ksaudra), salt, grapes, wine, cooked food, female or male slaves, elephants, horses, bulls, fragrant substances, liquids, silken cloth (kṣauma), black antelope hide, soma plant, water, indigo; by selling these he at once incurs sin. As penance he should practise Tapta-kṛcchra for a year after tonsuring his head, he should enter water thrice, wear only one wet piece of cloth, should observe silence, should practise the Vīrāsana, should sit up at night and stand by day, should recite the Gāyatrī.

One important matter dealt with by a few of the smṛtis and some of the digests is the re-admission into the Hindu fold of those who were converted by force by the invading mlecchas. About the meaning of the word mleccha, there is some divergence of views. From the Śat. Br. (III. 2 1 23–24) it appears that the mlecchas spoke a degraded and corrupt speech (such as saying 'helavah' for 'heऽrayaḥ'). Parāśara (IX. 36) refers to the mlecchas as the eaters of cow's flesh. The Pr. T. (p 549) quotes a smṛti[265] text to the effect that a mleccha is an eater of cow's flesh and talks much that is contradictory, and cites a passage from the Harivaṁśa for the manner of the dress and of the trimming of hair in the case of Śakas, Yavanas, Kāmbojas, Pāradas, Pahlavas &c. Vide for mleccha and for the return to the Hindu fold of those that were forcibly carried away as slaves by mlecchas and robbers or made to kill cows or to eat the flesh of asses, camels, village pigs, H. of Dh. vol. II p 92, 383–385, 389–392 (where verses of Devala ascribed by some like the Mit. to Āpastamba-smṛti are set out), 973–974 A few matters not dealt with there may be added here The Viṣṇudharmottara[266] purāṇa (II. 73. 203–206) provides that when persons are kidnapped by mlecchas or raiders or persons passing through forests are so treated and return to their own country, the penances for purifying them from the sin of eating forbidden food are to be prescribed after considering their class (varna), viz that a brāhmaṇa should undergo half krcchra penance and should have the Upanayana performed again, a kṣatriya should undergo three-fourths of Krcchra (and also upanayana), a vaiśya one-fourth Krcchra and a śūdra becomes pure by undergoing only ¼ of a krcchra and by making a gift In view of the fact that Manu VIII 169, Viṣṇu Dh. S. VII 6–7, Yāj II 89 declare that what is given by force, what is enjoyed by force and what is caused to be written by force and all transactions whatever that are brought about by force are void, and the burning desire of many people forcibly converted in times of disturbances to return to the Hindu fold and to the religion of their forefathers, the movement now called śuddhi should be encouraged by all interested in the well-being and stability of Hindu society It is better to call this return by the name of 'parāvartana'. A model but brief rite for the parāvartana of those who were forcibly converted or for those who voluntarily left the Hindu fold but want to return to it is given in the Appendix The same prayoga with suitable changes may be employed for taking into the Hindu fold any one who was not born a Hindu. In ancient times such people appear to have been taken into the Hindu fold by the performance of Vrātyastoma. For this latter, vide H. of Dh. vol II pp. 385–387 and for the spread of Hinduism in Java, Bali, Sumatra, Siam and other countries of South-East Asia, vide H of Dh vol. III. pp 934–935. Recently, through the kindness of Dr. J. M. Unvala, I had an opportunity of reading several inscriptions of the 18th and 19th centuries at the fire temple called Jvālājī at Suruhani near Baku, the capital of Russian Azerbaijan, situated on the northern shore of the Caspian sea, which were inscribed by Hindu pilgrims or visitors, that begin with obeisance to Gaṇeśa and in one of which occurs the verse quoted below.[267]

Manu XI 124 (= Viṣṇu Dh S. 38 7) prescribes the penance of Sāntapana for committing with full knowledge any of the deeds described above as jātibhraṁśakara and the penance of Prājāpatya for doing it unintentionally For doing any of the deeds called saṅkarīkaraṇa or apātrīkaraṇa described above, Manu XI 125 prescribes the penance of cāndrāyaṇa for a month and for doing any of the deeds called malāvaha prescribes that the perpetrator should scald himself with barley gruel for three days Those two verses of Manu occur in Agnipurāna (170. 23-25). Visnu Dh. S. (39.2, 40.2, 41 5) prescribes somewhat different penances for sankarīkarana, apātrīkarana or malinīkaranīya deeds Vide also the Mit on Yāj III. 290 for the penances prescribed for these deeds by Yama and Brhaspati. About miscellaneous pātakas the rule laid down by Manu XI 209, Visnu Dh S 42 2, Yāj. III 294 and others is that the penance should be prescribed by the brāhmanas after taking into account the nature of the deed, the ability of the perpetrator and other circumstances of time and place &c.

Some of the digests prescribe certain times for the performance of penance. The first rule is laid down by Hārīta that having done something sinful or improper through trustfulness, affection, greed, fear or heedlessness one should resort to purification at once Daksa[268] II. 73 also states that all naimittika and kāmya matters must be performed as they fall due and no delay should be caused. If more than a year is allowed to pass after the sin is incurred the penance would have to be double of what it otherwise would have been, according to Devala and Manu.[268a] The Pr. T. (pp 474, 512) quotes a verse from the Vyavahāra-cintāmani [269] and an astrological work to the effect that a penance or ordeal should not be administered on the 8th or 14th tithi of a month, nor should an ordeal or marriage take place on a Saturday or Tuesday. The Prāyaścittenduśekhara (p 15) says that according to respectable people (śiṣṭas) the sankalpa (declaration of undergoing a penance) should be made on the 14th tithi and the actual rite should be performed on the amāvāsyā. If the guilty person is in mourning he may perform penance after the period of mourning is over.

The procedure for undergoing penances for sins and lapses prescribed by the assembly of learned men has varied in details from time to time. The Gaut. Dh S. 26 6-17 prescribes the method of performing Krcchra penance It is briefly as follows: The sinner desiring to be free of sin quickly should stand by day and sit up by night (i e. should take sleep in a sitting position and not lie down), he should speak the truth and should not hold conversation with anāryas (sūdras &c.), should bathe thrice in the day, should perform mārjana (splashing or sprinkling water on the head and other limbs by means of kuśas dipped in water after repeating sacred mantras) with the three verses 'āpo hi sthā' (Rg. X.9.1–3), with the verses called Pavitravatī and with the eight verses beginning with 'hiranyavarnāh sucayaḥ pāvakāh' (Tai. S V. 6 1.1–8) Then he should perform the tarpana [270] (satiating with water) with thirteen mantras beginning with namaḥ and ending with namah (each respectively containing 6, 4, 4, 13, 2, 2, 2, 6, 5, 2, 2, 6, 2 names of deities) This constitutes for him the worship of Āditya (the Sun) and he offers oblations of clarified butter with these thirteen mantras and, after he passes twelve days in this way, on the 13th he offers nine oblations of boiled rice to Agni, Soma, Agni and Soma, Indra and Agni, Indra, the Viśve Devas, Brahman, Prajāpati, Agni Svistakrt Then he serves dinner to brāhmanas The Āp. Dh. S II. 6 15.9 states [271] the general rule that in all religious observances one should give dinner to brāhmanas that are pure (in conduct) and that have studied the Veda. The Baud Dh S. (II. I. 95–99) prescribes that in a krcchra penance one has to bathe thrice in the day, to lie down on the ground (not on a cot &c), to wear only one piece of cloth, to shave one's hair on the head, the moustache and the body and to pare one's nails, and that the same mode is prescribed also for women (sinners) except the tonsure of the head Manu (XI. 222–225) prescribes that in all penances there is homa with the mahāvyāhrtis every day, the sinner has to practise ahimsā (non-injury to all sentient beings), truthfulness, absence of anger and straight-forwardness, has to bathe thrice by day and thrice by night together with the clothes on, he should not talk with women, sūdras and patitas, he should stand by day and sit down at night or if unable to do so he should sleep on the ground (raised platform called sthandila), should observe celibacy and the rules of a student, such as wearing girdle of muñja grass and carrying a staff (of palāśa &c), should honour gods, brāhmanas and his elders, should always recite the Gāyatrī and sacred texts.

Vas. 24.5 (a long prose passage) contains similar provisions. Yāj III. 312–13 are very important. They prescribe the practice of certain virtues and rules of conduct called yamas (such as brahmacarya, kindliness, forbearance, truthfulness, ahimsā &c.) and niyamas (such as bath, silence, fasting, purity of body &c.) as necessary adjuncts in all penances. The Laugākṣigṛhya (V. 3–11) prescribes the procedure for all penances Yāj. III. 325 holds that one should, while performing the penance of kṛcchra or cāndrāyaṇa, bathe thrice daily, recite holy mantras (as stated in Vas 28.11–15) and should eat balls of rice over which the Gāyatrī has been recited. Śaṅkha[272] (18.12–14) also summarises the different items that have to be gone through in undergoing a penance The Madanapārijāta (pp 781–784), Pr. V. (pp 503–506), Pr. Sāra (pp 21,22 and 200–203), Pr. T. pp. 497–510, 523–524, Pr. Mayūkha pp. 18–21, Pr. Prakāśa (folios 38b to 43b), Prāyaścittenduśekhara (pp. 15 and 88) and other works provide elaborate rules about the procedure of undergoing prāyaścittas. It is not possible nor necessary to set out these in detail here. Briefly put, on the day previous to the actual day of commencing penance the sinner should pare his nails, shave his head, bathe with clay, cow-dung, holy water &c, drink clarified butter, make a declaration of performing the penance indicated by the assembly of learned men. On the next day he should bathe, perform śrāddha, drink pañcagavya, should perform homa, give dakṣiṇā (gold, cows &c.) to the brāhmaṇas and feed them. Parāśara (XI. 3) says that at the end of the rite of penance pañcagavya should be taken and one, two, three or four cows should be donated respectively by a brāhmaṇa, a kṣatriya, a vaiśya and a śūdra. Yama (verse 63) says that brāhmaṇas should be fed on the performance of a penance and a dakṣiṇā of one golden māṣa should be given to each brāhmaṇa. Jābāli says that at the beginning and close of all penances the sinner should offer in the smārta fire oblations of clarified butter to the accompaniment of the Vyāhṛtis, perform śrāddha and offer dakṣiṇā consisting of a cow or gold. Vide Aparārka (p. 1230) and Par. M II part 2 p. 195 for Jābāli's verses. The Pr Prakāśa (folio 30a) adds that according to the Mahārṇava the number of vyāhṛti-homas should be 28 or 108.

272. मुण्डस्त्रिषवणस्नायी अध शायी जितेन्द्रियः। स्त्रीशूद्रपतितानां च वर्जयेत्परिभाषणम्॥ पवित्राणि जपेच्छक्त्या जुहुयाच्चैव शक्तित। अयं विधि स विज्ञेय सर्वकृच्छ्रेषु सर्वदा। शङ्ख 18 12–14, which are almost the same as the last two verses of विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 46.

A few words may be said about the tonsure of the head (vapana or mundana). The Tai Br (I 5 6.1-2) states[273] 'The Asuras first shaved the hair on the head, then the moustache and then the armpits, therefore they went down (or with face downwards) and were defeated, while the gods first shaved the armpits, then the moustache and then the hair on the head' The Pr Prakāśa quotes this passage in a mutilated form and then states that vapana is of three kinds, daiva (of the gods), āsura (of the asuras) and mānusa (of men), that the āsura method is condemned, that in consecrating the Vedic fires, in the istis and soma sacrifices the daiva method is ordained, while in prāyaścittas, there being no special vidhi, there is an option. Tonsure of the head is enjoined on several occasions e. g. the Visnupurāna provides [274] 'Tonsure should be carried out at Prayāga when on a pilgrimage, and on the death of one's father or mother, one should not in vain (lightly) tonsure the head'. To these occasions may be added penances. The idea seems to have been entertained that whatever sin a man commits it becomes centered in the hair, as a verse quoted by the Madanapārijāta and Pr M. states [275] Gaut. (27 3), Vas.[276] (24 5), Baud. Dh. S. (II.1.98-99) and others provide for the tonsure of the hair on the head and lips (except those on the eye-brows, the hair on the trunk and the top knot). Exceptions were introduced to the rule about tonsure Daksa[277] forbade tonsure, the offering of pindas and the carrying of a corpse and all funeral rites to one whose father was alive and to a man whose wife was pregnant. But this prohibition did not apply to penances. The Baud. Dh S already referred to prohibits the tonsure of women in penances Angiras 163, Āpastamba-smrti I. 33–34, Brhad-Yama IV.16, Vrddha-Hārīta IX 386, Parāśara IX. 54–55, Yama 54–55 provide [278] that in the case of married women whose husbands are alive and in the case of maidens all their hair should be held together and only two finger-breadths of hair should be cut off. In the case of widows and ascetics the entire head was to be shaved. It was further provided by Parāśara (IX 52–54), Śankha (q. by Par. M. II. part I, pp. 290–291) that in the case of a king or prince or a learned brāhmana tonsure of the head should not be insisted upon, but that they should have to undergo double the usual penance and the daksinā would have to be double. [279] The Mit. on Yāj. III. 325 quotes a verse of Manu [280] (not found in the printed text) 'tonsure of the head is not desired in the case of learned brāhmanas and kings except in the case of those guilty of mahāpātakas, of cow-killing or of being an avakīrnin'. The Mit. (on Yāj. III 264) further quotes Samvarta [281] to the effect that when the penance prescribed is only a quarter then only the hair on the body below the throat is to be shaved, when half is prescribed then in addition the hair on the lips is to be cut, when three-fourths then all the hair on the body except the knot is to be cut and in the case of the full penance all hair including the śikhā (the top-knot) also are to be cut off. The Par. M (II part 1. p 300) while describing cāndrāyana penance requires the cutting of the hair on all parts of the body (including private parts). [282] The tonsure is to be performed by a barber and yet the saṅkalpa is 'vapanam kariṣye' and not 'vapanam kārayiṣye' From Gaut 27.3 (vapanam vratam caret) prescribing tonsure in cāndrāyaṇa Haradatta and others infer that vapana is unnecessary in kṛcchra penance

Baths that are subsidiary to prāyaścitta are performed with ashes, cowdung, clay, water, pañcagavya and water in which kuśa grass has been dipped Mantras that are to be recited at the time of bath are laid down in the Liṅga-purāṇa, the Bhaviṣyapurāṇa and elsewhere.

There are certain virtues to be cultivated as being common to all prāyaścittas whether secretly or openly undergone They are called yamas and niyamas and have been set out above (p 121) from Yāj III. 312–313 Atri (verses 48–49) sets them out somewhat differently. Manu IV. 204 (= Atri verse 47) refers to yamas and niyamas which Medhātithi explains as follows. viz yamas are in the nature of prohibitions (e. g. a brāhmaṇa should not be killed), while niyamas consist of what is to be done (such as one should always recite the Veda, as in Manu IV. 147).

While undergoing prāyaścittas certain rules about food and other matters were to be observed. For example, Hārīta [283] prescribes that the person undergoing penance should omit on all days māṣa and masūra pulse, honey, taking food at the house of or belonging to others and sexual intercourse, should not speak at an improper time, should perform ācamana if he speaks with women or śūdras or those who are ucchiṣṭa Yama ordains that one who is undergoing a penance should omit massaging the body or head with oil, the chewing of tāmbūla, applying unguents and every thing else that causes one to feel strength or sexual passion.

According to the Pr [284] Prakāśa when undertaking a penance one should begin with the mantra 'Agne vratapate vratam carisyāmi' (O! Fire, lord of vratas! I shall perform a vrata) and when finishing a penance one should repeat the mantra 'agne vratapate vratam-acārisam tad-aśakam tan-me rādhi' (O! Fire, lord of vratas; I have performed the vrata, I had the strength to do it, may it be propitious for me &c.').

Prāyaścittas are of two kinds, prakāśa (undergone openly) and rahasya (undergone secretly). A few words must be said about the latter. Gaut. (24 1–11), Vas. (25 1–3), Manu XI. 248–265, Yāj. III. 301–305, Visnu Dh. S. 55 and other smrtis lay down rules about secret prāyaścittas. Where a man's[285] sin is not known to anyone except himself he may perform secret expiation. In the case of adultery and in the case of association with one guilty of a grave sin, one may still perform a secret penance, even though the adultery is known to the adulteress and even though the man guilty of a mahāpātaka is aware of the association. Vas.[286] 25 2 states the general rule that secret penances are meant for those who have consecrated the Vedic fires, who are disciplined, old or learned and that the openly undergone penances are meant for others. If such a man is himself aware of the proper penance, he should perform it without going to an assembly (parṣad), but if he is not so aware he may consult some knowing person privately, asking him in a general way what the penance for a particular sin may be. Vas. 25.3 provides that those who are always intent on prānāyāmas, holy texts, gifts, homas and japa are released from sin. Manu XI.226 states that those whose sins have not become public may be purified by homas and mantras. Even women and sūdras can perform penance in secret, since, though they cannot perform homa and repeat Vedic mantras, they can, as the Mit on Yāj III.300 says, perform expiation by means of gifts and prānāyāmas. Gaut 26 2 and Manu XI. 253 prescribe that one who desires to receive a gift which he should not accept or who receives such a gift should recite in water (navel-deep according to some) the hymn of four verses beginning with 'tarat sa mandi' (Ṛg X.58 1-4). For one who is guilty of brāhmana murder Gaut. (24 6) prescribes that for the first ten days he should subsist on milk alone, on clarified butter for a further ten days, on water for another period of ten days, that he should partake of the articles specified only once in the morning, should wear wet clothes and should offer every day eight symbolic homas with clarified butter, of his hair on the body, nails, skin, flesh, blood, muscles, bones and marrow with the words 'I offer in the mouth of Death' added at the end.[287] Yāj III.301 prescribes that the murderer of a brāhmana should fast for ten days, should recite the Aghamarsana hymn (Ṛg X.190) while submerged in water, donate a cow yielding milk, while Visnu prescribes that he should bathe for a month in a flowing stream or river, should perform every day 16 prānāyāmas, should eat only once a day sacrificial food and may then become purified. Visnu provides that the drinker of surā becomes pure by observing the vrata (as stated) for brāhmana murder and reciting Aghamarsana; while the thief of brāhmana's gold becomes pure by fasting for three days and reciting the sacred Gāyatrī ten thousand times and one guilty of incest by the repeated recital of the hymn beginning with 'sahasraśīrṣā' (Ṛg X. 90).

The sages observed that some of the penances mentioned in old smrtis were terrible and involved loss of life Therefore, gradually more humane and easier penances came to be prescribed For example, Hārīta[288] states 'brāhmanas who have studied dharmaśāstra should prescribe a penance appropriate to the age, the time and the strength of the brāhmana (sinner), the penance being such that he may not lose his life and yet may be purified; one should not prescribe an observance that will cause great distress (to the sinner) Aṅgiras also says that the parisad should indicate the penance resolved upon by all the members which would not cause loss of life Śankha declares:[289] 'a brāhmana should never practise the performance of a penance in a forest full of thieves, ferocious beasts, elephants and other animals through fear of injury to life. The body that is the all in all (i. e. the only source) of (the observance of) dharma must be protected with efforts; just as water oozes down from the mountain, so dharma springs from the body'.

As times changed easier substitutes (called pratyāmnāyas) were found and prescribed. The word pratyāmnāya was used in this sense in the Āp. Śr. S. V. 20.18 (yadyanādhyo-gnīn-ādadhīta kāmam-evaikām gām dadyāt sā gavām pratyāmnāyo bhavatīti vijñāyate), 6 30 9 and Śān. Śr. S. 14 51.6 and other sūtras. Samvarta[290] states that if a sinner is unable to undergo the Prājāpatya penance, he may donate instead a cow yielding milk and if he cannot donate such a cow he may donate the full price of such a cow. Parāśara[291] (XII 63-64) provides four substitutes for a Prājāpatya penance viz the recital of the famous Gāyatrī mantra (Rg. III. 62 10) ten thousand times or 200 prāṇāyāmas, or bathing twelve times in a sacred watery place after drying the head on each bath, or taking to a journey of two yojanas towards a holy place. From the words of Gaut. 19 16 and 18 (quoted above in note 120) it follows that gold is a substitute for a cow by way of penance. The Brahmapurāṇa[292] provides that in the absence of a cow a niska or half niska or a quarter niska may be given The Caturvimśatimata [293] provides several pratyāmnāyas for Prājāpatya viz recital of Gāyatrī ten thousand times, standing in water, gift of a cow to a brāhmana—these four (including Prājāpatya) are equal, as also a thousand homas with sesame, recitation of the whole samhitā of the veda, feeding twelve brāhmanas, Pāvakesti are equal. The Caturvimśatimata [294] stated that one should substitute the gift of one cow for Prājāpatya penance, of two cows for Sāntapana, of three cows for Parāka, Tapta-krcchra and Atikrcchra and eight for Cāndrāyana The result was that from medieval times at least even in the case of mahāpātakas there was a sliding scale of penances ultimately ending in feeding brāhmanas or making monetary or other presents to them. For example, the Mit (on Yaj. III. 326) says that in the case [295] of the twelve years' penance, optionally 360 prājāpatyas could be performed, each prājāpatya extending over twelve days, that if a man was unable to undergo this he should donate as many (i. e 360) milch cows, if that was impossible he may donate their price or 360 niskas or even half or quarter thereof &c. Yāj. III 309 provides (a lakh of) homas with sesame to the accompaniment of the Gāyatrī or making brāhmanas recite the Veda by the gift of sesame. Vas 28 18–19 (=Atri VI. 7–8) and Visnu Dh S 90 10 state that by feeding seven or five brāhmanas on the Full moon of Vaiśākha with sesame and honey a man becomes free of all sins. These provisions are maintained in almost all medieval works such as the Smṛtyarthasāra pp. 149, 155, Prāyaścittasāra p. 203, Pr. T. pp. 517, 541, Pr. Mayūkha p. 18 &c The same method is followed in penances for lesser periods. It is due to this provision in the smṛtis that in modern times men, when on death-bed, perform prāyaścittas for all their sins by donating a cow or more or by monetary presents to priests.[295a]

The प्रा प्रकाश says 'सुवर्णचतुष्टयसमतोलितं रूप्य निष्क इत्यर्थः' (folio 62 b). This is the view of the Prāyaścitta-muktāvalī (folio 17 a) which remarks, 'तथा च धरण-पुराण-कार्षापणशब्दा अन्योन्यं पर्याया भासन्ते'.

Some interesting sidelights are thrown on the prices of milch cows, cows and bulls by the medieval writers The Pr. V. (p 199) states that the price of a milch cow (payasvinī) was 3 purāṇas, that of an ordinary cow (go) one purāṇa and that of a bull was five purāṇas. The Pr. T. (pp. 517–18) quotes Kātyāyana to the effect that the price of a cow (go) is 32 paṇas and that of a male calf one purāṇa, that a paṇa is copper weighing 80 raktikās or equal to 80 varāṭakas (cowries), that 16 paṇas were equal to one purāṇa (following Bhaviṣya and Matsya purāṇas), that by niṣka is not meant the one indicated by Manu (VIII. 137) but a dīnāraniṣka i. e gold weighing 32 raktikās. The Prāyaścittenduśekhara p. 7 follows Yāj I 365 and holds that niṣka is silver equal (in weight) to four suvarṇas or a pala. A raktikā weighs on an average 1·8 grains; so a copper paṇa of 80 raktikās would weigh about 144 grains. Therefore a dhenu was equal to 32 paṇas (or two purāṇas) i. e. about 26 tolas of copper (one tola being taken as equal to 180 grains). Vide H of Dh. vol. III pp.120–121 notes 161 and 162 for information about ancient coins and their weights. There appears to be owing to lapse of centuries some difference in the views of several writers According to Vijñāneśvara four suvarṇas are equal to a silver niṣka According to the Līlāvatī 20 varāṭakas are equal to a kākinī, 4 kākinīs are equal to a paṇa and a niṣka is equal to 256 paṇas.

295a There was a parallel to this method of pratyāmnāya in Europe as remarked by Gibbon 'A year of penance was appreciated at 26 solidi of silver, about four pounds sterling, for the rich, at 3 solidi or nine shillings for the indigent; and these alms were soon appropriated to the Church which derived from the redemption of sins an inexhaustible source of opulence and dominion' Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, vol VII, p. 187 (Smith's ed. of 1862).

CHAPTER V

NAMES OF ALL PRĀYAŚCITTAS

Now all the prāyaścittas mentioned in the smrtis and digests will be arranged in alphabetical order (Sanskrit, transliterated into English), excepting mere hymns, fasts, &c. and brief explanations and references will be added to each.

AGHAMARṢAṆA—(The hymn Ṛg. X 190 1–3)

This is prescribed as a penance for all sins by even the most ancient Dharmaśāstra works such as Gaut 24.11, Baud. Dh S IV. 2 19–20, Vas 26 8, Manu XI.259–260, Yāj III 301, Visnu Dh S. 55 7, Śankha 18 1–2 and others. They prescribe that if a man recites (for three days, according to Haradatta) the Agharmarsana hymn thrice in the day while immersed in water for a bath, he is freed from all sins and that this penance is equal in sanctification to the bath at the end of the Aśvamedha sacrifice The Pr. Sāra p 199 speaks of the Aghamarsana-vrata He has to fast for three days and stand up by day and sit up by night and donate a milch cow at the end. Śankha 18 1–2 and Visnu Dh. S.46.1–9 prescribe the details.

ATIKRCCHRA—Vide under Krcchra Manu XI. 213 prescribes that this penance is constituted by eating only one morsel of food for three days in the morning only, for three days in the evening only, for three days eating one morsel got without asking for it and observing a complete fast for the next three days Yāj III 319, on the other hand, prescribes the eating of just as much food as would fill the hand (and not merely one morsel) The Mit, Pr Sāra (p 176) and others state that the rule of Manu applies to those who are able to undergo it, while that of Yāj is meant for those who are unable (aśakta) The Sāmavidhāna Br. I.2 6–7, Gaut 26.18–19, Visnu Dh S 54 30, Laugākṣigrhya V.12–13, Parāśara XI.54–55, Vas 24 1–2, Baud Dh S IV 5 8 also speak of this Manu XI 208 (= Visnu 54 30) prescribes this penance for striking a brāhmana with a weapon or a cudgel Gaut 26 22 states that this penance purifies a man of all sins except the mahāpātakas

ATISANTAPANA—See under Mahā-sāntapana This is variously defined According to the Agnipurāna 171 10 and Visnu Dh S. 46 21 it lasts for 18 days (3 times of the Mahā-sāntapana in which for six days one has to subsist on cow's urine and five other things). The Mit on Yāj. III 315 quotes a verse of Yama according to which this penance lasts for 12 days.[296] The Pr. M. (p. 23) speaks of it as lasting for 15 days.

ARDHAKṚCCHRA—See under Krcchra. According to the Āpastamba-smrti 9 43–44, this is constituted by taking food only once in the day for one day, only once in the evening for one day, taking food for two days without asking for it and completely fasting for two days[297] (in all six days). The Mit. quotes another variety of it, viz. subsisting for three days on food obtained without asking for it and thereafter observing a complete fast for three days.

AŚVAMEDHĀVABHṚTHASNĀNA— the ceremonial bath in the sea or a holy river at the end of an Aśvamedha sacrifice. Visnu Dh. S. 36 (last verse) prescribes for those guilty of mahāpātakas and anupātakas the Aśvamedha sacrifice. It is only an emperor or a crowned king who is entitled to perform an Aśvamedha, at the end of which comes a ceremonial bath. Vide H of Dh. vol. II. pp. 1228–1236 for a description of the Aśvamedha According to Pr. V. p. 65 only a ksatriya could perform Aśvamedha and so this bath was a penance for him alone. But according to Kullūka (on Manu XI. 92) and Pr. T. (both quoting a verse from Bhavisya-purāna) even a brāhmana could participate in the bath at the end of the Aśvamedha and become free from the sin of brāhmana murder if committed unintentionally.[298]

ĀGNEYA KRCCHRA—According to the Agnipurāna and Visnudharmottara if a man subsists for twelve days on sesame alone that is āgneya Krcchra.[299] Vide also Pr Pr. (folio 48 b.)

ṚSICANDRĀYAṆA—According to Bṛhad-Viṣṇu quoted by Pr. Prakaraṇa p. 132 this penance requires that one should take only three mouthfuls of sacrificial food every day for a month [300]

EKABHAKTA—According to Pr Pr. (folio 48a) if one takes for a month only one meal a day it is ekabhaktaka.[301]

KṚCCHRA—This is the general word for several penances The Sāma. Br (I 2 1) starts [302] by saying 'we shall now expound three kṛcchras' and adds that one should eat sacrificial food for three days only by day and eat nothing at night, then for three days more one should eat at night only, then for three more days one should not beg or ask for food from others and should then observe a complete fast for three days If he is in a hurry to purify himself he should pass the day standing and the night in a sitting posture. Gaut. (26.2–16) describes the procedure of the first Kṛcchra (called Prājāpatya by later writers), then Atikṛcchra (26 18–19), and then Kṛcchrātikṛcchra (26 20). Baud. Dh. S (II.1.91) speaks of Parāka as Kṛcchra. Āp. Dh S (I.9.27.7) describes the Kṛcchra penance of twelve days. The Kṛcchra penance described by Gaut. 26 2–16 is one for twelve days and is called Prājāpatya by Manu (XI 211), Śaṅkha (18 3), Yāj III 319 and others. Laugākṣi Gr. (5 3–11) describes Kṛcchra According to the Par [303] M. (II part 1 p. 30) and Pr. Pr, (folio 64a) the word Kṛcchra without any qualifying epithet (upapada) means Prājāpatya. The Pr. T. (p 481) states that the Kṛcchra described by Gaut. (26 1–5) is given the name of Prājāpatya by Manu (XI. 211). Besides the rules about the intake of food, Gaut. prescribes certain other observances viz speaking the truth, not holding conversation with men and women that are antyas (not of the three higher castes), always singing the sāmans called 'Raurava' and 'Yaudhājapa', bathing thrice in the day in the morning, the noon and the night, then performing mārjana[304] (sprinkling of of water) with the three verses beginning with 'Āpo hi sthā' (Ṛg X.9.1-3), with the mantras called 'pavitravatī' viz. those beginning with 'pavamānah suvarjanaḥ' (Tai. Br. I 4 8 1) and the eight verses beginning with 'Hiraṇyavarṇāḥ' (in Tai. S V. 6.1), he should perform tarpaṇa with water with 13 mantras (Gaut 26.12); he performs the worship of Āditya (the sun) with the same mantra (i.e. after tarpana with the 13 mantras, he is to perform the worship of the sun with the same thirteen mantras) and offers oblations of clarified butter with the same 13 mantras and then on the 13th day he cooks boiled rice and offers oblations into ordinary Agni ('svāhā' added at the end of each, such as 'agnaye svāhā), Soma, Agni and Soma, Indra and Agni, Indra, Viśve devāh, Brahman, Prajāpati and Agni Śviṣṭakṛt and then feeds the brāhmaṇas.

Kṛcchra-saṁvatsara—Āp. Dh. S. I. 9.27.8 speaks of this as a penance in which Kṛcchras are undergone continuously in a cycle for one year.

Kṛcchrātikṛcchra—Gaut. 26.20 and Sāma. Br. I. 2. 8, Vas. 24 3 define it as a kṛcchra where only water is drunk on those days on which food is allowed and Gaut. 26.23 and Sāma. Br. I. 2 9 state that this penance frees a man from all sins.[305] Yāj. III. 320 (= Devala 86, first half) and Brahmapurāṇa q. by Pr. Pr. (folio 40 a) prescribe that in this one has to subsist on water alone for 21 days. This difference between the views of Yāj on the one hand and of Gaut. on the other is reconciled by the digests by saying that the period depends on the capacity of the sinner. According to Pr. Pr (folio 46b) and Aparārka p. 1238, Yama prescribed a kṛcchrātikṛcchra for 24 days.[306] Vide Par.

M. II part 1 p. 179 and Madanapārijāta p. 716. According to Manu XI 208 (= Visnu Dh. S. 54.30) when a person strikes a brāhmana with a weapon and draws blood, he has to undergo this penance. The Pr. Prakarana (p 15) states that for those unable to undergo Krcchra, one milch cow is a substitute, for Atikrcchra two milch cows and for Krcchrātikrcchra four.

GOMŪTRA-KRCCHRA—The Pr. Sāra p. 187 quotes a verse about this: one should make a cow eat to satiety grains of wheat mixed with barley and then may collect the yava grains that are to be found in her dung and then drink the gruel of those yavas cooked in cow's urine.[307]

GOVRATA— Pr. Prakarana (p. 132) quoting the Mārkandeya describes this as follows: One should bathe with cow's urine, should subsist on cow-dung, should always stand among cows, should sit down on cowdung, should drink water only when cows have drunk water; one should not eat when they have not eaten, should stand up when they stand, should sit down when they sit down. This should be continued for a month.

CĀNDRĀYANA—The word is derived in this way That rite, where there is action by means of increase and decrease (in the intake of food) in imitation of the course of the phases of the moon, is cāndrāyana[308] The word occurs in Pān. V. 1. 72 (pārāyana-turāyana-cāndrāyanam vartayati) From very ancient times Cāndrāyana has been divided into two varieties, called Yavamadhya[309] (lit. being large in the middle like a grain of yava, and therefore tapering or thin at the ends) and Pipīlikāmadhya (lit. having a middle like that of an ant, that is, slender in the middle and large at the ends). Baud Dh S. III. 8. 33 names these two varieties. According to Jābāli[310] there are five varieties of Cāndrāyaṇa viz. Yavamadhya, Pipīlikāmadhya, Yaticāndrāyaṇa, Sarvatomukha and Śiśucāndrāyaṇa. These will be described later on. Yājñavalkya says (III. 326) that where no specific penance is prescribed in the smṛti texts, cāndrāyaṇa effects purification and cāndrāyaṇa may be undergone not as a penance but for the purpose of accumulating merit and that in the latter case (when performed for a year) the performer enjoys the happiness of going to the world of the moon after death.[311] Manu XI. 221 and Gaut. 27.18 state the same view about cāndrāyaṇa for accumulating merit. When the vrata of cāndrāyaṇa is performed for the sake of merit, there is no tonsure (vide Gaut. 27.3 'vapanam vratam caret' and Haradatta thereon). Gaut. 19.20 (= Vas. 22. 20) prescribes that Kṛcchra, Atikṛcchra and Cāndrāyaṇa are the same penance for all sins (collectively for grave sins, for lesser ones separately, according to Haradatta and others). Compare Manu V 21 and XI. 215 (=Baud. Dh S. IV. 5. 16). Manu XI. 27, Yāj. III. 323, Vas. 27 21, Baud. Dh. S. IV. 5.18 and others define Cāndrāyaṇa (of the Yavamadhya type) as follows: On the first day of the bright half of a month only one morsel of food (grāsa or piṇḍa) is taken, on the second tithi two and so on; on the full moon (Paurṇamāsī) 15 morsels are taken; then on the first of the dark half 14 morsels, one being reduced on each succeeding day. So on the 14th of the dark half only one morsel is eaten and on the Amāvāsyā there is a complete fast. Here in the middle of the month of thirty days the largest number of morsels is taken (and so this is Yavamadhya) just as on the Paurṇamāsī day the moon becomes full and begins to wane from the next day. Here Paurṇamāsī is in the middle of the period of the observance as Viṣṇu Dh. S. 47.6 says. If one begins the vrata on the first tithi of the dark half, he reduces one morsel on the 1st i. e. takes 14 morsels on that day, 13 on the 2nd tithi of the dark half and so on On the 14th of the dark half he eats one morsel and on the amāvāsyā he eats nothing. Then on the 1st of the bright half he takes one morsel and goes on increasing the intake till on the Paurṇamāsī he takes 15 morsels The month is taken in this latter case to be Pūrṇimānta. Here in the middle of the observance there is no food taken and a large number of morsels is taken at the beginning and at the end So this is called Pipīlikāmadhya. This latter is described by Vas 23.45

and Manu XI. 216. Viṣṇu Dh. S. 47.5-6 say: Yasyāmamāvāsyā madhye bhavati sa pipīlikā-madhyah yasya paurnamāsī sa yavamadhyah. If there are 14 or 16 tithis in any particular pakṣa (half of a month) then the number of grāsas must be regulated accordingly. There are other descriptions of cāndrāyaṇa. Vide Haradatta on Gaut. 27.12-15. The Kalpataru appears to have held (explaining two verses of Jābāla) that on the first of the dark half of a month 15 morsels were taken, then one morsel less was taken on each succeeding tithi; so that on amāvāsyā one morsel was eaten, then on the first of the bright half two morsels were eaten and one morsel was added every day so that on the 14th of the bright half fifteen morsels were taken and there was a complete fast on Paurnamāsī. But this seems to be opposed to the very idea of increase and decrease of the intake of food on the analogy of the waxing and waning of the Moon and to several smṛti texts such as Vas 23.45 and Parāśara X. 2. Therefore the Pr. Prakāśa (folio 58b) finds fault with it.[311a] Cāndrāyaṇa may be divided from another point of view into two varieties: (1) MUKHYA (in the primary sense, viz. following exactly the waxing and waning of the moon) and GAUṆA (having a secondary or metaphorical sense). The former is either yavamadhya or pipīlikā-tanu-madhya), while the latter is of four kinds, viz. sāmānya, ṛṣi-cāndrāyaṇa, śiśucāndrāyaṇa and yaticāndrāyaṇa. The last two will be described later. The Sāmānya (or sarvatomukha) consists in eating only 240 morsels of sacrificial food in a month of 30 days, distributing them according to one's choice (not necessarily in imitation of the phases of the moon) as stated by Manu XI 220, Baud. IV. 5.21, Yāj. III. 324 and the Mit. (on Yāj. III. 324), the Madana-pārijāta and other works. Here the penance, though it is not regulated by the phases of the moon, is called Cāndrāyaṇa for the purpose of prescribing the same procedure and observances in it as in the Cāndrāyaṇa which follows the phases of the moon. Here the Mīmānsā rule of Kuṇḍapāyinām-ayana applies.[312] From the words of Gautama

27.12–15 it appears that he envisaged a cāndrāyaṇa of 32 days (pipīlikāmadhya) or 31 days, when he says that the performer should fast on the 14th of the bright half, eat fifteen morsels on the Full Moon day, then reduce it by one morsel, so that there is a total fast on the amāvāsyā and then on the first of the bright half one morsel is taken until on the full moon 15 morsels are taken. Thus from the 14th of the bright half (when there is a complete fast) to the full moon of the succeeding month there are in all 32 days and the penance is of the pipīlikā-madhya type.

As regards the size of the morsels, different views are expressed. Gaut. 27.10 and Viṣṇu Dh. S. 47.2 prescribe that the size of a morsel shall be such as not to cause a distortion of the mouth (while swallowing it) Yāj III. 323 allows that the morsels may be as large as the egg of a peahen, and Parāśara X.3[313] prescribes the size of a hen's egg and Saṅkha that of an undried āmalaka fruit (myrobalan). The Mit explains that Gautama's words apply to boys and young people and that the other sizes confer an option according to the capacity (śakti) of the man undergoing penance. The procedure of cāndrāyaṇa is described in Gaut. 27.2–11, Baud. III.8, Manu XI.221–225, Vṛddha-gautama chap. 16 and other works. The one given by Gautama, being probably the oldest among Dharmaśāstra works, is here set out.

The general rules prescribed for the Kṛcchra penance in Gaut. 26.6–11 are applicable to Cāndrāyaṇa also. If it is performed as a penance the performer must tonsure his hair and observe a fast on the day preceding the Full Moon. He offers libations of water, oblations of clarified butter, consecrates the sacrificial food and worships the moon, reciting 'āpyāyasva' (Ṛg I. 91. 17), 'saṃ te payāṃsi' (Ṛg. I. 91. 18). He shall offer clarified butter, reciting the four (ṛks) beginning with 'yad devā devaheḍanam' (Vāj. S. 20.14 or Tai. Br. II. 6. 6.1). These four together with the preceding are seven oblations of clarified butter that have to be offered. At the end of the offering of clarified butter he shall offer pieces of sacred fuel while reciting the (eight) texts beginning with 'devakṛtasya' (Vāj S VIII 13). Each mouthful must be consecrated by (mentally) reciting one of the[314] following words 'om bhūḥ, bhuvah, svah, tapah truth, fame, prosperity, vigour, refreshment, strength, lustre, brightness, soul, dharma and śiva'[315]; or he may consecrate all of them at once saying 'adoration' svāhā'. The sacrificial food must be one of the following. boiled rice, food obtained by begging, ground barley, grain separated from the husk, barley gruel, vegetables, milk, sour milk, clarified butter, roots, fruits and water. Among these each succeeding one is preferable to that enumerated earlier.

TAPTAKṚCCHRA—There is great divergence of views about this penance Manu XI 214, Vas 21 21, Visnu Dh. S 46 11, Baud Dh. S. IV 5.10, Sankha-smṛti 18.4, Agnipurāna 171 6–7, Atri verses 122–123, Parāsara IV. 7 speak of it as of 12 days' duration comprising four periods of three days each In this one drinks hot water, hot milk, hot ghee for three days each and then for three days there is a complete fast when he inhales hot vapour or atmosphere (acc to Manu XI. 214) Manu adds that the performer has to bathe only once (and not thrice as in some other penances) and that he should practise self-control Yāj III 317 (= Devala 84) speaks of this as of four days' duration, viz he takes hot milk, hot ghee and hot water for one day each and observes a total fast on the 4th day. The Mit on Yāj. III. 317 calls this mahātapta-kṛcchra and also mentions a taptakṛcchra of two days, viz on the first day the sinner takes [illegible] three, viz hot water, hot milk and hot ghee and observes a total fast on the 2nd day. The Pr. Prakāśa (folio 50a) remarks that the authority for the two days' taptakṛcchra spoken

314. Haradatta says that on the days when the performer eats less than fifteen morsels, the counting is to be from the beginning and the later mentioned texts must be left out and that, while eating, the performer must employ the Prāṇāhuti mantras, viz. 'prāṇāya svāhā, apānāya svāhā' etc

315. The words of the Mantras are 'ओं भूर्भुवः स्वस्तपः सत्यं यशः श्रीरूर्गिडौजस्तेजो वर्चः पुरुषो धर्मः शिव इत्येतैर्ग्रासानुमन्त्रणं प्रतिमन्त्रं मनसा। नमः स्वाहेति वा सर्वान्। गौ 27. 8–9, some MSS omit वर्चः of by the Mit has to be found out The Pr. Prakāśa refers to a tapta-krcchra for 21 days. It may be said, as done by the Pr. Prakāśa, that the penance of tapta-krcchra for twelve days is meant for great sins and that the one for four days is meant for lesser sins The quantity of water, milk and ghee, that was to be taken is laid down by Parāśara [316] IV. 8, Atri 123-124 and Brahmapurāna (q. by Pr V. p. 511) viz. that hot water, hot milk and hot ghee should be six palas, three palas and one pala respectively The Brahmapurāna adds that water, milk and ghee are to be taken respectively in the evening, morning and noon

TULĀPURUSA KRCCHRA—Jābāli speaks [317] of the duration of this penance as eight days; Śankha (18.9-10) and Visnu Dh. S. 46 22 describe one of ten days where oil-cake, the foamy scum of cooked rice, butter-milk, water and barley meal are to be eaten, each respectively on one day, followed by a fast on the next day Yāj. III. 322 (= Atri verses 129-130) describes one of 15 days where the above five ingredients are eaten for three days each. Yama on the other hand speaks of Tulāpurusa for 21 days, when the five things are separately eaten for three days (vide Mit. on Yāj III. 322). Aparārka pp. 1239-1241, Par. M II. part 2 pp 184-189, Madanapārijāta pp. 718-727, Pr. Sāra pp 179-181 set out at length the mode of the performance of Tulāpurusa as a penance. In this penance two images of the performer made of fragrant uśīra grass were to be prepared and placed in the pan of a balance a span high made either of gold or silver or sandalwood and were to be weighed against pebbles and placed in another pan and worship was to be offered to Mahādeva and Umā and many other subordinate deities such as Agni, Vāyu, the sun.

Sāra p 136 read पराशर's verse as 'अपः पिबेत्तु त्रिपलं द्विपलं तु पय पिबेत्। पलमेकं पिबेत्सर्पिस्त्रिरात्रं चोष्णमारुतम्॥' and that the Mit. explains 'त्रिरात्रमारुतस्य पूरणे उष्णोदकबाष्पं पिबेदित्यर्थः'। The मद. पा. pp. 735-736 contains both these verses and ascribes both to पराशर According to Yāj I 363-64 a pala is equal to 4 or 5 suvarnas and a suvarna is equal to 80 krsnalas (guñjas) in weight.

TOYA-KRCCHRA—This is also called Varuṇa-krcchra by Yama (q in Pr. Prakāśa, folio 48 a) and by Śankha (q in Pr. Sāra p. 182). Viṣṇu Dh S. (46. 14) states [318] that subsisting on nothing but ground barley mixed with water for one month is called Udakakṛcchra. Since Varuṇa was regarded as the lord of waters even from the times of the Ṛgveda (e. g. in Ṛg. VII. 49. 3) and to mark the truth and falsehood among men, this Toya-krcchra was called Vāruṇa. The Pr. Prakāśa (folio 47 b)[319] quotes Jābāla to the effect 'If a sinner remains immersed in water for a whole day and night without taking food and recites mantras (addressed to Varuṇa) he removes by the jalakṛcchra the sins which he may have committed for a year'. According to Yājñavalkya (q in Pr. Sāra p 187) this penance consists in observing a fast for a day and night standing up the whole day and passing the night without sleep in water and reciting the next day the sacred Gāyatrī mantra 1008 times. According to Śankha (q. by Madana-pārijāta p 737) this penance is constituted either by subsisting on lotus stalks grown in water or on saktus boiled in water.

DADHIKRCCHRA—This is spoken of by the Pr Prakāśa quoting from the Viṣṇudharmottarapurāṇa as a penance in which the sinner subsists on curds alone for a month.[320]

DEVAKRCCHRA—Yama quoted by Par. M. (II. part 2 pp. 191–192) describes this as follows [321]: One should partake of only rice gruel, barley gruel, vegetables, milk, curds, ghee each for a period of three days in succession and then should observe a complete fast for three days; this is called Devakṛta (performed by the gods) penance and destroys all sins. It was practised by the Maruts, the Vasus, Rudras, and Ādityas. By the power of this penance they became free from rajas (impurity). Thus this penance lasts for 21 days. The Pr. Prakāśa (folio 48 b) refers to another variety of it and quotes a long prose passage on it, which is passed over here for want of space.

DHANADAKṚCCHRA—See under Vāyavya-kṛcchra. According to the Viṣṇudharmottara [322] (q. by Pr. Prakāśa) this penance consists in subsisting for a month on food just sufficient to fill the extended but hollowed palm, mixed with gold (i. e. in which gold is rubbed or boiled).

NITYOPAVĀSA KṚCCHRA—The Pr. Prakāśa (p. 48 a) states that this is constituted by a man eating only twice in the day (in the morning and evening) for six years and not drinking even water between the two meals. [323]

PAÑCAGAVYA—For the various details connected with pañcagavya prepared from cow's urine, dung, milk, curds and ghee, vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 773–774. Pañcagavya is to be offered into fire with the mantras 'Irāvatī' (Ṛg. VII. 99.3), 'idam Viṣṇur' (Ṛg I. 22. 17), 'mā nastoke' (Ṛg. I. 114. 8), 'Śam no devīr' (Ṛg. X 9. 4) and then the remainder is to be drunk. It is to be drunk with the middle of a sprig of three Palāśa leaves or with a lotus leaf. Manu. XI. 165 (= Agnipurāṇa 169. 30) prescribes this drinking of pañcagavya as the penance for petty thefts Similarly, Yāj. III. 263 prescribes that one guilty of killing a cow should drink pañcagavya for a month. The Mit. on Yāj. III. 263 quotes Viṣṇu to the effect that one who kills a cow should perform one of three penances, viz. drinking three palas of pañcagavya every day for one month or undergoing the penance of Parāka or Cāndrāyaṇa. [324] Though Viṣṇu 54. 7 and Atri (verse 300) state that a brāhmaṇa

(p 13) and Śūdrakamalākara (p. 42) allowed śūdras to take pañcagavya without Vedic mantras. And women of all varnas, being treated like śūdras for certain purposes, were also allowed optionally to do the same.

PARĀKA—Manu XI. 215 (= Baud. Dh S IV. 5.16), Yāj. III. 320 (= Śankha 18 5 = Atri 128), Agnipurāna 171, 10, Visnu Dh. S. 46. 18 and Br.[325] prescribe that this penance is constituted by not taking any food for twelve days, while the performer controls his senses and remains vigilant, and that this penance removes all sins.

PARṆAKŪRCA—This is a more severe type of patrakrcchra Yāj III 316 (= Devala 83) and Śankha-Likhita[326] define Parnakrcchra as one where the leaves of palāśa, udumbara, lotus, and bilva are boiled separately on each day in succession and the decoction of each is drunk on each day separately and then water in which kuśas have been dipped is drunk. Thus parnakrcchra is a penance of five days The Mit. on Yāj. III. 316 quotes a verse of Yama to the effect that when a sinner fasts for three days and nights and thereafter he drinks together the decoctions of all the four and kuśa water on the same day then the penance is called parnakūrca. The Par M (II part 2 p 181)[327] regards Parnakūrca as a variety of Parnakrcchra Vasistha, Jābāli and Atri (116–117) make Parnakrcchra a penance of six days by adding the leaves of Aśvattha to the five mentioned above. Visnu Dh S 46 23 mentions another variety of Parnakrcchra for seven days[328]

PĀDAKṚCCHRA—According to Yāj. III. 318 (=Devala 85) this is defined as a penance where a sinner takes food one day only once by day, only once by night, then once only (by day or night) but without asking for it from any one (a stranger, a servant or even his own wife) and observes a total fast for one day. Thus this penance lasts for four days. There was difference of view as to the number of mouthfuls to be eaten, Āpastamba (q by Mit. on Yāj. III. 318) saying that the mouthfuls are respectively 22, 26 and 24 when food is taken only once in the evening or morning or without asking for it, while Parāśara states the number of mouthfuls to be 12, 15 or 24 respectively when food is taken only at night or in the morning or without asking for it The Caturviṁśatimata (q. by Par. M. II part 2 p. 172) puts them as 12, 15 and 10 respectively

PĀDONAKṚCCHRA—This lasts for nine days [329] only instead of the 12 days of the Prājāpatya and in it one eats by day only for three days, eats food once only for three days without asking for it from any one and observes a complete fast for three days (i. e. three days when food is eaten by night only are omitted here).

PUṢPAKṚCCHRA—According to the Agnipurāṇa 171. 12 and the Mit. on Yāj III. 316 (quoting Mārkaṇḍeyapurāṇa) this penance is constituted by drinking for a month the decoction of flowers boiled in water. [330]

PRASṚTA-YĀVAKA or PRASṚTIYĀVAKA— Viṣṇu Dh S chap. 48 and Baud. Dh. S. III. 6 contain elaborate descriptions (which agree with each other in many respects almost verbatim) and so does Hārīta (q. by Par. M. II. part 2 pp. 192–194) who has many sūtras and verses in common with Viṣṇu and Baud. Prasṛti means the hand with all fingers stretched out, the palm being hollowed. The yavas taken out were as many as could be placed on the palm of the hand thus stretched out and hollowed. Some passages from Baud who is probably the oldest of the three authors may be set out here. [331] "Now if a man feels his conscience heavy with bad actions committed by himself, let him boil for himself, when the stars have risen, a handful of barley and prepare gruel with that. Let him not perform (the Vaiśvadeva) offering with (a part of) that nor a Bali [332] offering. Let him consecrate the barley before it has been placed on fire, when it is being boiled and after it has been boiled with the following mantras 'thou art barley, the king of grains, thou art sacred to Varuna and mixed with honey, the sages have declared thee to be an expeller of all sins and a means of purification' Then there are five verses more invoking the barley grains to purify the performer from all sins whether due to deeds, words, or thoughts, to destroy distress and evil fortune, to free him from the food of gaṇas (guilds or multitudes of men), harlots, śūdras, or food offered at śrāddhas by persons in impurity due to birth or death, food of a thief, food at navaśrāddha (i e on 1st, 3rd, 5th, 7th, 9th, 11th days after death) or from dreadful mortal sins or from guilt against children and guilt due to serving in a royal court, from sin of stealing gold, sin of the violation of a vrata or sacrificing for an unworthy person and sin of speaking ill of brāhmanas Then Baud proceeds "while the barley is being boiled he should guard it and recite 'Adoration to Rudra, lord of created beings; pacified

As to the rest Hārīta agrees closely with Baud while Visnu differs a good deal from Baud. as to the mantras. Visnu has a verse referring to food licked by dogs and pigs and food defiled by leavings and the sin of disobeying parents, but omits two verses that occur in Baud about mahāpātakas Visnu 48 6 prescribes Rg IX 96 6 (ब्रह्मा देवानां॰) as the mantra to be recited at the time of guarding the grains that are being cooked

I. 8. 7 1), the two texts 'mā nastoke' (Ṛg I. 114 8 and Tai S. III. 4. 11. 2) and 'Brahmā devānām' (Ṛg. IX. 96.6, Tai. S III. 4 11. 2) "Then having sipped water he should eat a little of the boiled food after pouring it into another vessel. Let him offer it as a sacrifice to the soul reciting 'ye devā' (Tai. S. I. 2. 3. 1)."

Then Baud. prescribes: "one desirous of wisdom must perform this rite for three days and nights A sinner who drinks it during six days becomes pure, he who drinks this during seven days becomes purified from the mahāpātakas, he who drinks during eleven days removes even the sins committed by his ancestors. But he who during 21 days drinks gruel of barley grains which have passed through a cow (i. e. cowdung) sees the Ganas, the lord of the Ganas, the goddess of learning and the lord of learning."

PRĀJĀPATYA—Vide under Krcchra above where it is shown that the word Krcchra without any qualifying epithet means Prājāpatya. Manu XI. 211, Yāj III. 319, Viṣṇu Dh. S. 46 10, Atri 119–120, Śankha 18 3, Baud Dh. S. IV 5 6 mention the word Prājāpatya and define it. This Prājāpatya has several varieties. The first is that described by Manu XI. 211 and Vas. 21. 20 viz. four periods of three days each following one another in which there is respectively eating once only by day, once only by night, eating once only without asking for it and complete fast. The second is that described by Vas. 23. 43, where on the first day food is taken only by day, on the 2nd only at night, on the 3rd day food got without asking for it is taken and on the 4th a complete fast is observed and where the same process is repeated for two periods of four days each The first [333] is called Prājāpatya by 'sthānavivṛddhi' and the 2nd is called 'Dandakalita'. Further, both these are said to be made 'ānulomyena' (by the proper and straightforward order). If the sequence described above is reversed i. e if for three days there is first a total fast, then subsisting for 3 days on food got without asking for it, then for three days eating at night only and for three days eating by day only, it is Prājāpatya by 'prātilomya'. Further it may be performed with recitation of Vedic texts or without (for women and śūdras)[334]

PHALAKṚCCHRA— Subsisting on fruits alone for a month. Vide the passage from Mārkaṇḍeya quoted above (n 330). Śrīkṛcchra mentioned below will be also phalakṛcchra The fruits of Bilva and of Āmalaka and lotus seeds were the only fruits to be employed and they were to be eaten only for bare subsistence.

BĀLAKṚCCHRA—See Śiśukṛcchra

BṚHAD-YĀVAKA—The Pr. Pr. (folio 49 a) quoting Brahmapurāṇa describes it as follows:—One should feed cows on plenty of yavas anointed with clarified butter Then he should mix water with the dung of those cows and take out the grains of barley which are voided by them after eating them He should then dry them in the sun, should grind them on a clean stone and cook them mixed with sesame and anointed with ghee in cow's urine on a fire brought on an altar He should place the boiled holy grains in a vessel of gold or in a cup made of palāśa leaves and present them to the gods and manes and he may eat them. He should carry this on for twelve, twenty-four or thirty-six years for the removal of all sins. This is prescribed as a penance for killing one's guru, brother, friend or a near relative &c.

BRAHMAKŪRCA—The Mit[335] on Yājñavalkya III 314 states that when a man fasts on one day and on the next day mixes up the ingredients of pañcagavya with Vedic mantras and drinks it with mantras it is called Brahmakūrca. According to Śaṅkha cow's urine is taken with the Gāyatrī (Ṛg. III. 62 10), cowdung with the mantra 'Gandhadvārām' (Tai. Ā. X. 1), milk with 'ā pyāyasva' (Ṛg I 91.16), curds with 'dadhikrāvṇo' (Ṛg IV. 39. 6), ghee with 'Tejosi' (Vāj. S. 22. 1) and Kuśa water with 'devasya tvā' (Vāj S. 22 1, Ait. Br. 37. 3 &c.). prescribes that when a man observes a fast for the whole day and night on a day and particularly on a Full Moon day and then drinks pañcagavya the next morning this is called the rite of Brahmakūrca. Parāśara (XI. 27-28) appears to hold that Pañcagavya and Brahmakūrca are synonyms. The Madanapārijāta p. 729 and Pr. Sāra. p. 189 state that the Sāntapana described by Yāj. (III. 314) is styled Brahmakūrca.[337]

BRAHMAKṚCCHRA— Vide Hemādri's work on Prāyaścitta p. 964 quoting Devala and Mārkandeya. It is a penance for 12 days on each of which one has to drink in the noon Pañcagavya in a temple or cowpen after offering it with mantras in fire; one has to contemplate on Visnu till the evening and should sleep near an idol and give up tāmbūla and unguents.

MAHĀTAPTAKṚCCHRA—Vide Taptakṛcchra.

MAHĀSĀNTAPANA—Sāntapana, according to Yāj. III. 314, Manu XI 212 (=Baud. Dh. S.IV. 5.11 = Śankha 18.8 = Bṛhad-Yama I. 13), Atri 117-118, Visnu Dh. S. 46.20, lasts for two days; on the first the sinner drinks together cow's urine, dung, milk, curds, ghee and kuśa water and on the second day he fasts altogether. Mahāsāntapana penance consists, according to Laugākṣigṛhya VII. 3, Yāj. III. 315 (=Devala 82 = Atri. 118-119), in drinking separately for six days in succession the six ingredients mentioned above and fasting on the next day (i e it lasts for 7 days) According to Śankha 18.9, Baud Dh. S.IV.5.17 and Jābāla[338] the Mahāsāntapana lasts for 21 days, each of the six ingredients referred to above being taken for three days and a fast being observed for three days. Yama speaks [339] of a mahāsāntapana for 15 days viz when each of cow's urine, dung, milk, curds and ghee is taken as subsistence for three days consecutively.

MAHEŚVARA KRCCHRA — Vide Hemādri (on Prāyaścitta) p. 961, which sets out a passage from Devala, that states that Brahmā prescribed it for Maheśvara on the burning of Madana In this penance in the after-noon one should carry a broken jar (kapāla) and beg at three houses of learned brāhmanas for vegetables, offer them to God and eat them and should sleep in the evening near an idol After getting up the next day he should donate a cow and drink pañcagavya

MŪLAKRCCHRA—Visnu Dh. S 46 15 [340] states that it is so called when one subsists on lotus stalks alone and the Mit. on Yāj III. 316 quotes Mārkandeya to the effect that one must subsist on mūlas (edible roots) alone

MAITRAKRCCHRA—The Pr. Prakāsa (folio [341] 53 a) mentions it Its peculiarity is that in the Sāntapana on the third day milk of a kapilā (tawny) cow is to be partaken of The same work notes that the Kalpataru states that this is a sāntapana in which on the first day all the six ingredients (cow's urine &c) are taken followed by two days of fasting

YAJÑAKRCCHRA—This is a penance for one day laid down by Angiras (q by Pr. Sāra p. 183, Smrti-muktāphala p 939) as follows: The sinner should bathe thrice, should be self-controlled and silent: and after the morning bath he should recite the sacred Gāyatrī 1008 times together with om and the Vyāhrtis at the beginning When reciting he should be in the Vīrāsana [342] posture He should drink cow's milk only once either sitting down or standing or curds of cow's milk (if he cannot secure cow's milk) or butter-milk or barley gruel mixed with cow's urine (in the absence of milk, curds or butter milk). This one-day penance called Yajña-krcchra removes all sins

YATICĀNDRĀYANA—Manu XI 218 (= Baud Dh. S. IV. 5.20), Agnipurāna 171. 4, Visnu Dh. S. 47. 7 define[343] it as a penance where the sinner eats only eight mouthfuls of sacrificial food only once in the noon for a month and exercises control over himself.

YATISĀNTAPANA—When the ingredients[344] of Pañcagavya are mixed together (with kuśa water) and drunk for three consecutive days it is Yati-sāntapana according to the Mit. on Yāj. III. 314. The Pr Prakarana p. 128 adds that the three days must be followed by a fast for one day.

YĀMYA.—According to Visnudharmottara-purāna quoted by Pr. Prakāśa (folio 48 b) this consists in subsisting for a month on saktu grains found in cowdung.

YĀVAKA—Śankha[345] (18. 10–11) states that partaking of boiled yavas obtained from cowdung for a month is the Yāvaka penance for destroying all sins. The Par. M. and Pr. Prakāśa quote a prose passage from Devala,[346] according to which the penance may last for seven days, a fortnight or a month and which states that the procedure of Prājāpatya will apply to this penance.

VAJRA—Atri 164 defines[347] it as a penance, where barley grains fried in clarified butter and mixed with cow's urine are partaken of.

VĀYAVYA-KRCCHRA—According to the Agnipurāna[348] and Visnudharmottara this penance consists in subsisting for a month every day on food that will just fill the extended palm.

VRDDHAKRCCHRA—VṚDDHI-KṚCCHRA—This is a penance for eight days, according to Śankha-Likhita[349] and Yama, in which one takes food only by day for two days, only by night for two days, without asking for food for two days and fasts for two days

VYĀSAKRCCHRA—This is the same as Maitra-krcchra,[350] for which see above p 148.

ŚIŚUKRCCHRA—also called Bālakrcchra by Śankha-Likhita and Pādakrcchra by Devala and Prāyaścittamuktāvali (folio 10 a) and is the same as Laghu-krcchra[351] It lasts for four days, eating once only in the day, eating once only by night, eating food got without asking for it only once on one day and fast on one day. Vide Vas 23.43 (q by Haradatta on Gaut. 26.5), Baud Dh. S II 1. 92. Yāj. III. 318

ŚIŚU-CĀNDRĀYANA—Manu XI. 219, Baud Dh. S IV. 5 19, Agnipurāna 171.5 state that when a brāhmana eats (for a month) four mouthfuls in the morning and four after sun-set, that is Śiśu-cāndrāyana (cāndrāyana for boys, old men &c).

ŚĪTAKRCCHRA—This is the reverse of Taptakrcchra, as here all the articles are to be taken when they are cold[351a] and not hot (as in Tapta-krcchra). Vide Visnu Dh S 46 12, Agni-purāna 171 7 and Mit on Yāj. III. 317 According to Visnu quoted by Pr Sāra (p. 185) and Madana-pārijāta (p. 736) this is a penance for 10 days (and not for twelve days as the Mit. states), viz cold water, cold milk and cold ghee are drunk three days each and there is a total fast for one day

ŚRĪKṚCCHRA—According to Visnu Dh. S. 46.16, Agnipurāna [352] 171.12 and Mit. on Yāj III. 316 (quoting Mārkaṇḍeya) this is constituted by subsisting on Bilva fruit or lotus seeds or āmalaka fruit for a month. The Madanapārijāta (p. 737) quotes a verse of Śankha to the same effect.

SĀNTAPANA—Vide Mahāsāntapana and Atisāntapana above It is of five kinds, viz the first for two days, the 2nd for seven days, the third for twelve (Atisāntapana), the 4th for 15 days and the fifth for 21 days.

SURACĀNDRĀYAṆA—The Agnipurāṇa defines it as one where somehow or other (and not in a rising or falling scale) a man partakes of 240 morsels of food in a month. Yāj. III. 324 speaks of it as a variety of Cāndrāyana. Visnu. Dh S. (47 9) calls it 'sāmānyacāndrāyana' [353]

SUVARṆA-KṚCCHRA—Vide Hemādri on Prāyaścitta pp 969–972 quoting Devala and Mārkandeyapurāna, in which a varāha or a half of it or quarter of it had to be donated. A Varāha was equal to nine rūpakas and a rūpaka was one māsa of five guñjas (of silver it seems). For killing a brāhmana secretly or for the guilt of incest one had to perform ten thousand or 40 thousand suvarna-krcchras and a lesser number for various other lapses.

SOMĀYANA—According to the Madanapārijāta pp. 744–746 (quoting Hārītadharmasūtra and Mārkaṇḍeya) and Pr Prakāśa (folio 60b) the penance lasts for thirty days divided into five periods of 7, 7, 7, 6, 3 days, in which the milk of all the four udders of a cow, of three udders, of two udders and of one udder is respectively drunk and for the last three days there is a complete fast. There is another variety which lasts for 24 days from the 4th tithi of the dark half of a month to the 12th of the bright half of the next fort-night, the 24 days are divided into eight periods of three days each; in the first four periods of three days each the milk of a cow's four udders, three udders, two udders and one udder is respectively drunk and then in the next four periods of three days each the milk of one udder, two, three and four udders is respectively drunk Vide also Prāyaścittendu-śekhara p 12

SAUMYAKRCCRA—According to Yāj III. 321 this penance lasts for six days, in the first five of which one subsists in succession upon oilcake alone, foamy scum of boiled rice alone, butter-milk alone, water alone and saktus (barley) alone and on the last day a total fast is observed The Mit, Madanapārijāta p 717, Pr Sāra p 178 and other digests state that one has to partake of the five ingredients in quantities just sufficient to keep body and soul together. Jābāla (quoted by the Mit., Par M. II part 2 p 183 and others) makes it a penance of four days' duration, in the first three of which one partakes successively of oilcake, saktus and butter-milk and observes a fast on the 4th day. Atri (128-129) also mentions it. The Pr. Prakāśa (quoting Brahmapurāna) speaks[354] of another variety of six days' duration, on the first of which there is a complete fast and on the last of which the sinner subsists on saktus alone and in the intervening four days he subsists on the thick gruel of barley cooked in cow's urine.

CONSEQUENCES OF NOT UNDERGOING PENANCES

If a sinner did not undergo a prāyaścitta, the Smrtis, Purānas, medieval digests declared that he had to suffer dire and far-reaching consequences Yāj. III. 221 declares that men addicted to sins, who feel no repentance and who (therefore) do not undergo the proper penances, fall into painful and horrible hells Manu XII. 54 ff and Yāj. III. 206 ff provide that those guilty of grave (and other) sins after having passed numbers of years in hells and suffered the tortures of horrible hells are born again in this world because of (the remnants of their) evil actions in different forms such as lower animals, insects, trees and shrubs &c Manu XI. 53 ordains that one should always perform penance in order to free oneself from sins, since those who have not destroyed their sins (by means of prāyaścittas) are born again endowed with disgraceful marks (such as having bad nails, black teeth &c.). Manu XI. 48 also emphasizes that wicked men suffer mal-formations owing to their wicked deeds committed in this very life or in a former life. The Visnupurāna[355] echoes the words of Yāj. III. 221. The Visnudharmottara declares[356] that those (sinners) who do not undergo penances nor are punished by the king fall into hell and are born also as lower animals and even after attaining human bodies they become marked (with bodily defects). Visnu Dh. S. (44. 1–10) prescribes[357] that evil-doers, having experienced the horrors of hell pass into animal bodies and that those guilty of atipātakas, mahāpātakas, anupātakas, upapātakas, jātibhraṁśa-kara actions, saṅkarīkaraṇa, apātrīkaraṇa, malinīkaraṇa and miscellaneous sins, respectively enter the bodies of all plants, of worms (or insects), of birds, of aquatic animals, of animals roving in waters, of deer, of cattle, of untouchables among men, of miscellaneous and cruel carnivorous animals (like tigers). Viṣṇu Dh. S. 45.1 provides[358] that sinners, after having undergone the horrors of hells and after having passed through the bodies of lower animals, are born as human beings with certain marks (indicative of their sins) So the teaching of these and other authorities comes to this that sins when not expiated by penances or by State punishment, lead to hell, that then, owing to some remnants of the evil deeds, to birth as lower animals and then as decrepit or diseased human beings.

It is now necessary at this stage to enter upon a historical though brief account of the idea of Hell and of its opposite Heaven[359] There are in the Ṛgveda hardly any clear or express references to Hell In Ṛg II. 29.6 the sage prays to the Viśve-Devas 'save me from the pit, from falling down into it' (trādhvam kartād-avapado yajatrāḥ). In Ṛg IV 5 5 it is said[360] that those men who are bereft of ṛta and satya, being sinful, create a deep place for themselves. In Ṛg. VII 104.3 the poet calls upon Indra and Soma to strike down[361] into bottomless darkness evil-doers, and in VII 104.11 the poet prays that whatever enemy desires to harm the poet by day or night may be deprived of his body and progeny and may be hurled below the three earths Indra is implored in Ṛg X. 152.4 by the sage to send down into darkness whoever attacks him and his people. In Ṛg. IX. 73 8 Soma is said to throw down in a pit those who do not observe Soma's ordinances and who are disliked by him. From these passages what emerges is that the sages of the Ṛgveda had some faint glimmerings of (or belief in) the idea of a dark deep pit below the earth to which wicked persons were relegated by the gods But there is no mention in the Ṛgveda of the tortures of Hell. It is in the Atharvaveda that we find the clearest references to Hell (Naraka). Sorcerers and demons dwell in a house below (the earth), according to A. V. II. 14. 3. Atharvaveda V. 30 11 asks a man to come out from death, from the deep and black darkness. In Atharvaveda [362] V. 19. 3 it is asserted that those who spat in the face of a brāhmana or who imposed a levy of money on him remain biting hair in the midst of a river of blood Atharvaveda XII. 4. 36 mentions 'Nāraka-loka'. In the Vāj. S. XXX. 5 the Vīrahan [363] (i. e. one who gives up or extinguishes the consecrated Vedic fires) is relegated to nāraka (nārakāya vīrahaṇam). A vīrahan may also mean 'one who kills a valiant man' but that does not seem to be a proper sense in this passage of the Vāj S. In the Śat. Br. XI. 6. 1 4 we find a reference to torments of Hell, viz. men cutting up the limbs of others one by one for crimes committed The Tai. Ā I. 19 speaks of four narakas called Visarpin, Avisarpin, Visādin and Avisādin in the south-east, south-west, north west and north-east. From the Kathopanisad it appears that at that time there was a belief that those foolish men who do not know the Reality and who only believe in the existence of the mundane world alone have to be born again and again and fall into the hands of Yama [364] (II. 5-6) The same Upanisad (V. 7) states that after the death (of the body) some enter the womb in accordance with their actions and knowledge to have an embodied existence, while others go into fixed matter (the form of trees and the like). But that Upanisad says nothing about the torments of Hell. They were therefore probably not believed to exist in those days, at least, to the same degree as in the days of the Epics and Purānas. The very words at the beginning of the Katha Up. (I. 21 'devair-atrāpi vicikitsitam') indicate that there were even then various views about the fate of the departed The Kausitaki Br (XI. 3) propounds the remarkable proposition that just as men in this world eat the (flesh of) beasts, so in the next world the beasts eat men.[365]

As regards the opposite idea of svarga (Heaven) the matter is much clearer In certain Ṛk verses there are said to be three heavens (e g Ṛg I 35 6, VIII. 5 8, VIII. 41 9, IX. 113. 9) The generous donor or worshipper is said to occupy heaven and to mix among gods; and gods like Mitra and Varuna are implored to give the worshipper immortality[366] (Ṛg I. 125, 5, V. 63. 2, X 107 2) Life in heaven is full of joys and delights and the denizen of heaven has all his desires fulfilled (Ṛg. IX. 113 10-11).[367] In Ṛg IX. 113 8 the poet prays 'make me immortal (in heaven) where dwells king Vaivasvata, where the sun is confined (i e. where it never sets) and where the divine waters flow' A person who neither offers sacrifices to gods, nor worships, and observes ordinances other than those of Indra is thrown down from Heaven[368]. A sage exultingly addresses Soma 'we have drunk soma, we have become immortal, we have reached Light (Heaven) and we have known the gods; what will an enemy or harmful person do to us who have been mortals so far?'[369] The pious dead become united in Heaven with their Iṣṭāpūrta (merit due to sacrifices and charitable acts) and with their fore-fathers and become endowed with a refulgent body (Ṛg X 14 8). Those who practise tapas or those who perform sacrifices in which the fees run to thousands (of cows) reach Heaven (Ṛg X. 154. 1-3)[370], and Soma, ghee and honey flow for them there. Heaven is said to be the abode of Yama and there resounds the sound of flutes and of songs[371] The Atharvaveda, being more popular in character, contains much more information about Heaven. In Atharvaveda III. 29.3 it is said that a donor goes to Heaven where a weak man has not to render to the strong any contribution [372] In Atharvaveda IV. 34.2, 5-6 it is stated that in the heavenly world there are bevies of women (for the denizens), that there the dwellers get many edible plants and flowers and that there are ponds of ghee, streams of milk and honey, wine flows like water and lotus lakes surround the denizens. In Heaven the meritorious enjoy delight, their bodies being free from disease[373]. Atharvaveda VI. 120.3 and other verses express a yearning to meet one's parents, wife and sons (vide Atharva XII. 3.17).[374] The Tai. S. is full of references to Heaven and so no quotation is cited here except one where it is said that he who offers the Adābhya cup in Jyotiṣṭoma goes to heaven while still living in this world.[375] The Tai. Br. appears to hold that those who offer sacrifices become shining stars in the firmament (I. 5. 2. 5-6)[375a] The Śat. Br. (XI 1. 8. 6) states 'that sacrificer who offers a sacrifice as this redemption is born in the next world (Heaven) with his body entire'.[376] Survival of the soul after death is emphatically asserted in the Tai. Br. III. 10. 11. These passages are enough to establish that the state of the pious after death and of heroes killed in battle was one of happiness in heaven, that there the food and material things (such as honey, ghee) that a person required in this world were also available in greater perfection and abundance The remark of Macdonell 'Heaven is a glorified world of material joys as pictured by the imagination not of warriors but of priests' (Vedic Mythology p. 168) is not (in view of Rg. X. 154.3) quite accurate or justified There is nothing to show that the warriors of Vedic times did not believe what the priests believed. In later times (as in the Bhagavadgītā II 37 'hato vā prāpsyasi svargam' or in the Raghuvamśa VII. 51) warriors killed in battle were supposed to go to heaven and were privileged to have the company of beautiful damsels Heaven as a place or state of eternal bliss to which the spirits of the religious or meritorious people or warriors go, is an idea common to most ancient peoples and was probably based on the idea that the Earth was flat and the sky was a dome carrying various celestial objects In the Bṛhadāraṇyaka Up (IV 3 33) and Tai Up. (II. 8) it is[377] stated that the joys of the world of gods are hundreds of times more delightful than those of the mortal world[378] In the Kathopaniṣad (I 12) it is stated by Yama himself that in Heaven there is no fear and no old age, that the denizen of Heaven is beyond hunger, thirst and sorrow and is in the midst of all delights. The Kausītaki Br Up as quoted by Śankarācārya on Vedāntasūtra I. 1 28 contains the statement that the abode of sinners is below this world or[379] the earth. The Chāndogya Up in one place remarks[380] 'those whose conduct has been good will quickly attain some good birth, the birth of a brāhmaṇa or a kṣatriya or vaiśya But those whose conduct has been evil will quickly attain an evil birth, the birth of a dog or a hog or a cāṇḍāla'.

We have here a complicated blending of two theories The original theory of early Vedic times was that of Heaven and Hell which is also that of most religions Later on when the doctrines of karma and punarjanma came to be universally believed in India the theory of Heaven and Hell came to be modified by holding that the pleasures of heaven and the torments of Hell both came to an end some time or other and the author of sins was born again as an animal or a tree or a human being suffering from diseases and defects

The fate of the departed soul after the death of the body will be touched upon in the section on Antyesti and Śrāddha, but in connection with the doctrine of Hell it is necessary to say something about Yama. In Ṛg. X. 58. 1 Yama is called Vaivasvata (son of Vivasvat, the Sun). Yama is at least an Indo-Iranian deity. Yama is eulogised in Ṛg. X. 14. He is called a king and is credited with the task of gathering together people (X. 14. 1); he is said to have been the first to make a way (to Heaven) which was followed by former ancestors of mankind (X 14. 2 'Yamo no gātum prathamo viveda. yatrā naḥ pūrve pitaraḥ pareyuḥ '). The soul when departing from this world is told that when he follows the paths of the ancient ancestors he would see the two kings Yama and Varuna. In Ṛg. X. 14. 13-15 the priests are asked to press Soma for Yama, to offer oblations to him and it is said that yajña reaches Yama, Agni being the messenger. In Ṛg. X. 135. 1 Yama is stated to drink in the company of gods, he is the lord of men. Yama owns two dogs each having four eyes who guard the way, who are the spies of Yama and who move among men and mark their doings. In Ṛg. X. 97. 16 the sage prays 'May the plants release me from the (effects of the) violation of oaths, from the violation of the ordinances of Varuna, from the fetters which Yama claps on the feet of sinners and from all sins against the gods '[381] In Ṛg. X. 165. 4 Yama is identified with Mrtyu (death) and the owl (an evil omen) or a kapota is said to be the dūta (harbinger) of Yama Ṛg I. 38 5 (addressed to the Maruts) appears to crave for something which is opposed to what other references to Yama state 'May not the singer of your praises go by the path of Yama'.[382] Thus, though in the Ṛgveda, Yama is a god and mostly a beneficent ruler of men, there is an element of fear associated with him as the two prying dogs that guard the way to heaven and his being called Mrtyu would suggest. The Atharvaveda refers to Yama in several places in the same strain as in the Ṛg. In A. V 18 3 13 it is said [383] 'serve the king Yama with offering, who was the first to die among men, who was the first to depart from this world and who, the son of Vivasvat, is the gatherer of men'. In Tai S. V. I. 8 2 and V 2. 3. 1 it is stated that Yama is the lord of all mortals and of the whole extent of the earth. In Tai S III. 3 8 3-4 it is declared[384] 'Yama is indeed Agni and this (earth and altar) is Yamī. When a sacrificer strews Oṣadhis on the Vedi it is indeed tantamount to taking up a debt from Yama If he (the sacrificer) were to go from this world without burning them they (Yama's men) might take him to the next world with fetters round his neck' In Ṛg X. 14. 10[385] the pitṛs are said to enjoy delights in the company of Yama In the Ait Br[385a] (XII. 3) Mṛtyu is credited with having fetters (pāśas) and wooden maces (sthāṇu) for catching erring men. It has already been seen how Yama is said to have within his powers again and again foolish men who believe in the existence of this world alone and deny the existence of the next Thus, from being a beneficent ruler of the departed souls in the very early Vedic times, Yama came gradually to be looked upon as a dreadful punisher of men.[386] The Purāṇas contain graphic descriptions of Yama's abode and of his assistants, chief among whom is Citragupta For example, the Varāhapurāṇa[386a] chap 205 contains a dialogue between Yama and Citragupta, in which the latter recommends the fate that a dead person deserves for his actions The Agnipurāṇa chap. 371. 12 states that a sinner falls into horrible hells that are declared by Citragupta at the order of Yama.

We must now turn to the ideas of Heaven and Hell contained in the post-Vedic Literature, sūtras, smṛtis, purāṇas and digests. The Nir. (I 11) quotes[387] a quarter of a Vedic verse which means 'for fear that if we (women) acted crookedly (towards our husbands) we might fall into Hell' The word Naraka is derived by it in two ways (ni + araka), viz. as meaning 'going below' (the earth) or (na + ra + ka) 'where there is not the slightest place for joy'. In another place, while deriving the word 'putra' (son) the Nir. (II 11) declares that the son is called putra because he saves (the father) from the hell called put. The same derivation of the word putra is offered by Manu IX 138 (= Ādiparva 229.14 = Viṣṇudharmasūtra 15.44). Gautama (13.7) promises[388] heaven to the witnesses in a cause if they speak the truth, but Hell (naraka) if they tell the opposite (of truth). After defining patana as loss of the capacity to perform the privileged acts of twice-born classes (such as Veda study &c) and stating that by being guilty of sins a man does not in the next world reap the fruits of his good actions, Gautama states the striking view of other sages that naraka is nothing more than this loss of capacity and of the fruits of good acts, his own view however being that naraka is a particular place where a man has to dwell solely in distress and sorrow. It was the emphatic view of Gautama that men of the several varnas and āśramas that are devoted to the actions prescribed as peculiar to each, enjoy after departing from this body, the fruits of their actions and then owing to some remainder of their total actions are born in bodies in appropriate circumstances as to the country, caste, family, appearance, length of life, learning, conduct, wealth, happiness and intelligence, while those who act contrariwise pass into all sorts of births and are ruined[389]. Āp. Dh. S. holds that a man becomes fit for Naraka if he follows activities solely dictated by sensual pleasures.[390] In another place Āp. Dh S. affirms that Naraka is indeed one's lot when one transgresses one's dharma. It also states that rewards without end are denominated svarga. The Vedāntasūtra III. 1.13 makes it[391] clear that after enjoying the fruits of one's actions in the abode of Yama (Samyamana) evil-doers ascend to this mortal world. In Vedāntasūtra III. 1.15 the narakas[392] are said to be seven Pānini VI. 2 38 teaches the accent of mahāraurava. In the Kāśikā com on Pānini III. 2.88 a vedic verse is cited according to which one who kills his mother enters the 7th naraka. The Visnupurāna I. 6.41 names seven hells, Tāmisra, Andhatāmisra, Mahāraurava, Raurava, Asipatravana, Kālasūtra and Avīci and (in II. 6 2–5) names 26 narakas. Śankha-Likhita as quoted by the Madanapārijāta pp 694–695 mentions in detail the torments that evil-doers undergo in the hells called Kumbhīpāka, Raurava, Mahāraurava &c. Manu IV. 88–90, Yāj. III. 222–224, Visnu Dh. S. 43. 2–22, Agnipurāna 371. 20–22, Nārada (prakīrnaka 44) enumerate 21 narakas. The names are almost the same in all these works, the variations being due mostly to the scribes having read certain letters differently. The 21 names are generally significant and may be set out from Manu as follows: Tāmisra (darkness), Andhatāmisra (blinding darkness), Mahāraurava, Raurava (abounding in paths with heated surfaces, according to Pr. V. p. 15), Kālasūtra (like the thread on the wheel with which the potter cuts off a raw earthen pot in two), Mahānaraka, Sañjīvana (where one is made to revive and is again killed), Mahāvīci (where one is submerged in surging waves), Tapana (as burning hot as fire), Sampratāpana (same as Kumbhīpāka, according to Pr. V. p. 15), Sanghāta (making many stay in a small place like the legendary Black-

Manu (XII. 75-76) again mentions the Tāmisra, Asipatravana and Kumbhīpāka narakas and Manu III. 249 Kālasūtra. Kullūka (on Manu. IV. 88-90). Pr. V. (p. 16), the Dīpakalikā (on Yāj. III. 222-224) and other commentaries say that the conditions in the hells may be read in the Mārkaṇḍeya-purāṇa and other works. Vide Agnipurāṇa 203 and 371 (where Hells are said to be 144), Brahmapurāṇa, chap. 22 (which names 25 narakas and states what sinners fall into which of them), chap 214 (verses 14-17 of which speak of 22 narakas and verses 51-103 contain harrowing descriptions of the horrible torments of hell), chap. 215. 83. ff. 393. Yāj and Viṣṇu read 'avīci' for mahāvīci. Yāj. reads Samprapātana (throwing down in a pit) for Sampratāpana and adds Kumbhīpāka separately, which latter means 'heating after placing inside a jar'. The printed Manusmṛti reads 'Pratimūrtikam', which is a misreading of some mss. Some Mss read 'Lohacāraka' which may mean 'being made to walk over red hot iron' or 'being fettered with irons' (Pr. V. p. 16) All the names are explained by Pr. V. (pp. 15-16) and by some of the commentators of Manu. According to Jamadagni quoted in Pr. V p. 16 Vaitaranī is a river in the nether regions which is full of foul smell and blood, which has hot water, is very rapid and has on the crest of its waves bones and hair. Śaṅkha-Likhita (q. by Madanapārijāta p. 695) describes Vaitaranī as 'taptodakā' (having hot water).

V. 6.2-5, Skandapurāna I, chap. 39 and VI 226-227. In the Mārkandeyapurāna (chap 12) we have a description of several narakas like the Raurava, Mahāraurava, Asipatravana &c. and chap 14 (verses 39-94) mentions the punishments meted out to perpetrators of various sins In the Mahābhārata also narakas and the torments thereof are frequently referred to For example, Śāntiparva 321 32 speaks of Vaitaranī and Asipatravana, Anuśāsana (23 60-82) speaks of the actions that lead to hell (each verse having the refrain te vai niraya-gāminah) Anuśāsana 145.10-13. Svargārohanika-parva (2 16-26) describes the several horrible sights and torments of such hells as 'Asipatravana' (named in verse 23) and Kūtaśālmali (named in Svargārohanika 3 4). The Vrddha-Hārīta-smrti (IX. 167-171) mentions almost the same 21 narakas as the Manusmrti does. The craze for multiplying narakas went so far that the Brahmapurāna, the Visnudharmottara[395], the Garuda-purāna and others declared that there were thousands, lakhs and crores of narakas.

The Visnu Dh. S. (46. 23-29) provides that those guilty of atipātakas, anupātakas, sankarīkarana, who have not under gone prāyaścittas suffer respectively for one Kalpa,[395a] for one Manvantara, for four Yugas, for a thousand years in the 21 narakas in rotation and the other sinners for many years. Yama quoted by the Madanapārijāta p. 696 says that those guilty of Mahāpātakas stay in Hell with face downwards for a yuga and Yama has numerous other verses stating what sinners undergo which horrors of Hell.

Buddhists appear to have borrowed the doctrine about hells from Brahmanical writers Vide Dr B C. Law's monograph on 'Heaven and Hell in Buddhist perspective' (1925), pages 111-113, which refer to eight Mahānirayas and there are other lesser Hells. The eight Mahānirayas are Sañjīva, Kālasutta, Sanghāta, Roruva, Mahāroruva, Tapa, Mahātapa and Avīci. It will be noticed how those names agree closely with Manu's list

Similarly, for the ideas of Heaven and Hell in Zoroastrianism, vide Mr. S. N Kanga's 'Heaven and Hell and their location in Zoroastrianism and in the Vedas' (1933).

The Buddhists held their penitential meetings (Pātimokkha), for which see S. B E vol. XIII. pp 1-69 and for the 92 pācittiya (Prāyaścittīya) rules, vide pp. 32-55 of the same volume.

There are very glowing descriptions of Heaven (svarga) in the Mahābhārata, the Purānas and other works. We have already seen how Heaven was supposed to be a place of delights in the Ṛgveda and even in the Upanisads like Katha (I. 12-13 and 18 'śokātigo modate svargaloke'). Ṛg. X. 107.2 affirms that those who give (large) daksiṇā stand high in the Heavens (as stars), those that donate horses go in the company of the Sun and those that donate gold become immortal. An[396] echo of this is found in Vanaparva 186.9. The Kaus Up 1 3 speaks of several worlds (lokas) of the gods such as those of Agni, Vāyu, Varuna, Āditya, Indra, Prajāpati, Brahmā and a similar gradation of higher worlds is described in Br. Up. III.6 (such as Devaloka, Indraloka, Prajāpatiloka, Brahmaloka) The Br. Up. I.5. 16 speaks of manusyaloka, pitrloka and devaloka and holds that devaloka is the best of all worlds[397] Kaus. Up. 1. 4 implies that in the heavenly world divine nymphs, garlands, collyrium, fragrant powder, garments wait upon the fortunate denizens. Śankara on Vedānta-sūtra (IV. 3 4) says that the word 'loka' means 'a place for enjoying the fruits of one's actions' (bhogāyatana) and that Hiranyagarbha is the adhyakṣa of Brahmaloka (on Vedānta-sūtra IV. 3 10) In the Vanaparva (54. 17-19) it is stated that svarga is the place for those who die in battle How svarga is like and what the pleasures of heaven are is described in Vanaparva, chap. 186. 6-7, viz. that there are extensive lakes full of golden lotus flowers and fish and devoid of mud, that on the banks of those lakes dwell the meritorious honoured by Apsarases who apply fragrant cosmetics to their bodies, wear ornaments and have brilliant golden complexions. Similar pleasures enjoyed in the Nandana park are promised in Brahmapurāṇa, 225. 5–6. Vanaparva (chap. 261 verses 28–29) says that there is one great draw-back in going to heaven, viz. that there one simply enjoys the rewards of one's good actions, no new merit is accumulated there, one simply subsists on the accumulated principal or store of merit and that when that store is exhausted one has to fall down, the only good point about this being that one is born a man and that too in such a way that he enjoys[398] happiness. Anuśāsana (23. 84–102) sets out numerous actions whereby a man attains heaven (each verse having the refrain 'te narāh svarga-gāminah') Similarly, in Brahmapurāṇa 224. 9–14, 18–25 and 30–37 we have the same refrain. Vide also Anuśāsana chapters 144 (verses 5–15, 19–26, 31–39) and 145 Śānti (99. 4–5) states that svarga is full of those fallen in battle, there are Gandharva damsels there for the brave (and there is hell for the coward) and that svarga yields all desires that one may entertain. The Śāntiparva (192. 8 and 21) states that svarga was in the North, that (Śānti 191 13, 193 27) there was neither hunger nor thirst nor weariness nor old age nor sin (in Heaven), that good men (Śānti 271. 24) are seen as stars (or become stars). In the Matsyapurāṇa (276 17) it is[399] stated that he who performs Brahmāṇḍadāna (one of the 16 mahādānas) reaches the world of Viṣṇu and delights in the company of Apsarases. The Brahmapurāṇa (225. 6–7) assures us that a generous donor goes to heaven where he enjoys the best pleasures in the company of Apsarases and in the heavenly garden called Nandana and when he falls down from heaven he is born as a mortal in a rich and noble family. Vide also Garuḍapurāṇa II. 3.86–89. It is not necessary to multiply passages. There are two matters to be noted in connection with Heaven and its pleasures. One is the calculating or bargaining spirit which the smṛtis and purāṇas display viz. make this or that gift and then there is so much delight to be enjoyed in heaven, a sort of profit and loss account; and the second is that the highest pleasures of Heaven have a time limit, i. e. they are to come to an end one day and the meritorious have to be born again in mortal bodies. The doctrine was gradually evolved that there is no final release from the cycle of births and deaths by the performance of meritorious deeds alone

It is not necessary to set out at length the gruesome torments of Hell described in great detail in several smṛtis and purāṇas. By way of a sample, the following description taken from a Dharmaśāstra work (viz. Viṣṇu Dh. S. 43.32-45) will be quite enough. "Sinners guilty of having committed (one or more of the nine kinds of) sins have to endure terrible sufferings when they have left this life and reached the path of Yama. Being dragged hither and thither by the fierce servants of Yama they are led (to hell) by them with frightening gestures. (In Hell) they are devoured by dogs, jackals, crows, herons, cranes and other birds eating raw flesh, by snakes and scorpions that have fire in their mouths (i. e. that emit stinging poison). They are scorched by fire, pierced by thorns, divided into parts by saws and oppressed by thirst. They are afflicted with hunger and by terrible hordes of tigers and they faint away at every step on account of the stinking smell of pus and blood. Desiring to secure the food and drink of others they are beaten by the servants (of Yama) whose faces are similar to those of such horrible animals as crows, herons and cranes. In some places they are boiled in oil, in others they are pounded with pestles or ground down in iron or stone vessels. In some places they (have to) eat what is vomitted or pus or blood or excrements, and hideous meat smelling like pus. In one place they have to stay in terrible darkness, and are devoured by horrible worms having flames in their mouths. In some places they are overwhelmed by cold or have to pass through the midst of unclean things and in other places the departed devour each other, thus becoming most horrible. In some places they are beaten on account of their former deeds and are suspended in other places (from trees &c.) or are struck with heaps of arrows or are cut into pieces. In other places they have to tread upon thorns and they are encircled by the hoods of serpents, they are tormented with machines and are dragged by their knees. Their backs, heads and necks are fractured, they become terrible (to look at), their throats being reduced to the size fit for a cave shelter and they become unable to bear torments. Sinners are being tormented in this way and having suffered intense pain undergo various further sufferings in their passage through animal bodies (in which they are thereafter born)"

That naraka is a place below the earth is frequently stated in the Purāṇas For example, in the Garuda and Brahmāṇḍa purāṇas all Hells such as Raurava are stated to be situated below the earth. Vide Viṣṇupurāṇa II. 6. 1 also. The Bhāgavatapurāṇa states that Hells are below the earth and above water to the south of the three worlds and hang without support, in which dwell the troups of pitrs called Agniṣvātta and others.[400] The Agnipurāṇa (371 13-14) avers that the 28 groups of narakas are below the earth and even below the 7th Pātāla

We come across Vedic passages such as these 'This sacrificer who is possessed of the utensils of yajña directly reaches Heaven' (Śat. Br. XII 5 2 8)[401], 'one who desires Heaven should offer the Darśapūrṇamāsa sacrifice', 'one desirous of attaining heaven should perform the Jyotiṣṭoma sacrifice'. What is meant by svarga or naraka has given rise to hot discussions from very ancient times The popular view as reflected even in the Vedas, the smṛtis and purāṇas was that svarga was a place above the earth and naraka was a place of actual torments below the earth Even ancient astronomical works located svarga thousands of yojanas above the earth. Parāśara,[402] an astronomer and a predecessor of Varāha-mihira quoted by Utpala on Br. Saṁ I. 11, stated 'Bhū (the earth) is 67080 crores of yojanas and it is the expanse of the earth; beyond it there is impenetrable darkness, in the midst of which there is the golden nountain Meru, 84000 yojanas high and sixteen below and hrice as much in length and width, which is called svarga. 3ut it would be far from the truth to say that all eminent vriters were agreed on the actual existence of svarga and iaraka as places. It has already been shown how several ;enturies before Christ Gautama refers to the view of some ›redecessors of his that naraka is not a place, but simply means ;he loss of the capacity to perform the peculiar actions of one's varna There were others who argued in the same strain. Śabara (on Jai IV. 3. 27–28) quotes a Vedic passage where the view of the sage appears to be that sacrifices yield the reward promised by śruti in the next life and where Kumārila [403] in his brief comment propounds the view that the injunctive passage (vidhi) of the Veda only promises a reward but does not state that it follows immediately in this life, that svarga which means unsurpassed joy, can happen only in another life. On Jaimini VI. 1. 1. Sabara first puts forward the prima facie view that svarga [404] imports in popular language such things (dravya) as fine silken clothes, sandalwood paste, young damsels only 16 years old and that the word svarga is also popularly applied to a particular place where there is neither heat nor cold, neither hunger nor thirst, neither distress nor fatigue and where only those that have done meritorious deeds can reach and not others. Śabara refutes this view and holds that the primary meaning of the word svarga is joy [405] or delight and not a thing (dravya) which brings joy.

There is a well-known and oft quoted verse which defines svarga as follows: [406] that happiness which is not mixed up with pain, which is not immediately afterwards overwhelmed (by pain) and which is present whenever desired, is denoted by the word svah (or svarga). The Prakaraṇa-pañcikā of Śālikanātha,[406a] one of the early works of the Prabhākara Mīmānsā school, affirms that in such sentences as 'one desirous of heaven should perform the Jyotiṣṭoma' the rite is simply commended by Vedic passages, which are no more than arthavādas, as a means of securing long-enduring happiness which is free from the taint of all kinds of sorrow and which is present at the mere desire of the enjoyer. The Śāntiparva expressly states 'The wise do not regard the other world as directly seen by anyone; one has to entertain faith (in the existence of the other world) because otherwise one may run counter to the Vedas.'[407] The Brahmapurāṇa and the Viṣṇupurāṇa speak in the same strain as Śabara that svarga is what causes happiness to the mind, that naraka is the opposite of it and that meritorious deeds and wicked deeds are designated as svarga and naraka respectively and that svarga and naraka are really states of the mind characterised by happiness and pain respectively.[408]

One need not wonder at the crude ideas of naraka and svarga entertained by most ancient Indian writers and works. The same ideas were prevalent among peoples of all religions all the world over. For example, The Egyptians whose dynastic history covers a period of about 5000 years had very remarkable beliefs about Heaven and Hell which were illustrated with pictorical representations copiously (as no other nation had ever done), although the oldest Books of the Dead are without illustrations of any sort (vide E. A. W. Budge's 'Egyptian Heaven and Hell', 1905 p. XI and 2). Sheol was the name the Hebrews gave to the gloomy abode of the dead in the lowest parts of the earth and it was a land of darkness, which was appointed as the house for all living (Job 10. 21-22 and 30. 23) The Greek Hades closely resembles the Hebrew Sheol in its chief characteristics. In the New Testament also Hell is a land of everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels and it is a place where the wicked go into everlasting torment and punishment, while the righteous attain life eternal (Matthew 25. 41 and 46, Luke 16.23). The words of the New Testament are plain enough that Heaven was supposed to be a place above the earth and the clouds and that Hell was a place below the earth full of darkness and torments. Vide Luke 23. 43, Ephesians I. 3 and 20, II. Cor. 12. 4, Rev. 2. 7; and Luke 12.5 and 16.23; II. Peter 2.4 and Rev. 6 8, 20. 13–14. Bloomfield in his 'Religion of the Veda' p. 252 remarks 'In later Hindu times Hell is filled out with the usual gruesome stage-setting in the style of Dante's Inferno or the wall painting in the campo santo at Pisa'. Even men of genius like Shakespeare and most Christian theologians [409] down even to modern times believed in a literal interpretation of passages from the Bible which speak of Heaven and Hell as places. It is only recently that many Christians have begun to hold that the language of the Bible about Heaven and Hell is purely symbolical in character [410].

409. Vide William James in 'Varieties of religious experience' p. 264, where he says that the fear of the old-fashioned Hell fire was employed by Christianity to extract from it fruits for repentance and conversion value and Pringle-Pattison in 'Idea of Immortality' pp. 15–19. Vide for the Quranic ideas of Hell, SBE. vol IX p. 317 'Hell is a reward for the outrageous to tarry therein for ages. They shall not taste therein cool nor drink but only boiling water and pus'. Vide also SBE. vol. VI p 247 (Hell contains seven divisions), vol. VI p. 165 (for the misbeliever is the torment of hell fire), vol. XIV p. 317 and p. 340 (for boiling water, pus and fire). In the Quran Heaven was supposed to consist of seven divisions viz Garden of Eternity, Abode of peace, Abode of rest, Garden of Eden, Garden of Resort, Garden of pleasure, the Garden of the most High, the Garden of Paradise.

410. The Report on the 'Doctrine of the Church of England' published in 1938 by a Commission consisting of some of the highest dignitaries of the English Church makes interesting reading, though to a non-christian the language appears rather full of circumlocution and far from clear and definite. On p. 206 the Report states "The drama of the Last Things as set forth in the medieval 'Doom' pictures rests on a tradition which makes use of a more or less literal conception of heaven and hell as specific 'places', of which a picture was formed by drawing upon traditional material, more especially the imagery of the Book of Revelation, which is itself largely drawn from Jewish and other pre-christian sources... ......A quasi-literal interpretation of the imagery has in fact generally prevailed among Christians and has been wide-spread even in educated circles almost down to the present day.' On p. 219 the above Report remarks "As the essence of Hell is exclusion from the fellowship of God, so the essence of Heaven is that fellowship It is not a selfish happiness offered in reward for

The Smṛtis had evolved the doctrine, as stated above, that if a sinner did not undergo prāyaścitta, he had to suffer torments in hell, thereafter he became born as some insect or lower animal or a tree on account of some remnants of his sins and that he was born as a human being afflicted with certain diseases or with defects.[411] These last two consequences are described under the title karmavipāka (the fruition of evil deeds). Śātātapa (I. 1–5) asserts that men guilty of grave self suppression at an earlier time, it is fellowship with God who is love ... This is infinite bliss to the soul which is purged of self-interest. Heaven is also a fellowship of finite spirits" It will be patent how modern European minds have begun to think of Heaven and Hell in terms analogous to those in which some of the best minds of India thought of them centuries before and after the Christian era In spite of the glowing pictures of the pleasures of Heaven and terrifying descriptions of the torments of Hell detailed in many of the sacred and popular works in Sanskrit and other Indian languages people have gone on committing all sorts of sins. The ancient machinery of Heavens and Hells must be deemed to have largely failed of its purpose in these days. Large masses of men appear to be slipping into an abyss of despair, misery, hardness of heart, wanton brutality and lawlessness The lurid accounts of bombings and night raids on big cities, the reports of the bloody battles for six years in the World War No 2, the harrowing tales of tortures in such prisoners' camps as at Belsen, the phenomenal rise in the prices of all necessities of life (food, clothing and shelter), frequent strikes and struggles between the employed and the industrialists, growing indiscipline, arson, plunder and bestial treatment of human beings on the ground of race or religion have produced hardness of heart and debased large masses of Indian people. It is a very difficult question for our leaders how to revive among the common people of India, (whom Westerners dubbed mild Hindus) the old characteristics of tolerance, peacefulness, goodwill and respect for human life and property, how to build up a new fabric of society, a new civilization and culture on the ancient Upanisadic foundations of the pursuit of Reality, brotherhood of man, the unity of all life, and love of mankind even without pressing into service the ancient and medieval literal conceptions of Heaven and Hell.

sins that have not undergone prāyaścitta are, after undergoing the torments of Hell, born with bodies marked with certain condemned signs. One guilty of grave sins bears such signs for seven births, one guilty of upapātaka for five births and one guilty of pāpa for three births. These marks indicative of their having committed a particular sin are observed in each life and only disappear after they repent and perform prāyaścitta. Similarly, the diseases arising from sinful deeds subside by adopting the remedies of the recitation of Vedic texts, worship of gods, homas and gifts.' Verses 6-10 specify the diseases that arise in consequence of sins such as leprosy, tuberculosis, gonorrhœa, dysentery, kidney trouble, stone in the bladder, cough, fistula &c. A man may commit sins of three kinds viz. by the body, in words and mentally (Manu XII. 3). Really speaking, it is the mind that is the spring of all actions (Manu XII 4), but for the sake of convenience, this threefold division is made. Coveting another's wealth by unfair means, desiring that evil should befall another and persistence in false ideas (such as the one that there is no soul, but that the body is the soul)-these three are mental sins (Manu XII. 5). Harshness of speech, falsehood, backbiting and irrelevant prattling—these four are vocal sins (ibid XII. 6). Appropriating to oneself another's wealth without his consent, injury to sentient beings against the injunctions of śāstra, sexual intercourse with another's wife—these three are bodily sins (ibid XII. 7). Manu provides that bodily sins reduce a man to the state of a fixed object (tree &c.), vocal sins reduce him to the state of birds and beasts and mental sins to the lowest castes (Cāṇḍāla and the like). Hārīta (q. by Par. M)[412] speaks of 18 evil actions that lead to hell, of which six are mental, four vocal and the rest are bodily sins. Manu XII. 54-59 and 62-68, Yāj. III. 131, 135-136, 207-208 and 213-215, Viṣṇu Dh. S. Chap. 44, Atri Chap. 4 5-14, 17-44 (in prose) state into what animals, trees and creepers sinners are born after undergoing hell torments. The statements of Yāj being concise are set out here. 'This soul enters into hundreds of bodies in this saṁsāra, viz. as one of the lowest castes, bird or fixed object (tree &c) on account of his lapses springing from the mind, speech and body (Yāj. III 131); a man who tells lies, who is a back-biter, whose speech is harsh and who babbles what is irrelevant is reduced to being a bird or a beast (ibid III. 135); one who is addicted to misappropriating another's wealth and to sexual intercourse with another's wife, who injures another against śāstric rules is born as a fixed object; the murderer of a brāhmaṇa becomes born in the body of a beast (deer &c), a dog, a pig or a camel; the drinker of surā is born as an ass, a pulkasa (one born from śūdra woman of a niṣāda), or a vena (one born of an Ambastha woman from a vaidehaka); the thief of gold reaches the state of a worm, an insect (an ant &c) or a moth and one guilty of incest becomes grass, a bush or a creeper (Yāj. III 207–208). On stealing leafy vegetables one is born as a peacock, on stealing perfumes one is born a chuchundarī (musk-rat), the thief of corn, of a vehicle, fruits, water, milk, domestic utensils (like pestle), honey, flesh, a cow, fire, cloth, juice (of sugarcane or the like) and salt is born respectively as a mouse, a camel, a monkey, a plava (duck), a crow, a sparrow, bee, vulture, godhā (iguana), crane, a man suffering from white leprosy, a dog, chī (cricket bird). The Brahmapurāna (chap 217 verses 37–110) contains a long disquisition on the different kinds of animal births that sinners of various kinds have to undergo Vide also Garudapurāna (Pretakhanda) 2 60–88, Agni 371 30–32 (which latter states that the murderer of a brāhmana is born as a beast or deer or a dog, hog, or camel, the drinker of wine as an ass or pukkasa or mleccha, the thief of gold as a worm or pest or moth, one guilty of incest as grass or a bush).

It was believed in very ancient times that diseases were the consequences of sins[413] In the Atharvaveda VIII. 7.3 plants are said to have destroyed from each limb the disease due to sin[414]. Manu XI. 49–52, Vas. 20 44, Yāj III. 209–211, Visnu Dh. S Chap 45, Śātātapa I. 3–11 and II. 1, 30, 32, 47, Gautama-smrti in verse chap 20 and Gautama (in prose q by the Mit on Yāj. 413 This belief is not confined to India In the Gospel of St John (9 1–3) when a man blind from birth came before Jesus the disciples asked him 'who did sin, this man or his parents that he was born blind'. Jesus is said to have rejected that idea and performed a miracle by restoring to him his sight after applying to the man's eyes clay mixed with the spittle of Jesus and washing his eyes in a pool

p. 861), Yama (q by Pr. M. p 9), Śaṅkha (q. by the Mitākṣarā on Yāj. III. 216), Smṛtyarthasāra pp. 99-100 state the diseases and bodily defects from which sinners suffer after they are born as men. As a sample Yāj. III. 209-211 may be cited here; the murderer of a brāhmaṇa suffers from Tuberculosis, a drinker of surā has black teeth, the thief of brāhmaṇa's gold has diseased nails, one guilty of incest suffers from leprosy; the thief of food suffers from dyspepsia, one who stealthily learns without permission (or one guilty of plagiarism) is born dumb, one who mixes up inferior corn with superior corn is born with excessive limbs (with six fingers &c.), a backbiter is born with pus in the nose; a thief of oil is born as tilapāyī and one who falsely reports faults in others has a foetid breath. Yāj. III. 217 states that after reaping the consequences of their (evil) deeds (by falling into Hell and) by reaching the state of lower animals, sinners are born as human beings of a low order, poor and with condemned marks on the body; even medical works like the Carakasaṃhitā held the belief that diseases were the consequences of actions done in past lives (vide Sūtrasthāna, Chap. I. 116),

The smṛtis are not in complete agreement about the diseases or bodily defects that sinners of various grades suffer. For example, though Vas 20 44 and Śaṅkha (q by Mit. on Yāj. III. 216) state that the murderer of a brāhmaṇa suffers from leprosy, Manu XI. 49, Yāj III. 209, Viṣṇu Dh. S 45. 3, Agni. 371. 32 aver that he suffers from phthisis. For want of space the long lists of the births as lower animals and the diseases and deformities from which sinners suffer contained in Śaṅkha, Hārīta, Gautama, Yama and the Purāṇas quoted by the Mit. on Yāj III. 216, the Par M. II. part 2 pp. 230-240, 242-272, Madanapārijāta pp 701-702, the Mahārṇava-karmavipāka are passed over here.

Āp. Dh. S (II. 1. 2. 6-7) states that a brāhmaṇa, kṣatriya or vaiśya sinner guilty of brāhmaṇa murder, after undergoing the torments of Hell is born again respectively as a Cāṇḍāla, Paulkasa and Vaiṇa and that other sinners who have become outcasts by their sins are born on account of these as certain animals (like pigs) Similarly, Manu XII. 61 provides that one who from greed steals precious stones, pearls, corals and jewels of various kinds is born as a goldsmith.

Although the word Karman is ordinarily employed to denote good as well as evil actions still in the section on penances the word 'Karman' prominently presents to the mind the idea of evil deeds. Hence Karmavipāka means the ripening (or fruition) of evil actions or sins This fruition takes three forms, as stated in the Yogasūtrā[415] II 13, viz jāti (birth as a worm or animal &c), āyuh (life i. e living for a short period such as five or ten years) and bhoga (experiencing the torments of Hell &c) The word Karmavipāka appears to have been known to Yāj. III 131 (vipākaḥ karmaṇām pretya keṣām cid-iha jāyate) and it occurs frequently in the Purānas (e g in Brahma-purāṇa 224 41, 225 43 and 59, Matsya 115 14 &c). The Pr. Sāra pp. 219–231 contains probably the longest treatment of Karmavipāka The doctrine of Karmavipāka was well known to the Buddhist philosopher Nāgārjuna, who in his Ratnāvali refers to it[416]. The Buddhist Avadānaśatakas also refer to the doctrine of Karmavipāka. Vide also Suttanipāta (S B. E vol 10 part 2) p. 38 and S B. E vol 21 p. 130 (Saddharma-puṇḍarīka). In some medical works also such as the Hāritasamhitā it is said that the murderer of a brāhmana suffers from white leprosy and the killer of a cow from black leprosy; a regicide suffers from phthisis, and the destroyer of a park from dysentery &c.[417]. In the Vivāgasuyam (Vipākaśrutam), which is the 11th anga of the Jaina-āgama and an edition of which was brought out by Dr. P L Vaidya (in 1933) we have stories of persons who suffered from evil diseases owing to their committing evil deeds in former lives and other stories of the fruits of good deeds.

The doctrine based upon the implications of Manu XII[418]. 3, 9 and 54 and Yāj III. 206 was that it is human beings alone (and not lower animals like tigers &c.) that have to experience in Heaven and Hell the consequences of their deeds. The Viṣṇudharmottara explicitly states so[419].

The Mit. (on Yāj. III. 216), the Smṛtyarthasāra, Par. M., Pr. Sāra and other works state that the disquisition on Karmavipāka[420] is merely an arthavāda, that it is not to be taken literally, but is meant to induce sinners to undergo such prāyaścittas as Prājāpatya which entail great worry and trouble and which no one might willingly undertake. The Mit points out that the description of the diseases (like pthisis) is not intended for requiring those who suffer from them to undergo the penances for twelve years or the like nor for inducing people to avoid contact with such persons, that śiṣṭas do not avoid contact with those who have bad nails, that in the case of such persons the disease or defect is the last result of what little sin remained attached to them and that by the very fact of their having the disease or defect mentioned in the texts they become free from the last remnants of their sins and therefore they do not stand in need of any further penance and as their sin is finally removed by suffering the disease or defect their fitness for being allowed to mix among people is established

The teaching of the works on Karmavipāka, though dismal and terrifying, comes to this that no soul need be without hope provided it is prepared to wait and undergo torments for its misdeeds, that it need not be appalled by the numerous existences foreshadowed in those works and that the soul may in its long passage and evolution be ultimately able to discover its true greatness and realize eternal peace and perfection.

Manu XII. 69 (almost the same as Visnu Dh. S. 44.45 and Garuḍapurāna II. 2. 89) states that women guilty of the sin of theft become the wives of men who are guilty of the same offences.

VĀMANAPURĀṆA, chap. 12 is called Kaımavipāka and Mārkandeyapurāna chap. 15 treats of the same subject. The Varāhapurāna (chap. 203 21 ff) expatiates at length upon the topic how sinners endure torments in Hell for innumerable years, how after their evil deeds have been almost wiped out they become human beings suffering from various diseases or deformities.

In the Mahārnava-karmavipāka of Māndhātr it is stated that there are two means of destroying the consequences of (evil). actions, viz krcchra (penances) and the reversal (or remedies) against diseases[421]. The latter consists in making golden images of the sun (as the superintending deity of good health) and of the deity of a disease and offering worship to both these in a mandapa on a raised vedikā (platform). The work expatiates at length on the Vedic verses employed according to Āśvalāyana and the Taittirīya Śākhā for ghosa-śānti (propitiatory ceremonies with loud recitation of Vedic mantras); the worship of the sun with Vedic mantras and of the planets, the offerings of āhutis, the Rudraikādaśinī, Mahārudra (11 times as many as the preceding) and Atirudra, repeating the thousand names of Visnu, Vināyaka-śānti (as laid down by Yāj. I. 271–294), Navagraha-yajña in which it assigns each planet to some country and some gotra[422]. It also prescribes how for the removal of particular diseases particular dānas may be given (such as Kadalīdāna i e. manufacturing a kadalī plant from one pala of gold and donating it). It deals with the gifts of the images of all diseases supposed to be incurable and quotes Śātātapa II. 47–48 in connection with the removal of rājayaksmā (phthisis). It deals at length with fevers and other diseases and bodily defects such as greenish or cat-like eyes, deafness &c. But the detailed treatment of all these matters is passed over here from considerations of space, and also for the reason that these prescriptions are now either hardly believed in by people or hardly ever performed.

ESCHATOLOGY

What happens after death to a human being (which is the subject matter of Eschatology) has been a great mystery that has intrigued and baffled mankind in all ages and was a question of vital importance among almost all ancient peoples such as the Indians, Egyptians, Chaldeans, Greeks and Persians. The word Eschatology is derived from a Greek term meaning 'last things' and is applied to the study of opinions that men have held from time to time concerning the future, including such matters as the state of man after life on this earth and the end of the world. It exercises a great fascination over most people and speculation on it can be carried on endlessly. Every religion has its own eschatology. There are two aspects of Eschatology; one is concerned with the destiny of the individual after death, immortality of the soul, sin and punishment, the meaning and content of 'Heaven' and 'Hell'; the other aspect of eschatology has relation to the whole universe, its creation, destination and renovation, and the ultimate end of all things. The first aspect and matters relevant to it from the ancient Indian point of view will be dealt with in this section and the second aspect of Eschatology is reserved for treatment in a later section. In ancient works far more emphasis was laid on the first than on the second, while modern men with a more or less scientific outlook and attitude are inclined to think more of the second aspect.

Death has been generally looked upon with feelings of awe and terror, though there were men (often philosophically minded) who looked upon it as a blessing and as a release of the spirit from the shackles imposed upon the latter by the body. The terror of death was in many cases due not so much to the pain caused at the time of death but rather to the mystery that surrounds what happens after death and to the thoughts about what the survivors would have to undergo. It is said by C E. Vulliamy in his work 'Immortal man' (p. 2): 'although the idea of that life (ghostly life) ranges from the most dismal and horrible fantasies to the most sublime imaginations, the fundamental thought is always the same, the body dies but not the spirit'. There were several attitudes adopted by primitive as well as civilized people towards death. In the Kathopanisad we read (I. 1.20) 'When a man dies there is a doubt, some saying that there is survival after the death of the body and some denying any survival' and Naciketas requests the dreaded God Yama to solve this doubt. There are several beliefs[422a] even among those who hold that there is survival after death. Some say that there is a world of the dead to which whatever survives goes after death Others believe that the surviving part goes to Heaven or Hell according as the man has been virtuous or sinful in his life on earth. Others believe in transmigration and re-incarnation. Several of the great writers in ancient Greece believed in this last doctrine, as Pindar (in second Olympian Ode), Plato (in Phaedrus and Timaeus) and Herodotus (II. 123) indicate.

The Brahmapurāna (chap. 214 verses 34–39) sets out the persons to whom death is happy and easy and not a source of misery and sorrow. A few may be mentioned here.–'He who did not tell lies, he who did not prove false to affection or friendship, who is an āstika (a believer in God and the life to come), who is devoted to the worship of gods and the honouring of brāhmanas, he who does not bear malice to anyone–these have a happy death.' Similarly, the Anusāsanaparva of the Mahābhārata (chap. 104. 11–12, chap. 144 49–60) states at length the causes of premature death and of long life. Some of them may be translated here. 'Those who are atheists, do not perform the acts (or sacrifices) proper for them, violate the (dictates of) elders and of śāstras, who do not know what dharma is and are evil-doers are short-lived. Those who have no character, who always break all rules of conduct, who have promiscuous sexual intercourse become short-lived and go to Hell. One who is not irritable by temper, speaks the truth, does not cause injury to beings, who bears no malice to any one and who is not crooked—these live for a hundred years' (104. 11–12 and 14).

Several works specify the signs indicative of the approach of death. The Śāntiparva of the Mahābhārata (chap. 318. 9-17), Devala quoted in the Mokṣakāṇḍa of the Kalpataru (pp. 248-250, about 20 verses), the Vāyupurāṇa (chap. 19 verses 1-32), the Mārkaṇḍeyapurāṇa 43. 1-33 (chap. 40 verses 1-33, Veṅkaṭeśvara Press ed.), Liṅgapurāṇa (pūrvārdha chap. 91) and other Purāṇas contain long lists of the signs of approaching death. It is impossible for want of space to set out in detail these signs. But the gist of a few verses is mentioned by way of sample. The Śāntiparva (chap 318) states that a man who is not able to see the star of Arundhatī which he could formerly see, nor the pole-star nor the full moon, nor his own reflection in another man's eye has only one year to live; he has only a span of six months of life left to him who sees the orb of the moon with a hole in it; a man has only seven days left of life who sees a hole pierced in the orb of the Sun, who smells the odour of a corpse when fragrant substances are near; when the nose and ears bend down, when his teeth and eyes become discoloured, when there is loss of consciousness, and loss of bodily heat, when smoke emerges from the crown of the head, when the left eye begins to ooze moisture all of a sudden—these are indications of the immediate approach of death. Devala states indications that prognosticate life for only one year, 11, 10, 9, 8, 7, 6, 5, 4, 3, 2 months, one month, half a month, 12 days, 4 days, 3 days, 2 days and winds up by saying that one who cannot hear the humming sound in his ear (when closed with fingers) or cannot see the light in the eye is going to die immediately. The Vāyupurāṇa (19.28) and Liṅgapurāṇa 91.30 regard the last two as the worst indications of approaching death[423]. The Liṅgapurāṇa (pūrvabhāga chap. 91.24) states that he who cannot see his own reflection in another's eye will not live. There is an interesting paper by Dr R.G. Harshe in the Munshi Diamond Jubilee volume (pp. 246-268) where the learned writer gives the text of two mss. on the prognostications derived from dreams e. g. if a man sees an ass in a dream he is sure to die, or if he sees an old maid then it is an indication of danger, disease and death (p. 251) or if he sees a trident death is indicated (p. 254).

When a man is sinking and is almost on the point of death it was and even now is the practice in many parts of India to take the dying man down from the bedstead and place him on a bed spread on the earth[424]. For example, the Kauśika-sūtra (80 3) prescribes[425]: When the man is losing all strength, he (the son or other attending relative) spreads kuśas on the grass growing in the shed and takes him down (from the bed-stead) with the mantra 'syonāsmai bhava' (mayst thou be good to this man, Oh Earth). The Baud P S III 1 18 says that sand should be spread on the ground in the sacrificial shed when it is feared that the sacrificer is dying and darbha grass should be strewn on the sand with the sharp ends turned to the south and the dying man should be placed thereon and one (son or the like) should repeat in his right ear the anuvāka beginning with 'āyusah prānam santanu'.' The Gobhilasmrti III. 22 and later works like the Pitrdayitā provide the same procedure.

Medieval digests like the Śuddhiprakāśa (pp 151–152) state that when a person is moribund, has half closed his eyes and is taken down on the ground (from a bed-stead), his son or other relative should make him give one or more of ten gifts viz of cows,[426] land, sesame, gold, clarified butter, clothes, grain, jaggery, silver, salt These gifts are superior even to a śrāddha performed at Gayā or to even hundreds of Aśvamedhas. saṅkalpa (verbal declaration of the gift) is made in the words 'I shall make ten gifts for the attainment of heaven (abhyudaya), or for the removal of all sins'. After the ten dānas, a cow with a calf should be donated if possible [427] (this cow being called utkrānti-dhenu 'a cow donated in view of death') and then another cow called Vaitaraṇī with gold (or two pieces of cloth &c) should be donated. The Antyeṣṭipaddhati and the Śuddhiprakāśa (pp. 152–153) set out all the mantras (not vedic) that are to be recited at the time of making the several gifts, which (mantras) are passed over here for want of space. The Antyeṣṭipaddhati, the Antyakarmadīpaka and other works prescribe that when a person is near death, his son or other relative should make him perform Vratodyāpana, sarvaprāyaścitta and the gift of ten dānas or if the dying man is unable to do these himself, the son or the other relative should perform these and give the merit thereof to the dying man. A person often resolves upon observing certain vratas, but fails to carry out all the details of those vratas to the end. The Vratodyāpana for the dying man is meant to cure all such unfinished vratas. The A. K. D. (pp. 3–4) has a long note about the performance of vratodyāpana. Briefly it comes to this. The son or other relative having brought about the purity of the dying man's body by a bath or by sprinkling it with holy water (mārjana) or by making him drink Ganges water, having himself taken a bath and performed his daily duties (of sandhyā), having lighted a lamp, having bowed to Gaṇeśa and prayed to god Viṣṇu, having placed before him the materials of worship and having repeated the usual sankalpa (see note [428]), he should honour a brāhmaṇa already invited and should give to him the gold (or silver) set apart for the purpose and the brāhmana should pronounce the words "May all vratas be fulfilled! May there be the attainment of the fruits of udyāpana (accomplishment of vrata)". In the sarvaprāyaścitta the son approaches 4 or 3 learned men or one man knowing adhyātma (metaphysics) and offers the substitutes (of gold &c.) for sins that involve penances for 6, 3 or 1½ years or makes a declaration and performs the prāyaścitta, after the days of impurity.

The sarvaprāyaścitta was to be performed by the dying man or by his son or other relative who was to shave himself, take a bath, drink pañcagavya, honour a brāhmana with sandal paste and other things; after having honoured the cow or the money to be paid in lieu of it, and after referring to the several kinds of sins that one may be guilty of (vide note [429]) he is to make a gift of a cow (with a calf) to the brāhmana or in lieu of it, of some money. After sarvaprāyaścitta come the ten dānas stated above. In the dānas the Kāmastuti [430] as studied by the followers of each veda was to be recited. The Garudapurāna (II. 4. 7–9) further prescribes other dānas called mahā-dānas viz., of sesame, iron, gold, cotton, salt, seven kinds of corn, land and cows when a man is dying and also other gifts called padadānas such as of umbrella, sandals, ring, water-jar, seat, food. The Garudapurāna (II 4 37) further provides that if a man about to die takes sannyāsa according to the rules laid down for what is called āturasannyāsa he never returns to the cycle of births and deaths.

From ancient times it was a firmly held belief that the thoughts that a dying man entertains at the time of death determine what will happen to his spirit after physical death (this is expressed in the well-known words 'ante matiḥ sā gatiḥ'), that therefore a man should, when death approaches, give up all thoughts of mundane affairs and all earthly attachments, should think of his favourite deity (Hari or Śiva), should inaudibly recite such mantras as 'om namo Vāsudevāya'. Several texts insist on making the dying man listen to holy Vedic texts. The Gautamapitṛ-medhasūtra (I. 1-8) prescribes that one should at the time when one's father, mother, brother, teacher or a brāhmana friend is on his death-bed make the dying man hear the first and last verses of the Veda and certain sāmans and should mutter in the dying man's right ear (one sāman) The Ṛgvidhāna provides that one should repeat at the time of death the sūkta beginning with 'trātāram'[431] (?)

The Hir. P. S. I. 1 provides that when it is thought that the āhitāgni is going to die, he (the son or the like) should mutter in the dying man's ear (if he is a knower of Brahma) the two anuvākas of the Tai. Up. II. 1 (beginning with 'brahmavidāpnoti param') and III. 1 (beginning with 'Bhrgurvai vāruṇiḥ'). The A. K. D. (p 18) says[432] that if the dying man is unable to engage in japa he should revolve in his mind the benign form of Visnu or Śiva and should listen to the thousand names (of Visnu or Śiva), the Bhagavadgītā, the Bhāgavata, Bhārata, Rāmāyana, the Upanisads like Īśāvāsya and hymns to Soma.

It is likely that the editor of शुद्धिप्रकाश misreads नानानमिति as त्रातारमिति, since त्रातारम् is not a sūkta (hymn) but only one stanza in a hymn.

The germs of this idea are found even in the Upanisads. The Chāndogya Up. (in the famous Śāndilya-vidyā, III. 14. 1) remarks 'All this is Brahman. A man should meditate on that (all this) as beginning, ending and subsisting in it (Brahman). Now man is a creature of his will According to whatever is his will (or thought) in this world, so will he become after departing from this world.'[433] The Praśna Up. III. 10 contains a similar idea. It is here asserted that it is thought power or the will that raises the soul higher and higher, and that the human mind should try to realize the idea that behind all physical transformations the Universe is one and is informed by one all-pervading Essence. Similarly, the Bhagavadgītā puts this idea in a much more clear way. 'The man, who remembering me alone in his last moments, departs from this life, comes to me, there is no doubt about this' (8. 5). But in order to guard against the possible inference that it is only the thoughts at the approach of death that matter whatever the past life led by a dying man may have been, the next verse emphasizes that a man's spirit is engrossed by the thoughts that he has entertained throughout life and that a man can think of spiritual matters or about God at the time of death only if he has been thinking about such matters or about God throughout his life That verse (8.6) is 'whichever form (or thing) a man remembers when he leaves the body at death, to that alone he goes, having been always (throughout his life) engrossed in meditating over it"

Some of the digests, on the authority of several Purānas, prescribe that the dying man should be taken, if possible, near a holy place (tīrtha) such as the Ganges. For example, the Śuddhitattva[434] (p 299) quotes a passage from the Kūrmapurāna to this effect 'a man attains moksa (final release from samsāra) by dying in the waters of the Ganges, on land or in water at Vārānasī (Benares) and at the confluence of the Ganges with the sea either on land, in water or in the air.' Another passage to the same effect is quoted from the 'Skanda-purāna and it is further said in the same Purāna that for one gavyūti from the banks of the Ganges is a kṣetra (holy place): 'gifts, japa (muttering of sacred texts), homa performed within this extent is equal to doing the same on the Ganges itself, those who die within this kṣetra go to heaven and are not born again.' In the Pujāratnākara [435] it is said: 'Hari is present wherever there is the Śālagrāma stone; one dying near à Śālagrāma stone reaches the highest abode of Visnu'. It was said that a person (even a non-Aryan) dying within one krosa of a Śālagrāma reaches Vaikuntha (world of Visnu) Similarly, one dying in a garden of tulasī (Basil) plants or with Tulasī leaf placed in his mouth at the time of death attains moksa even if guilty of crores of sins. These are popular notions held even up to this day among common people, not thoroughly affected by modern ideas.

There are also dicta about the time when it is best to die. The Śāntiparva of the Mahābhārata states 'he who dies after the sun has gone to the northern direction (i. e. when the apparent motion of the sun towards the north begins) and on any auspicious naksatra and muhūrta is really one who has a store of merit (with him)' [436]. This is based on the ideas of death in Uttarāyana and Dakṣiṇāyana found in the Upanisads. For example, the Chāndogya Up. (IV. 15. 5–6) states 'Now (if one who knows this dies) whether people perform obsequies for him or not he goes to light (arcis), from light to day, from day to the bright half of the moon, from thence to the six months during which the sun goes to the north, from the months to the year, from the year to the sun, from the sun to the moon, from the moon to lightning. There is a person who is not human that leads them to Brahman. This is the path of the Devas, the path that leads to Brahman. Those who proceed on that path do not return to the life of man, yes, they do not return'. There is a similar passage in Chāndogya Up. V. 10. 1–2 where it is said that even householders who know the doctrine of the five fires (Pañcāgni-vidyā) and those who in the forest follow the path of faith and austerities (i. e. vānaprasthas and parivrājakas who do not yet know Highest Brahman) go by the path called Devayāna, while (V. 10. 3–7) those, who, living in a village, practise sacrifices, works of public utility and alms, go to smoke, from smoke to night, from night to the dark half of the moon, from thence to the six months when the sun goes to the south, from thence to the worlds of the fathers, from thence to ether (ākāśa) and to the moon, where they consume their works and return again the way they came. The Chān Up. (V. 10. 8) refers to a third place where small creatures (like flies, worms &c.) are continually going and returning. The Br. Up. (VI. 2. 15–16) contains similar passages about Devaloka, Pitrloka and the third world of worms, birds and creeping beings. The Bhagavadgītā, basing itself on these Upanisad passages, puts the matter succinctly (in 8 23–25) as follows:—'I shall state the times at which devotees departing from this world go, never to return or to return. The fire, the flame, the day, the bright fortnight, the six months of the northern (apparent) motion of the sun; departing from the world in these those who know the Brahman go to Brahman. Smoke, night, the dark fortnight, the six months of the southern (apparent) motion of the sun; dying in these the devotee goes to the lunar light and returns. These two paths, bright and dark, are deemed to be eternal in this world. By the one a man goes never to return, by the other he comes back'. The Vedāntasūtra (IV. 3 4–6) explains that the words 'light' 'day' and others are not to be taken in their literal sense (i. e. as signposts or stages on the paths) but they are to be understood as referring to superintending deities that help the spirits and lead them on the path to the worlds of the Devas or of Pitrs (i e. they are ātivāhikas and abhimānidevatās). Śankara on Vedāntasūtra IV. 2. 20 (ataścāyanepi daksine) explains that the waiting for the day of Uttarāyana on the part of Bhīsma (narrated in the Mahābhārata) is only meant as a eulogy of the path called 'arcirādi', that one who has realized Brahma, even if he dies in dakṣiṇāyana, does secure the fruits of his knowledge (viz.

teaching Brahma), that Bhīsma waited for the beginning of uttarāyana to abide by popular ideas and practices and to show that he possessed the power to depart from the world at his will owing to the boon conferred on him by his father. The Yājñavalkya-smṛti refers to the path (devayāna) [437] that leads to Devaloka (in III. 193–194, where it reads 'mānasah' for 'amānavah' of the Ch. Up.) and the Pitryāna (in III. 195–196). In spite of the interpretations of the Vedāntasūtra (and of Śankara) the popular belief that death in Uttarāyana is best persisted and still persists. For example, the Baud. P.S. (II.7. 21) remarks '(the sages) provide that death during the northern path of the sun, in the bright half of a month, during the day and at the end of a Śrauta sacrifice is best[438].' The G. P. S. (II. 7.1–2) remarks: 'It is desirable to avoid dying in the dark half of a month or at night and the following sūtras provide for the offering of certain oblations if the death occurs in the dark half or at night.

437. The words 'devayāna' and 'pitryāna' are a legacy from the hoary past. Even in the Rg. there are frequent references to them. In Rg III. 58 5 the Aśvins are addressed a prayer 'may you come here (to this sacrifice) by the paths leading to the abode of the gods' (eha yātam pathibhirdevayānaih). Rg. VII 38 8 also has a similar idea 'may you, being gratified, go by the devayāna paths' (trptā yātam pathibhir-devayānaih). In Rg. VII 76.2 (addressed to Usas) the sage Vasistha exclaims that he has seen the Devayāna paths when the dawn shone in the East (pra me panthā devayānā adrśran). Agni is asked to make the devayāna paths easily accessible and to carry the offerings in a pleased mood (Rg. X 51.5, sugān pathah krnuhi devayānān vaha havyāni sumanasyamānah) Rg. X 98 11 describes Agni as knowing the devayāna paths according to the seasons and a prayer is offered to him to place Aulāna (son of Śantanu) in heaven among the gods (vidvān patha ṛtuśo devayānān-apyaulānam divi devesu dhehi). In Rg. X 18.1 it is stated that the path of Death is different from devayāna (param mrtyo anu parehi panthām yaste sva itaro devayānāt). In Rg X 2.7 Agni is said to know the pitryāna path (panthāmanu pra vidvān pitṛyānam). In the Tai. Br II 6 3 5 it is said 'I have heard of two paths of the Fathers; I have heard about the paths of the gods and mortals' (dve sruti aśrnavam pitṛnām aham devānām-uta martyānām). The Śat Br. I 9.3 2 remarks 'this is the path called Devayāna or Pitryāna.' In the Br. Up. I.5.16 it is said 'there are indeed three worlds, viz. the world of men, the world of pitṛs and the world of gods'.

performed with Vedic mantras according to Manu II. 16, Yāj. I. 10, Jātūkarnya[439]. These samskāras were formerly performed for women also (Āśv gr I. 15.12, I. 16 6, I. 17-11, Manu II. 66) but without Vedic mantras (except in marriage) and for sūdras also (Manu X. 127, Yāj I. 10) but without Vedic mantras. The Baud. P. S. III. 1.4 states that there are two samskāras of every human being and they are like a debt i e. they must be performed, just as a debt must be discharged viz the saṁskāra on birth and the one on death (mṛtasamskāra). Funeral rites and rites after death varied according as the deceased was an āhitāgni (one who had consecrated the śrauta fires) or one who had only kindled the smārta fire, or one who had neither the śrauta fires nor the smārta fire, or a woman, a child, an ascetic (parivrājaka), or one dying in a distant land or one dying by accident or committing suicide &c. The srauta and gṛhya-sūtras differ among themselves in many details even on the same topic and the procedure becomes more elaborate in medieval and later times. It would be impossible to state all the differences on each topic in this section. A separate volume would have to be written for the purpose of setting out all the variations and additions from ancient times to modern times, to discuss why and how they arose or were made, to compare the various sūtras and to compare these again with the purānas and medieval digests, and to appraise their worth or usefulness. All that can be attempted here is to give the bare outlines of the procedure in different sūtras, smṛtis and digests by way of sample in a chronological order. The Nirṇayasindhu (p. 569) expressly says that the last rites differ in each Śākhā, though certain things are common to all [439a]. Chronological conclusions have been drawn about the relative ages of the sūtras (as Dr. Caland does), of the smṛtis, purānas and nibandhas from the presence or absence of this or that detail or the elaboration of this or that ritual. But with all respect to the industrious scholars of the West such conclusions are often tentative or misleading and are purely subjective in many cases and are often due to ignorance or loss of ancient works.

Before setting out the rites of cremation contained in the Śrauta sūtras, Gṛhya sūtras and later works, it would be best to give here a translation of the five hymns from the Ṛg. (X. 14-18)[440]. The verses in these hymns are employed by most of the sūtras and are used even now in the cremation rites and most of them occur in the other Vedic Saṁhitās. Varying interpretations have been given of some of these stanzas by Indian and Western commentators and critics Only a few of these have been mentioned in the notes. Besides some stanzas are employed for different details of the cremation rites by the different sūtras All such differences cannot be set out for want of space. The five hymns are so placed that they follow the order of the stages in which the funeral ritual proceeded in fact and is performed even now to a great extent. Vide Appendix for the text of the Ṛgveda hymns without accents.[441]

440. The work of Bertram S Puckle on 'Funeral customs' (London, 1926) is a very interesting and instructive one It describes at great length funeral customs in various parts of England, France and other countries in Europe and among Jews and also in other parts of the world. Many of the customs and beliefs that he records bear a close resemblance to customs and beliefs in ancient and modern India, such, as, for example, the alighting of a raven or other black feathered bird on a cottage where a man is very ill as a death warning (p 17), washing and anointing of dead bodies before burial (pp. 34, 36), the hiring of professional women for wailing and shrieking for the dead (p 67), condemning burial at night (p 77), the cutting of the hair as a sign of mourning (p. 91), placing meat and drink on the grave for the spirit of the departed (pp 99-100), refusal of burial in the churchyard by the Church for unbaptised children, suicides, lunatics, and those excommunicated (p. 143).

442. X.14.1. This verse is explained in Nir X 20. 'Pareyivāṁsam' may also be taken with 'panthām'. The meaning of 'pravataḥ' is rather uncertain. The Tai Ā. VI 1.1, Sat. Śr. 28 1 20, Baud. P. S. (I.2), Vaik. Śr. S. 20.22 (p. 311) read 'pareyuvāṁsam'.

ancestors went, each knowing his own way thereto[443]. 3. Mātali (Indra's charioteer or Indra himself) with the (pitrs) called kavya, Yama with the Angirases and Bṛhaspati with the Ṛkvans become prosperous (or increase in strength); whom (the pitrs) the gods support and who support the gods; some of them (the gods, Indra and others) are delighted by svāhā (by offerings given after uttering that word) and others (pitrs) are delighted by svadhā[444]. 4. O! Yama! Being of one mind with the pitṛs called Angirases come to this (sacrifice) and sit down on the seat (of kuśas). May the mantras recited by the wise (priests) bring you (here). May you (O king) delight yourself with this offering! 5. O Yama! (come with the adorable) Angirases and Vairūpas and delight (or exhilarate) yourself. I invoke Vivasvat, your father; (May he delight himself) after sitting on the kuśa grass (spread) in this sacrifice[445] 6. The Angirases, the Navagvas,[446] the Atharvans, the Bhṛgus are our pitṛs and love soma (drink). May we secure the good will of those adorable ones! May we be in their gracious favour also! 7. Hasten, hasten[447] by the ancient paths (to that place) where 443 It is quite possible to understand 'eva jajñānāh' as meaning 'being thus born' (like ourselves). 'eva' being taken adverbially and 'jajñānāh' from 'jan' (to be born). Compare A V 18 3.13 यो ममार प्रथमो मर्त्यानां य प्रेयाय प्रथमो लोकमेतम्।. The Parsi scriptures also speak of Yama (Yima) as the first mortal and as the son of Vivanghat Vide Vendidad, Far_ard II 1. p 11. (SBE. vol. IV)

444. Kāvyas, Angirases and Ṛkvans are different classes of Pitrs In Ṛg VII 10 4 the Ṛkvans (singers) are associated with Bṛhaspati. In other places they are associated with Viṣṇu, Aja-Ekapāt and Soma also. The exclamation svāhā is uttered when making an offering to Gods and svadhā when making an offering to pitrs

445. 'Nisadya' is really a gerund and not a finite verb We have to supply some verb like 'mādyatām' understood from the preceding half. Vairūpas are a subdivision of the Aṅgiras group

446 Navagvas seem to be a subdivision of Aṅgirases, just as 'daśagvas' are, as in Rg III 39.5, IV 51 4, V 29 12, X 62.6. The late Mr Tilak in his 'Arctic home in the Vedas' (pp 162-169) gave a somewhat far-fetched interpretation of these two words which can hardly be accepted as satisfactory in the presence of words like 'atithigva' (Rg. I 53 8, I 30 7, II 14 7, IV 26 3, VIII 68.17), 'abhiyugvan' (Rg VI 45 15), 'etagva' (Rg. VIII 70.7). This verse is explained in Nir XI 19.

447. This and the following three stanzas are addressed to the departed man For the meaning and history of the word Iṣṭāpūrta, vide H of Dh. vol II. pp. 843-845. It means 'the cumulative spiritual result or merit due to the performance of sacrifices and charitable acts'.

our forefathers that went before us passed. May you (the departed) see the two kings Yama and god Varuna rejoicing as they will. 8. (O departed one!) be united in the highest heaven with the pitṛs, with Yama and with your istāpūrta; leaving here blamable acts (sins), come back to your home! Being endowed with bright lustre, be united with a (new)[448] body! 9 (Ye evil spirits!) Go away, depart, move aside from this place (the cemetery), the pitrs made (or assigned) for him (the departed person) this abode Yama gives to him (this) resting place characterized by waters, days and nights. 10. (O departed!) proceeding by a good path, hurry on past the two dappled dogs (of Yama), offspring of Saramā, each having four eyes. Thus approach the pitrs who will recognize[449] you and who enjoy delight in the company of Yama 11. O king Yama! Give him (the departed one) in charge of those two dogs of yours, who are guards, having four eyes each, who guard the path (to pitr-loka) and who watch men. May you bestow on him happiness and health! 12. The two messengers of Yama, that have wide nostrils, that are very strong, that are satisfied with difficulty, move among the people. May those two (messengers) restore to us to-day auspicious life in order that we may see the Sun![450] 13. Extract Soma juice for Yama (O priests!), offer oblation to Yama.[451] Sacrifice, in which Agni is messenger (carrier) to the gods and which is well prepared reaches Yama. 14. (O priests) offer oblation sprinkled with ghee to Yama and then start. May he keep us (tied) to the worship of gods,[452] so that we may live a long life! 15. Offer to king Yama an oblation which is extremely sweet. Here is salutation to the sages who were born before us and who made the path for us.

448 This appears to postulate the acquisition of a new ethereal body for the departed enabling him to enjoy the pleasures of pitrloka.

449. 'Suvidatrān'—who will know or recognize you. The Nir. VI.14 explains 'suvidatrāh kalyānavidyāh'.

450. The life implored for here is that of the persons related to the deceased who are left behind on the earth. 'Asutrpa' according to Sāyana and Oldenberg means 'who steal away the lives of men'. This is a good meaning in view of what is stated in the last pāda of the verse. In translating as done above the word is taken as 'a+su+trpa', while Sāyaṇa takes it as 'asu+trpa'.

451. This and the following two verses are addressed to the priests.

452. 'Sa no devesvāyamad'—For the translation of these words given above, compare Rg. IX. 44 5.

16. The one great (Bṛhat-sāman) passes in three sacrifices (called Jyotir-gaur-āyuh) to the six wide expanses [453]. Tristubh, Gāyatrī and the metres are all centered in Yama.

X. 15. 1. May the Soma—loving [454] pitrs, whether of the lower, middling or higher grade, come forward, those pitrs that attained life (an eternal life or a life of spirit) being kind-hearted and knowing rta (the rule of right)! May those pitrs protect us when invoked! 2. Today may this be our salutation to the pitrs who went (died) before (the birth of this departed one) or who went after (the birth of the departed [455]), also (those pitrs) that are seated in this world or those who have places among the powerful people. 3. I have known the pitrs as those who will recognize (me, their descendant) and I have known the stride of Visnu and the child (viz. Agni), the pitrs who sit on kuśa grass and partake of food and Soma offering at their will, repeatedly come here. [456] 4. O pitṛs, that occupy kuśa grass! (come) down towards us with your protection, we have prepared for you these offerings; accept them. May you come with very blissful protection and then may grant us happiness that is free from trouble (or evil)! [457] 5. May the Soma-loving pitrs invited by us to the dear treasures (offerings) placed on the kuśa grass come! May they hear (our prayers) here! May they speak 453 This is rather a very obscure stanza The A. V. reads 'pavate' for 'patati'. 'Trikadruka' occurs frequently in connection with Soma (as in Rg II 22 1; VIII 92,21). Sāyana explains that for the performance of Trikadruka sacrifices Yama gives protection and that he comes to the six wide ones for supervising over what was done or not done The six are mentioned in Śat Br I.5 1.22 as fire, earth, water, wind, day and night The six wide ones are referred to in Rg VI 47 3. The conception is rather vague The meaning probably is that in the Trikadruka sacrifices the Brhatsāma is sung and it reverberates throughout the universe (symbolized as the six wide ones) and that all the verses recited in the several metres do the same.

454. X 15. 1 This and the following seven stanzas were employed as mantras in offering oblations to pitrs in the rite performed on the day previous to the day (8th tithi) of Astakā-śrāddha, vide Āśv. gr. II. 4 6.

455 X 15. 2. 'Purvāsah' and 'uparāsah' may simply mean 'ancient and modern' 'Pārthive rajasi'—here probably means 'the regions contiguous to or just above the earth'

456. X. 15 3. 'Napātam' is difficult to construe: probably it refers to Agni who is often addressed as 'ūrjo napāt' (Ṛg. I. 58.8, II. 6.2, VI.48.2).

457. X. 15.4. 'Sam yoḥ' is explained by the Nir. IV. 21 as शमनं च रोगाणां यावनं च भयानाम् and रपः in अरपः as meaning पाप । in favour of us and may they protect us! 6. O Fathers! May you all, bending your knee and sitting to the right side (of the offering) commend our sacrifice; whatever fault we may commit in reference to you through our being (erring) men, do not injure us for the sake of that. 7. O Fathers! sitting in front of (in the lap of) brilliant (flames) may you bestow wealth on (me) the mortal sacrificer! May you give wealth to the sons (of the deceased mortal) and may you impart vigour (to them)! 8. May Yama desiring offerings and enjoying the company of our ancient and rich pitrs, who came to (or valued) Soma drinks one after another, who were glorious and in whose company Yama (the king of pitrs) found great delight, partake of (eat) the offerings (given by us) according to his liking[458] 9. O Agni! come down towards us with the pitrs that were thirsting and gaping (to reach the world of the gods), that knew about sacrifice and that were authors of stomas by means of prayers (that they offered), that know us well, that are unfailing (in responding to our call), that partake of the kavya offering and that sit round the heated milk. 10. O Agni! come with the pitrs earlier and later (in time) that are unfailing, that partake of the offerings (presented to them), that drink the offerings, that are seated in the same chariot with Indra and the gods, that make obeisances to the gods in their thousands, that sit round the hot milk. 11. O pitrs called Agnisvātta[459], that are good guides! Come (to this rite) and sit down each on his proper seat. Eat (partake of) the pure offerings (offered) on the sacred kuśa grass and then bestow wealth (or prosperity) together with all heroic sons. 12. O Agni Jātavedas! when praised (by us) you, having made the oblations savoury, have carried them and presented (them to the pitṛs). May they eat them as is their wont (or as they are offered with the word svadhā)! O God! May you eat (partake of) the pure offerings! 13. O Jātavedas! you know how many (pitṛs) are there, viz. those who are here (near us), those who are not here, those whom we know and those whom we do not know (because they are remote ancestors). Be gracious to accept as is your habit this sacrifice which is well prepared. 14. (O Agni) Resplendent (or self-ruling) along with those (pitrs) who (whose bodies) were burnt by fire and also whose bodies were not burnt and who enjoy delight (on account of offerings made) with svadhā (or as is their wont) in the midst of the heavens. May you arrange a body as (the deceased) desires that will inspire him to a (new) life (in heaven)!

X. 16. 1. O Agni! Do not burn out this (departed person?), do not singe him all round, do not throw here and there (parts of) of his skin or his body, O Jātavedas (fire)! when you burn him completely, may you send him (the deceased) on to the pitrs! 2. O Jātavedas! When you thoroughly burn this (departed person), then may you hand him over to the pitrs! When he (the dead person) follows this (path) that leads on to a (new) life, may he become one that carries out the wishes of the gods[460]! 3. May your eye (of the deceased) go to the Sun, your breath to the wind, may you go to Heaven and earth by your merit or you may go to the waters if you find pleasure there (or if that be your lot)! May you rest (stand) with all your limbs in the herbs! 4 O Jātavedas! May you burn by your heat the goat that is your share! May your flame, may your bright light burn that goat,[461] carry this (departed) to the world of those who do good deeds by means of your beneficent bodies (flames). 5. O Agni! discharge again towards the pitrs (this deceased) who being offered on to you moves about (or wanders) as is his habit. O Jātavedas! may he take on (a new) life and increase his offerings and be united with a new (ethereal) body.[462] 6. (O dead man!) May Agni who consumes all make free from blemish that limb of yours which the dark bird (crow) has pierced or an ant or a snake or a wild beast struck at and may Soma that entered into the brāhmanas do the same[463].

460 X. 16. 2. The words असुनीतिमेता have in view the words असुनीतिमेतां यथावश तन्वं कल्पयस्व in X 15 14 above.

461. X 16. 4 अजो भाग' —This refers to the goat that was optionally carried with the dead body Vide note 486 below and Ṛg. X 16.7 where the cow is mentioned as being burnt with the dead body.

462. X 16 5. For the meaning of शेषस्, compare Ṛg. VII 4.7 (न शेषो अग्ने अन्यजातमस्ति).

463. X 16 6—For सोम ..आविवेश, compare 'सोमोऽस्माकं ब्राह्मणानां राजा' शतपथब्रा V. 4.2 3 and 'स यदि सोमं ब्राह्मणाना भक्ष ' ऐ. ब्रा.' 35 3 In X.16.7 the idea seems to be that when the corpse is covered with the parts of a slau_htered animal the corpse may not be burnt too quickly.

7. (O deceased) put on (yourself) with cows an armour (i e. against fire flames) of Agni (i e. with the skin of the cow) and surround yourself with the thick fat (of the cow), so that (Agni) that overwhelms with his lustre, that takes delight (in destroying things), that is bold and seeks to burn completely may not scatter (all your parts). 8. O Agni! do not destroy this cup that is dear to the gods and the Soma-loving (pitṛs). In this cup from which the gods drink, the immortal gods take delight[464]. 9. I send far away the fire that eats raw flesh: may Agni that carries evil (or sins) go (to regions) where Yama reigns! The other Agni (Jātavedas), knowing everything, may take even here the offering to the gods 10. I, observing the other Agni (Jātavedas) for the purpose of offering a sacrifice to the pitṛs, leave aside the fire that devours raw flesh and that entered your house; may he (the other fire) urge on to the highest world the gharma (heated milk or sacrifice[465]). 11. May that fire which carries the kavya[466] offerings offer them to the pitṛs that prosper according to ṛta! May he offer the oblations to the gods and pitṛs! 12. (O Agni!) we who love you have established you and have kindled you. May you loving (the pitṛs) bring here the pitṛs that love us in order that they may partake of the offering! 13. O Agni! May you extinguish (with water) that spot which you burnt (at the) time of cremation! May Kiyāmbu (plant) arise here and may dūrvā creeper spreading its tendrils grow here! 14. O Śītikā (cool plant), O herb full of cooling effect, O Hlādikā (freshening herb) causing delight, may you be well associated with a she frog! May you gladden this fire!

464 X 16. 8. This mantra is repeated as invocation when the praṇītā water is carried forward in the cup As stated below all sacrificial implements are placed on the body of the deceased āhitāgni and burnt But the sage prays that the cup may not be completely destroyed, since it may have to be used in the other world by the departed spirit.

465. X. 16. 10. This verse is rather involved If the words of this verse and the next are literally construed it would seem that the kravyād fire was employed for pitṛyajña It is possible to hold that kravyād fire was considered as something evil and to be kept distinct from the ordinary or sacrificial fire.

466 X 16.11 Sāyana explains on the assumption that the word is kavyavāhana in this, while the Saṃhitā and the padapātha have kravyavāhana. The Vāj S. 19 65 and Tai S. II. 6 12 5 read 'kavyavāhanaḥ'. Here apparently at least the flesh-eating fire is admitted not only in the rites for the pitṛs but also in the rites for gods.

X. 17. The verses of this hymn, except 3-6, have hardly any bearing on funeral rites. Therefore only those four verses are translated here. The first two verses refer to the marriage of Vivasvat with the daughter of Tvastr and to the legend of the birth of Yama and Yamī from Vivasvat. Both are explained at length in Nir. XII. 10-11. Verses[467] 7-9 which contain prayers to Sarasvatī are almost the same as A. V. 18. 1. 41-43 and are employed by the Kauśika-sūtra (81.39) in the cremation rite along with A. V. 7.68 1-2 and 18 3.25.

3. May the all-knowing Pūsan, who does not allow cattle to perish and who protects the world, discharge (despatch) you from this (world to the next) ! May he (Pūsan) hand you over to these pitrs and may Agni hand you over to the gods that know you well ! 4. May Pūsan, who is the life of the Universe and who is himself life, protect you ! May he who is ahead of you guard you on the way (to heaven) ! May god Savitr place you in that place where the doers of good deeds went and dwell 5. Pūsan knows all these quarters in order; may he take us by (a path) most free from danger ! He is the bestower of happiness, full of refulgence, he has all heroes with him; may he (Pūsan) the wise one go in front of us without committing a mistake ! 6 Pūsan exists (stands) in the forefront of the paths (leading to the world of pitrs), of the paths leading to heaven and of the paths on the earth. He stands facing both the worlds that are very dear (to all) and he, the knowing one, travels towards and away from both.

X. 18. 1. O Death ! Move aside along another path that is your own and different from the Devayāna path. I address you who have eyes and ears. Do not injure our children, do not harm our heroic sons. 2. (O relatives)[468] that are sacrificers ! Since you have come obliterating the foot-prints of Death and firmly establishing long life for yourselves, prospering with progeny and wealth, may you be pure and holy ! 3. These living (relatives) have turned back separated from the dead; this day our invocation (sacrifice to) of the gods became auspicious. We then went forward for dancing, for

467. Sarasvatī is a sacred river and also imagined as a deity Rg VI. 61 and VII 95 are two hymns addressed to Sarasvatī. Probably waters of rivers were used at the time of cremation and they are all identified with and held as sacred as Sarasvatī.

468. X 18.2 This verse is addressed to the relatives when they turn homeward after cremation.

laughter (with our children) firmly establishing our long life. 4. I place (here) this barrier (stone) for the (protection of) the living (relatives, son and the like) so that none of them may go this goal (that the departed went). May they live for a hundred prosperous autumns! May they keep off Death by means of the mountain[469] (the stone). 5. O Dhātṛ! Arrange the lives of these (the survivors) in the same way as the days come one after another in proper order, as the seasons follow each other in a proper order, as a younger one does not abandon an elder (relative)[470]. 6. May you (the survivors) accepting old age attain (long) life, striving in order (of age) whatever your numbers may be; may Tvaṣṭṛ of noble birth and gracious give you here (in this world) a long life to live![471] 7. Let these women whose husbands are worthy and are living enter the house with ghee (applied) as collyrium (to their eyes). Let these wives first step into house, tearless, without any affliction,[472] and well adorned. 8 O wife (of the dead)! Raise yourself up towards the world of the living (your sons and other relatives); you lie down near one (your husband)

469. X 18 4. Paridhis are encircling sticks of sacrificial wood such as palāśa, khadira placed round the fire. This verse is employed by Āśv. gṛ. IV. 6.9 in the śāntikarma performed after the collection of bones. Here the fire is surrounded on three sides by the wooden sticks and a stone is placed on the north of the fire with the last quarter as stated by Āśv. gṛ. IV. 6. 10 अन्वर्मूत्र्वं दधतां पर्वतेनेत्यश्मानमुत्तरतोऽग्नेः कृत्वा...यथाहान्यनुपूर्वं भवन्तीत्यमात्यानीक्षेत।. अमात्य here means all members of the family, men and women, except the performer of the rite.

470. X. 18.5 यथा न पूर्वमपरो &c. Probably this refers to the funeral procession arranged according to ages, as Āśv. gṛ. IV. 2.9 states expressly 'अन्वञ्चोऽमात्या अधोनिवीताः प्रवृत्तशिखा ज्येष्ठप्रथमाः कनिष्ठजघन्याः'. The बौ. पि. सू. I. 21.4 remarks 'अथैनाननुपूर्वं कल्पयति यथाहान्यनुपूर्वं भवन्तीति or the idea may be that each generation should die in the order it was born and that a son should not die before his father.

471. X. 18 6. This may be symbolic of the fact that the members of the family of the deceased are made to stand on the hide of an ox spread to the west of the fire. Vide Āśv. gṛ. IV. 6.8 'अथाग्निमुपसमाधाय पश्चादस्यानडुहं चर्मास्तीर्य...तस्मिन्नमात्यानारोहयेदारोहतायुर्जरसं वृणाना इति.'

472. X 18 7. This verse was employed in the procedure of widow burning (satī or sahamaraṇa or anugamana) by medieval and later writers. Some of them read 'agneḥ' or 'agne' for 'agre'. But even without this change Aparārka (p. 111) and others rely for the practice of satī on this verse. For a discussion on this verse and the next, the different readings in the old texts, the different theories built upon these and the practice of widow-burning, vide H. of Dh. vol. II pp. 617-619 and pp. 625-635.

who is now lifeless; come! You have kept true to this your wifehood of the husband who held your hand (formerly in marriage) and who loved you passionately[473] 9. (I) Take the bow from the hand of the departed (ksatriya) in order that there may be in us martial vigour, brilliance and strength[474]. May thou (the departed) there and may we here be endowed with heroic sons and conquer here all competing and aggressive enemies! 10. (O departed) approach this mother Earth which is spread wide and is pleasant May this young one (the Earth) as soft as (wool) to you who have bestowed gifts save you from the lap of Death.[475] 11 O Earth! heave yourself up, do not crush it, be of easy approach and of easy resort to him, and O Earth! cover him (the dead person represented by his bones) just as a mother would cover her son with the fringe (of her garment).[476] 12 Let the Earth heave itself up and remain firm. Let the

473. X. 18 8 This verse is somewhat misplaced. It should occur earlier in X.14 The last quarter is rather difficult to construe In the Tai Ā VI 1 there is a similar verse 'इय नारी पतिलोक वृणाना निपद्यत उप त्वा मर्त्य प्रेतम्। विश्वं पुराणमनुपालयन्ती तस्यै प्रजा द्रविणं चेह धेहि'॥ The Tai Ā. VI 1 also has the verse उदीर्ष्व नार्यभि° and as printed reads 'सम्बभूव', but सायण explains आभिमुख्येन सम्यक् प्राप्नुहि (i. e he explains सम्बभूथ) The बौ पि सू I 8.1–2 reads सबभूव and says about Rg X 18 8 and Tai. Ā verse अथास्य भार्यामुपसंवेशयति। इयं नारी . धेहीति। ता प्रतिहितः सव्ये पाणावभिपद्योत्थापयति उदीर्ष्व...बभूवेति।

474. X 18 9 अस्मे is used with all cases as shown by the Nir. VI.7. Here it may be equal to अस्मभ्यं or अस्मासु This verse also should occur earlier along with verse 8 above In Śān Śr I6 13 13 both 8 and 9 are called utthāpinī (verses) 'उदीर्ष्व नार्युदीर्ष्वात' पतिवत्युदीर्ष्वातो विश्वावसोऽश्मन्वतीत्युत्थापिन्य' The com remarks 'आभिर्होत्रादयो महिषीमुत्थापयन्ति'. उदीर्ष्वात पतिवती is Rg X 85 21, उदीर्ष्वातो विश्वावसो is Rg X 85.22 and अश्मन्वती is Rg X 53 8 These are recited in अश्वमेध at the time of making the crowned queen get up from near the dead horse Compare H of Dh. vol II. p 1235. The तै आ VI. 1 reads three verses respectively applicable to ब्राह्मण, क्षत्रिय or वैश्य departed person as 'सुवर्णं हस्तादददाना°, धनुर्हस्तादा°, मणिं हस्तादाददाना' and बौ पि सू I 8 3–5 cites them and remarks 'अथास्य सुवर्णेन हस्तौ निमृजते स्वर्णं हस्ता° इति ब्राह्मणस्य, धनुर्हस्ता° इति क्षत्रियस्य' &c.

475 X 18 10 Vide the passage from Āśv Śr S where this and the following three verses are stated to be among the 24 verses to be recited on the death of a dīksita The Āśv gr 4 5 5 employs this as a mantra to be recited at the time of depositing in a pit the jar containing the burnt bones of the dead The बृहद्देवता (VII 17–18) says that X 18 10–13 are employed in the rite of collecting the bones

pillars in their thousands stand up supporting this house. May these homes (the clods of earth) drop him nourishment! May they become here for all days the shelter [477] for him (the departed represented by bones)! 13. I prop up the earth around you for your sake. May I placing this lump of clay receive no harm! May the pitṛs support (make steady) this post! [478] May Yama provide here seats (or resting places) for you. 14. (The gods) have placed me in the day that will come back (tomorrow) like the feather of an arrow; (therefore) I restrain backwards (stop) my speech as a person restrains a horse with a bridle. [479]

It should be noted that the word 'pitṛ-yajña' actually occurs in Ṛg. X. 16. 10. What does it mean? It has to be remembered that the hymns Ṛg. X. 15–18 refer to rites immediately on the death of a single person. They are not concerned with rites performed for deceased male ancestors long after their deaths. The anxiety (in X. 15–18) seems to be to make the ancient pitrs (styled Barhisadaḥ and Agnisvāttāḥ in Ṛg. X. 15. 3–4, 11) favourably disposed to the recently departed spirit. Havis (sacrifical food such as boiled rice) was offered to the ancient pitṛs (Ṛg. X. 15. 11) who were supposed to have partaken of the food offered (X. 15. 12). The purpose of these Rgvedic hymns is entirely different from the purpose of the mantras in Tai. S. I. 8. 5 (which refer to the pitṛyajña performed in Sākamedha). As a matter of fact three of the mantras in Tai. S. I. 8. 5 do occur in Ṛg. X. 57. 3–5 and are employed in the piṇḍa-pitṛyajña. There is hardly any reason to suppose that the pitryajña in Rg. X. 15. 10 is more ancient than the piṇḍapitryajña. It is quite possible that both referring as they do to different matters were coeval.

477. X. 18. 12. This is recited after the bones are covered with particles of dust. It is probable that the particles were poetically described as posts.

478. X 18 13. It looks very likely that a wooden post was employed as a support for the urn that was deposited under ground.

479. X. 18. 14. This verse is rather obscure and various interpretations have been proposed by German scholars (Roth, Grassmann, Ludwig, Geldner and Oldenberg) and others like Whitney and Hopkins The translation is only tentative, but it probably brings out the sense in the context much better than many other interpretations. The idea probably is that the speaker wants to disconnect himself from the dead just as a feather may become loosened from an arrow that is shot and therefore he states that he wants to stop addressing the dead and close up all connection with the dead. The Bṛhaddevatā (VII. 18–19) remarks on this verse 'प्रतीचीने यथाहानि अपहृत्येतराणि तु । अहःसु पितरो वध्नुरित्याशास्तेऽन्त्ययाशिषः' ॥

It would be interesting to see how the ceremonies on the death of an āhitāgni are described in the śrauta and gṛhya sūtras. The Āśv. Śr. S. VI. 10 describes what is to be done in case one that has undergone a dīkṣā (initiation) for a Soma sacrifice or a sattra dies before the sacrifice is finished. It states "When the dīkṣita is dead, they take out the body by the tīrtha,[480] place it on the spot where it was intended that avabhṛtha (bath at the end of a soma or sattra sacrifice) was to be taken and deck the body with the decorations that ordinarily are placed on a dead body. They cut the hair (on the head) of the corpse, the hair on the lips, the hair on the body and also pare the nails. They apply paste of Nalada (Indian spikenard) to the corpse and throw on it a garland of naladas. Some (having cut open the entrails) take out the fecal matter from them and fill them with pṛṣadājya (when clarified butter is mixed with curds it is so called). They cut off a portion as wide as the foot of the corpse from a new (unworn) garment and cover the dead body with it in such a way that the fringe is towards the west (the head being placed towards the east) and the feet of the corpse are exposed to view. The portion cut off from the piece of cloth is taken by the sons and the like. The deceased man's śrauta fires are placed on the churning sticks. (the two araṇis), the dead body is taken outside the vedi (fire altar) towards its south, fire is produced by attrition and then the body is burnt therewith. After returning from the cremation, they should finish the work of the day. On the next morning, the recitation of the śāstras, the singing of the stotras and the saṃstavas (reciting hymns in chorus) should be without repetition and the uttering of the hiṃ sound. On the same day before taking up the grahas (cups), the priests come out by the tīrtha, go round the place of cremation with the right hand turned away (from the place) and sit round it in the following manner viz. the hotṛ priest sits to the west (of the place of cremation), the adhvaryu to the north, and the sāma priests to the west of the adhvaryu (and the brahmā priest to the south). Then the sāma priests sing in a low voice the verse beginning with 'āyam gauḥ pṛśnirakramīt' When the singing is finished the hotṛ walks round the place of cremation thrice with his left turned towards the place of cremation and without uttering the syllable 'om' recites immediately after the song of the sāma priests the stotriya in a low voice and also the following verses attributed to Yama and Yāmyāyanas (as seers or authors) viz. Ṛg X 14. 7–8, 10–11, X. 16. 1–6, X. 17. 3–6, X. 18. 10–13, X. 154. 1–5. They should finish with Ṛg. X. 14.12, then collect the charred bones in a jar, take the jar by the way of the tīrtha and place it on the seat that was occupied by the deceased sacrificer.[481]

480. तीर्थ means the path to the sacrificial ground between the चात्वाल and उत्कर (vide H. of Dh vol. II p 984) For स्तोत्रिय that occurs a little lower down, vide H. of Dh. vol. II p. 1186.

The Śāṅkhāyana Śr. S. (IV. 14–15) deals at great length with the death of an āhitāgni and the rites that follow. Kāt. Śr.

The Śat. Br. (XII, 5 2.5) refers to the practice of cleansing the deceased of all foul matter, but does not approve of it It recommends 'having washed him out inside he anoints with ghee and thus makes the body sacrificially pure ' आयं गौः पृश्निरक्रमीत्—is the first verse of the hymn Ṛg. X. 189. 1–3 which are also S V. No. 630–632 (Āraṇyakāṇḍa) and 1376–78 (Uttarārcika). The hymn also occurs in the other Vedas. The verses are called सार्वराज्य ऋचः . It may be noticed that the Āśv. gṛ. (IV.4 6) prescribes the recitation of the 24 mantras prescribed in the Āśv Śr. above and employs some more verses (from Ṛg X. 14–18) in the ritual set out below from the Āśv. gṛ. In the Āśv Śr. II, 19 there is a description of a rite called 'pitryā karma,' in which offerings are offered in fire taken from the Dakṣiṇāgni and in which the devatās are five viz. Pitaraḥ-somavantaḥ, Soma pitṛmān, Pitaraḥ barhiṣadaḥ, Pitaraḥ Agniṣvāttāḥ, Yama, for each of whom three verses are recited respectively in order viz Ṛg. X. 15. 1, IX.96 11, X 15.5, Ṛg I 91.1, I 91 12. VIII. 48 13, X. 15.4, X 15 3. X. 15,2; X. 15.11, X 15 13, X. 15.14; X. 14.4–5, X. 14 1. Ṛg. X, 16 12 (repeated thrice) becomes the sāmidhenīs in that rite, X. 14 5 is Yājyā and X 14.4 and X 14.1 are anuvākyās, Ṛg. X. 15 9, IV 11 3, I 96.1 are recited when the rite is finished (instead of Agni Sviṣṭakṛt Agni Kavyavāhana is invoked); Ṛg. X. 16 11, X. 15.12 are two Samyājyās in Vaṣaṭkāra. The editor of the Prayogaratna explains that Nalada means 'Uśīra' (i e Wālā in Marathi) and that some substitute japā flowers (china rose) for naladas.

S. 25.7 does the same but more briefly. Kāt. (25. 7. 18) refers to the cutting of hair and nails and taking out fecal matter and Kauś. (80. 13–16), Śān. Śr. 4. 14 4–5 also speak of the cutting of hair, of bathing the dead body, applying paste and putting garlands. The Baud. P. S (1 2) refers to these and adds that if they cut open his entrails from the right side they again sew it with darbha grass or they may simply wash the body (without taking out the fecal matter), cover the body with a piece of cloth, deck it, remove the body by the way between the vedi and utkara, place it on a couch (āsandī) over which a black antelope skin was spread with the head to the south, put Nalada garland on it and cover it with an unworn piece of cloth (as in Āśv. Śr. above). Sat Śr. 28 1. 22 and G. P. S. I. 10–14 contain similar provisions adding that the toes of the feet and thumbs of the corpse are tied with a white thread or the fringe of a garment (baddhvā daśenāngusthau-pādayoh pānyośca, G. P. S. I. 12) and that the āsandī (a small couch or chair on which the corpse was carried) was to be of udumbara wood. The Kauśikasūtra (80. 3. 3–45) refers to numerous stanzas from A V. that are to be recited in kindling the funeral fire and offering oblations, viz. 18. 2. 4 and 36, 18. 3. 4; 18. 1. 49–50, 58; 18. 1. 41–43; 7. 68 1–2; 18. 3. 25; 18. 2 4–18 (omitting 18. 2. 10); 18.4.1–15 &c. Compare SBE vol. XI p. XLI for Budhist practice.

The Āśv. gr.[482] (IV. 1 and 2) prescribes in general the ceremonies on the death of an āhitāgni, while the Āśv. Śr. S. quoted

482. It deserves to be noted that the numbering of the sūtras in Āśv. gr. IV. 1–2 differs in different editions considerably The rules about the selection of the site for cremation are ancient. The Sat Br. XIII. 8.1 and Kāt. Sr XXI. 3,15–26 also lay down elaborate rules. The latter may be set out here. 'the site for cremation should be one surrounded by a thicket of trees, but it should be so open that the sun shines directly on it at mid-day. It should be saltish land or land sloping to the north or it may be all level land. Some say that it should slope towards the south. The spot should be such that the houses in the village cannot be seen from it and should be at a distance from the road and from the vata, pippala, tilvaka, haridru, sphūrjaka, bibhīdaka and other trees that have an evil name (such as ślesmātaka and kovidāra) The 'Śat. Br. XIII 8.1.16 names all these trees that are to be avoided The spot should be such that a pile of wood (as directed in Kāt. Śr. 25 7 16–17) can be constructed thereon. It should be a pleasing one and should have a thicket of various trees to its west or in default, water, which may be to its west or north The spot should have streams or holes and grass growing thereon The Kāt Śr. S.

above deals with what should be done in case the āhitāgni dies while engaged in a Soma or other sacrifice. The Āśv. gr. remarks 'when an āhitāgni dies, one (a son or other relative) should arrange to have a piece of land dug up to the south-east or south-west at a place sloping towards the south or south-east, or according to some towards the south-west. The piece of land dug up should be of the length of a man with upraised arms, of the breadth of one vyāma[483] and one vitasti (twelve finger breadths) in depth. The cemetery (śmaśāna) should[484] be free (open) on all sides. It should abound in herbs, but plants with thorns and with milky juice (should be dug out) as stated before (in Āśv. gr. II. 7.5 about vāstu-parīkṣā). From which the waters flow on all sides (that is the spot should be a little higher than the surrounding ground); this should be a characteristic required for that (kind of) cemetery where (the body) is to be burnt. They should cut off the hair on the head, the lips and the body and pare the nails (of the deceased); this has been declared already (in Āśv. Śr. VI. 10.2). They should make provision for plenty of sacrificial grass and clarified butter. In this (funeral rite) they pour clarified butter into curds. This is the pṛṣadājya used 21 3. 27 adds that a bamboo staff with a bundle of grass at its top is carried to the cremation ground and held by a person to the north of the ground while the rites go on and that it is brought back to the house and kept raised at the house. The ground is measured and pegs of palāśa, śamī, varana and a stone are driven into the ground from the east, north, west and south in order. The Śat. Br. XIII. 8. 4. 1 mentions pegs (śanku). Śān. Sr. (IV. 14, 6-9) states that the ground of cremation slopes to the south or south-east, that the ground is swept with a palāśa branch with the verse 'apeta' (Rg. X. 14. 9), then it is cleared with the sphya and sprinkled with water and the pile of wood is made to face south-east.

483. व्याम is defined as 'व्यामो बाह्वोः सकरयोस्ततयोस्तिर्यगन्तरम्' अमरकोश. It is as much as the out-stretched arms together with the hands (i. e. a fathom).

484. श्मशान has two meanings viz. the place where a corpse is cremated and also the place where the charred bones (after cremation) collected in a jar are deposited in the earth. नारायण remarks on आश्व. गृ. IV. 1.11 (अभित आकाशं श्मशानं) 'श्मशानग्रहणेनात्र श्मशानद्वयं गृह्यते ।..दहनदेशश्च श्मशानं सञ्चित्य यत्रास्थीनि निधीयन्ते तच्च श्मशानम् । तद्द्वयं सर्वतआकाशं भवेत्'. The शतपथब्रा. XIII 8.1.1 derives श्मशान in two ways as being a form of शवान्न or श्मशान्न in the words अथास्मै कल्याणं कुर्वन्ति । अथास्मै श्मशानं कुर्वन्ति । . श्मशा उ हैव नाम पितॄणामत्तारस्ते हामुष्मिँल्लोकेऽकृतश्मशानस्य साधुकृत्यामुपदम्भयन्ति तेभ्य एतदन्नं करोति तस्माच्छ्मशान्नं श्मशानं ह वै तच्छ्मशानमित्याचक्षते परोक्षम्। अथर्व० 18 4 44 shows that the dead body was carried in a cart drawn by oxen.

(in the rites) for pitṛs. (The relatives of the deceased) carry his sacred fires and his sacrificial vessels in that direction (viz. where the ground is dug up for cremation). After these aged persons, in odd numbers, men and women not going together, carry the dead body. Some say that (the dead body) should be carried in a cart with a seat drawn[485] by oxen. Some prescribe that a she-animal, either a cow[486] or a she-goat, of one colour or of a dark colour (should be taken to the cemetery). The (relatives of the dead) tie (a rope) to the left fore-foot and lead it behind (the corpse). Then follow the relations (of the deceased) with their yajñopavītas brought low (round their body) and with the top knot untied (dishevelled), the older ones going first, the younger ones last. Having thus arrived at the spot (of cremation), the performer (of cremation rites) while walking three times round the spot (for cremation) with his left side turned towards it, sprinkles water on it with a śamī twig with the verse 'apeta vīta vi ca sarpatātah' (Ṛg. X. 14. 9). To the south-east on a slightly raised corner (of the spot for cremation), he (son or the like) places the Āhavanīya fire, to the north-west the Gārhapatya fire and to the south-west the Dakṣina fire. Then a person that knows (how to prepare a funeral pile) collects a pile of fuel between the fires (on the dug-up spot). Then the performer of the rites spreads barhis (kuśas) and a black antelope skin with the hairy part outside on the pile, (the relatives) place the dead body thereon carrying it by way of the north side of the Gārhapatya fire and turning its head towards the Āhavanīya fire. They make the wife 485. The Baud. P. S. (I. 4. 5-6) says that servants or old men should carry the dead body on a couch or chair covering the body with a mat or according to some in a cart.

486. अनुस्तरणी is a cow or she-goat which is killed and then is made to cover the dead body with its limbs. The word is explained by नारायण as 'प्रेतमनुस्तर्यते या स्त्री पशुः सानुस्तरणी।'. The कात्यायनश्रौत (25.7.34-37) 'अनुस्तरणी चेत्पश्चात्कर्णमाहत्य हस्तयोर्वृक्कौ। अङ्गेष्वङ्गानीति जातूकर्ण्यः। न वास्ति सन्देहात्। वपया मुखमवच्छाद्याग्निभिरादीपयति। आहुतिं जुहोति पुत्रो भ्रातान्यो वा ब्राह्मणोऽस्मात्त्वमधिजातोऽसि त्वदयं जायतां पुनः असौ स्वर्गाय लोकाय स्वाहेति।' The mantra अस्मात्त्व.. लोकाय स्वाहा is वाज सं 35 22 Vide शतपथ ब्रा XII. 5 2 15 for the same words and mantra as in Kāt Sr. The com of Yājñikadeva on Kāt. Sr. 25 7 34 explains वृक्कौ as कुक्षिगोलकौ Vide also Baud. P. S I 4 1 and I 9-10, Sat. Sr 28.2 3-13, Kauś 81.20-27 The latter prescribes that the cow is led round with the left side towards the corpse with the mantras A V 18 3 3 and 4, that the cow is struck on her buttocks and loins, that two vṛkkas are taken from the cow's back and placed on the hands of the corpse with the mantra 'ati drava' (A V. of the deceased (belonging to any one of the three higher varnas) lie down (on the pile) to the north of the dead body, and also place his bow to the north if (the deceased was) ksatriya. The wife's brother-in-law[487] (husband's brother) or a representative of the husband or a pupil (of the deceased) or an old servant (slave) should make her rise (from the pile) with the mantra 'udīrsva nāryabhi jīvalokam' (Ṛg. X. 18. 8); the performer (of the rites) should mutter this verse if a śūdra (servant) makes her rise and he takes away the bow with the verse 'dhanur-hastādādadāno' (Ṛg. X. 18. 9). It has been stated (above what is to be done) in case a śūdra (should perform this act). Having strung the bow he should before the piling up of the things (mentioned below on the dead body) is done, break the bow to pieces and throw it on the pile.[488] He then should put the following sacrificial implements (on the dead body) viz. into the right hand the spoon called Juhū, in the left hand the spoon Upabhrt, on his right side the Sphya (wooden sword), on his left side the Agnihotrahavanī (the ladle with which the Agnihotra offerings were offered into fire), on his chest, head and teeth respectively the dhruvā (the big sacrificial ladle), the dishes (or the kapālas), the pressing stones (used for pressing out Soma juice in a soma sacrifice), on the two nostrils the two small ladles (sruva), on the ears the two Prāśitra-haranas,[489] if there be only one then breaking

487. Many of the sūtras refer to this act of making the wife of the deceased lie down to the north of the dead body on the funeral pile and then making her rise up from it. Vide Kauśikasūtra 80. 44-45 'इयं नारीति पत्नीमुपसंवेशयति । उदीर्ष्वेत्युत्थापयति' These two verses are A. V. XVIII. 3. 1-2. Sat Sr. (28. 2. 14-16) states that before the corpse is placed on the pyre the wife is made to lie down near it with the verse 'iyam nārī' and then her husband's brother or another brāhmana makes her get up with the verse 'udīrsva nārī'. The same sūtra (28. 2. 22) says that the wife may be made to lie down near the corpse after the latter is placed on the pyre or before (as it appears to prefer).

488. Here the Sat. Br. XII 5. 2. 6 and some of the sūtras (such as Kāt. Sr. 25. 7. 19, Śān. Śr. IV. 14. 16-35, Sat Śr. 28. 2. 23-50, Kauśika 81. 1-19, Baud P. S I. 8-9) and smṛtis like Gobhila (III 24) add that in the seven seats of vital air viz. the mouth, the two nostrils, the two eyes and the two ears, they cast small pieces of gold. Others add that sesame wetted with ghee are also thrown on the corpse The G. P S. II. 7 12 says that it is the adhvaryu who deposits the kapālas on the head (of the dead body).

Those of the sacrificial implements which have a hollow (into which a fluid can be poured) are filled with Pṛṣadājya. The son (of the deceased) should take the upper and the lower mill-stones for himself and the implements made of copper, iron and earthenware [490].

The Śat. Br. XII. 5. 2. 14 first states that sacrificial implements made of stone or earthenware should be donated to a brāhmana but people regard the latter as a corpse-bearer (and so) they should be thrown into water.[491] Taking out the omentum (vapā) of the Anustaranī she-animal he should cover therewith the head and the mouth (of the deceased) with the verse 'Agner varma' (Ṛg. X. 16. 7). Taking out the two kidneys (vrkkau) of the animal he should deposit them into the hands (of the deceased) the right kidney in the right hand and left kidney in the left with the mantra 'ati drava' (Ṛg X. 14, 10, recited once only). He puts the heart (of the animal) on his heart and according to some also two lumps of flour (of rice or barley); according to others only if there are no kidneys.[492] Having deposited the whole animal limb by limb (on corresponding limbs of the dead body) and having covered it with its own hide he recites when the Praṇītā water is being carried forward, by way of invocation the mantra 'imam agne' (Ṛg. X. 16. 8). Bending his left knee he should offer into the Dakṣina fire oblations of clarified butter with the formula 'to Agni svāhā! To Soma svāhā! To the world svāhā! To Anumati svāhā!' A fifth oblation (is to be offered) on the chest of the deceased with the formula 'from this one, indeed thou hast been born! May he now be born out of thee, N. N.! To the heavenly world, svāhā' (Vāj S. 35. 22). He gives the order 'Light the fire together.' Then the Āśv. gr. (IV. 4. 2-5) states what one has to understand if the Āhavanīya or Gārhapatya or Dakṣina fire reaches the dead body first or if all the fires reach the body at the same moment; while the body is burning he recites over it the same texts (Ṛg. X. 14. 7 and others quoted above in n. 481 from Āśv. Sr. sūtra). Being cremated by a person who knows this he goes to the heavenly world together with the smoke (of the funeral pile)—thus it is known (in the Śruti). After he has recited the verse 'ime jīvāh' (Ṛg. X, 18. 3) they (all relatives) turn round from right to left and go away without looking back. When they have come to a place where there is standing water, having once plunged into it and raised their heads out of it they pour one handful of water, pronounce the gotra name and the proper name (of the deceased),

490. It should be noted that there are some variations in the statements about the sacrificial implements made here and in the Sat Br. XII. 5. 2, Sat Sr. 28. 2 23–50, Kāt Sr 25 7 21–33, Kaus. 81 1–19, Baud. P. S. I. 8 11–I. 9 7, Śān Śr. IV 14. 18–36. For example, the Śāṅ Śr. (IV. 16 21–31) prescribes that the Agnihotrahavanī is placed on the throat and the two aranīs on the private parts, while Āśv. gr. places the agnihotrahavanī on the left side and the śamyā on private parts Sabara quotes several times a passage which says 'They burn the āhitāgni with his (vedic) fires and sacrificial implements' (āhitāgnim-agnibhir dahanti yajñapātraiśca) on Jai IV 1 9, VI, 6 34, XI 3.34 Those words occur also in Baud P. S. III 1.9 Jai XI 3 34 states the proposition that the cremation of the sacrificer with the sacrificial implements is what is called pratipattikarman (the final disposal) of the yajñapātras.

492. According to Kāt Sr. quoted above in n. 486 the Anustaraṇī animal was to be struck behind the ear and killed. According to Jātūkarṇya the several limbs of the animal were to be placed on the corresponding limbs of the dead body. But Kāt. disapproves of this since when burnt there may be a doubt (in collecting bones) whether they are of the deceased or of the animal (and so only the flesh of the animal was to be placed on the limbs according to Kāt.). Compare Sat Br. XII 5. 9-12 for similar remarks. Āśv. gr IV 2. 4 (as interpreted by Nārāyaṇa) itself shows that there was an option viz. that the animal may be killed or let off and donated to a brāhmaṇa (vide also Baud P S I. 10. 2) The Śāṅ. Sr. (IV 14. 14-15) states that the kidneys were to be taken from the killed or living animal from behind and being slightly heated on the Dakṣina fire were to be placed in the two hands of the deceased with the two mantras 'ati drava' (Rg. X 14 10-11) come out (of the water), put on other garments, wring out (already worn garments) once, lay them away with their skirts to the north and sit down until the stars appear or they may enter their houses when a part of the Sun's disc is still visible, the younger ones entering first, the older ones last When they have come to the houses they touch a stone, the fire, cow-dung, fried barley, sesame seeds and water. Compare Śat. Br. XIII. 8. 4. 5 for bath and offering of water by relatives and touching a bull on returning from cremation and reciting 'udvayam' (Vāj. S 35. 14 = Rg. I. 50. 10) and applying collyrium and unguent to their bodies[493].

It is not possible from considerations of space to set out all that is said in the other gṛhya sūtras A few interesting points may be noted here The Sat Br XIII. 8. 4. 11, Pār. gr. (III. 10. 10 ff) expressly provide that funeral rites for any one whose upanayana has been performed are the same from the choosing of the site for the burning of the body to the descent into water on the part of the relatives (for bathing themselves) as those prescribed for a person who has set up the srauta (Vedic) fires, the only difference being that an āhitāgni is cremated with the three Vedic fires kept by him, that one who has kept only the smārta[494] or aupāsana fire is burnt with that and that common persons who have neither kept the śrauta fires nor smārta fire are burnt with the ordinary[495] fire Devala provides that when using ordinary fire, one should avoid taking the fire from a cāṇḍāla or any unclean fire or the fire in the room of a freshly delivered woman or the fire of a patita or fire from a funeral pyre.[496] The Pitṛdayitā states that the mantra 'asmāt tvam &c' was not to be recited when the deceased was a person who had not kept sacred fires.[497] The Pār. gr. further provides that all relatives residing in the same village, if they can trace the relationship, do the same, that they wear only one garment, suspend their sacred thread over the right shoulder, that with the fourth finger of the left hand they spurt away the water with Vāj. S 35. 6 and facing the south plunge into water and pour out one libation of water with joined hands. The Āp. Dh. S. (II. 6. 15. 2–7) lays down a bath when a person's relatives on the mother's side and father's relatives up to the 7th degree or as long as relationship can be traced die, except in the case of children less than a year old In the case of a child's death before one year, the parents and those who carry the child's body have to bathe. All the above should have dishevelled hair, should throw dust in the hair, wear only one garment, turn their faces to the south, plunge into water, offer water to the dead thrice and then sit down on the bank (of the river or pond), then come to the village and do what the women tell them to do (such as touching fire and bull &c.). Yāj. III 2 also provides the same rules as Pār. gr. and prescribes the recitation of the mantra 'apa nah śośucad agham' ('May evil be burnt away from us,' Ṛg. I. 97 1, A.V. IV. 33 1, Tai. Ā. VI. 10.1). The G P. S. (II. 23) provides that the funeral pyre is to be made with the wood of sacrificial trees, (II. 37 and 39) that the sapiṇḍas of the deceased headed by the women, the youngest being the first, fan the corpse placed on the pyre with the fringes of their garments, that the performer of the funeral rites takes a jar filled with water, places a darbhendva (?) on his head and goes round the corpse thrice and the priest gives a light stroke on the jar thrice separately with a stone (aśman) or an axe and recites a mantra 'imā āpo &c.' when a stream of water rushes out of the broken jar, (changing the words about 'asmin loke' to 'antarikse' and 'svarge' at the 2nd and 3rd perambulations). The performer while standing should drop behind him the jar of water. Then after repeating the mantra 'tasmāt tvam adhijātosi...asau svargāya lokāya svāhā,' he should set fire to the pyre to burn the body.[498] The Sat Śr 28 1 38 providıs that the family members beat their right thighs, fan the corpse with the fringes of their garments and go thrice round the corpse with the left side towards the corpse and recite the mantra 'apa naḥ śośucad-agham' (Ṛg. I. 97 1. Tai. Ā. VI. 10. 1). It further provides (28. 1 37–46) that the corpse is carried in a cart or by (four) men and while being carried four stops are made, at each of which clods of earth are dug up and boiled rice is offered thereon with mantras like 'pūṣā tvetaḥ' (Ṛg. X. 17 3., Tai Ā VI. 10 1), 'āyur viśvāyur' (Ṛg. X. 17. 4, Tai. Ā VI. 10. 2). The Varāha-purāṇa prescribes that a Paurāṇic mantra should be recited, that the performer should go round the pyre and apply the kindled fire towards the part of the pyre where the head is placed.[499]

In modern times the procedure of cremation is generally on the lines of that described in the Āśv. gr. cited above and the procedure described in the Garuḍapurāṇa II. 4. 41 ff. The following is a summary of the procedure set out in the Antyeṣṭi-paddhati of Nārāyaṇabhaṭṭa which is generally followed by Ṛgvedins in Western India. The dead body is washed with water, is decked with a tilaka on the forehead, is clothed in a garment, is covered with a paste of Jaṭāmāṃsī and a garland of naladas is placed round its neck. Then the performer washes his own feet, sips water, performs prāṇāyāma without Vedic mantra, then makes a Saṅkalpa (as in note 500),[500] he wears his sacred thread under the left shoulder (and on the right shoulder) and prays to the earth with the mantra 'upasarpa' (Ṛg. X. 18.10), he then thrice goes round the place dug up (for cremation) and sprinkles water with a śamī branch at the end of the mantra 'apeta' (Ṛg. X. 14. 9). This mantra is repeated thrice. Then he draws three lines on the ground with an iron piece or kuśa roots saying 'I draw a line for Yama, the lord of cremation,' 'I draw a line for Kāla, lord of &c' 'I draw a line for Mṛtyu, lord of &c' Then he throws into the dug-up ground pieces of gold and sesame and water mixed with sesame in the middle of the dug up spot for Yama, to the north for Kāla and to the south for Mṛtyu (each being associated with pitṛs, the formula being 'Yamāya dahanapataye pitṛbhyaḥ svadhā namaḥ'). He puts sesame in the mouth of the corpse and prepares a funeral pile sufficient for burning the body by means of sacrificial wood brought by the castemen of the deceased. On that pile he spreads kuśa grass and over the latter black antelope skin with the hair outside Then the corpse is carried to the north of the fire and is placed on the funeral pile with the head to the south. To the north of the dead body, he makes the wife of the deceased sit down. Then the husband's brother, pupil or an old servant makes her get up with the mantra 'udīrsva' (Ṛg. X. 18. 8). Then the performer puts pieces of gold in the seven holes of the body (vide above note 491) or drops of clarified butter. He then throws on the body of the departed sesame anointed with ghee, he performs parisamūhana (wiping with the wet hand) of the fire, then paristarana (strewing darbha grass) round the fire together with the funeral pile) and paryuksana (sprinkling water) and brings to the south of the fire the vessels viz prokṣaṇī, sruva, camasa and the vessel containing clarified butter. Then he puts water in the camasa (cup), covers it with darbha grass and carries it forward and invokes the camasa with Ṛg. X. 16. 8 (imam-agne &c) He makes a saṅkalpa that he would wait upon (or worship) the dead, takes two fuel sticks and offers them into fire and performs the worship of Agni, Kāma, Loka and Anumati by offering clarified butter in fire with the appropriate formula (viz. agnaye svāhā, agnaya idam na mama). Then he offers on the chest of the deceased clarified butter (or pṛṣadājya) (according to some) with the mantra 'asmādvai &c. (vide above note 498). Then he prepares apūpas (balls) with barley flour and mixes them with pṛsadājya and places portions of the balls on the five parts viz. forehead, mouth, the two arms and chest with the following mantras viz Ṛg X. 16. 7 (for the ball on forehead and mouth), Ṛg X. 14. 10 (for the two arms) and Ṛg. X 14. 11 (for the chest). Then he makes the fire flame up with the mantra Ṛg. X. 16 9 (kravyādam-agnim) towards the head of a male (and the feet of a woman). Then he should repeat certain mantras while the body is being burnt viz. Ṛg. X. 14. 7–8, Ṛg. X. 14. 10–11, Ṛg. X. 16. 1–6, X. 17. 3–6. X. 18. 10–13, X. 154. 1–5, X. 14. 12 While muttering these mantras he should throw sesame on the body that is being burnt. Then the performer should take a jar (full of water) on his left shoulder, should make a hole in it on the back of the jar with a broken but smooth stone. He should go round thrice with the left towards the burning body from the spot where the feet of the corpse lie and mutter certain mantras The jar is struck thrice All the sagotra relatives go round the burning corpse. Then the jar is completely broken near that part of the funeral pyre where the head rests The relatives without looking back turn to the left and come out of the cemetery with the youngest members first The performer recites Ṛg X. 18 3 (ime jīvā &c). The relatives repair to a spot where water is flowing, wearing only one garment and with faces to the south and hair dishevelled, plunge into the water once, sip water, place on the bank that stone (aśman) with which holes were made in the jar, offer water mixed with sesame on that stone with folded hands with the words 'O departed, of such a gotra and of such a name! May this water mixed with sesame reach you'. The performer offers water with the uttarīya for allaying the thirst (of the departed) due to the burning.

Many rules were prescribed as regards the carrying of the dead body. It has been seen above that the corpse was carried in a cart or on a couch by the relatives or by the servants (dāsas). Some sūtras, smṛtis, commentaries and other works lay down many other rules here The Rāmāyaṇa (Ayodhyā 76. 13 ff) states that on the death of Daśaratha his Vedic fires were carried by his priests before the corpse, that the dead body was placed in a palanquin (śibikā), that his servants carried it and that coins of gold and clothes were thrown about on the road in front of the bier (for the poor). The general rule was that members of the three higher varnas alone should carry to the cemetery a dead body belonging to any one of those varnas and a śūdra should not carry the dead body of a man of a higher caste (when there were men of the caste of the dead available) nor should a man of one of the three higher varnas carry the dead body of a śūdra, and that the impurity in the case of a śūdra carrying a dead dvijāti or a dvijāti carrying a śūdra's body is determined by the caste of the dead man. Vide Viṣṇu Dh S 19 1–4, Gaut. Dh. S. 14 29, Manu 5 104, Yāj III 26, Parāśara III 43–45. A brahmacārin was not permitted to be a carrier of the dead body of a person or relative even of his own caste, except his parents, guru, ācārya and upādhyāya and he was not guilty of breaking his vows of student-hood if he carried the bodies of any one of the five mentioned above. Vide Vas 23. 7, Manu 5. 91, Yāj III 15, Laghu-Hārīta 92–93, Brahmapurāṇa (q by Par. M. I. 2 p. 278). Guru, ācārya and Upādhyāya are defined by Yāj. I. 34–35. If a brahmacārin carried the corpse of any one except the above five he was held to have swerved from his vrata and he had to undergo the expiation for vratalopa. Manu 5. 103 and Yāj. III. 13–14 state that those who merely carry a dead body of their own caste should bathe with the clothes on, then bite off nimba leaves, should perform ācamana, touch fire, water, cowdung, white mustard, place slowly a foot on a stone and then enter their house It being the duty of sapindas[501] to carry the dead body of their relative they, after doing so, had simply to bathe, to touch fire and drink clarified butter for being pure (Gaut. 14. 29, Yāj. III. 26, Manu IV. 103, Parāśara III. 42, Devala q. by Par. M. 1 2, p. 277, Hārīta q. by Aparārka p. 871). Carrying the dead body of a brāhmaṇa who has no relatives is highly extolled by Parāśara (III. 39–41) who says that a person, that thus carries the dead body of a brāhmaṇa, secures at each footstep the reward of the performance of a sacrifice and he becomes pure at once simply by plunging into water and performing prāṇāyāma, while Manu (5. 101–102) prescribes that if one carries the dead body of a person who is not a sapinda through affection he becomes pure after three days. The Hāralatā p. 121 quotes the Ādipurāṇa that if a ksatriya or vaiśya cremates the dead body of a poor brāhmana or of a ksatriya who has lost everything or of a poor vaiśya, he secures great merit and becomes pure at once after a bath. Even now generally (particularly in villages) men of the same caste carry or follow a dead body and are held to be purified by a bath with clothes on. The medieval commentaries like the Mitākṣarā stuck strictly to the extreme exclusiveness of caste by prescribing 'if a man[502] carries a dead body through affection, eats food in that family and dwells in their house he is under impurity for ten days; if he simply stays with the dead man's family but does not eat their food he is impure for three days; these rules apply when the carrier is of the same caste as the dead person But if a brāhmana carries a śūdra's corpse, the brāhmana is impure for a month, but if a śūdra carries a brāhmana's body the śūdra is impure for ten days.' The Kūrmapurāna prescribes that if a brāhmana carries the dead body of a brāhmana for a fee or from other interested motive he becomes impure for ten days, a ksatriya, vaiśya and śūdra doing the same becomes impure for 12, 15 or 30 days and the Visnupurāna says that the person carrying a dead body for a fee has to become impure for the period of impurity prescribed for a man of that caste. It may be stated that these rules about impurity on the ground of carrying or following the carrying of a dead body of another caste are no longer enforced and it is extremely doubtful whether they were ever strictly enforced or followed Hārīta[503] prescribes that a dead body should not be carried through the midst of a village if while going to the cemetery a village comes in the way, but it should be carried away from it. Manu, 5 92 and Vrddha-Hārīta IX. 100-101 prescribed that the dead body of a śūdra, vaiśya, ksatriya and a brāhmana was to be taken out respectively by the southern, western, northern and eastern gates of the town or village It was provided by Yama and the Garudapurāna II 4 56-57[504] that the fuel for the funeral pyre should not be carried (for higher varnas) to the cemetery by a śūdra and if a śūdra did so the deceased would always remain in the state of preta The Hāralatā (p 121) says that if firewood is carried by śūdras still the pyre should be made by brāhmanas only (for a brāhmana's body). The smrtis and purānas provide that the corpse[505] should be first bathed with water and then cremated, that the corpse should never be burned naked, but that it should be covered with cloth, decked with flowers and have fragrant unguents (sandalwood

The Brahmapurāna (q. by Śuddhiprakāśa p. 159) states that when carrying a dead body to the cemetery, a great deal of noise should be created by means of the four kinds of instruments.[506]

There were differing rules laid down about vapana (shaving) for the performer as an auxiliary (anga) of the rite of cremation, after the cremation and bath thereafter. A smrti text provides[507] 'shaving of the head and moustaches is declared in seven cases, viz. on the Ganges, at the Bhāskaraksetra, on the death of the mother or father or guru, on consecrating the śrauta fires and in a Soma sacrifice'. The A. K. D (p. 19) prescribes that the son or other performer of the rites of cremation should first perform vapana and then bathe, then carry the dead body to a sacred spot, bathe it there, or if such a spot is not at hand should invoke the presence of the Ganges, Gayā and other tīrthas in the water to be used for washing the dead body, then anoint it with ghee or sesame oil, again bathe it and put on it a fresh garment, should deck it with ya'ñopavīta, gopīcandana, garland of basil leaves and then should apply to the whole body fragrant substances like sandalwood paste, camphor, saffron, musk &c. But if the cremation took place at night, there was to be no vapana at night, but on the next day.[508] Other smrtis allowed vapana on the 2nd, 3rd, 5th or 7th or any following day up to the offering of śrāddha on the 11th day.[509] Āp Dh. provides[510] vapana for all sapindas that are younger than the deceased The Madanapārijāta holds that the performer of cremation rites had to undergo vapana on the first day and also on the expiry of the period of impurity, while the Śuddhiprakāsa (p 162) following the Mit on Yāj. III 17 states that the day on which vapana is to be undergone is determined by the usage of each country. This difference in usages has been even judicially noticed. In Chandra choora Deo v. Bibhuti Bhushan Deva A.I R. 1945 Patna p. 211 at p. 219 it has been stated that according to the Benares School the person who performs the cremation shaves his head at the time of cremation, whereas under the Mithilā school there is no such shaving at that time.

The Garudapurāna (II. 4. 67–69) provides that loud weeping may be indulged in when the body is burning but there should be no weeping after cremation and the offering of water to the departed.

There was some difference of opinion as to the offering of water (udakakriyā or udakadāna) to the deceased by his sapiṇḍas and samānodakas Āśv gr. quoted above (p 209) speaks of offering water once, but the Sat. Śr 28 2. 72 and others prescribe that water mixed with sesame is offered thrice with joined hands on the day of death to the deceased after reciting his gotra and name and every day thereafter up to the 11th.[511] Gaut Dh. S. 14. 38, Vas. 4 12 prescribe that water should be offered by sapiṇḍas to the deceased with their faces to the south on the first, third, seventh and ninth days of death and Haradatta says that in all 75 añjalis of water were to be offered (three on 1st day, 9 on 3rd, 30 on 7th and 33 on 9th), but that the usage in his country was that on the first day water was offered three times with joined hands and then one more añjali on each succeeding day from the 2nd. prescribe that water and pinda were to be offered to the deceased for ten days.[512] The Śuddhiprakāśa (p. 202) quotes verses from Gṛhya-pariśiṣṭa, one of which says that some declare that only ten añjalis were to be offered, some say 100 were to be offered and others that 55 were to be offered and that one should follow the usage settled in one's vedic Śākhā. The Āśv. gr. pariśiṣṭa 3. 4 has a similar rule in prose The Garuḍapurāṇa (Pretakhanda chap. 5 verses 22–23) also refers to the offering of 10, 55, or 100 añjalis. Some smṛtis prescribed that the number of añjalis of water were dependent on the caste of the deceased. Pracetas (q. by Mit. on Yāj. III. 4) provides that 10, 12, 15, 30 añjalis should be respectively offered to a deceased person of the brāhmana, ksatriya, vaiśya or śūdra varna. Yama (verses 92–94) states how water is to be offered to the deceased standing in navel-deep water and (98) prescribes that water is to be offered in water to gods and pitṛs but on the ground to those that died without upanayana being performed. In a smṛti quoted by Devayājñika[513] it is stated that six pindas were to be offered from the day of death as follows: at the place where the death occurred, at the door of the house, where four roads meet, where the funeral procession on the way to the cemetery rested, on the pile of wood arranged for burning (citā), and at the time of the collection of the burnt bones. It was further provided that for the benefit of the departed a lamp fed by sesame oil was to be kept burning continuously for ten days after death and an earthenware vessel was to be kept filled with water and a handful of cooked rice was to be offered on the ground at the time of the mid-day meal after uttering the name and gotra of the departed. This was called pātheya śrāddha because it helped the departed to go on his way from the earth to the world of the departed (vide Dharmasindhu p 463). According to some of the digests a śrāddha called Nagna-pracchādana was to be performed on the day of the death of a person after his sapindas undergo shaving and bath, enter the village and the house. It consists in filling a jar with grains of rice wound round with a piece of cloth and putting clarified butter in a vessel of bell-metal and some gold (or coins) thereon according to one's ability. The whole was to be given to a poor brāhmana of good family after remembering Visnu for the benefit of the departed Vide Smrtimuktāphala (on śr) pp. 595-596, Sm C (on Āśauca p. 176).

The smrtis and purānas (like Kūrma, uttarārdha 23. 70) prescribe that after offering with joined hands water to the deceased a ball of rice or barley flour with sesame was to be presented on darbha grass There are two views on this point. According to Yāj. III. 16 a pinda was to be offered for three days after death according to the procedure prescribed for Pinda-pitr-yajña (such as wearing of the sacred thread on the right shoulder and under the left shoulder), while according to Visnu 19. 13 one pinda was to be offered every day as long as impurity on death lasted The pinda was to be offered on darbhas spread on the ground if the deceased had his upanayana performed, but without mantras or may be offered on a stone[514] While water could be offered by any and every sapinda, pinda was to be offered only by the son (and when there were many sons, by the eldest if free from defect); in default of a son the nearest sapinda like a brother or brother's son was to offer it and in default of such then the sapindas of the mother (maternal uncle, his son or the like) could[515] offer it. Even when pindas were to be offered for three days or āśauca lasted only for 3 days the pindas were prescribed to be ten by Śatātapa and Pāraskara distributed them as follows· three on the first day, four on the 2nd and 3 on the third and Daksa[516] distributed them as follows· one on the first day, four on the 2nd and five on the 3rd Pāraskara prescribed that 10, 12, 15, 30 pindas were to be offered according to the varna of the deceased In the case cited above from A I. R. 1945 Patna p 211 at p 219 it has been stated that according to the Benares school 4, 5 or 6 pindas are offered at the time of cremation, while according to the Mithilā school only one pinda is offered. Everybody, whether a person of the same gotra as the deceased or of another gotra, had to carry out all the rites up to the tenth day when he once began them on the day of death, as stated by the Grhya-pariśiṣta[517] and Garudapurāna. It is further prescribed that when the funeral rites are begun by a person and then a nearer relative such as a son comes, even then the former is to carry on all the rites up to the 10th day, but the rites of the 11th and later days are to be performed by the son and in default of him by a near sapinda. The Matsyapurāna states[518] that pindas should be offered to the deceased for twelve days; they become his food on his journey (to the other world) and they give him satisfaction; since the deceased is taken to the abode of departed spirits after twelve days, he (his spirit) sees his house, sons and wife for twelve days Ṛsyaśrnga quoted by Aparārka (p. 889) specifies the limbs of an ethereal body with which the deceased is endowed on each day of the ten days after death when a pinda is offered The Garudapurāna (pretakhanda chap. 5. 33–36) says the same.

Just as sapindas of the same gotra and samānodakas were bound to offer water to the deceased, a person was bound to offer water to his maternal grandfather and to the two further ancestors and to his ācārya on their death. Every man, if he so desired (i. e. he was under no religious duty), could offer water to his friend, to his married sister or daughter, to his sister's son, father-in-law and his sacrificial priest on their death (Pār. gr. III. 10, Śankha-Likhita, Yāj.[519] III. 4) Pāraskara (III. 10) refers to a peculiar practice. When the sapindas are about to enter water for bathing and thereafter offering water to the deceased they pray to their relatives or brother-in-law for water with the words 'we shall perform udakakriyā', where-upon the other replies 'do so but don't come again (with a similar request),' if the deceased was less than one hundred years of age, but the reply would be simply 'do so' if the deceased was hundred years of age or more.[520] The G. P. S. (I, 4, 4–6) has a somewhat similar symbolic dialogue. A king's officer, a sagotra or a brother-in-law takes a branch having thorns and prevents them from entering water with the words 'don't enter'; then the sapindas should reply 'we shall not again enter water'. The probable significance of this was that they thereby would be able to escape from another death in the family soon after.

There were rules prohibiting certain persons from offering water to the deceased and also directing that water should not be offered to certain deceased persons. Impotent[521] persons and the like, thieves of gold, vrātyas, those who follow forbidden conduct and women that kill their own foetus or husband and that drink the kind of liquor (forbidden to them) should not offer water to a deceased person. Yāj (III. 6) provides that water should not be offered to and no āśauca observed for heretics, for those who do not belong to one of the four āśramas, to thieves, to women who kill their husbands or who are guilty of prostitution or who drink surā, or who commit suicide. Journey, who commit suicide by fasting or by means of a weapon or by fire, by poison, in water, by hanging or falling from a precipice or tree, there is no cremation, no āśauca, no offering of water or pinda. Haradatta on Gaut, 14. 11 quotes three verses from Brahmapurāṇa that those who die of a brāhmaṇa's curse or black magic and those who are patitas are dealt with in the same way. But Angiras (q. by Mit. on Yāj. III. 6) says that if one dies by water or fire or the like through inadvertence, there was āśauca for him and udakakriyā was performed. Vide Vaik. Sm S. V. 11 for a long list of persons who must not be cremated. In the Mahābhārata the rites of cremation have been described frequently e. g. the cremation of Pāṇḍu in Ādiparva, chap 127 (the body was carried in a śibikā covered on all sides, there were musical instruments, the royal parasol and chowries were carried in the procession, distribution of wealth to mendicants, carrying the dead body to the bank of the Ganges on a charming sylvan spot, bathing the body, applying sandalwood paste to it), of Drona in Strīparva, chap 23.38–42 (three Sāmans were sung, his pupils with Droṇa's wife in front went round the funeral pyre, going to the Ganges); of Bhīsma in Anuśāsana 169 10–19 (fragrant resins were used on the pyre, his body was covered with fine clothes and flowers, an umbrella and chowries were held over the body, Kaurava women fanned the body with fans, sāmans were sung); of Vasudeva in Mausalaparva 7. 19–25; of killed warriers in general in Strīparva, chap. 26. 28–43 and of Kuntī, Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Gāndhārī in Āśramavāsikaparva, chap. 39. In the Rāmāyana (Ayodhyā, chap 76 verses 16–20), it is said that the funeral pyre for Daśaratha was made with sandalwood, aguru and fragrant resins, with Sarala, Padmaka and Devadāru (pine) wood and various fragrant substances were heaped thereon, then Daśaratha's body was placed on the pyre and that Kausalyā and other women followed the corpse in śibikās and conveyances according to their status.

If an āhitāgni died away from home, the Śat. Br. (XII. 5.1.13–14) provides that, having brought his bones home they were to be spread on a black antelope skin and arranged in imitation of the human frame, were to be covered with wool and ghee and burnt with his śrauta fires and sacrificial implements. Similar rules are laid down in Kāt. Śr. 25.8–9, Baud. P. S, III 8, Gobhilasmṛti III.47, Vas. Dh. S. IV. 37.

If even the bones could not be found, then the sūtras following the Ait Br. (chap. 32.1) and similar ancient works[523] provide that on a skin of black antelope one should make the effigy of a human frame with palāśa stalks (leaves) 360 in[524] number, the effigy should be bound round with woollen thread, should be covered with yava flour mixed with water and anointed with clarified butter and cremated with his fires and sacrificial implements. The Brahmapurāṇa (q. by Śuddhiprakāśa p. 187) contains similar rules about burning an effigy and ordains three days' impurity thereafter. Acc. to a smṛti (q by Aparārka p. 545), the palāśa leaves were to be 362. They were to be distributed according to Baud. P S and Gaut. P S. as follows: 40 represent the head, 10 the neck, 20 the chest, 30 the abdomen (udara), 50 each of the arms, 10 the fingers of the two hands, 70 each of the two legs, 10 the toes of the feet, 8 the male organ, 12 the testicles. This is also the enumeration in Sat Śr. 29.4.39. Vide also Śān. Śr. IV 15.19–31,[525] Kāt. Śr. XXV. 8.15, Baud. P. S. III 8, G. P. S. It may be stated here that all the sūtras and smṛtis do not entirely agree as to the number of palāśa leaves taken as representing the several parts of the body, as may be seen from a comparison of the Śān. Śr. quoted in the note with Baud. P S. set out here. A smṛti quoted by Aparārka (p 545) gives the numbers as follows: 32 for the head, 60 for the neck, 80 for the chest, 20 for the hip and loins, 20 each for the two arms, 10 for fingers, 6 for testicles, 4 for the penis, 60 for the two thighs, 20 for the knees, 20 for the lower parts of the legs, 10 for toes of the feet. Jātūkarnya (q by Aparārka p. 545) and Bhavisyapurāna (q. by Śuddhiprakāśa p. 187) say that when a son does not hear for 15 years about his father who had gone to a distant land, he should perform the cremation of the effigy (called 'ākrtidahana'). Bṛhaspati advises waiting for 12 years before resorting to ākrtidahana (Śuddhipr. p 187). The Vaikhānasa-smārta-sūtra V. 12 regards the burning of the effigy as a meritorious act for every one and does not restrict it to the case where the body or bones are not found. The Śuddhiprakāśa p. 187 quotes several verses from the Brahmapurāna that the procedure of burning an effigy of palāśa stalks was to be followed even in the case of one who has not consecrated Śrauta fires and āśauca for three days has to be observed, while the āśauca for burning the effigy of an āhitāgni was ten days.

It is further provided in Sat Śr. 29. 4. 41, Baud P. S. (III. 7. 4) and Garudapurāna II. 4. 169–70 that, if after the effigy is cremated in the belief that a person died in a foreign land, he returns alive, then he is plunged in a pit containing clarified butter and then he comes out of it, takes a bath, then all the saṁskāras from jātakarma are performed on him, then he marries the same wife again or if she be dead, he may marry another girl, then consecrate again śrauta fires. Some sūtras provide that if the wife of an āhitāgni dies before him, he may, if he so desires, cremate her with his śrauta fires or he may cremate her with fire prepared from cowdung and some easily inflammable things (like straw) placed in three sthālīs (cooking pots [526]). Manu (V. 167–168) provides that if the savarṇa and virtuous wife of a twice-born person who had consecrated sacred śrauta fires died before him she was to be cremated with his fires (śrauta and smārta) and with the sacrificial implements. Then he may marry again and consecrate śrauta or smārta fires again. To the same effect are Yāj. I. 89, Baud. P S. the effect that if a person keeps the same śrauta fires after the death of his wife they are (impure like) the fires used for burning a corpse and adds that even if a brāhmana āhitāgni had a wife of the ksatriya class and she died before him, she was to be cremated with his śrauta fires This view is opposed to that of many other commentators and he explains Manu V 167 (where 'savarnām' occurs) as merely illustrative and that if it were interpreted as restricted to a savarna wife alone, there would be the fault of vākyabheda. Some of the smrtis provide that he may remain a widower and perform his Agnihotra by having a golden effigy of the wife or one made of kuśa grass, as Rāma did Vide Gobhilasmrti III.[528] 9-10, Vrddha-Hārita XI. 214 If the householder did not marry again (when his wife died before him and was cremated with his śrauta fires) and did not consecrate fresh vedic fires he was to be cremated with ordinary fire If the householder was unable to marry again, he may cremate his wife with fire kindled by means of the kindling sticks (aranis) and keep his śrauta fires and carry on agnihotra with the image or effigy of the wife. Pāraskara-gr.[528c] III. 10, Yāj III. 1, Manu V. 68-69, Yama and some others provide that a child that had not completed two years at death was to be buried under ground in an unsullied spot outside the village (other than the usual cemetery), the dead body being anointed with ghee and decked with flowers and sandal paste and that no burning nor offering of water nor the collection of bones was to be performed in this case The relatives may all follow the body or not and Yama allows the recital of the Yamasūkta (Ṛg. X. 14) and the verses in honour of the god Yama. Manu V 70, however, states other optional provisions viz. that the offering of water may be done (and therefore the cremation also of the dead body) in the case of infants that have struck teeth or after nāmakaraṇa. Therefore there is an option as to cremating an infant of less than two years, viz it may be buried or cremated after nāmakarana or after the appearance of teeth. In this case it is not necessary that all the sapinda relatives should follow the dead body If a child is two years old or more at death and upanayana has not been performed it must be cremated with ordinary fire and water must be offered silently. The same rule applies to a child whose cūḍā (tonsure) had been performed before death as stated by Laugākṣi.[528d] The Vaik. Sm. S. V.11 lays down that there is no burning with fire until the 5th year for a boy and the 7th year for a girl After Upanayana the child was to be cremated according to the rites prescribed for an āhitāgni so far as they could be applied (i. e. there would be cremation without sacrificial implements and the mantra 'asmāt tvamabhijātosi' was not to be recited) The Baud[529] P. S. (II 3.10-11) provides that there is no cremation for children dying before the performance of caula (tonsure) and there is no pitṛmedha for those whose upanayana had not been performed at death or for unmarried girls. It also provides that infants that have struck no teeth are to be buried with syllable 'om' and those that have had teeth with the Vyāhṛtis The Mit. on Yāj. III 2 summarises the rules as follows: Before Nāmakarana there was to be only burial and no offering of water and the like; after Nāmakarana up to the third year cremation and offering of water are optional with burial, from the third year up to upanayana there is cremation and also offering of water but silently (without mantras), if Cūdā ceremony was performed before the 3rd year and the child died then also the same rule applied. After Upanayana the deceased was to be cremated with ordinary fire but the procedure was to be the same as for an āhitāgni.

A yati (sannyāsin) was and is even now buried. In a previous note (n. 528b) a verse of Kratu is quoted that a brahmacārin and yati are to be cremated with uttapana fire. The explanation of the Śuddhiprakāśa (p. 166) is that the word yati here means an ascetic of the Kutīcaka kind and quotes a [530] verse as to how the dead bodies of the yatis of four grades are to be disposed of. The [531] Baud. P. S. III.11 gives a brief description which is adopted with some variations by the Smrtyarthasāra (p. 98) that contains a description of the death rites of a parivrājaka.[532] One should go to the east or north of the village, he should dig a pit (lit. a sacrificial place) as deep as the staff (carried by the yati) under a palāśa tree or on a river bank or on some other pure spot to the accompaniment of the vyāhrtis; then he should sprinkle water thereon thrice repeating the seven vyāhrtis each time, should spread darbha grass on the bottom of the pit, should deck the dead body (with garlands, sandal paste), deposit the body in the pit with the mantra (Tai S.I.1.3.1) 'O Visnu! guard this offering (the dead body).' He should place in the right hand the staff of the parivrājaka (breaking it into three parts) with the mantra 'Visnu took strides over this' (Rg. I.22.17, Vāj. S. V.15, Tai. S. I.2.13.1). He then invokes with the mantras beginning with 'cittih sruk' (ten sentences in Tai. Ā, Maitrāyaṇī S I 9 1 which are called 'caturhotārah')[533] The other rites are not performed here as they were performed before No cremation should be done, no āśauca should be observed nor should water be offered to (an ascetic who is dead) who was free from all attachments and who had given himself up to meditation. The Smṛtyarthasāra adds that no ekoddiṣṭa śrāddha nor sapiṇḍīkaraṇa is performed for an ascetic, but only pārvaṇa on the 11th day, that a kuṭīcaka should be cremated, the bahūdaka should be buried, hamsa should be thrown into water and paramahamsa should be thoroughly buried. The Nirṇayasindhu (pp 634–635) quotes the Smṛtyarthasāra and then adds a few details from Bṛhat-Śaunaka, viz that the dead body of a yati should be bathed with the Puruṣasūkta (Ṛg X, 90), then the pit (dug for burial) should be sprinkled eight times with the syllable 'Om' on all sides; having deposited the body in the pit with the Yajus formula 'O Viṣṇu! guard this offering' (Tai S I 1. 3.1) and with 'Om', he should place in the right hand the staff with the mantra 'Viṣṇu took strides over this' (Ṛg. I 22. 17), then pierce the crown of the head with a conch by repeating the mantra 'bhūr-bhuvah-svah', he should fill up the pit with salt to the recitation of the Puruṣasūkta (Ṛg. X. 90). He should fill up the pit thoroughly (with sand) in order to guard against jackals and dogs and the like (exhuming the body with their paws) The Dharmasindhu (p 497) adds some details particularly as to the number of hymns and mantras to be repeated It states that the crown of the head should be pierced with a conch or an axe, that one who is unable to do this should smash a ball of jaggery placed on the head. It adds that no yati except kuṭīcaka should be cremated. In modern times a sannyāsin is always buried and not cremated, since kuṭīcaka and bahūdaka kinds of yati are no longer in vogue and it is only the paramahamsa that is prevalent in the whole of India. The reason why ascetics were buried and not cremated appears to me to be as follows; part of the procedure of becoming an ascetic consisted in giving up his śrauta fires and throwing in fire his sacrificial wooden implements (vide H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 954). One of the rules for ascetics is that he should not kindle śrauta or smārta fires nor kindle ordinary fire for cooking his food but was to subsist on cooked food obtained by begging (H. of Dh. vol II pp. 933–934). The householder was cremated with his śrauta or smārta fire but the ascetic, having abjured these, was without any fire and was therefore buried. The Vaikhānasasmārtasūtra X. 8 (ed. by Caland) contains a brief description of the burial of an ascetic who was not an āhitāgni and the cremation of an ascetic who was āhitāgni.

Special rules were laid down about the cremation of women dying in or immediately after child-birth and women dying while still in their monthly illness. A smṛti quoted by the Mit and the Smṛti-candrikā (I p. 121) provides that in the case of a sūtikā, one should take water and pañcagavya in a jar, should repeat holy texts (such as 'āpo hi sthā' Ṛg. X. 9. 1–9, verses addressed to Varuna) over them, should then bathe the sūtikā with water and pañcagavya and then cremate the body. A woman in her monthly illness was to be similarly bathed and she was to be covered with another garment and then cremated. Vide Garudapurāna II. 4. 171 ff and Nirnayasindhu p. 621. Similarly, elaborate rules are prescribed about the rites of cremation in relation to the death of a pregnant woman (vide Baud P. S. III. 9, Nirnayasindhu p. 622) which are passed over here.

Dead bodies were disposed off in different ways at different times and in different countries The various methods of disposal were cremation, burial underground, water burial, exposure of the body for being destroyed[534] by vultures and other birds (as among Zoroastrians) or beasts, being preserved in caves,[535] or being mummified (as in Egypt). The general rule in India from times of which we have literary evidence was cremation; though burial took place in certain exceptional cases such as in the case of infants, ascetics &c How the ancient Indians hit upon this scientific though rather heart-rending method of the disposal of dead bodies it is difficult to say[536]. Burials were not unknown in India even in very early times, as Atharvaveda 5. 30 14 (mā nu bhumigrho bhuvat) and 18 2 34 show. The last may be rendered as follows: O Agni! bring all those pitrs here in order that they may partake of the offering, those (pitrs whose bodies) were buried or cast aside (exposed) or burnt or deposited above (on trees or in caves?)[536a]. In the word 'anagnidagdhāh' occurring in Ṛg. X. 15. 14, scholars see a reference to burial. But it is quite possible that no burial is referred to. If some ancestors were killed far from home in a fight or if they were kidnapped and killed by enemies, their bodies might have been left uncared for in a distant land and not cremated nor buried. A passage in the Chāndogya[537] Up. (VIII. 8. 5) is construed by some scholars as referring to burials. It may be rendered as follows: Therefore they designate even now a man, an asura who does not make gifts, who has no faith and who offers no sacrifices; for this is the esoteric doctrine of Asuras. They deck out the body of the dead with bhikṣā (perfumes and flowers?), with a raiment by way of decoration, and think that they will thus conquer the next world. Though the passage is not quite clear, the reference to Asuras, their usage of decorating the dead body and thereby being able to gain the next world render it probable that the usage of the burial of the body among Asuras is referred to. In Ṛg. VII 89. 1 the sage prays 'O Varuna!

534. According to the Parsi scriptures burying a human corpse in the earth was a grave sin and if the body was not disinterred there was no atonement in the case of a professor of the law of Mazd or one who had studied it and if he did not disinter it within six months or within a year, he was liable to receive five hundred or a thousand stripes respectively Vide Vendidad, Eargard III (S B E Vol. 4 pp 31–32). Corpses were to be laid down on the summits of mountains to be devoured by birds and dogs and the exposure of corpses was the most striking practice of the Mazdean profession (S B E Vol IV part 1 Intro p XLV).

536. Vulliamy in 'Immortal man' (p. 34) throws out the suggestion that one of the purposes of cremation may have been the complete destruction of the human aspect of the ghost or its transference to a region from which contact with mankind in any material sense was impossible may I not go to the earthen house'. This is probably a reference to burial. Besides, after the charred bones were collected, they were placed in an urn or pot, which was buried in the ground and after a good deal of time a mound (śmaśāna) was built upon the bones as will be seen immediately from a passage in the Śat Br. and other sources In A. V. XVIII 2 25 it is said, 'may the tree not oppress them, nor the great goddess Earth'. This is probably a reference to a coffin and burial.

It is somewhat curious that the progressive nations of the West, believing in a literal interpretation of the Biblical words (such as Matthew 22. 23–33, Mark 12. 18–27 and Luke 20. 37–38, John 5. 19–31 and 6. 32–56) about physical resurrection of the dead, held fast by burial alone and up to the end of the 19th century people in Christendom would not allow the cremation of a dead body. The case of Reg. v. Price illustrates how deep the sentiment against cremation was and how popular fury prevented Price from disposing of the body of his dead child of five months by petroleum fire in a field, how he was prosecuted for two offences viz. misdemeanor at Common Law for burning a dead body instead of burying it and misdemeanor on the ground that he attempted to burn the body with intent to prevent an inquest being held on it by the coroner.[538] It was only in 1902 that the Cremation Act (2 Edw. 7 Ch. 8) was passed empowering burial authorities to establish crematoria on plans approved by the Minister of Health. The Catholic Church does not even now allow cremation. The ancient Romans on the other hand held cremation as the honourable means of the disposal of the dead body but reserved burial for the suicide and the murderer.

Embalming the dead for some time at least was not quite unknown in India. The Sat. Śr. 29. 4. 29 and Vaik. Śr. 31.23[539] prescribe that if an āhitāgni died away from his people his corpse should be laid down in a tub or trough filled with sesame oil and brought home in a cart. In the Rāmāyana it is several times said that the body of Daśaratha was placed for several

What the state of things was before the composition of the Ṛgveda cannot be said with certainty. There is no general agreement as to the age of the Ṛgveda and of the ruins found at Mohenjo-daro and Harappa. Sir John Marshall (in Mohenjo-daro vol. I. p. 86) refers to complete burials, partial burials and post cremation burials. The excavations at Lauriya [541] Nandangarh have brought to light supposed Vedic burial mounds in which has been found a small repousse golden plaque bearing the figure of a nude female, the Earth Goddess These and the disposal of corpses in paleolithic ages are matters for archaeologists and are outside the proper scope of the present work.

The Hāralatā (p. 126) quotes a passage from the Ādipurāna to the effect that Magas (Magians) are buried underground and that Daradas and Luptrakas (?) go away after placing their dead relatives on trees. [541a]

It appears that among early Buddhists in India hardly any religious ceremony was performed, whether the person deceased was a layman or even a member of the Order. In the Mahāparinibbāna Suttanta the death and the funeral ceremonies of the great founder of Buddhism are described in chapter VI (Section 14 ff). All that is gathered from that chapter is that the favourite disciple of the Buddha, Ānanda, uttered a stanza, some of the disciples that were not free from passion wept and fell headlong on the ground, while others (who were Arahats) bore the grief with composure, that next morning Ānanda went to the Mallas of Kusinārā, that the Mallas took perfumes, garlands, all musical instruments and five hundred suits of apparel, the Mallas passed seven days in paying homage to the body of the Buddha that lay in the śāla grove with dancing, hymns, music, garlands and perfumes, in making canopies of their garments, that on the 7th day they carried the body of the Blessed One to the south but owing to a miracle (described in sections 29-32) they carried it through the city by the north gate and laid the body to the east (the general rule was that a dead body was not to be carried through the middle of a village, and was to be carried to the south but as Buddha was so extraordinary and holy the above was allowed to be done). The body of the Buddha was then wrapped in a new cloth, then with cotton wool, then in a new cloth and so on till 500 layers of cloth and cotton wool covered the body The body was then placed in an oil vessel of iron which was covered with another oil vessel of iron. Then a funeral pile of all kinds of perfumes was built upon which the body was placed. Then Mahākassapa and five hundred brethren accompanying him arranged their robes on one shoulder (representing the way in which the sacred thread is arranged among the brāhmanas), bowed down with clasped hands, went round the body reverently thrice. The body was then burnt and only bones remained. Then the narrative states that Ajātaśatru, king of Magadha, the Licchavis of Vesāli and several others claimed portions of the relics of the Buddha. Then the relics were divided into eight parts. Those who received them built mounds (Thūpas) over the relics and the Moriyas who got only embers also built a Thūpa over them and a brāhmana Dona (Drona) built a mound over the jar (kumbha) in which the bones were collected. Mr. Rhys Davids remarks (S. B. E vol. XI Introduction p. XLV) 'though funerals are naturally not infrequently mentioned in the historical books and in the Birth stories there is nowhere any reference to a recognised mode of performing any religious worship'. It will be noticed that the Buddhist ritual[542], though simple, agrees closely with some of the rules of Āśv. gṛ.

After the relatives (sons and the like) of a deceased person have offered water, have taken a bath and after they emerge from the water (of a river or the like) and are sitting on a plot of soft green grass, elderly persons should talk to them (in order to lessen their grief) about ancient narratives (Yāj. III 7 and G. P. S. I 4.2[543]). Viṣṇu Dh. S. 20. 22–53 contain a long disquisition on the grip that Kāla (Time, Death) has on every body including even Indra, gods, daityas, great kings and sages, how everyone that is born is sure to die (i. e Death is inevitable), and how no one (except the wife) can follow the departed on his journey to the other world, how the good actions and bad actions will accompany the spirit of the dead, how śrāddha confers great benefit on the departed; it winds up that therefore the surviving relatives should offer śrāddha and give up lamentations that help no one, that it is dharma that alone follows the soul through his wanderings[544]. Yāj III 8–11 (=Garuḍapurāṇa II. 4. 81–84) are verses in a similar strain and are intended to serve the same purpose. They are: 'He, who seeks everlastingness in this human life that is as devoid of strength as the stock of a plantain plant, and that is as inconstant as a bubble of water, is a deluded person. What is the use of lamentation if the body, created out of the five elements by reason of actions performed in a former life, returns to those five elements? The earth, the ocean and the gods found, enshrines the relics, not of the Bhagavān Buddha, but of his kinsmen. Fleet further refers to the tradition that the great emperor Aśoka dug up seven out of the eight mounds of the relics of Buddha and transferred almost all their contents to 84000 boxes of gold and silver and distributed them throughout India and built monuments (stūpas) over them Rhys Davids in 'Buddhist India' (pp. 78–80), after stating that deceased persons of distinction either by birth or wealth or official status or as public teachers were cremated and the ashes were buried under a tope (Pali 'thūpa'), remarks 'The dead bodies of ordinary people were disposed of in a unique way. They were put away in a public place There as a rule the bodies or the remains of the pyre were not buried but left to be destroyed by birds or beasts or dissipated by the process of natural decay'.

are destined to go to destruction (at some future date when pralaya takes place). How is it possible that the world of mortals which is (evanescent) like foam will not meet with destruction? As the departed spirit, being helpless, has to swallow the tears and phlegm cast by kinsmen, they should not weep but should perform (obsequial) rites according to their ability.' Gobhilasmrti III. 39 urges 'do not lament for what is perishable and what is the characteristic (destiny) of all beings. Exert yourselves in the performance of meritorious acts which will accompany you' Gobhila then quotes Yāj. III. 8-10 and one verse from the Mahābhārata [544a] viz. 'All collections are to end in dissipation, all rise is to end in fall, all unions in separation and life in death'. Aparārka quotes the Rāmāyana and Vāsudeva's words from the Śalyaparva to Dhrtarāstra on the death of Duryodhana. The Par. M. I. 2 pp. 292-93, the Śuddhiprakāśa pp. 205-206 and several other works quote the verses of Visnu, Yāj. and Gobhila.

The Garudapurāna here (II. 4. 91-100) waxes eloquent over the immolation of a wife on her husband's funeral pyre, over the miraculous power of a pativratā, and states that a brāhmana woman should not burn herself apart from her husband's body (or after he is cremated), but that ksatriya and other women may do so, that the practice of satī is common to all women even including chāndāla women, but pregnant women or those that have young children should not do so and that a woman does not become free from the liability to be born again and again as a woman until she becomes a Satī.

After listening to the philosophical discourse of elders the relatives return to their house, placing children in front and standing at the door of the house, they with minds under control bite the leaves of the nimba tree, perform ācamana, touch fire, water, cowdung, white mustard; then they should enter their house after slowly (firmly) planting their foot on a stone. According [545] to Śankha the relatives should touch the tendrils of Dūrvā, fire and a bull, should offer a pinda to the departed at Baijavāpa[546] q. by Śuddhitattva prescribes the mantras to be recited in touching śamī, the stone (aśmā), fire and provides further that a cow and a goat should be touched holding fire between themselves and these animals: food should be purchased or obtained from another's house, it should be of one kind only without salt, that they should for one day eat only by day and stop all actions for three days. Yāj III. 14 prescribes that the actions prescribed by him in III. 12 for relatives (viz. biting nimba leaves up to entering the house) must be done by others who, though no relatives, carried the corpse or decked it &c.

Śr. provides that they should sleep on the bare ground (not on a cot), they should subsist on sacrificial food, they should give up the performance of their usual religious duties (except in relation to the vedic fires) for one night, three nights or nine nights or till the day of the collection of the bones. The Āśv. gr. (IV. 4.17-24) provides these observations viz. 'Let them not cook food during that night, let them subsist on bought food or on food received from others, let them eat no mineral salt or ordinary [548] salt for three nights, let them optionally avoid for twelve nights the distribution of gifts and the study of vedic texts if one of the principal gurus (father, mother or the teacher who performed upanayana and taught the whole Veda) dies. Pār. gr. III. 10 adds that they should remain chaste, eat food only once in the day and that they should not repeat Veda study, and should give up the daily obligatory duties except those connected with Vedic fires. Manu (V. 73) adds that they should not eat flesh for three days. Vas. (4.14–15) lays down that the relatives who returned from the cemetery should sit down for three days on mats and fast, that if they are unable (to fast for three days) they should subsist on food bought in the market or obtained unasked. Yāj. III 17 and Pār. III. 10 [549] provide that for the night they should put milk and water in an earthen vessel in the open space (on a śikya) with the words 'O departed one! bathe here (in the water) and drink this milk'. Yāj III. 17, Paithīnasi, Manu V. 84, Par. gr. III 10, and others state that the relatives of the departed should perform their own daily rites to be performed in the śrauta fires (such as Agnihotra and Darśapūrnamāsa) and in the smārta fire (such as morning and evening homa) on account of the peremptory dictates of the Veda (such as 'one should perform Agnihotra as long as one lives'). The commentators have added several limitations and restrictions. The Mit. [550] on Yāj. III. 17 states that, as Manu V. 84 only prohibits the stopping of the rites in (Vedic and Smārta) fires, such religious duties as the five daily Mahāyajñas are excluded, that Vaiśvadeva, though performed in fire, is excluded because there is an express text of Samvarta a brāhmana should be without Vaiśvadeva for ten days (after the death of a sapinda), that the Śrauta and Smārta rites should be got performed by another, as Pāraskara (III 10 'anya etāni kuryuh) expressly lays down Only nitya and naimittika acts to be performed in Vedic and Smārta fires are allowed and so kāmya rites cannot be performed. Even at present Agnihotrins perform their śrauta nitya homa during days of impurity themselves, though some get it performed by another (Vide Yāj. III. 17, Manu V 84). Although there is a text of Gobhilasmṛti (III 60) prohibiting the performance of sandhyā, yet relying on a sūtra of Paiṭhīnasi the Mit says that a man can offer water to the Sun in worship; others like the Smṛtimuktāphala (p. 478) say that sandhyā mantras may be revolved in the mind, except the prāṇāyāma mantras. This is followed in modern times in many parts of India. Viṣṇu Dh. S. 22 6 prescribes that in impurity due to birth or death homa (Vaiśvadeva), giving and accepting gifts and the study of Veda cease. The Vaik Sm. S. VI.4 states that the performance of sandhyā adoration, all rites for the gods and manes, gift and acceptance and Veda study should be given up during impurity on death. Gautama 14.44 appears to hold that a brāhmaṇa is not affected by impurity on birth and death for the purposes of Veda study. On the other hand Saṃvarta [551] (43) affirms that on the days of impurity on birth and death there is no performance of the five Mahāyajñas nor of Veda study. The Nityācāra-paddhati p 544 states that even in āśauca the thousand names of Viṣṇu may be recited.

Asthisañcayana or Sañcayana means that rite in which the (charred) bones (of the cremated person) are collected. This rite is dealt with in many sūtra and smṛti works, such as Śān. Śr. IV. 15. 12–18, Sat Śr. 28. 3, Āśv. gṛ. IV. 5 1–18, Gaut P. S I. 5, Viṣṇu Dh. S. 19. 10–12, Baud P. S I. 14, Kauśika-sūtra 82. 29–32, Vaik. Smārta Sūtra V. 7, Yama 87–88, Saṁvarta 38, Gobhila-smṛti III. 54–59 (q. by Hāralatā p. 183). There is great divergence of views about the day on which this was to be done. For example, Sat Śr. 28. 3. 1 provides: [552] 'bones are collected on the next day (after cremation) or on the 3rd, 5th or 7th.' Saṃvarta (verse 38) and Garuḍapurāṇa (Pretakhaṇḍa 5 15) prescribe that collection of bones should be made on the 1st, 3rd, 7th or 9th and (particularly) on the 4th by twice-born persons The Vāmanapurāṇa (14 97–98) allows it on the 1st, 4th or 7th day. Yama (87) requires the relatives to collect bones from the 1st to the 4th day after cremation and also provides (verse 88)

that the four varṇas should respectively perform sañcayana on the 4th, 5th, 7th and 9th day. The Āśv. gr. S. IV. 5. 1 states that sañcayana should be performed after the 10th day from cremation in the dark half, but on uneven tithis (i. e. 1st, 3rd, 11th, 13th, 15th) and on a nakṣatra which bears a name not applicable to two or more nakṣatras (i. e. except on the two Āṣāḍhas, two Phalgunīs and two Bhādrapadās). Viṣṇu Dh. S. 19 10, Vaik. Smārta-sūtra V. 7, Kauś. 82. 29, Viṣṇupurāṇa III. 13 14, Kūrmapurāṇa (uttara) 23 and a few other works lay down that sañcayana must be done on the 4th day after cremation. The various texts differ a good deal in details. The following is the procedure in the Āśv. gr. IV. 5:—The bones of a male should be collected into an urn that has no special marks (protuberances), those of a woman in an urn that has protuberances but no other special marks. Aged persons, odd in number [553] not being together with women, (i. e. not as a mixed assemblage) collect the bones. The performer walks thrice round the spot (where the body was burnt) with his left side turned towards the spot, sprinkles on it with a śamī branch milk mixed with water with a verse 'śītike' (Ṛg. X. 16. 14). With the thumb and the 4th finger they (gatherers) should put each single bone into the urn without making a rattling noise (of the bones in the urn), the bones of the feet being taken first, those of the head last. Having well gathered the bones and having purified them with a winnowing basket (i. e. removing the dust attaching to them) they should put the urn in a pit at a place where the waters from different sides do not flow together except rain water with the verse 'upasarpa' (Ṛg. X. 18. 10) and he should throw earth (into the pit) with the following verse (Ṛg X. 18. 11) After having thrown (earth) he should repeat the next verse (Ṛg. X. 18. 12). Then covering (the mouth of the urn) with a lid with the mantra 'ut te stabhnāmi' (Ṛg. X. 18. 13) (he fills up the pit) Then without looking back they return (towards the house), bathe in water and then offer śrāddha to him alone (the departed). Dr. B. N. Datta in his paper 'Vedic funeral customs and Indus Valley culture in 'Man in India', vol. 16

553. The हारलता (p 184) explains अयुजो मिथुनाः प्रवयसः (in आश्व. गृ.) as 'मिथुनं पुरुषद्वयं बहुवचनात् त्रयो मिथुनाः षट् पुरुषा इत्यर्थ. पञ्च वा मिथुना दश पुरुषाः प्रवयस. प्रकृष्टवयस '. It is probable that women also accompanied the cortege to the cemetery in ancient times, that gradually they ceased to do so and by the time of the Hāralatā only men comprised the funeral procession and so it explained the words of Āśv. as above.

pp. 223–307 regards (p. 285) Ṛg. X. 18 as a hymn dealing with burial of the whole body (and not of ashes), while he admits (p 287) that Ṛg. X. 16 is a cremation hymn. I dissent from him for various reasons; the most important is that if his theory be correct a period of several centuries must be postulated between the two hymns. This is inadmissible.

The Kauśikasūtra (82. 29–32) prescribes certain details differently. It says that the bones are collected with A. V. 18. 2. 24, 26, then they are consigned to a jar over which all fragrant powders are scattered, then the jar is raised with the Utthāpanī verses and carried with the verses called Hariṇīs (i e. A V. 18 2 11–18). He (the performer) deposits (in the earth the urn) at the root of a tree with the verse 'mā tvā' (A. V. 18. 2. 25 'May the tree not injure thee all round, may not the wide goddess Earth also injure thee').[554]

The other sūtras present several variations which are passed over here, excepting one or two matters. The Sat. Śr. provides that the twig should be of the Udumbara tree, that the bones are collected by women of the family of the deceased (his wife and others) odd in number (five or more), or other women (in the absence of women of the family). A woman who is not likely to have a child should tie in her left hand a Bṛhatī fruit with two threads, blue and red in colour, should step on a stone with her left foot, collect the bones first from the teeth or head with the mantra 'uttiṣṭhata' (Tai Ā VI. 4. 2) and she should deposit those bones in a jar or garment, then a second woman of the same type collects bones from the shoulders or arms, a third woman from the sides or hips, a fourth from the thighs or legs, and a fifth from the feet They or more women collect the bones completely. The urn is deposited at the root of a śamī or palāśa tree.

In modern times, particularly in towns and cities, the collection of bones has to be done immediately after cremation. The Antyeṣṭi-paddhati closely follows the procedure prescribed in the Āśv. gr quoted above. It says. the performer goes to the place of cremation, sips water, mentions the time and place, makes a saṅkalpa (declaration) that he will perform the collection of the bones of the departed naming him and his gotra. He walks thrice round the place of cremation with his left towards it and sweeps it with a śamī branch and sprinkles it with milk mixed with water with the mantra 'śītike' (Ṛg X. 16. 14). Then old men odd in number with the performer collect the bones (as stated by Āśv. gr. above) and place them in a new jar and if they are of a woman in a jar with protuberances They also winnow the ashes with a śūrpa and place in the jar even small bones and throw the ashes into the Ganges. Then at some time other than the rainy season a pit should be dug in a pure spot whereon water would not flow and the performer deposits the jar in the pit with the mantra 'approach this mother, Earth' (Ṛg. X. 18. 10). With Ṛg X. 18. 11, he throws earth in the pit all round the jar and murmurs with folded hands the mantra (Ṛg X. 18. 12) and he closes the jar with a new earthen disk with the verse Ṛg. X. 18. 13 Then he should put earth on the jar in such a way that it may not be seen by anybody and without looking back should go elsewhere and bathe. The Nirnayasindhu (p. 586) expressly states that the procedure for the collection of bones may be gathered from one's sūtra or from the work of Bhaṭṭa (i. e. Nārāyana, Kamalākara's grandfather).

The Visnudharmasūtra (19. 11–12) and Anu. 26.32 state that the collected bones should be cast in Ganges water, since as many particles of the bones of a man remain in Ganges water for so many thousands of years he dwells in heaven. It was provided in the Purānas that a virtuous son, brother or daughter's son or a relative on the father's or mother's side should cast the bones in the Ganges, that one not so related should not do it and that if he does it he has to perform cāndrāyana prāyaścitta. Even in modern times many Hindus take the charred bones of their parents or other dear relatives to the Ganges at Prayāga (Allahabad) or some other holy river [554a] or cast them into the sea. The Nirnayasindhu (p. 587) quotes an elaborate rite of casting the ashes in the Ganges from Śaunaka It is briefly as follows: The performer should go out of the village, bathe with clothes on, sprinkle the earth where the ashes are deposited with the Gāyatrī and the other mantras usually repeated over pañcagavya. With the four mantras 'upasarpa' (Ṛg. X. 18.10–13) he should respectively pray to the earth, then dig it, take out the earth, and then the bones. Then he should bathe and purify the bones by touching the bones again and again and repeating the mantras 'eto nvindram stavāma śuddham &c' (Ṛg VIII. 95. 7–9). Then he should bathe with pañcagavya and become pure. Then he should bathe ten times with cow's urine, cow's dung, cow's milk, curds, clarified butter, water in which kuśas have been dipped, ashes (of sacred fires), earth, honey and water. Then he should sprinkle (with kuśas) water on the bones with the mantras, viz. Ṛg. I.22 16. Ṛg VIII. 95.7–9,[555] Ṛg VII. 56.12–14, Ṛg. X. 126 1–8, Ṛg. X. 119.1–13, Ṛg. IX. 1.1–10 (called Pāvamānī verses), Ṛg. X 128.1–9, Ṛg. I. 43.1–9 (a hymn to Rudra); then he should offer a hiranya śrāddha for the deceased, offer pinda to him and perform tarpana with sesame. Then he should cover the bones in seven ways viz. by deer-skin, woollen blanket, darbhas, cow's hair, hempen cloth, birch leaf and palm leaf. He should cast among the bones pieces of gold and silver, pearls, coral and sapphire for the purification of the bones, then he should offer into fire 108 oblations of clarified butter and sesame with the hymn beginning with 'udīratām' (Ṛg. X. 15). Then he should cast the bones in holy water; thereby he does not incur the fault of touching an unclean object. While answering the calls of nature or performing ācamana one should not hold the bones.

The Nirnayasindhu adds (p. 588) that there is no asthisañcayana for one whose upanayana had not been performed.

The Āśv. gr. IV.6, the Sat Śr. 28 4, Śān Śr 4 6 (called paridhikarma) and some others prescribe a Śānti rite after collection of the charred bones of a deceased person. The Baud. P. S. (II. 3 3) and Visnu Dh. S. 19.19 appear to prescribe the Śānti rite after the ten days of impurity have expired ('daśarātre saucam krtvā sāntih'). It is described by Āśv. gr as follows: They who have lost a guru (father or mother) by death should perform on the new moon day an expiatory ceremony. Before sunrise they should carry fire together with its ashes and with its receptacle to the south with the half verse 'I send away the flesh-devouring Agni' (Ṛg X 16 9) Having cast that fire down at a place where four roads meet or somewhere else, they

555. It should be noticed that in Ṛg VIII 95 7–9 the word 'śuddha' (pure) occurs thirteen times and hence it is appropriate that those verses are employed as purificatory ones Similarly, in Ṛg. VII. 56.12 the word 'śuci' (pure) occurs six times.

walk round it thrice, with their left side turned to it and beating their left thighs with the left hand. They should then return home without looking back, bathe in water, have their hair, beards and hair on the body and nails cut, furnish themselves with new jars, pots, vessels for rinsing the mouth, with garlands of śamī flowers, with fuel of śamī wood, with two pieces of śamī wood for kindling fire[556] and with branches for encircling the fire, with bull's dung and hide, fresh butter, a stone and as many bunches of kuśa grass as there are young women (in the house). At the time of the Agnihotra (in the afternoon) he should kindle fire (by means of the araṇis) with the half verse 'Here may this other Jātavedas' (Ṛg X. 16.9 latter half)'. Keeping the fire burning they sit till night silence falls, repeating tales of old men (of the family) and stories of auspicious contents, Itihāsas and Purāṇas When all sounds have ceased or when the others (members of the deceased's family) have gone to their houses or resting place, (the performer) should pour out a continuous stream of water beginning at the south side of the door with the verse (Ṛg. X. 53.6) 'spreading the thread follow the light of the world' and go round the house ending at the north side of the door. Then having placed the fire and spread to the west of it a bull's hide with neck to the east, with the hair outside, he should cause the people of the house (including women) to step on that hide with the verse 'Arise to long life'[557] (Ṛg. X. 18.6). He should place twigs round the fire with 'Here do I deposit an encircling thing' (Ṛg. X. 18.4). Having placed a stone to the north of the fire with the words 'May they place a mountain between themselves and death' (Ṛg. X. 18.4 last pāda) and having sacrificed with four verses 'Go hence, O Death' (Ṛg. X. 18.1-4), he should look at his people with the verse 'as days follow each other' (Ṛg. X. 18.5). The young women (belonging to the house) should with each hand separately with the thumb and 4th finger salve (at one and the same time) their eyes with fresh butter by means of young darbha blades and cast away the blades turning their faces away. The performer should look at them while they are salving their eyes, with the verse 'these women, being no widows and having good husbands' (Ṛg. X. 18.7). The former should first touch the stone with 'the stream containing stones flows' (Ṛg. X 53 8). After that, stationing himself to the north-east, while others go round with the fire, bull-dung and a continuous stream of water he should, after repeating the three verses (āpo hi sthā, Ṛg X. 9.1-3), murmur the verse 'these have led round the cows' (Ṛg. X. 155 5). A tawny-coloured bull should be led round. They then sit down at a place where they like to stop, having put on fresh unwashed garments and they sit there till sunrise avoiding sleep. After sunrise, having murmurred the hymns sacred to the sun and auspicious hymns, having prepared food and made oblations with the hymn beginning 'May he burn away evil from us' (Ṛg. I. 97.1-8), verse by verse, having given to the brāhmanas to eat, he should cause them to pronounce auspicious words. A cow, a cup of metal and a fresh unworn garment are the sacrificial fee for each of the brāhmanas.

556. Nārāyaṇa explains that the fire means ordinary kitchen fire and he seems to be right in spite of Oldenberg's note to the contrary on p. 246 (of S. B E vol. 29) The deceased sacrificer is cremated with his śrauta fires (vide Āśv. gr. IV. 4) and smārta fire (if any) and on his death the śāntikarma is performed by the son or other relative who may have no consecrated fires at all or, if he has, he cannot cast them away as long as he lives. The Com on Sat Sr 28. 4, 1 states that it is the adhvaryu priest that kindles the fire and not he who performed the cremation.

557 Most of these mantras occur also in Tai. Ā. VI. 10

A few details may be added from other sūtras. The Sat Śr. (28.4.1) provides that the Śānti is performed on the 10th day after cremation by a priest, that in the folded hands of the wives (of the members of the family) he puts the remains of the material used for oblations with the verse 'these women, not being widows' (Ṛg. X. 18.7=Tai. Ā. VI. 10 2), that the priest plants in the earth the stalk of a plant with the verse 'yathā tvam' (Tai. Ā. VI. 10 2)[558], that after they return home, they cook goat flesh and boil yava grains and eat them and then may occupy couches and cots (i. e. give up the observances of mourning)

Interesting information is furnished by the Śat. Br. about graves (XIII. 8. 1-4) and Kāt Śr[559] It is said in Śat. Br that the grave[560] or monument should not be built too soon after death, lest he (the performer) freshen up the sin of the deceased; that he should make it a long time after and when people do not even remember the years (that have elapsed since the decease). He should make it in uneven years and under a single naksatra (i. e. containing a single star such as Citrā and Pusya, and not dual such as Punarvasu and Viśākhā or plural such as Kṛttikā) and on the New Moon day. Let him make it in autumn or in Māgha or in summer. The sepulchral mound should be four cornered, because the people who are worshippers of gods (or godly) make their burial mounds four-cornered, while those who are followers of Asuras, the Easterns and such like people, make them round. As to the choosing of the ground, the Śat. Br. states several views viz. he makes it on ground sloping towards the north or, according to some, to the south; but the Śat. Br. disapproves of both the views and prescribes that he should make the burial mound on any level ground where the waters flowing from a southernly direction come to the east and stand still without dashing forward and on such a ground one may make it (burial mound). Let him make it on a pleasant and peaceful spot, but not on a road nor in an open space lest he should make the deceased's sin manifest. It should have the sun shining on it (at mid-day). It should not be made at a place where it would be visible from the village and there should be charming objects to its west (woods, gardens &c.). If there be no charming objects there should be waters to its west or north. He makes it on salt (barren) soil, on such ground as abounds in roots. Let him not make it near where grows the Bhūmipāśa plant or where reeds grow, or Aśvagandhā or Adhyaṇḍā, or Pṛśniparnī grows. He should not make it near an aśvattha tree or near a vibhītaka tree or a tilvaka, a sphūrjaka or a haridru or nyagrodha tree or other trees that have an evil name (like ślesmātaka or kovidāra) For one who has performed Agnicayana, he makes a tomb after the manner of the fire altar. One must not make it too large lest he should make the sin (of the deceased) large He should make it just a man's size, broader behind (to the west) and broader on the north side He encloses it with cords twisted in the non-sunwise way. He then bids them to cut out the earth which would be just sufficient for making the mound of a man's size.

The Kāt Śr. (21. 3. 1 and 6) closely follows the above directions contained in the Śat [561] Br The Sat. Śr. 29. 1.2 provides that when the day of cremation is not known or remembered one may erect a mound over the bones (with clods of earth or bricks) on the New Moon day that comes immediately after the Full Moon day of Māgha, Phālguna, Caitra, Vaiśākha or of the summer months (Jyestha and Āsādha)

The Śat. Br. (XIII. 8 2–4) pursues the subject of sepulchral monuments as follows: Godly people make their sepulchres so as not to be separate from the earth; while those who are of the Asura stamp, the Easterns and others, make the sepulchral mounds so as to be separate from the earth, either on a stone basin or a similar thing He then encloses it with an undefined number of stones silently. He then sweeps the sepulchral site with a palāśa branch with (Vāj S. 35.1 'May the niggardly god-haters go away') and prays that Yama may grant him (the deceased) an abode He throws out the branch to the south side He then yokes the team of six oxen to the plough on the south side or on the north side, as he chooses Having given the order 'Yoke' he (the performer) utters the mantra (Vāj. S. 35. 2).[562] Having turned round the plough from right (south side) to the north, he ploughs the first furrow with Vāj. S. 35.3 'May Vāyu purify' along the north side towards the west; with 'May Savitr purify' along the west side towards the south; with 'Agni's lustre' along the south side towards the east, with 'Sūrya's brilliance' along the front side towards the north. Four furrows he ploughs with a Yajus formula. He then ploughs across the body (of the sepulchral site) silently with an undefined number of furrows He then unfastens the team of oxen To the right side (south-west) he removes this (the plough and the team).

He then sows seeds of all kinds of herbs with a single verse (Vāj. S 35 4); for long life he thereby prays for these (the performer's family) and accordingly each subsequent one of them dies of old age He then pours out that (jar of bones). He does so before sunrise so that the sun should rise over him while he is doing it He does so with Vāj S. 35. 5–6. He then says to some one 'Proceed in that (southern) direction without drawing breath and having thrown down the jar, return hither without looking behind.' He then mutters Vāj S. 35.7. He then arranges the dead man (the bones) limb by limb with Vāj. S. 35.8–9. Now thirteen unmarked [563] bricks each measuring a (human) foot (pada) have been made and are laid down

562. It is not possible, owing to considerations of space, to set out all the verses of the Vāj S. chap. 35 mentioned as mantras by the Sat Br Only a few are set out here in order to show how appropriate they are as referring to the actions prescribed by the Sat Br. Verse 1 first half is 'अपेतो यन्तु पणयोऽसुम्ना देवपीयव' ।', सविता ते शरीरेभ्य पृथिव्याँल्लोकमिच्छतु । तस्मै युज्यन्तामुस्रियाः ॥ वाज सं 35 2. वायु पुनातु सविता पुनात्वग्नेर्भ्राजसा सूर्यस्य वर्चसा । विमुच्यन्तामुस्रियाः ॥ वाज स 35. 3

563 The bricks of the fire altar are marked with lines (vide H of Dh. Vol II, p 1248) The bricks in Agnicayana are as long as the foot of the sacrificer. Thereon gods have to be worshipped Here it is the fathers to be honoured Throughout Śat. Br. XIII 8 2–3 a distinction is drawn between what is done for the gods and what is to be done for pitṛs in order to keep the divine distinct from what belongs to the fathers In Agnicayana a bird-like pattern is the most frequent (vide H of Dh vol II p 1249) It is hence that the Sat Br. speaks of wings and tails. The heights prescribed for men of the several varnas and for women are symbolic Ksatriyas, brāhmanas and vaiśyas represent the arms, the mouth and thighs of the Purusa (as stated in Rg. X. 90.12). The Kāt Sr (21 4 13–14) gives an option in the case of a ksatriya viz. the mound may be as high as the ches or as high as a man with upstretched arms.

silently (and not with mantras as in the case of the Agnicayana). One of the thirteen he places in the middle, with the front towards the east (this represents the trunk), three are placed in front (representing the head), three on the right (that is the right wing); three on the left (that represents the left wing); three behind (representing the tail). He then directs them to bring some soil from a cleft in the ground. Some dig in the intermediate (south-eastern) quarter and fetch it from there; others dig in the south-west and fetch it northwards; he may do as he likes (there is an option) Let him not make the sepulchral mound too large For a ksatriya he may make it as high as a man with upstretched arms, for a brāhmana reaching up to the mouth, for a woman up to the hips, for a vaisya up to the thighs, for a sūdra up to the knee, or let him rather make it so high (for all) as to reach below the knee. While the mound is being made, they hold a bundle of reed grass to the north of it. Let him not throw it down after holding it up or after bringing it, but let him set it up in the house (as it represents offspring) Having prepared it he sows barley grain, thinking 'May they ward off (yavaya) sin from me!' He covers it over with Avakā plants in order that there may be moisture (ka or joy) for him and with darbha grass for softness.

They fix pegs round it, a palāśa one in front, a śamī one on the north corner, a varana one behind and a vrtra[564] peg on the right (south corner). On the south side they dig two somewhat curved furrows and fill them with milk and water and they dig seven on the left (north) side and fill them with water for sin not to pass beyond They throw three stones each into the northern furrows and pass over them with Vāj S 35 10 (= Rg. X. 53 8) They cleanse themselves with Apāmārga[565] plants with Vāj S 35 11; they thereby wipe away sin They bathe at any place where there is water. With Vāj S . 35 12 he takes water with his joined hands and he throws it in the direction in which he who is hateful may be and thereby overthrows him[566] Having bathed and put on garments that have never yet been washed they hold on to the tail of an ox and return to their home. They proceed towards the village muttering Vāj. S. 35.14 (ud vayam). When they have arrived, ointments for their eyes and feet are given to them; such indeed are human means of embellishment and therewith they keep off death from themselves Then in the house having kindled (domestic) fire and laid enclosing sticks of varana wood round it he offers by means of a sruva (spoon) an oblation to Agni Āyuṣmat. Vāj. S. 35. 16 serves [567] as a puronuvākyā (invitatory formula). He then offers with Vāj. S. 35.17. He says this so that Agni may guard and protect these men. The sacrificial fee is an old ox, old barley, old chair with a head cushion. He may give more if he desires. This is the procedure in the case of one who has performed Agnicayana.[568] In the case of him who has not performed Agnicayana, there is the same procedure for selecting a site and the same performance save that of the fire-altar Having fetched a clod from the boundary he deposits it midway between the sepulchral mound and the village with Vāj. S. 35. 15 (imam [569] jīvebhyaḥ). He then makes this a boundary between the Fathers and the living, so as not to commingle the two.

The Sat. Śr. 29. 1 3 ff. and Baud. P. S. I. 17–20 provide a lengthy procedure for erecting a mound over the bones of one who has performed the special rite of agnicayana which is passed over here. In building a mound the urn deposited under a tree is taken out and after the bones are purified in various ways (such as the spilling on them of curds mixed with vājina from a jar, the digging up of the clods by means of a plough to which a certain number of oxen are yoked). The Sat. Śr. (29. 1. 3–12) deals with one kind of procedure in which there is no dhavana, while 29.1. 13–32 deal with the procedure where dhavana is employed and sūtras from 33 deal with procedure common to both pakṣas (viz. one without dhavana and the other with dhavana) The building of a mound with clods (loṣṭaciti) in which there is dhavana is rather an obscure matter in its nature and had some symbolic significance which is now lost. It may be briefly described as follows.— The members of the deceased's house build a shed or a seat for a bed. They drive in the eastern half or middle or western half of it a three-pronged palāśa peg. In front of it one born of a śūdra woman or a brahmabandhu (a brāhmana only in name) sits down for a dialogue He asks the principal wife (of the deceased) 'will you dwell with me.' That woman replies to him 'I shall not give (what you ask).' The same dialogue takes place on the 2nd day. Then on the third day she replies 'I shall give for one night' Or if this peculiar practice (of talking about dhavana, which literally means 'sexual intercourse') was intended to last for more days than three she was to give a suitable reply (viz. for three nights or for five nights &c). When the words of the reply are uttered by the wife, the performer deposits the bones (of the deceased) at the root of the peg and places between the three prongs of the peg a jar having a hundred holes at the bottom The mouth of the jar is covered with a hide and kuśa grass On that jar he sprinkles curds mixed with vājina with the mantra 'Vaiśvānare haviridam' (Tai. Ā. VI. 6. 1). When the liquid oozes from the jar on the bones he invokes the two verses 'drapsaś-caskanda' and 'imam samudram' (Tai. Ā. VI 6). Then the Sat Śr. (29.1. 26–29) provides that four brahmacārins or other brāhmanas, that are pure, tie up their locks on their heads that are to the right and keep dishevelled those on the left side of the head, they strike their right thighs and also the hide that is wound round the jar of bones, fan it with the fringes of their garments, go round the peg thrice with their left side towards the jar and the people living in the same house (with the deceased) and women also do the same,[570] that lutes (vīnā) are played upon and also conches are blown and other instruments like nāḍika, tūna, panava are beaten and there is also dancing, singing and playing on musical instruments. This practice of dhavana (symbolic) may go on for five, seven, nine, eleven days, half a month, a month or a year during which time one has to donate food and money (gold &c) according to one's ability or on the last day according to some.[571] If one may offer a conjecture, this rite was intended to assure the deceased man (represented by the charred bones) that his wife had remained faithful and unattached to any one else even long after his death. The Baud. P. S. (I. 17.8) also states that female dancers dance in this rite. Various measurements are given in the sūtras for the mounds that are constructed over the bones. Sat. Śr. (29.1 5–6) says[572] that the site of the mound (śmaśānāyatana) is five prakramas on all four sides (or six on the east and five in the other directions, acc. to some). The height of the mound is variously given even in the same sūtra.[573] Sat Śr. states that the height may be two finger-breadths, or three or four or a prādeśa (the distance between the thumb and index finger when both are stretched away) or a vitasti (twelve finger-breadths), or it may be up to the knee or thighs or buttocks The Baud P S. I. 18 gives different[574] measurements. It states 'if the mound to be raised is as high as the neck towards the west, then it is up to the navel on the east, if it is as high as the navel on the west, then it is as high as the knee on the east; if up to the knee on the west then on the east it is level with the ankle'. The Kauśikasūtra[575] (85 4–10) gives certain options viz. the mandapa on which the mound is to be erected is either 7, 7, 5, 3 prakramas on the south, north, east and west or 9, 9, 7, 5 on the same sides in order or 11, 11, 9, 7; that in the case of those who worshipped the gods, the length was eleven on all sides; that in the case of the Śaunakins the sides (of the mound) are to be measured in odd numbers (of prakramas) and the mounds are either round or four-cornered; that such mounds are seen (in those days) and that the grave built for one who had set up vedic fires was to be of the height of a man with arms upraised. These passages show that the graves were generally quadrangular but sometimes round also (acc. to certain schools). The mounds at Lauriya referred to above are round.

Another feature to be noted is that clods were employed (and so the mound was called loṣṭaciti) or baked bricks in building the mound or grave over the bones by piling up layers of clay or bricks In laying down the bricks first on the east, then on the north, then on the west and then on the south, the sūtras such as Sat Śr. (29.1.53),[576] Baud. P. S. (I. 19.4–7) four verses were respectively employed that are (in order) Ṛg X. 18.13, 10, 11, 12 (which are also A. V. XVIII. 3.52, 49 50, 51 and Tai. Ā. VI.7 1). One of these (Ṛg. X. 18.12) speaks of pillars and the other (Ṛg. X. 18.13) of a post (sthūṇā). Vide above p 189. The discovery of two wooden posts in two mounds (at Lauriya above) in which the bones were deposited indicates that the Lauriya mounds followed a vedic custom which is mentioned by the srautasūtras. The main difference between the Vedic and sūtra ritual on the one hand and the Lauriya mounds on the other is the height of the latter, which betokens a later age than that of the sūtras.

The Sat. Śr describes in the 28th praśna what is called pitṛmedha while in praśna 29 it describes the brahmamedha. The difference between the two is pointed out in Sat. Śr. 29.3.4–18 and it is stated[577] (in Sat. Śr. 29.3. 20. 22) that the mantras called 'catur-hotārah' are spoken of as brahma (in Tai. Br. III. 12.5) and that the procedure of Brahmamedha is to be employed only for an ācārya or a śrotriya and for no one else. The Vaijayantī by Mahādeva states (in the Introductory verses) that prasnas 28 and 29 of Sat. Śr. are taken from Bharadvāja It may be stated here that the procedure of dahana described above in Sat Śr. is no longer followed in India in modern times. In the Baud.[578] P. S. I. 17 there are passages that bear a close resemblance to some passages of the Sat. Śr on dhavana. Similarly, Kāt Śr.[579] 21. 3. 6 provides (immediately after the months in which mounds were to be constructed) that as many jars should be taken as there are persons performing dhavana (or dhuvana) and the commentator explains that word as meaning 'fanning'.

It will be seen that the disposal of the dead in ancient India was divided into four stages viz. cremation, collecting the charred bones and depositing them underground in an urn, expiatory rites (called Śāntikarma) and erection of a monument over the bones. The last was not necessarily done in every case. The Andhau Inscription of the time of Rudradāman in the year 52 (probably of the śaka era) refers to the erection of a staff (lasti i e. yasti) as a funeral monument to the memory of a sister, brother and wife by Madana son of Sihila (vide E I. Vol. 16 pp. 23–25). In a long passage of the Brahmapurāna quoted by Aparārka (pp. 885–886) it is stated that the charred bones of a cremated person should be collected in an urn and deposited at the root of a tree or cast in the Ganges, that the place of cremation should be purified with cowdung and water, that a puskaraka tree should be planted there or an edūka (a structure) should be built over it.[580]

The Sat Śr 28. 4 28 and Baud P S. II. 3. 2 state as shown above that the rites immediately after death were performed only up to the depositing of the urn (containing the bones) underground in the case of those householders who had not set up the vedic fires and in the case of married women and that in the case of him who had performed the solemn rite of Agnicayana a mound with bricks or clods was built up on the bones.

It is remarkable that while slaves and even attendants were often buried with the master in Babylon and Celtic Britain, there is no similar reference to the burial or cremation of anybody with the deceased even in the ancient procedure found in the Śat Br. It is only possible to say that in some cases in the pre-Vedic age the wife might have burnt herself along with the deceased husband on the funeral pyre. There is no doubt that later works like the Visnudharmasūtra recommended to women the practice of Satī as an option to leading the life of perfect celibacy after the husband's death.

The persons entitled to perform the funeral rites after death (antyakarmādhikārin) are the same as those entitled to offer srāddha. There is a good deal of difference as to the order of the persons so entitled. For example, Gautama (Dh.S 15 13-14) states 'On failure of sons the sapindas (e g. brother, brother's son), the sapindas of the mother (e g maternal uncle or his son) and pupils may perform srāddha for the deceased; in default of these the family priest and the ācārya (veda teacher).' Śankha says[581] 'The offering of pinda and water should be done by the son for the father; in default (i e absence or death) of the son, the wife (of the deceased) should offer, but in default of her the full brother.' The Visnupurāna[582] provides 'the son, grand-son, great grandson (of the deceased), the offspring of the brother (of the deceased), the offspring of a sapinda become entitled to offer (pinda).' The Mārkandeya-purāna provides (30. 19-21, chap 27. 19-23 of the Venk. ed.) 'On failure of the sons, sapindas, on failure of them the samānodakas, then the sapindas of the mother, and samānodakas of her, should perform these rites, a daughter's son should perform them (if the man dies sonless), the putrikāputra should perform them for his maternal grand-father; in default of all these, women should perform these rites for their husbands but without Vedic mantras; in default of wife the king should get the rites performed by some one belonging to the family (of the deceased) or by persons of his caste, since the king is the relative of all varnas'[583] There was a close connection between taking the estate of a man and performing the rites after death up to the 10th day. For the doctrines represented by the Mitākṣarā and the Dāyabhāga, vide H. of Dh. vol III pp. 734-743. Even those that regarded that inheritance was based on relationship by blood and not on the capacity to offer pindas held that it was obligatory on everyone who took the estate of another (including the king who took as the ultimate heir by escheat) to arrange for the rites after death and śrāddha. Visnu[584] Dh. S. XV. 40 declares 'whoever inherits the estate of a deceased person has to offer pinda to him.' Yāj. II. 127 says the same thing about the Kṣetraja son (ubhayorapyasau rikthī pinda-dātā ca dharmataḥ).

The Smṛtyarthasāra (p. 94) states the order of adhikārins as follows; a competent son is the first adhikārī for offering pinda; in default of a son, husband, wife and co-wives; in default of these, the brother's son, the brother, daughter-in-law, daughter, daughter's son, any other sagotra, a sapiṇḍa, a fellow-student, a friend, a pupil, the teacher, any relative and anyone who takes the wealth of the deceased may offer piṇḍa. The father is not competent to perform śrāddha rites for his (deceased) son, an elder brother for his younger brother; these may even do so through affection but they cannot perform the sapindīkarana. Parents may offer piṇḍa to unmarried daughters, and even to married daughters in the absence of another (proper) giver. The daughter's son and the maternal grandfather may offer to each other; the daughter's son to maternal grand-mother; the son-in-law and father-in-law to each other, the daughter-in-law to her mother-in-law, brothers among themselves, teacher and pupil to each other. vol. III p. 739. The Nirnayasindhu[585] says that in the Kali age only two kinds of sons viz. aurasa and dattaka are allowed (out of the twelve mentioned by Yāj. II. 128–132) and the order of śrāddhādhikārins is given by it as follows: aurasa son, then grandson, then great grandson, then adopted son. If there are many sons then the eldest alone is the adhikārin; if the eldest be not present or is patita, then the son next to the eldest is the adhikārin (and not the youngest). If the sons are divided from each other, then all the rites up to sapindīkarana are to be performed by the eldest alone who may make the other sons contribute to the expenses, but the yearly śrāddha may be performed by each son separately. If the sons (of the deceased) are not divided, then all rites including the yearly śrāddha also are to be performed by the eldest alone When the eldest son not being present, the younger one or the youngest performs the cremation, he should perform all rites up to and including the sixteen śrāddhas, but not sapindīkarana and he should wait for one year for the arrival of the eldest If the eldest comes to know of the death within one year, he alone should perform the sapindīkarana. If the eldest son does not come even at the end of one year, then even the youngest may perform sapindīkarana. If before the expiry of one year the youngest son or some one other than a son performs the monthly, anumāsika, sapindīkarana śrāddhas, then the eldest son or a son should again perform these. If there is a grandson who has his upanayana performed and there be a son whose upanayana is not performed it is the latter who is a preferable adhikārin, provided he is either three years old or has the cūḍā ceremony performed as stated by Sumantu[586]. Manu II. 172 states that a boy should not repeat the Veda before the performance of Upanayana except the mantras that are required for the śrāddha of his deceased father or mother. Such a son may perform with Vedic mantras the funeral rites on the death of his father or mother and their yearly and other śrāddhas. If he is unable to repeat the Vedic mantras, he may simply perform the cremation with mantras and the rest may be got performed through another person. In the same way he should make only the declaration (saṅkalpa) of darsaśrāddha and mahālaya and the rest may be performed by some one else. An adopted son becomes an adhikārin for funeral rites and the like only if the upanayana has been performed. If there be no lineal descendant up to a great-grandson and also no adopted son, then the wife should perform with mantras the funeral rites and yearly and other śrāddhas but if she is unable to repeat the Vedic mantras, then the same rules apply as in the case of an anupanīta son. Even if the husband be not divided from his brother, or he be re-united with his brother, it is the wife and not the brother who is to be preferred as having adhikāra for śrāddha, though the brother gets all the property. Though some of the latest works on dharmaśāstra like the Nirnayasindhu [587] and Dharmasindhu (bhāryayāpi samantrakam-eva-aurdhvadehikādikam kāryam) allowed the wife to perform rites after death with vedic mantras, several works such as the Mārkandeya-purāna and the Brahmapurāna did not allow the wife to repeat Vedic mantras (vide note 583 above). In default of the wife, the daughter has the right to perform rites after death if the deceased was separated and not re-united. But if the deceased was joint then his full brother would be the proper adhikārin after the wife. Among daughters the married one is preferred, though an unmarried daughter is a preferable heir. In default of daughters, the daughter's son is an adhikārin; then a brother, then a brother's son. Among brothers a full brother is preferred to a half brother and if there be both elder and younger brothers, then the younger is preferred for performing rites after death (in order to make as near an approach as possible to the relation of father and son). If there be no younger brother, then even an elder one could be adhikārin; in default of full brother, a half brother. Some held that even if the deceased was separate from his brother and had a daughter or daughter's son as heir the funeral rites were to be performed by the brother (and not by the daughter or her son), since a sagotra is to be preferred as an adhikārin to one of a different gotra. If there be no brother, then a full brother's son was to be preferred, then the half brother's son, then father, then mother, then daughter-in-law, then sister. In case of there being full sisters, half sisters, younger and older sisters the same rules apply as in the case of brothers; in default of any sister, sister's son. If there be many sister's sons, the rules as to brothers would apply. Then come paternal uncle, his son, other sapindas;[588] then samānodakas, then other persons born in the same family. In default of these, the sapindas of the mother, such as the maternal grand-father, maternal uncle, maternal uncle's son in that order; in default of the sapindas of the mother, the sons of the deceased's paternal or maternal aunt; in default of these the pitr-bandhus such as the sons of the father's father's sister, of the father's mother's sister, of father's maternal uncle; then the mātr-bandhus such as mother's father's sisters's son; in default of these, a disciple (of the deceased); in default of disciple, son-in-law of the deceased (or the father-in-law of the deceased); in default of these, a friend; in default, any one who takes the wealth of a brāhmana (deceased); if the deceased was other than a brāhmana the king (who took the wealth of everyone dying heirless, except the wealth of a brāhmana) who arranges for funeral rites through another.

In the case of women the following order of those entitled to perform rites of a deceased woman is given in the Dharmasindhu (p. 370); If the female be unmarried then her father is the adhikārin, then her brother and the like; if the woman was married, her son, then her co-wife's son, then co-wife's grandson and then great-grandson; in default of these, the husband; in default of husband, daughter, then daughter's son; then husband's brother; then husband's brother's son; then daughter-in-law; then (the deceased) woman's father, then her brother; then her brother's son and the rest.

An adopted son should perform the śrāddha of his natural father if the latter left no son or other adhikārī If a brahmacārin dies, his monthly, yearly and other śrāddhas should be performed by his father and mother. A brahmacārin may carry the dead body of his parents, or of his maternal grand-father, upādhyāya and ācārya and perform the cremation and other rites; but if another adhikārin is available, he should not do these even for the parents and the other three. A brahmacārin should not at all carry the dead body of any one except of the above five or perform the cremation and other rites for any one else. If a brahmacārin performed all the rites for ten days he had to observe āśauca for ten days, but if he performed only the cremation he had to observe āśauca only for one day. Even while in mourning his obligatory acts do not stop; but he should not eat the food cooked for his relatives that are in mourning nor should he dwell among them; if he did (both these) he had to undergo prāyaścitta and perform upanayana again.

588. The word sapinda here means a man of the same gotra as the deceased but within seven degrees of the common ancestor, tracing relationship through males only, a samānodaka means one of the same gotra from 8th to the 14th degree descended from a common ancestor tracing descent through males only and gotraja means a relative of the same gotra as the deceased but beyond the 14th degree from the common ancestor.

It is somewhat curious that Baudhāyana, the Lingapurāna (quoted in Śrāddhaprakāśa pp. 361–371), the Mārkandeya-purāna, the Pitrdayitā (p 82) and several other works allow man himself while living to perform his own rites after death (antyesti).[589] This will be dealt with briefly later on under śrāddha Further, if a man became patita and refused to undergo prāyaścitta, he was driven out of the Hindu fold by the procedure of ghatasphota (vide H. of Dh. vol. II pp. 387–388), and Gaut. Dh. S. 20 2 and Manu XI. 182–183 provide that such a man was to be held to be dead and his relatives were to perform all rites for him such as offering water and śrāddha and were also to observe āśauca for him.[590]

Many commentators and digests quote certain verses of the Visnupurāna (III. 13. 34–39) wherein the rites (kriyāh) after death performed for a person are enumerated as falling into three classes, viz. pūrva, madhyama and uttara. The rites from cremation up to the end of the 12th day are called pūrva, the śrāddhas performed monthly and sapindīkarana and ekoddista are called madhyama rites and those that are performed after sapindīkarana, when the deceased has reached the position of pitr after being a preta, are designated uttara.[591] The pūrva and madhyama rites of the deceased may be performed by the father, the mother, sapindas, samānodakas and those belonging to the deceased's group (gotra) or by the king if he takes the wealth of the deceased. But the rites called uttara are to be performed only by the son, grandson, great-grandson, daughter's son or the latter's sons Even in the case of women, on the day of the anniversary of death every year an ekoddista śrāddha may be performed for them. There is also another classification of śrāddhas viz. Navaśrāddha (those rites up to ten days after death), Navamiśra (those performed after ten days up to six seasons), Purāna (those performed after a year).[591 a]

As stated above, for ten days after death a handful of water mixed with sesame was to be offered to the deceased on a stone (aśman) placed on kuśa grass and one large pinda (called pūraka-pinda) was to be offered on kuśa grass everyday with the face to the south and the sacred thread on the right shoulder (prācīnāvītī) for the purpose of freeing the departed from the state of being a preta. On the pinda, water mixed with sesame was to be offered and leaves of Bhrngarāja (called mākā in Marathi) and Tulasī also. The verse 'anādi-nidhano' was to be repeated[592]. The performer throws the pinda in water and then bathes. Vide A. K. D pp. 43-50 and Antyesti-paddhati of Nārāyana for detailed treatment of the procedure of these ten days. Besides this, the Āśvalāyana-grhyapariśista[593] III. 6 speaks of five śrāddhas called 'navaśrāddhas' (or Viṣamaśrāddhas) performed on the uneven days (i. e. 1st, 3rd, 5th, 7th and 9th) with uncooked food. According to the Garuḍapurāṇa (Pretakhanda 34. 36 which speaks of six śrāddhas on uneven days from 1st day to 11th) and Āpastamba they are six (Dharmasindhu p 464, Nirṇayasindhu p 588, Śuddhiprakāśa pp. 214–216, Śrāddhatattva p. 619) and according to others there is an option. Aṅgiras and Vasiṣtha speak of six Navaśrāddhas on uneven days from the 1st to the 11th, while Baud Pitṛmedha S. II. 10. 6 speaks of five. Some prescribe the placing of some cooked food sprinkled with ghee on the hand of a brāhmana. Others do not approve of this They prescribe the placing of uncooked corn in front of a brāhmana or in front of a figure of a brāhmaṇa made with kuśas (called cata in Marathi). The Garudapurāṇa (II. 5. 67 ff) holds that the navaśrāddhas are those performed at the place where a man died, where the funeral procession rested on the way, when the bones were collected and those performed on the 5th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th and 11th day. The Śuddhiprakāśa p. 214 quotes similar views from Kātyāyana and the view of Vṛddha-Vasiṣtha that the deceased does not become free from the status of a preta, unless the navaśrāddhas are performed. The Garuḍapurāṇa, Pretakhanda (chap. 34. 27–28, 44, 48) states that by the pindas offered for ten days the several limbs of a subtle body are provided for the departed spirit which at first wanders like thin air. There are several differing views on the navaśrāddhas which are passed over here. On the uneven days if navaśrāddha is performed two pindas will be offered (one the daily one and the other, of the navaśrāddha). The Padma (Sṛstikhanda 10. 19) prescribes that one should not partake of the food at navaśrāddha and on doing so should undergo the cāndrāyaṇa expiation.

In modern times, after the rites of the first day of cremation and of the collection of the bones, the rites for the dead generally begin on the 10th day. The performer goes to the place where the rites of the first day were performed, makes a sankalpa and offers a pinḍa with the words 'May this piṇḍa wait upon the preta named N. N. and of the gotra (Kāśyapa &c) in order that hunger and thirst affecting the preta may be removed'. Then he offers water mixed with sesame, places leaves of bhṛṅgarāja and tulasī, repeats the verse 'anādinidhano' (note 592), removes the pinda to another place from the place where it was offered. Then he prepares a vedi with loose earth with a triangular shape, purifies it by means of cowdung, decks it with turmeric powder and places thereon five jars full of water and on each of them a ball of rice. Then he offers a request to the middle jar with the words 'May this pinda together with the jar of water wait upon the preta by name N. N, of such and such a gotra in order that his hunger and thirst may be allayed'. There is a prayer before the jars to the east, south, west and north respectively to those whom the preta had befriended, to Yama, to crows, to Rudra respectively. There is a difference of view here, some prescribing four jars, some three, while others offer a pinda with the jar of water only on the place meant for the preta and mere pinda to others Then water is offered over the pinda and to each of the above he offers sandals, umbrella, banner, bread. Then the performer waits till a crow seizes or eats the pinda placed to the west[594]. Then the aśman (stone) is anointed with oil and cast in water. Then the performer requests the relatives, who offer one handful or three handfuls of water to the preta on the bank of the reservoir of water. Then the sons and others according to usage cut their hair and nails. Then all persons of the same gotra, according to the custom of the country, bathe with sesame and myrobalan, wear pure and dried garments, go home and take their meals there.

594 In modern times great importance is attached by many people to a crow touching and pecking at the pinda food There is a common belief that if a crow does not touch the pinda then the deceased had some intense wish at his death that was unfulfilled and it is certainly heart-rending and a source of poignant sorrow even for passers-by to see the relatives waiting for hours and tempting the crow or crows to come down from trees with dainty pieces of copra and other things and also loudly declaring that they would do this or that and fulfil the last desire of the deceased Often it so happens that no crow touches the pinda food in honour of the deceased, a very old and venerable man, and relatives are very much distressed to find that their venerable ancestor who could have hardly any ambition or desire at the advanced age of 80 or 90 (except to die speedily), judging from the reluctance of the crow, had some unfulfilled desire. Often the crow immediately touches the pinda offered to one who died very young (say 25 or 30 years old) and who would naturally be presumed to have many unfulfilled desires In such cases the relatives feel very much relieved at the thought that their young relative passed away without any unfulfilled desires The Śuddhikaumudī refers to this offering to crows as a usage सदाचारात् काकबलिदानम् । पिण्डशेषमन्नं पात्रे कृत्वा अमुकगोत्रस्य प्रेतस्यामुकशर्मणो क्षुधोपशान्तये यमद्वारावस्थितवायसाय एष बलिर्न इत्युत्सृज्य कृताञ्जलि — काक त्वं यमदूतोऽसि गृहाण बलिमुत्तमम् । यमलोकगतं प्रेतं त्वमाप्यायितुमर्हसि ॥ काकाय काकरूपाय वायसाय महात्मने । तुभ्यं बलिं प्रयच्छामि प्रेतस्य तृप्तिहेतवे ॥ इति पठेत् । शुद्धिकौमुदी p. 135.

Some of the Purānas and medieval digests assert that after a man dies, the soul or spirit assumes what is called an ātivāhika[594a] body consisting of three of the five elements (viz. fire, wind and ākāśa) that rise up from the dead body (while two viz. earth and water remain below), that such a body is obtained only by men and not by other beings, that with the aid of the piṇḍas that are offered to the departed at the time of cremation and during ten days thereafter, the soul secures another body called bhogadeha (a body for enjoying the piṇḍas offered) and that at the end of a year when sapiṇḍīkarana is performed, the soul secures a third body wherewith the spirit reaches heaven or hell according to the nature of his actions. The word 'ātivāhika' is comparatively an ancient one. It occurs in Vedāntasūtra IV. 3.4 (ātivāhikās-tal-lingāt). But there the meaning is somewhat different. The Upanisads speak of the soul as going by the path of arcis, day &c. The sūtra says that these (viz. arcis, ahah &c.) are superintending deities that take the soul gradually onward by the path that leads to Brahma. Govindānanda in his commentary on the Prāyaścitta-viveka (pp. 13-14) holds that there are only two bodies (and not three as appears at first sight), viz. the ātivāhika or pretadeha and the bhogadeha. The belief was that the man on whose death no piṇda was offered or the sixteen śrāddhas (to be described below) were not performed remained for all time in the condi-

The गरुडपुराण (प्रेतखण्ड chap. 10 79. ff) says the same. 'उत्क्रामन्तं.. ज्ञानचक्षुषः॥ आतिवाहिकमित्येवं वायवीयं वदन्ति हि। ...पुत्रादिभिः कृताश्चेत्तु. पिण्डा दश दशाहिकाः। पिण्डजेन तु देहेन वायुजश्चैकतां व्रजेत्। पिण्डतो यदि नैव स्याद्वायुजोऽर्हति यातनाम्॥' The first verse (उत्क्रामन्तं) is गीता 15 10. The ब्रह्मपुराण states विहाय सुमहत्कृत्स्नं शरीरं पाञ्चभौतिकम्॥ अन्यच्छरीरमादत्ते यातनीयं स्वकर्मजम्।.. स्वशरीरं समुत्सृज्य वायुभूतस्तु गच्छति। chap 214 29-30 and 51; निमित्तं किंचिदासाद्य देही प्राणैर्विमुच्यते॥ अन्यच्छरीरमादत्ते यातनीयं स्वकर्मभिः। अग्निपुराण 230. 2-3. गृह्णाति तत्क्षणाद्योगे शरीरं चातिवाहिकम्। आकाशवायुतेजांसि विग्रहादूर्ध्वगामिनः॥ जलं मही च पञ्चत्वमापन्नः पुरुषः स्मृतः। आतिवाहिकदेहं तु यमदूता नयन्ति तम्॥ अग्नि. 371. 9-10. tion of a piśāca, from which he would not be freed even if numerous other śrāddhas were later on offered for him.[595] The Brahmapurāna calls the body 'yātanīya' (i. e. one that has to undergo trials and torments), while the Agnipurāna calls it 'yātāniya' or 'ātivāhika' and asserts that this body is made up of the elements of ākāśa, vāyu and tejas The Padmapurāna (II. 67. 98) states that persons who commit certain sins secure after death a body similar in shape to the physical body for undergoing torments. The underlying conception was that when the gross body was destroyed after death by cremation, burial or other methods an intermediate subtile body had to be built up before the departed soul was compelled to assume another body in a fresh incarnation The subtile body was gradually built up, as stated by the Mārk 10.73, by the rites performed on death and on several days after death. Though this conception is very clearly set forth in the Purānas it should not be supposed that it was altogether a new one. It had its roots deep down in the earliest Vedic period and was implicit in some of the hymns as indicated by Rg. X. 15. 14, X. 16. 4-5 translated above. Though in the Tai. S. I. 8. 5 1-2 and in passages of the Tai. Br. and Śat. Br to be set out later on it is said that the offerings are made to the paternal ancestors, it does not follow that the brāhmanas were not fed at the same time on the food prepared for being offered to the ancestors, just as in the solemn Vedic sacrifices offerings were made to the gods, Agni, Indra, Prajāpati, Visnu and others and at the same time priests engaged in the sacrifices were fed and given presents (daksinā). Therefore, it need not be necessarily supposed that feeding the brāhmanas at śrāddha was a later idea and offering food to the dead was the original idea.

CHAPTER VIII

Śuddhi (purification) is a very comprehensive topic including within it purification after āśauca (impurity on birth and death), purification of a person after contact with an impure object or on account of certain occurrences, purification of pots, wells, food &c., after they are polluted. Āśauca, however, is the most important subject under śuddhi and therefore the Śuddhi-kaumudī defines 'śuddhi' as 'the state of being fit for or capable of performing the rites that are understood from the Veda'[596] The Smrtis employ the word śuddhi in relation to purification after āśauca. For example, Manu V. 57 starts by saying that he will expound purification after a man is dead (pretaśuddhi) and purification of things (dravyasuddhi). Manu V. 83 (= Daksa VI. 7) avers that a brāhmana becomes pure after ten days (on the death or birth of a relative), a ksatriya after twelve &c. The Parāśara-smrti starts chapter three by declaring 'I shall expound śuddhi on birth and death.' Yaj. III. 14, 25 also employ the word śuddhi. Therefore āśauca on birth and death will be first dealt with.

The word āśauca is formed from śuci (pure) according to Pān. V. 1. 131[596a] and Pān. VII. 3. 30 (vide note below) with the negative particle na (a). In some smrtis such as that of Devala the form 'āśucya' also is found (see Hāralatā pp. 2, 9, 36 in quotations from Devala[596b]). Another word which is often used as a synonym for āśauca is 'agha'. It has been seen above (p. 6) that the word agha means 'sin' in the Vedic Literature (as in Ṛg. I. 97. 1-8, X. 117.6). But in the Śān. Śr. IV. 15. 11, Manu V. 84 (na vardhayed-aghāhāni) the word 'agha' has come to mean the same thing as āśauca.[597] The Padmapurāṇa II. 66. 73–74 states that since the outlets of the body always emit mucus, urine &c. it is always impure.

The Mit. on Yāj. III 1 defines[598] āśauca as an emergent attribute attaching to a person, which is got rid of by lapse of time or a bath and the like and which is the cause of the positive direction to offer (to a deceased person) pinda, water and the like and of the cessation of Vedic study and other actions The Mit adds that āśauca is not merely the absence of the privilege or power to do religious acts, since even those who have incurred impurity (on death &c) are enjoined to do certain religious acts such as offering water (to the deceased) This definition of the Mit appears to be an echo of the Garuḍa-purāṇa (pretakhaṇḍa) 5. 9 and is probably based on a verse of the work called Sangraha. Haradatta[599] on Gautama 14. 1 states that āśauca may be defined as 'the absence of the privilege to perform religious acts, unfitness for being one whose food may be partaken of, untouchability and the loss of the privilege to make religious gifts.' A comparatively early writer Bhaṭṭācārya,[600] appears to have defined 'śuddhi' as the 'removal of sin' or as 'being fit for performing religious acts.' This was accepted by the Smṛti-candrikā, but rejected by Nandapaṇḍita, commentator of Ṣaḍaśīti (pp. 2–3) Even the Mit. (on Yāj. III. 18) emphasizes that āśauca has two characteristics, viz. it takes away the privilege of performing religious acts and it renders a person untouchable. The Smṛtimuktāphala follows this. Rudradhara in his Śuddhiviveka (D. C ms. No. 309 of 1887–91 folio 1) says that śuddhi is a special attribute which brings about a capacity or privilege for the performance of all dharmas, while aśuddhi is an attribute opposed to śuddhi and arises on the occasion of the birth of a sapinda or the like.[601]

Āśauca is of two kinds, viz. that arising on birth[602] (and so called jananāśauca or sūtaka) and that arising on death (and therefore called śāvāśauca or mṛtakāśauca or maraṇāśauca). Śāva is derived from śava (meaning a corpse). The word sūtaka occurs in the[603] Ait. Br. (chap. 32. 8) and is there probably used in the sense of impurity on both birth and death. There it is said that if an āhitāgni partook of food from the house of him who was affected by sūtaka, then the prāyaścitta was to offer a puroḍāśa cooked on eight potsherds to Agni Tantumat. Tantu means also 'son or progeny' and so it may be argued that it is an indication that sūtaka is used in the Ait. Br. in the sense of impurity on birth. The word sūtaka is used in the smṛtis in three senses: (1) impurity on birth (vide Manu V. 58); (2) impurity both on birth and death, as in Gobhilasmṛti III. 60 and 63;[604] (3) impurity on death alone (as in Dakṣa VI. 1 and Gobhilasmṛti III. 48)[605]. In some of the modern vernaculars (such as Marathi) the word 'sūtaka' is used in the 3rd sense alone. In each of these two divisions there are two varieties viz. where the duration is brief or comparatively long (Ṣaḍaśīti, verse 2).

A question arises why birth and death should cause impurity to the members of the family or to relatives. Only a few have to say anything on this question. Hārīta says: 'the family incurs death impurity because by death the family feels overwhelmed (or frustrated), while when a new life appears the family increases (and there is gratification or joy)'[606].

The literature on Śuddhi (including āśauca) is very extensive. Apart from the sūtras, smṛtis and Purāṇas there are numerous digests dealing with the subject at great length. Some of them have been printed. The smṛtis contain a mass of contradictory dicta to such an extent and different from the usages of medieval times that the Mit on Yāj III. 22 after quoting the views of Parāśara, Śātātapa, Vasiṣṭha and Aṅgiras on the periods for which impurity had to be observed by persons belonging to the four varṇas refuses to evolve order out of them and remarks that the usages in its day were different from the dicta of those sages[607]. The Madana-pārijāta (p 392) agrees with the Mit and also suggests other modes of dealing with the conflict. Two examples may be cited of the way in which different smṛtis approach the same problem. Atri 83, Parāśara III. 5 and Dakṣa VI. 6 provide that a brāhmaṇa who has consecrated the three Vedic fires and has mastered the Veda becomes free from impurity (on birth and death) in one day, one who has merely mastered the Veda (but has not consecrated the śrauta fires) in three days and one who is devoid of both in ten days. Manu V. 59 gives various options viz 10 days, 4 days, 3 days, 1 day but does not state explicitly to whom his remarks apply. Bṛhaspati[607a] (q.

by Hāralatā p. 5 and Haradatta on Gautama 14. 1) states that a brāhmana who is endowed with Veda and śrauta fires becomes pure after three days, one who is devoid of śrauta fires (but is master of the Veda) in five days and one who is only a brāhmana by caste (has not studied the Veda or does not teach it) in ten days. The Śān Śr. and Manu [608] (both quoted above) urge a man not to increase through laziness the number of days for which impurity is to be observed. It is possible that persons claiming to be learned observed impurity for a few days only, while neighbours disputed their claim to this special dispensation in favour of Vedic learning and keeping śrauta fires. The result was that later on a flat number of ten days was prescribed for all brāhmaṇas whether learned or not and the provision for lesser number of days of impurity was relegated to Kalivarjya usages. Vide H. of Dh. vol. III. pp. 941–42.

Another example of the dependence of the days of impurity on the caste of the deceased and of varying dicta thereon may be cited. Manu V. 83, Daksa VI 7, Yāj III. 22, Atri (verse 85), Sankha (15. 2–3), Matsyapurāna (18. 2–3), Brahmapurāna 220. 63, Visnu Dh. S 22. 1–4, all lay down periods of 10 days, 12 days, 15 days and a month for impurity among brāhmanas, ksatriyas, vaiśyas and śūdras respectively. Yaj. III.22 makes the virtuous śūdra observe impurity only for 15 days as a concession. Gaut. (15. 1–4) prescribes 10, 11, 12 days (or half month) and a month respectively for the four varṇas, while Vas. (4. 27–30) gives the periods of 10, 15, 20 and one month for the four varnas. Prof. D. R. Bhandarkar, in his article on Nāgara brāhmanas and Kāyasthas of Bengal, protests that the Kāyasthas of Bengal (owing to social tyranny) still observe āśauca for one month as if they are ordinary śūdras (I. A. for 1932 at p. 71). On the other hand, Angiras (quoted by the Mit. on Yaj. III. 22) states that Śātātapa declared that all varnas become purified after ten days whether the impurity is due to birth or death.[609] Parāśara (III. 9) quoted by the Mit. on Yāj. III. 18 provides that a sapiṇḍa who is 4th in descent from the common ancestor of the deceased and himself becomes pure after ten days, one who is 5th after 6 days, one who is 6th in descent after four days and one who is 7th after one day. The Mit. says that this should be discarded as it is in conflict with many other smṛtis and is disapproved of by people.[610] Some of the rules mentioned by Vijñāneśvara (about 1100 A. D) themselves underwent changes in 500 years as noted by the Nirṇayasindhu (composed in 1612 A. D.[611]).

The Mit. on Yāj III. 18 declares that when a child that has not completed two years dies, it is the parents that have to observe āśauca for ten days and not all sapiṇḍas and that their āśauca entails untouchability for them. The Nirṇayasindhu (p. 517) remarks that what Vijñāneśvara said is not now (in its time) the usage and that the Smṛtyarthasāra also did not accept Vijñāneśvara's view.

In view of the above-mentioned circumstances no useful purpose would be served by setting out in detail the varying dicta of the smṛtis, Purāṇas[612] and the digests upon the several matters that fall to be treated under āśauca. Digests on this subject are too numerous to mention. The following printed ones and a few mss have been made use of in preparing the following account. In the first place, there are several works that deal with this subject in verse. The Aśaucāṣṭaka attributed to Vararuci (published in the Trivandrum series) with a

612. Several among the Purāṇas devote considerable space to āśauca. For example, the Kūrma (Uttarārdha Chap 23), Liṅgapurāṇa (Purvārdha, Chapter 89. 77-92), Garuḍapurāṇa (Pretakhaṇḍa Chap. 5), Agnipurāṇa (Chapters 157-158), Vāmana (14. 96-102) do so. commentary by an anonymous writer that names the bhāsya of Maskarin on Gautama-dharmasūtra (on p. 35) deals with the subject in eight sragdharā verses. The Aśaucadaśaka or Daśaślokī attributed to Vijñāneśvara seems to have been a very popular work. There are several commentaries on it. The one by Harihara is the earliest of them. In the Deccan College collection of Mss (now at the Bhandarkar Oriental Institute, Poona) there are several Mss of it, two of which were copied in saṁvat 1539 (D. C. No. 216 of 1879-80) and saṁvat 1579 (D. C. No 196 of 1884-87) and which expressly state that the work was composed by Vijñāneśvara-yogīndra. The ten Śārdūla-vikrīdita verses of the Āśaucadaśaka are set out in the appendix. The Kalpataru of Lakṣmīdhara has a section on śuddhi which has been recently published in the G. O. S. The Hāralatā of Aniruddha is very useful (B. I. Series). The Āśaucakānda of the Smrticandrikā has been edited by the late Dr. Shamsastry and published as No. 56 of the Mysore University Sanskrit publications. The Trimśacchlokī with the commentary of Raghunātha composed in śake 1645 has been published at the Poona Ānandāśrama press and contains 30 Sragdharā verses on āśauca. The Ṣadasīti (86 verses in the Anustubh metre) of Kauśikāditya with the commentary Śuddhicandrikā by Vināyaka alias Nandapandita (composed about 1600 A. D.) has been published in the Chowkhamba Sanskrit series. The Śuddhikaumudi of Govindānanda (B. I. Series); the Śuddhitattva of Raghunandana (ed. by Jivananda pp. 233-412), the Śuddhiprakāśa (part of the Vīramitrodaya of Mitramiśra) published in the Chowkhamba Sanskrit series, the Śuddhimayūkha of Nīlakantha (edited by Mr. J. R. Gharpure) and the Smrtīmuktāphala of Vaidyanātha (edited by Mr. J. R. Gharpure) are compilations that are useful in their own way. These exhaustive treatises on āśauca show one thing unmistakably that brāhmanas of the medieval ages attached an extremely exaggerated importance to ceremonial purity of the body on birth and death.

The periods of impurity depended on many circumstances. There was a difference between impurity on birth and that on death; so also the duration depended upon whether the deceased was an infant or a male or a female or one whose upanayana had been performed or not performed; it depended on caste and also on the question whether the deceased died near the relative or far away; also upon the degree of relationship; and on the time that elapsed from the birth or death till it reached the ears' of the relative. The intensity of impurity was different in each of the following: a sūtikā (a freshly delivered woman), rajasvalā (woman in monthly illness), impurity on death, impurity on birth (the last being the least).

Dakṣa (VI. 2–3) states that there are ten varieties in impurity, viz. immediate purity (after taking a bath), one day, three days, four days, six days, ten days, twelve days, a fortnight, a month and till the end of one's life[613] Dakṣa then explains in what cases these different periods apply. As to what is meant by impurity till life's end (lit till he is reduced to ashes), Dakṣa (VI. 8–10) says. 'those who take their meals without bathing or offering to gods or without making gifts-all such persons are in impurity till life ends. One who is permanently afflicted with a disease, who is close-fisted (i. e. stints himself, wife and son and religious acts through greed), who is always in debt (i. e. who has not paid off his debts to gods, sages and manes), who is bereft of religious acts (nitya or naimittika), who is a fool and is under the thumb of his wife, whose mind is bent on vices (gambling, prostitution &c), who is always dependent (a king's servant or the like), who is devoid of faith and benevolence (charitable gifts)—he incurs impurity which ends only with his ashes (i e. only when he is cremated).[614] These words are not to be taken literally; what is meant is that such a man is to be shunned by others (i e it is an arthavāda conveying merely censure)

We shall now turn to the impurity on birth.

That the impurity on birth lasted for ten days even in Vedic times can be inferred from the story of Śunaḥśepa narrated in the Ait Br (chapter 33 2), where occurs the passage 'when the animal is more than ten days from birth he becomes pure (and fit to be offered in sacrifice)' The same inference can probably be drawn from Tai. Br. II. 1 1.3, where it is said 'therefore people do not take the milk of a cow for ten nights when a calf is born.'[615]

Abortion in the first four months[616] of pregnancy is called srāva, abortion in the 5th or 6th month is called pāta and from the 7th month of pregnancy onwards it is called prasūti or prasava (according to Parāśara III. 16, Sadaśīti verse 9). When there is srāva the mother incurs impurity for three days, in the case of pāta the mother has to observe impurity for as many days as correspond to the months of pregnancy (i. e. 5 days or 6 days). The impurity consists in the mother being untouchable. The father alone has to bathe when there is srāva, but when there is pāta the father and sapindas have to observe impurity for three days (according to Madana-pārijāta p. 380–381 and others) but they don't incur impurity as on death. These rules hold good for all castes. But when the foetus comes out dead in any month from the 7th or the child is still-born, then the impurity is for ten days for both parents and the sapindas for all varnas or for 10, 12, 15 and 30 days respectively for the four varnas as laid down in Yāj. (III. 22) and the samānodakas have to observe āśauca for three days and sagotras for one day (Dharmasindhu p. 427). The above rules are more or less laid down by Gautama 14. 15–16, Baud. Dh. S. I. 5. 136, Parāśara III. 24, Manu V. 66, Yāj. III. 20 (latter half) and the first verse of Āśaucadaśaka. The mother is untouchable for ten days on birth, still-birth or abortion in 7th, 8th or 9th month but the father and sapindas[617] when they take a bath after the prasava are not untouchable (Yāj. III. 19). In ancient times there were several differing views about jananāśauca for the father as vouched for by Baud.[618] Dh. S. I. 5 125–128. Although a woman becomes touchable in ten days after delivery she is not fit to take part in religious rites for 20 days after she becomes touchable (i. e. 30 days from birth) if she gave birth to a son but for 30 days (i. e. 40 days from birth) if a daughter was born.[619] Women of all varnas become pure (i. e. touchable) ten days after delivery—says Pracetas.[620] Devala states that there is no āśauca on the ground of birth when the period of (ten or twelve) days has expired.[621] If a woman was delivered at her father's or brother's house, then her parents and her brothers staying with the father had to observe āśauca for one day (Dharmasindhu p. 427), but if a woman was delivered of a child at her husband's house then her father or brother had to observe no āśauca (on birth). Even when sagotras have to observe āśauca on birth they are not untouchable (Ṣaḍaśīti verse 6).

It would be better to state here certain general rules once for all. When any text employs the word day (ahah) or night (rātri) in prescribing the duration of āśauca what is meant is ahorātra (both day[622] and night). When counting the days of āśauca one has to begin from the day of the cremation, if the deceased was an āhitāgni, but from the day of death in the case of one not an āhitāgni[623] (Āśauca-daśaka verse 4, Kūrma, Uttarārdha 23. 52). Birth and death are causes of āśauca only when they are known to the person who is to be affected by it and not by the mere fact of the birth or death. This follows from certain passages of Pāraskara gr. III. 10 and Manu V. 75–76 and the Brahmapurāna. Pāraskara (III. 10) provides:[624] 'if one who had gone abroad dies, (his relatives) should on hearing (of his death) sit down and offer him water and should remain untouchable for the days that remain out of the proper period (viz. 10, 12, 15, 30 days); if the prescribed period (of āśauca) has expired they should observe āśauca for one night or three nights.' Manu (V. 75–76) is to the same effect. The Brahmapurāna states: 'if a donor makes a gift and the acceptor accepts it when both are not aware of there being a birth or death in their family, no blame attaches.'

We should now turn to āśauca on death. Here again there is no unanimity and therefore the views perferably of the latest works (such as the Dharmasindhu) will be set out after referring to a few smrti passages. Āśauca on death renders those who incur it untouchable and unable to perform religious rites. Pār. gr. III. 10. 29–30 (S. B. E. vol. 29 p. 357) stated generally that the impurity caused by death lasts through three nights and that according to some teachers through ten nights. If a child dies within ten days of birth, the father and mother have to observe Jananāśauca and become purified by the end of the āśauca on birth and the father remains untouchable for those days (Kūrma-purāna q. by S. K. p 21). If a child died before it struck teeth the sapindas had only to undergo a bath, while the parents had to observe āśauca for three days if the child was a son and for one day if a daughter (vide Yāj. III. 23, Śankha 15. 4, Atri 95, Āśaucadaśaka verse 2). If the child died after striking teeth but before Cūḍā (or the end of the third year) the sapindas had to observe āśauca for one day and night (Yāj. III. 23, Śankha 15. 5), but the parents had āsauca (of death) for three days. If the child was a girl the sapindas became pure by a bath up to the girl's third year. If death occurs between Cūḍā (or three years) and upanayana or marriage (in the case of girls) the sapiṇḍas including the father have to observe āśauca for three days and samānodakas become purified by a bath alone After upanayana all sapiṇḍas have to observe āśauca (on death) for ten days (Gaut. 14 1, Manu V. 59, Āsaucadaśaka 2) and all samānodakas for three days. In the case of a śūdra dying

after three and before marriage or 16 years the āśauca is three days for all sapindas. After sixteen years or marriage (in the case of a śūdra) it is the āśauca prescribed for his caste. In the case of a girl dying after three years and before vāgdāna (betrothal) the parents have āśauca for three days and the sapindas (up to three generations) one day. If a girl dies after vāgdāna and before marriage the sapindas of her father as well as of the proposed bridegroom had to observe āśauca for three days. In the case of women and śūdras if death takes place after marriage or after 16 years (if the Śūdra was unmarried) the period of āśauca for all sapindas is ten days. If a woman dies at her father's house after marriage, her parents, step-mother, full brothers and step-brothers have to observe āśauca for three days and her paternal uncle and the like that stay in the same house with her father for one day. Some say that if the married daughter dies in a village other than that of the father, the parents have to observe āśauca for a pakṣiṇī [625] (i. e. two nights with a day between or two days with a night between). There are other views on this point which are passed over. For example, Viṣṇu-dharmasūtra (22. 32-34) says that in the case of a married woman there is no āśauca on the parents' side; but when she is delivered of a child or dies in the father's house then the impurity is for one day or three days respectively. [626] A married woman has to observe āśauca for three days for the death of her parents or step-mother if ten days have not elapsed from the day of death or for the remaining days out of the period of ten (Yāj. III. 21 latter half). If the married daughter hears of the death of the parents or step-mother at a time more than ten days after the death or within one year she has to observe āśauca for a pakṣiṇī. If a brother whose upanayana has been performed dies at his married sister's house or vice versa, āśauca has to be observed for three days by them, but if they do not die at each other's house but in a different one then the āśauca is for a pakṣinī and if the death occurs in another village then there is āśauca only for one day. The same rules apply to step-brothers and step-sisters and also among sisters. A married woman on the death of her paternal grand-father or paternal uncle has to undergo only a bath. If a maternal uncle dies, the nephew and the niece have to observe āśauca for a pakṣinī. If the maternal uncle dies in the house of the nephew then there is āśauca for three days and for only one day if the maternal uncle had not his upanayana performed or died in another village; the same rules apply to one's mother's step-brother. If the wife of a maternal uncle dies, the nephew or the niece of the maternal uncle have to undergo āśauca for a pakṣinī If a nephew whose thread ceremony has been performed dies, his maternal uncle and maternal aunt have āśauca for three days The same rules apply if the deceased be the son of a step-sister of the maternal uncle. If the niece (sister's daughter) dies there is only a bath for the maternal uncle. If a maternal grandfather dies, the grandchild (the son or daughter of a daughter) has to observe āśauca for three days, but only for a pakṣinī if the maternal grandfather dies in a different village. On the death of the maternal grand-mother the grandchildren have to observe āśauca for a pakṣiṇī. Some works do not prescribe āśauca for a female descendant such as a niece or grand-daughter. If a daughter's son, whose upanayana had been performed, died, the maternal grandfather and grandmother had to observe āśauca for three days and for pakṣinī if the daughter's son had not upanayana performed for him. On the death of a daughter's daughter the maternal grandfather and mother incur no āśauca In all these matters the general rule is that a male whose upanayana had been performed and a married woman alone are liable to undergo āśauca for any relative other than the parents (i e. on the death of a parent a male though without upanayana and a woman though unmarried are liable to undergo āśauca).

If a man's father-in-law or mother-in-law die near (in the house of) the man, he has to undergo āśauca for three days, but only for pakṣinī if the death is elsewhere than with the son-in-law. On the death of a son-in-law, the father-in-law and the mother-in-law have to observe āśauca for one day or they have only to take a bath, but if the son-in-law dies in the house of the father-in-law then the āśauca is for three days. On the death of one's wife's brother, the āśauca is for one day i upanayana had been performed; but if no upanayana was performed or if he died in another village a mere bath is enough.

On the death of one's mother's sisters (full or half) the person (whether man or woman) has to undergo āśauca for a pakṣiṇī; the same rule applies on the death of the father's sister. If it is a step-sister of the father then a mere bath is enough. The father's sister has to undergo a bath if the nephew dies If one's father's sister or mother's sister dies in one's house then the āśauca is for three days.

In the case of bandhus (described by the Mit. on Yāj. II. 135 as bhinnagotra sapiṇḍas) of[627] the three kinds, the āśauca is for a pakṣiṇī, provided the bandhu is upanīta but if he died before upanayana then āśauca is for one day and if the bandhu died in one's house then for three days If the daughter of the father's sister (and of the other bandhus enumerated in the three verses) dies married, the āsauca is one day, but if they die unmarried only a bath is necessary. Among the three kinds of bandhus, a man himself and his three ātmabandhus have to observe āśauca for each other's death; but the case is different as to pitṛbandhus and mātṛbandhus. If any one of these latter dies, there is āśauca for the man whose bandhus they are, but if a man dies, his pitṛbandhus and mātṛbandhus have to observe no āśauca.

If an adopted son dies, his natural father and adoptive father have to observe āśauca for three days (the Vyavahāramayūkha differs from this) and the sapiṇḍas for one day.

If the adoptive or natural father dies, the adopted son has to observe āśauca for three days and for one day for the sapiṇḍas of any one of them. On the death of the son and the grandson of an adopted son, the sapiṇḍas of the natural father and the adoptive father have to observe āśauca for one day and vice versa. These rules apply if the son adopted is not a sapinda or samānodaka of the adopter, when he was in his family of birth. But if a sagotra sapinda or a samānodaka be adopted, then the āśauca is for ten or three days respectively.

627 The bandhus are of three kinds, आत्मबन्धु, पितृबन्धु and मातृबन्धु. In three verses variously attributed to Baudhāyana or Śātātapa three illustrations of each of the three kinds of bandhus are given आत्मपितृष्वसुः पुत्रा आत्ममातृष्वसुः सुताः। आत्ममातुलपुत्राश्च विज्ञेया आत्मबान्धवाः॥ पितुः पितृष्वसुः पुत्राः पितुर्मातृष्वसुः सुताः। पितुर्मातुलपुत्राश्च विज्ञेयाः पितृबान्धवाः। मातुः पितृष्वसुः पुत्रा मातुर्मातृष्वसुः सुताः। मातुर्मातुलपुत्राश्च विज्ञेया मातृबान्धवाः॥ q by the मिता. on या. II. 135, व्यव नि. p 455, परा मा III p 528, मद पा. p. 674. For further details, vide H. of Dh vol. III. pp 754–762.

If one's ācārya[628] dies, the pupil has to observe āśauca for three days, but only one day if he dies in another village (Gautama 14. 26, 52, Manu V. 80). On the death of the ācārya's wife or son the āśauca is for one day.[629] On the death of a guru (who instructs in Vedic mantras) the āśauca is three days and pakṣiṇī if he dies in another village. On the death of a teacher who imparted instruction in grammar, astronomy and other aṅgas (subsidiary lores) of the Veda, the āśauca is one day. Similar rules are laid down about the death of a pupil, ṛtvik (sacrificial priest), a sacrificer, a dependent śrotriya, a fellow-student, a friend, which are all passed over as not now useful Vide Gaut. 14. 19-20 (which prescribe one day's āśauca on the death of a fellow-student or a dependent śrotriya).

These provisions about āśauca on the death of the ācārya and ṛtvik who were not sapiṇḍas show how closely the bond between teacher and pupil was thought to be in ancient times, almost equalling the tie of blood. When a yati (ascetic) dies,[630] all his sapindas have simply to undergo a bath (and nothing more). Conversely, a yati and brahmacārin have to observe no āśauca Manu V. 82, Yāj III. 25, Visnu 22.45, Sankha 15. 15 provide that on the death of the ruler of the country in which one resides one has to observe āśauca up till

628. An ācārya is defined by Manu II. 140 as one who performs the upanayana of his pupil and teaches him the Veda together with the Kalpasūtra and Upaniṣads. Ṛtvik is defined by Manu II. 143 as one who is chosen for the performance of Agnyādheya, the pākayajñas and the solemn sacrifices like Agniṣṭoma.

629. आचार्यपत्नीपुत्रोपाध्यायमातुलश्वशुरश्वशुर्यसहाध्यायिशिष्येष्वतीतेष्वेकरात्रेण । विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 22. 44. श्वशुर्य means wife's brother. Manu (V. 80-81) prescribes three days' āśauca on the death of the ācārya, his wife and son, and śrotriya Gaut. 14.26 does the same.

the coming of the day or night next to that on which the king dies.[631]

As long as a corpse is not removed from the village in which a man dies, the whole village is in āśauca Āp Dh. S. 1 3 9 14 declares that there is no Veda study till a corpse lies in the village The Smrti-muktāphala (p 541) quotes[632] several smrtis to the effect that in a village in which a corpse lies unremoved, there is to be no eating, no Vedic study and no sacrifice, but that this does not apply where in a village there are more than four hundred brāhmanas. The Dharmasindhu (p 433) also says the same about a village, but adds that this rule does not apply to a town

The ideas of ritualistic purity went so far as to provide (as stated in the Śuddhitattva quoted by the Nirnayasindhu) that if a dog died in a brāhmana's house the house became impure for ten days, that, if a śūdra,[633] a patita or a mleccha died in a brāhmana's house, the house became impure for a month, two months or four months respectively and the house had to be abandoned if a śvapāka died therein

Atikrāntāśauca (impurity on coming to know of birth or death after the several periods fixed). The general rule[634] is that, if a person stays in a different country and hears of a birth or death among his sapindas, he has to observe āśauca not for ten days after hearing but for that number of days that are short of the ten days (counting from birth or death) prescribed for sapindas. Vide Manu V. 75, Yāj III. 21 (latter half), Śankha 15.11, Pār. gr III. 10 Āśauca interferes very much with one's activities and it is hence that often-times people send a closed letter to their relatives living in a different place stating thereon that it be opened on a particular day (which is the 10th day from the death of a sapinda). Everyone knows the meaning of such a direction and by such a subterfuge inconvenience is avoided and the dictates of the śāstra are deemed to be satisfied. If a son hears of the death of a parent he has to observe āśauca for ten days from the day of hearing, but if he hears of the death of a parent before the collection of bones then he has to observe āśauca only for the days that remain (Smrti-muktāphala p. 534). There is great divergence about the period of āśauca if the death of a sapinda comes to one's ears more than ten days after the day of death. Manu V. 77 provides that on hearing of the death of a sapinda or the birth of a son after ten days (from the event) a man becomes pure after plunging into water with the clothes on and Yāj III. 21 (last pāda, 'pūrne dattvodakam śuciḥ') states that he becomes pure after (a bath and) offering water when the period fixed has passed off. From the words of Manu that only the father, even if he hears of the birth of a son more than ten days after the event, has to take a bath the Mit infers that there is no atikrāntāśauca for sapindas on birth[635]. The Mit. quotes Devala in support (vide note 621 above). The Dharmasindhu follows the Mit. Manu V. 76, Śankha 15.12, Kūrmapurāna (Uttarārdha) 23.21 state that when ten days have passed after the event of death, the man who hears of the death is impure for three days and if he hears of the death more than a year after death, he becomes pure after a bath. In order to remove the conflict among smrtis Vrddha-Vasistha lays down 'āśauca is for three days if the news of death is heard within three months (but later than ten days after death), for a paksini if it is heard within six months (but later than three months), for one day if heard before nine months (but later than 6 months) and thereafter (i. e. up to one year but later than nine months) one becomes pure by a bath. But the Mit. says [636] that this holds good as to all except one's parents and quotes Paithīnasi and another smṛti for the proposition that whenever a son staying in a distant country hears of the death of a parent whether within a year or after a year he has to observe āśauca for ten days from the day he becomes aware of it. Laghu-Āśvalāyana (20.88) lays down the same exception in the case of a son. The Mit. (on Yāj. III. 21 last half) further says that the rules about atikrāntāśauca apply only to a deceased person whose upanayana had been performed. The Dharmasindhu (p 433) remarks that there is no atikrāntāśauca as regards the periods of one day and three days prescribed on the death of one whose upanayana had not been performed or as regards the periods of pakṣiṇī and three days on the death of the maternal uncle and others of a different gotra. Similarly, there is no atikrāntāśauca with reference to the āśauca for three days prescribed in the case of samānodakas; but in these cases even after the lapse of the fixed time a bath is necessary. The rules about atikrāntāśauca apply only to āśauca on death for ten days. As in the case of the son, so in the cases of husband and wife and of co-wives among themselves even after the lapse of more than a year and even if the death is in a different country the husband or wife or co-wife has to observe āśauca for ten days The parents, even when they hear of the death of an aurasa son after a year, have to observe āśauca for three days. On the news of the death of a sapinda living in the same country coming to a sapinda's ears after ten days but up to three months, the period of āśauca is three days, pakṣiṇī up to 6 months, up to nine months one day and up to one year a bath. Here also there are various views such as those of Mādhava and others. Vide Śuddhiprakāśa pp. 49–51 for various views.

635. जन्मन्यतिक्रान्ताशौचं सपिण्डाना नास्तीति गम्यते। पितुस्तु निर्दशेऽपि जनने स्नानमस्त्येव श्रुत्वा पुत्रस्य जन्म च इति वचनात्। एतच्च पुत्रग्रहणं जन्मनि सपिण्डाना- मतिक्रान्ताशौच नास्तीति ज्ञापकम्। अन्यथा 'निर्दशं ज्ञातिमरणं श्रुत्वा जन्म च निर्दशम्' इत्येवावक्ष्यत्। न चोक्तम्। मिता. on या III. 21 (latter half).

The Mit. on Yāj. III. 21 (latter half) makes a distinction between knowledge of the death of a sapinda staying in the same country coming to a person's ears after ten days from death and of the death of a sapinda staying in another country separated by a big river &c In the latter case the sapindas coming to hear of the death after ten days but even before three months are purified by a mere bath. It quotes[637] a smrti verse 'on hearing that a person (sapinda) died in another country and in the case of the death of an impotent person or a forest hermit or an ascetic purification follows after a bath and the same applies to sagotra sapindas in the case of abortion.' The Sadaśīti (35) has a similar verse[638] The Mit. quotes two verses of Brhaspati which define what deśāntara (a different country) means[639] 'Where there is a large river or there is a mountain which separates (one territory from another) or where the languages differ then there is deśāntara. Some say that a different country means the distance of sixty yojanas, while others put it down at forty yojanas and still others at thirty yojanas.' There is a difference of opinion as to whether in order to constitute a different country all three must co-exist (viz. a large river, a mountain and difference of speech) or any one of the three will suffice or whether 60, 40 or 30 yojanas would constitute a different country or whether the requirement of ten days for news to be carried to a place would constitute deśāntara The Sm. C and Ṣadaśīti 37 hold the view that any one of the above three is sufficient while others hold other views. The Śuddhiviveka[640] holds that a distance of 60 yojanas constituted deśāntara by itself, but even within sixty yojanas if a large river, a mountain and difference of speech occurred together, that could give rise to deśāntara. The Smrtyarthasāra[641] avers that deśāntara is differently described in the Smrtis, Purāṇas and the works on tīrthas For yojana, vide H of Dh. vol. III n 185 pp. 145–146

The Dharmasindhu (p. 435) provides that if the bones of an āhitāgni were not found and only an effigy of palāśa leaves were burnt, still the āśauca is for ten days even if he died in a different country and a long time had elapsed. Similarly, in the case of the effigy of one who is not an āhitāgni, the āśauca is for ten days for his son and wife if they have not already observed any āśauca for him but if they had observed it (on hearing of his death) then for three days (on the burning of the effigy). For other sapiṇḍas (than the son and wife) in the same circumstances three days and bath are respectively prescribed.

It is provided in the Gṛhya kārikas, the Smrtyarthasāra (p 94), Dharmasindhu (p. 435) and other works that if a man[642] went to a distant country and no news of his being alive was heard, then his son (or other relative), after the lapse of 20 years from the time when no news was heard if the man went away when he was young or 15 years if he left when he was of middle age or 12 years if he left later in life, should perform three cāndrāyaṇas or thirty krcchras, prepare an effigy of the man with kuśas (or with palāśa leaves), should burn it and then observe āśauca and perform śrāddhas &c.

To summarize the above discussion it is clear that as indicated by Medhātithi on Manu V. 58 there is a distinction as regards the periods of āśauca and the persons affected by it in several ways (1) There is a distinction between āśauca on birth and āśauca on death; (2) As to āśauca on death numerous distinctions arise viz (a) when there is abortion (garbhasrāva or garbhapāta, as in Śankha 15 4, Brhat-Parāśara VI p 186); (b) when the foetus comes out from the 7th to the 9th month of pregnancy or the child is still-born or dies after being born but before the appearance of teeth (Yāj. III. 23, Atri 95); (c) after the appearance of teeth but before cūdā or three years (Visnu 22. 29, Yāj. III. 23); (d) after cūdā or three years up to upanayana (Manu V. 67), (e) after upanayana (Yaj. III. 23, Manu V. 59, Gaut. 14. 1); (f) as to āśauca on death after upanayana the duration at one time depended in the case of brāhmaṇas on Vedic study, the performance of śrauta rites and whether the brāhmana subsisted on ears of corn left in the field after the crops were harvested[643] (Parāśara III 5, Śankha 15 1, Atri 83, Agnipurāna 158. 10-11), (g) the duration of āśauca depended on caste (Gaut. 14. 1-4, Yāj III. 22 &c); (h) the duration of āśauca depended on nearness of blood i. e. whether the person affected was a sapinda or a samānodaka (Gaut 14 1 and 18, Manu V. 59, 64); (i) the duration depended also on the nearness or distance from the place of death (Laghu-Āśvalāyana 20. 85, 89), (j) it also depended on whether the deceased died in a different country separated by a large river, a mountain or thirty yojanas (Laghu-Āśvalāyana 20.87); (k) duration depended on the time that elapsed before it came to the knowledge of the relative; (l) the duration depended upon whether another āśauca supervened when the period of the first was not over.

If a person is born or died at night or news thereof is received at night, a question arises as to from what day the periods of āśauca are to be calculated For example, if a man died at 1 A M. on Monday, was Monday to be included in counting ten days of āśauca or was it to be excluded? There are two views on this point.[643a] One view is that any time before midnight is to be counted as belonging to the previous day, while any time after midnight is to be taken as belonging to the next day. On this view in the above illustration Monday would be excluded in the calculation of ten days. The other view is that the night is to be divided into three parts and if death occurs in the first two of the three parts then the day is to be included in the calculation; if the time of death falls in the 3rd part, the ten days are to be calculated from the next day. On this view Monday would be included in the ten days. The Dharmasindhu (p. 435) remarks that in this matter the usage of the country is to be followed. Vide Madanapārijāta pp. 394–395 also.

Several rules are mentioned in the smrtis about the periods of āśauca for the relatives of higher castes when they marry women of lower varnas (i e when there are anuloma marriages). For example, Daksa VI. 12 says that if a brāhmana has married wives of the four varnas, then the impurity on the delivery or death of these women respectively lasts for 10, 6, 3 or 1 day Visnu Dh. S (22. 22–24) provides that when a ksatriya has sapindas of the vaiśya or śūdra varna the āśauca on the birth and death of these lasts for six or three days, if a vaiśya has a śūdra as sapinda then impurity is removed after six days. But when people of lower varnas have sapindas of higher varnas then impurity on birth and death ceases when the impurity of the higher varna sapindas ceases. Laghu-Hārīta 84 (= Āpastambasmrti IX verse 13) has similar provisions. Other smrtis and purānas like the Kūrma (Uttarārdha 23. 30–36) mention differing views quoted in Hāralatā pp 54–60, Smr M. pp. 495–496 The Madanapārijāta remarks (pp 425–426) that some say that these varying provisions may be discarded or that they may be assigned their proper place according to the usages of the several countries or they should somehow be explained as based upon the person affected being possessed of virtues or not or they may be held to be applicable to seasons of distress or otherwise.

According to the Mit on Yāj.[644] III. 22 persons belonging to the pratiloma castes have no periods of āśauca, but they have to observe rules of purification similar to those relating to answering the call of nature Others like the Smrti-muktāphala[645] p. 495 aver, relying on Manu (X 41), that the pratiloma castes are like śūdras and have to observe the āśauca prescribed for śūdras The Hāralatā (p 12) quotes Ādipurāna to the effect that varnasankaras (i. e pratilomas) should follow the śūdras in the matter of āśauca and purification. The Smṛtyartha-sāra (p. 92) states that those born of pratiloma unions should observe āśauca if they perform prāyaścitta, but if they do not perform prāyaścitta then there is no āśauca for them.

It has already been stated (p 215) how it was the duty of sapiṇḍas to take out the corpse and to cremate it and how carrying the dead body of a poor brāhmaṇa was highly eulogised (Parāśara III. 39–40). But, as Manu V 101–102 provide, if a brāhmaṇa carried through affection the dead body of one[646] who was not his sapiṇḍa, as if he were a bandhu or carried (the dead body) of his mother's bandhus (such as mother's brother or sister) he became pure after three days; but if he partook of the food of those who were bereaved by death he became pure after ten days and if he does not stay in the house of those bereaved nor partakes of their food he becomes pure in a day (but if he stays in their house though not partaking of their food he has to observe āśauca for three days). Vide Kūrmapurāṇa (Uttarārdha 23. 37) and Viṣṇu 22. 7–9 also. Gautama (14. 21–25) has rules on the same subject but they somewhat differ and Haradatta remarks that this āśauca is somewhat different from the āśauca observed by sapiṇḍas, viz. he becomes untouchable but he need not follow the other rules such as sleeping on the ground &c. If a person carried a dead body through greed (for money), a brāhmaṇa, kṣatriya, vaiśya or śūdra had to observe āśauca respectively for 10, 12, or 15 days or a month. This was called nirhārāśauca, the word 'nirhāra'[647] including the covering of the dead body with a garment, decking it with garlands, perfumes and ornaments, carrying it and cremating it. Sapiṇḍas who are observing āśauca for the death of the same person may dine in the same house and partake of the food cooked, but not others who are not undergoing the same āśauca.[648]

Gaut 14. 29, Manu V. 103, Yāj. III. 26, Parāśara III. 42 prescribe that a brāhmaṇa should not follow the funeral procession of a deceased brāhmaṇa, but if he does so, he has to bathe, touch fire, take in ghee and then he becomes pure. Parāśara III.43–46 and Kūrmapurāṇa (Uttarārdha 23 45) provide a rising scale of the days of āśauca if a brāhmaṇa follows the corpse of a kṣatriya (āśauca for one day and pañcagavya), a vaiśya (āśauca for two days and six prāṇāyāmas), a śūdra (āśauca for three days, bath in a river going to the sea, 100 prāṇāyāmas[649] and drinking of ghee) Vide Triṁśac-chlokī verse 13.

If a brāhmaṇa who is not a sapiṇḍa of the deceased went to the bereaved family and wept along with the relatives before the collection of bones he had to observe āśauca for a day and then a bath if the deceased was a kṣatriya or vaiśya, but āśauca for three days if the deceased was a śūdra; but he had to undergo only a bath if he went after the collection of the bones, when the deceased was a śūdra and the weeping took place after the collection of bones he had to observe āśauca for a whole day and night. Vide Kūrmapurāṇa (Uttarārdha 23 46–47), Agnipurāṇa 158 47–48, Par M 1 2 pp 283–285, Smṛ M (āśauca) p. 543 and Āśaucadaśaka verse 9 (for nirhāra, following a funeral procession and weeping)

Persons[650] undergoing an āśauca on birth or death for one person were forbidden to touch other persons undergoing āśauca for the birth or death of another person altogether. If they did so they had to perform prāyaścitta (Prājāpatya or Sāntapana)

Even if a person's wife left him and lived in illicit relationship with a person of the same or higher caste he had to observe on her death āśauca for one day But if she lived with one lower in varṇa than her husband, the latter had not, on her death, to observe any āśauca at all (Yāj III 6) Similarly, one had to observe one day's āśauca on the death of sons that were not aurasa (such as kṣetraja) Vide Yāj III.25 and Viṣṇu 22 42–43

āśauca. While a marriage[651] rite (as also caula and upanayana), festival in honour of a deity and a sacrifice (like Jyotistoma) are in progress, if impurity due to birth or death overtakes the performer, the materials (money and other things) already set apart for them may be dedicated or donated to the deity or brāhmaṇas and no fault is incurred. As regards food, a smrti text[652] quoted by the Mit. says 'if in marriage, in a festival in honour of a deity or in a sacrifice āśauca on birth or death intervenes, the cooked food should be served through others (not affected by the āśauca) and the donor and the partaker of the food incur no blame Acc. to Angiras,[653] Paithīnasi (q by Sm. C.) and Visnu Dh. S., when once a sacrifice (like a Somayāga), a marriage, a sacrifice or festival in honour of the mother Goddesses or a deity or the dedication or foundation of an idol or temple has been begun a supervening āśauca does not matter. Even in modern times this is followed as regards upanayana and marriage. When exactly a sacrifice or marriage ceremony may be said to have begun is laid down by Laghu-Visnu as follows[654] in the case of a sacrifice it may be said to begin when the priests are chosen, in the case of vratas and japa when the sankalpa (declaration) is made, in the case of marriage when the Nāndīśrāddha is performed, and in the case of a śrāddha when the food meant for the brāhmanas has been cooked completely. Certain things could be taken from the house of one who was undergoing āśauca[655] on birth or death and who was the owner thereof (though not actually

Some smṛtis and commentators lay down rules about the āśauca to be observed by slaves when their masters are in āśauca. Vide Viṣṇu Dh. S. 22.19, Devalasmṛti verse 6, Bṛhaspati quoted by Haradatta on Gaut. 14.4. But as slavery has long been abolished this topic is passed over here.

Āśaucasannipāta or āśaucasampāta (the knowledge of another āśauca coming to a person already observing one āśauca)[656] The rules about this matter were promulgated early enough and they are based on convenience and common sense. The rules try to give relief to persons who may be sorely tried if it were held that, when another āśauca supervenes while a person is already in the midst of one, he has to finish all the days of the first āśauca and then begin the period of the second āśauca. The Gaut. Dh. S. 14.5 starts by saying that if another āśauca supervenes on one already being undergone, purification results after the remaining days of the first āśauca are over. Then sūtras 6 and 7 provide that if the second āśauca supervenes in the last night of the first āśauca then purification results in two days after the first āśauca ends and if the second āśauca comes to be known in the last watch of the night of the last day of the first āśauca, the second ends in three days after the first ends. Baud Dh. S. I. 5. 123 appears to be similar to Gaut. 14 5-6 Manu V. 79, Yāj. III. 20, Viṣṇu Dh. S. 22. 35-38, Śaṅkha 15. 10, Parāśara III. 28 lay down the general rule promulgated by Gautama 14.5.

Some general rules concerning this topic may first be stated The first rule is that in a conflict between āśauca on death and āśauca on birth, that on death is stronger[657] The 2nd rule is that if both āśaucas are of the same kind and the second is of the same duration or of lesser duration than the first then a man gets rid of both at the end of the first, but if the second, though of the same kind, has a longer duration than the first, then purification follows at the end of the one that is of longer duration. It has to be remembered that birth and death give rise to āṣauca[658] only when they are known by a person.

On this topic there is a good deal of divergence between the views of the followers of the Mitākṣarā, of the Gauḍas and Maithilas (vide Śuddhiprakāśa pp 74-82, Nirṇayasindhu 536-540). Following the Nirṇayasindhu it may be said that twelve alternatives are possible, when another āśauca supervenes on an already existing one. They are set out here. (1 & 2) If both āśaucas are due to birth and the second is of the same duration as the first or of lesser duration, then at the end of the first āśauca there is purification from both (Viṣṇu 22.35, Śaṅkha 15 70); (3) If both āśaucas are due to birth and the second one is of longer duration than the first then purification results at the end of the second (Śaṅkha 15.10, Ṣaḍaśīti 19); (4 and 5) If both āśaucas arise on death and the second is of the same duration as the first or of lesser duration, then at the end of the period of the first āśauca there is purification from both; (6) If both āśaucas arise on death and the second that intervenes is of longer duration than the first then purification results at the end of the second (Ṣaḍaśīti 21); (7, 8 and 9) When the firt āśauca is one arising from birth and an āśauca due to deaths intervenes, the āśauca on death must run its full course (i. e. there is no purification by the lapse of the first āśauca due to birth), whether the āśauca for death is of lesser duration than the āśauca on birth, or whether it is of the same or of longer duration (Ṣaḍaśīti 18); (10, 11) If the [659] first āśauca arises on death and the supervening one is due to birth and is of lesser duration than the one on death or of the same duration then both end at the expiration of the first āśauca on death (Ṣaḍaśīti 21); (12) If the first āśauca arises on death and the supervening one arises on birth and is of longer duration, then both run their proper courses (Ṣaḍaśīti 21)

The Dharmasindhu (p 436) generally follows the Nirṇayasindhu but remarks: 'Āśauca on death cannot be done away with by āśauca on birth which is of the same or greater duration; āśauca on death of the extent of pakṣiṇī cannot get rid of āśauca on birth which is three or ten days in duration and āśauca on birth extending to ten days cannot be got rid of by āśauca on death which is of three days' duration' These are the views of many writers A certain writer says that āśauca on birth though longer in duration can be got rid of by āśauca on death which is of lesser extent

The Mit on Yāj. III. 20 (first half) states an exception to the above rules about āśauca-sannipāta When a person's mother dies and then, while the period of āśauca for the mother's death is not over, the father dies, it does not follow that the āśauca for the father comes to an end with the end of the āśauca for the mother, but the son has to observe the full period of [660] the āśauca for father's death Similarly, if the father died first and then, while the period of āśauca for the father was not over, the mother died, it does not follow that the āśauca for the mother's death comes to an end with the end of the first period of āśauca for the father, but the son after observing the period of the father's āśauca has to observe āśauca for the mother for one pakṣiṇī in addition It may be remarked that Aparārka construes this verse differently by stating that if the father dies during the period of āśauca for the death of the mother, then the general rule applies, viz that purification follows at the end of the āśauca for the mother

If, while an āśauca on death is being undergone, an āśauca on birth arises, the father of the child born is able to perform the rites of Jātakarma and the like, because he is to be deemed to be purified for the nonce, according to Prajāpati.[661]

The Sadaśīti (verse 22) provides[662] that the rule about purification on the expiry of the first āśauca in the case of succeeding āśaucas on birth or death has three exceptions, viz. a woman who is delivered of a child, the person who actually cremates the body (of the deceased) and the sons of the deceased; that is, a sūtikā has to observe the proper period of untouchability and one who cremates a dead body has to observe āśauca for ten days, though the delivery or cremation takes place in the midst of an āśauca on death.

SADYAḤ—ŚAUCA (purification on the same day). It has already been seen (p 274) that Dakṣa (VI 2) speaks of ten kinds of impurity on birth or death, the first two of which are sadyaḥ-śauca and ekāha Ekāha means day and night together (vide note 622 above) The ordinary meaning of 'sadyaḥ' is 'at once, immediately.' But when Yāj III. 29, Parāśara III 10, Atri 97 and other smṛtis employ the word 'sadyaḥ-śauca' what is meant is that there is no āśauca for a whole day or three days or ten days, but only up to the taking of a bath or up to the end of the day or the end of the night on which the event occurs Pāṇini[663] mentions 'sadyah' and thirteen other words in one sūtra as nipātas (irregularly formed). From Yāj. III. 23 (ādantajanmanah sadya ācūḍānnaiśikī smṛtā) it impliedly follows that sadyah has the meaning of 'a part of a day or a part of the night' (as the case may be) and 'naisiki' means a whole day and night (as note 622 shows). The Śuddhitattva

(pp. 340–341) explains [664] 'sadyaḥ' as meaning 'a portion of the day or of the night' and cites several authorities in support The Śuddhiprakāśa (p 92) explains that 'sadyahśauca' in some contexts means 'absence of āsauca,' while in others it means 'bath' and with reference to those killed in battle and the like (to whom piṇḍas have to be offered) it means 'a part of the day or of the night.' The Smṛtimuktāphala [665] (āsaucakānda) p 481 says that 'sadyaḥsauca' means 'impurity that comes to an end by a bath' That piṇḍas have to be offered to those about whom there is 'sadyahśauca' is stated by the Ādipurāna [666] According to the Śuddhikaumudī (p 73) 'sadyahsauca' has two meanings, viz. (1) the entire absence of āśauca as in the cases of sacrificial priests &c (Yāj III. 28), (2) āśauca that is removed by a mere bath (as in Manu V. 76)

The rules about āśauca for several days do not operate in five classes of cases, viz certain persons are exempted altogether, certain activities of certain persons who would ordinarily be untouchable owing to āśauca are allowed without causing pollution, certain articles can be taken by anybody without fear of pollution from those who are affected by āśauca, no asauca is to be observed for certain deceased persons owing to their faults, in the case of certain persons express texts say that no āsauca need be observed for them These five classes will briefly be dealt with in order In the principal texts these five classes of cases are rather mixed up. In the Visnupurāna III. 13 7 it is provided that there is sadyaḥśauca on the death of a child, or of a person dying in another country, of a patita, or of an ascetic or on the death of a person committing suicide by water, fire or hanging Vide also Gaut 14 11 and 42 and Vāmanapurāna 14.99.

Yāj. (III. 28-29) prescribes that there is sadyaḥśauca (purification after a bath) in case of birth or death (of a sapinda) for priests chosen for a sacrifice (after they are offered Madhuparka), for those who have undergone dikṣā for a vedic sacrifice (like Somayāga) and those who are engaged in performing the constituent parts of a Vedic sacrifice, those who continuously distribute food at a charity house, those who are engaged in prāyaścittas like cāndrāyana or the vows of snātakas, for brahmacārins (when performing the duties of their āśrama), for persons who everyday make gifts of a cow, gold etc (at the time of making the gift), for those who have realized Brahman (ascetics); there is sadyahśauca at gifts (when once begun), at marriage, in a Vedic sacrifice, in battle (for those who are about to be engaged in it), when there is commotion in a country (through invasion), and in a severe calamity (like famine when one can accept food from any body). Gaut. (14. 43-44) says that there is sadyahśauca in the case of kings as otherwise there will be obstacles in their duties and also in the case of brāhmanas in order to prevent the cessation of their duties of teaching. Śaṅkhalikhita say the same 'Rāja dharmāyatanam sarvesām tasmādanavaruddhaḥ pretaprasavadosaih' (Śuddhikalpataru p. 62). It is stated in Manu V. 93 that kings, [667] those engaged in vratas and sattras (like Gavām-ayana) are not liable to undergo the blemish of āśauca, because they (kings) occupy the position of Indra (ruler) and are like Brahma (which is free from all taint) and Manu V. 94 clinches the matter further by observing 'sadyahśauca is ordained for the position of a king which can be obtained only by great merit (in past lives) for the sake of the protection of the subjects and the reason of this (rule) is the position that he occupies.' Similarly, Gobhilasmrti [668]

667. न राज्ञामघदोषोस्ति व्रतिनां न च सत्रिणाम्। ऐन्द्रं स्थानमुपासीना ब्रह्मभूता हि ते सदा॥ राज्ञो माहात्मिके स्थाने सद्य शौचं विधीयते। प्रजानां परिरक्षार्थमासनं चात्र कारणम्॥ मनु V. 93-94. The first verse is the same as Vasistha 19.48 (Furher's text is corrupt, which must be corrected into नाघदोषोस्ति) which cites it as Yama's. It is the position that he holds that renders the king (whether a ksatriya, brāhmana or śūdra) free from āśauca The विष्णुधर्मसूत्र (22. 47-52) restricts the absence of āśauca by saying 'kings are free from āśauca when they are performing the duties of a king (such as administration of justice)': 'न राज्ञां राजकर्मणि न व्रतिनां व्रते न सत्रिणां सत्रे न कारूणां स्वकर्मणि न राजाज्ञाकारिणां तदिच्छया।'

(III. 64–65, often quoted as Chandogapariśista of Kātyāyana) states 'in a sūtaka, a brahmacārin should not give up his peculiar duties (Veda study and vratas), a sacrificer his various actions (required) in a sacrifice after he has undergone dīkṣā, one who is practising penance should not give up krcchra and the like; these do not incur impurity even on the death of their father (or mother)' The Kūrmapurāṇa[669] provides 'no impurity is declared on death in the case of perpetual or temporary brahmacārins, forest hermits or ascetics'. Similar rules are given by Atri 97–98, Linga-purāna, pūrvabhāga, chap. 89.77. The Mit. on Yāj III. 28 remarks that in the case of the three āśramas of brahmacārin, vānaprastha and yati there is freedom from impurity in all cases and at all times; ascetics and brahmacārins have to undergo a bath with clothes on the death of their father or mother (Dharmasindhu p. 442); in the case of several others such as those who are continually making gifts or are observing vratas there is freedom from impurity only when they are engaged in those particular actions and not when they are engaged in any action whatever or when they mix up among others for everyday work.[670] Similar rules occur in Parāśara III.21–22. It has already been stated following Manu V. 91 (= Visnu 22.86) that a brahmacārin was not to perform the last rites (of carrying the corpse, cremation) for anybody except for five persons (viz. his parents, upādhyāya, ācārya and guru) He did not incur āśauca by performing the funeral rites of his parents and offering water and pinda to them. But if he did so for any one other than the five mentioned by Manu he had to observe āśauca for ten days, and to undergo prāyaścitta and had his upanayana performed again. A brahmacārin had to observe after samāvartana (returning from the Vedic teacher) āśauca for three days for all relatives that died during the period of his studenthood (Manu V. 88, Visnu Dh. S. 22.87). Gautama (14. 42–44) says generally[671] that on the death of children (before the appearance of teeth or before Cūḍā), of those who are separated by a country, of ascetics and of those who are not sapindas, the relatives are purified by only a bath; so also there is sadyahśauca for kings, for otherwise there would be conflict with their duty (of protecting the subjects) and for a brāhmana also in order that there may be no cessation of Vedic study.[672] The Śuddhiprakāśa (p. 93) remarks that though there is no āśauca (as stated by Yāj III. 28) yet a sacrificial priest and a dīksita had to bathe on the death of a sapinda, a brahmacārin also would have to take a bath if he followed the funeral procession of his father or mother &c, but an ascetic would not have even to bathe and that usage was the same in its day.

The second class of exceptions refers to cases where certain persons, though they have incurred āśauca, are allowed to do certain acts or carry on their activities without bringing pollution to those with whom they deal or come in contact. For example, Parāśara (III. 20–21) says; 'craftsmen (such as those who draw pictures or washermen), workers (cooks and the like), physicians, male and female slaves, barbers, kings and śrotriyas are declared to be sadyahśauca, as also one observing a vrata (cāndrāyana &c.), one purified by being engaged in a sattra (such as Gavām-ayana), a brāhmana who has established śrauta fires; the king has not to observe āśauca and also any one (such as his purohita) whom the king for his own purpose desires not to observe it' The Ādipurāna[673] gives the reason why craftsmen, physicians and others were allowed not to observe āśauca when engaged in their peculiar tasks, viz. what these people do cannot be done by any one else at all or at least so well or so easily.

It has [674] to be noted that the absence of āśauca in the case of craftsmen, physicians and the like has to be restricted to the peculiar activities of these and does not extend to all actions such as religious rites, śrāddhas and gifts This is clear from the words of the Viṣṇudharmasūtra [675] 22. 48-52. The Triṃśacchlokī (verse 18) [676] gives a long list of such peculiar activities The Kūrmapurāṇa (Uttarārdha 23 57-64) has nine verses on this topic which are quoted by the Hāralatā (p. 114).

It has already been seen (pp 238-240) that Pār gṛ. III 10 (nityāni vinivartante vaitānavarjam), Manu V. 84, Yāj III. 17 (latter half) provide that even those who have to undergo āśauca on death should not stop rites to be performed with śrauta fires, but should perform them themselves or get them performed through others. Thus certain religious rites were allowed to be done even by those who were āśaucin.

The Dharmasindhu (p 552) emphasizes that this exception to āśauca should be availed of only when there is no other alternative or in a season of distress.

It has already been stated how certain materials and things can be received without any pollution from those who are undergoing āśauca. That is the third class of cases which are exceptions to the rules of āśauca.

The fourth class of cases where rules of āśauca do not apply relate to persons deceased to whom some fault or taint attaches. Gaut. (14. 11) [677] and Śaṅkha-Likhita provide that there is sadyaḥśauca for those who kill themselves (i. e. commit suicide) by starting on the great journey (to the Himālaya), by fasting, by a weapon (like a dagger), by fire or poison or water or by hanging or by falling down from a precipice.

Yāj. III. 6 provides [678] that women that have gone over to heterodox views and practices, that do not belong to any particular āśrama, that are thieves (of gold and the like), that (attempt to) kill their husbands, that are unchaste and the like, that drink liquor and that attempt suicide, do not deserve to have water offered to them (on death) and no āśauca should be observed for them. This verse applies to men also as far as possible. Manu V. 89–90 are to the same effect. The Kūrmapurāṇa also prescribes [679] that for him who kills himself by means of fire, poison and the like, no āśauca, no cremation and no offering of water is prescribed, there is no cremation for patitas, nor antyeṣṭi nor collection of bones, no shedding of tears and no piṇḍa and no śrāddha should be performed for them. It is provided by Aṅgiras quoted by Mit. on Yāj III. 6 that 'death results to evil-minded men from cāṇḍālas (with whom a quarrel is purposely got up), from water, from a snake, from a brāhmaṇa, from lightning and from animals that have sharp fangs (like tigers). If water and piṇḍa are offered to such people (who die wilfully in these cases) they (water and piṇḍa) do not reach them and perish in mid air.' These verses refer to death in a wrathful fight with tigers, snakes and the like or suicide in water through wrath or sorrow. But, if one died in water or by fire through inadvertence or negligence, then Aṅgiras [680] himself provides that water should be offered and āśauca should be observed. Long passages are quoted from the Brahmapurāṇa by Haradatta on Gaut. 14. 11, Śuddhiprakāśa pp. 56–57, Nirṇayasindhu p. 550, which elaborate the same ideas as those of Yāj. III. 6, Aṅgiras and others and wind up by stating that if any one offers water or śrāddha to patitas through affection or cremates them, he has to undergo prāyaścitta (viz. two Taptakṛcchras).

If an āhitāgni were killed by cāṇḍālas in defiant fight with them or commits suicide, his corpse should be got cremated by śūdras without proper mantras and Gobhilasmṛti (III. 49-51) provides for the disposal of his srauta fires and sacrificial implements Though suicide was generally condemned, the smṛtis (such as Atri 218-219) and Purāṇas allowed certain exceptions, viz. very old men (above 70), very weak men who cannot observe the rules of bodily purification or those who have no desire left for the pleasures of the senses or who have carried out all tasks and duties, may start on Mahāprasthāna or die at Prayāga Vide H of Dh vol. II pp 926-928 for detailed treatment of this topic If a man killed himself in the way allowed by the śāstra then there was no blemish and āsauca had to be observed and water and śrāddha had to be offered. It may be noted that starting on Mahāprasthāna and suicide on the part of old men by falling down from a precipice or in fire are forbidden in the Kali age. Vide H of Dh. vol. III p. 939 and pp. 958-959

The Mit on Yāj. III. 6 quotes Vṛddha-Yājñavalkya and Chāgaleya to the effect that in the case of those who commit suicide in any manner that is not sanctioned by the śāstras, Nārāyaṇabali should be performed one year after their death and then the rites of śrāddha may be performed thereafter. The Mit.[681] on Yāj. III. 6) relying on Viṣṇupurāṇa describes the Nārāyaṇabali as follows On the 11th day of the bright half of a month, having worshipped Viṣṇu and Yama, one should with the face to the south offer near them on darbhas with ends turned towards the south ten piṇḍas laved with honey and ghee and mixed with sesame after bringing to mind the deceased[682] who should be looked upon as having the form of Viṣṇu and having uttered the name and gotra of the deceased; he should honour the piṇḍas with sandalwood paste and the rest and having performed all the rites up to the removal of the piṇḍas, should cast them in a river and not give them to the wife or to others Then on the night of the same day he should invite an uneven number of brāhmaṇas, should observe a fast, should worship Viṣṇu the next day, in the noon he should perform all the rites from washing the feet of brāhmaṇas up to the query about the gratification of the brāhmaṇas (by the food served to them) according to the procedure of ekoddiṣṭa śrāddha, then he should silently go through all the rites from ullekhana (drawing lines) up to avanejana (anointing) by the procedure of Piṇḍa-pitṛyajña He should offer four piṇḍas to (images of) Viṣṇu, Brahmā, Śiva and Yama together with the attendants, should remember the deceased by name and gotra, should utter the name of Viṣṇu and then offer the 5th piṇḍa Then having gratified the brāhmaṇas (after they have sipped water) with fee, he should bring to his mind one (of the brāhmaṇas) that is the most qualified of all as representing the deceased and having gratified him to the utmost with the gifts of cows, land and money, should then make the brāhmaṇas that have pavitras on their hands offer to the deceased water together with sesame and should then take his meal along with his relatives.

The passage quoted by the Mit. makes it clear that Nārāyaṇabali is meant only for those who commit suicide and is to be offered one year after the death of the person guilty of suicide. The Hāralatā[683] (p. 212) also says the same and explains a verse of Viṣṇu extending the performance of Nārāyaṇabali to those killed by cows and brāhmaṇas and those who become patita as a usage restricted to a certain country only.[684]

The Antyeṣṭipaddhati of Nārāyaṇabhaṭṭa describes (on folio 187) Nārāyaṇabali rite at greater length than in the Mitākṣarā. One or two details may be pointed out. Five kalaśas (jars) are to be placed over a quantity of rice or yavas, then filled with water, then have the three mantras 'Āpo hi sthā'

(Ṛg. X 9. 1–3) repeated over them, then copper plates are to be placed over them on which five images of Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Śiva, Yama and the deceased are to be drawn and the worship of these five is to be performed respectively with the Puruṣasūkta (Ṛg. X. 90), Ṛg. X. 121 1–10, Ṛg. I. 43. 1 (= Tai. Ā. X. 17), Ṛg X. 14. 13 and the name and gotra of the deceased, sixteen oblations of cooked rice are to be offered to Nārāyaṇa with the sixteen verses of the Puruṣasūkta (Ṛg X. 90). Ten piṇḍas[685] are to be offered on darbhas to the deceased after repeating his name and gotra (as stated in the note below). After the ten piṇḍas are cast in a river, there is tarpaṇa of the deceased sixteen times with the sixteen stanzas of the Puruṣasūkta. Then bali is offered separately to Viṣṇu, Brahmā, Śiva and Yama with his servants.

In the Mitākṣarā, there is no homa nor bali, both of which are described in the Antyeṣṭipaddhati and the Smṛtyarthasāra (pp. 85–86) copies verbatim the procedure given in the Mit. Bṛhatparāśara (V. pp. 175–176) contains the same procedure that is set out by the Mit. from the Viṣṇupurāṇa. The Nirṇayasindhu first describes Nārāyaṇabali as gathered from Hemādri and the Garuḍapurāṇa (III. 4. 113–119) It then describes Nārāyaṇabali to be performed for a deceased ascetic on the 12th day (along with Pārvaṇaśrāddha), following the procedure laid down by Baudhāyana. It then describes another form of Nārāyaṇabali based on Śaunaka which is meant for all those who commit suicide or who are killed by cāṇḍālas,[686] snakes, lightning, animals with fangs or who die in a distant land or for ascetics and yogins. The Vṛddha-Hāritasmṛti (IX. 123–143) describes another method of Nārāyaṇabali for devotees of Viṣṇu.

The Vaikhānasa-smārtasūtra (X. 9) sets out a rather brief procedure of Nārāyaṇabali which was intended for the benefit of men who committed suicide or were slain and for ascetics and provides that the same may be performed for those guilty of mahāpātakas after twelve years from their death. The Baudhāyana-gṛhya-śeṣasūtra III. 20 and 21 contain two different sets of the procedure of Nārāyaṇabali, the latter of which appears to be the later one. The latter contains the well-known verse about death at the hands of cāṇḍālas, from a snake &c.

The 5th class of exceptions to āśauca rules comprises those that are declared by express texts as not liable to observe an āśauca. Gautama (14. 8–10) provides [687] that (the sapiṇḍas) of those that met death for the sake of cows and brāhmaṇas, of those that met death through the wrath of the king and those that were killed in battle have to observe no āśauca but only 'sadyahśauca'. Manu V. 95 and 98 state [688] that (the sapindas) of those that are killed in a sudden affray or by lightning or by the king (for an offence) or of those that met death in protecting cows and brāhmaṇas and of one who was killed in the fashion of kṣatriyas in a battle by the sword have to observe no āśauca, as also he whom the king desires (for his purpose) to observe no āśauca. It is provided by Śātātapa [689] that as regards a yati dying, his sons and other sapiṇḍas are not to offer water or piṇḍa to him or to observe āśauca for him. The Dharmasindhu (p. 449) says that this applies to all ascetics, whether they be tridaṇḍin or ekadaṇḍin, haṁsas or paramahaṁsas. So also on the death of a vānaprastha there is no āśauca. In the case of one who has performed his own śrāddha while alive his sapindas have an option either to observe āśauca or not. On the death of a brahmacārin āśauca is to be observed. The Dharmasindhu further notes that in all works it is stated that there is no āśauca [690] for one killed in battle, but at least

Parāśara (III. 12–13) provides that, if a man has gone for many years to a distant land and it is ascertained that he died there but the exact date of his death is not known, then either of three tithis viz. the 8th or 11th day of the dark half or the amāvāsyā should be accepted as the day of his death and water, piṇḍa and śrāddha should be offered on that date and the Par. M. I. 2 p. 237 adds that āśauca also must be calculated from that date. On the other hand Laghu-Hārīta says that if there is some obstacle at the time of a śrāddha or when the date of death is not known, then the funeral rites should be performed on the 11th tithi of the following dark half (Śuddhikaumudī p. 17)

The digests lay particular emphasis on the fact that in matters of āśauca the usages of a country must be observed. The Hāralatā (pp. 55, 205) quotes passages from the Ādipurāṇa where special reference is made to the authority of the usages of a country (deśa-dharmapramāṇatvāt). The Śuddhitattva p. 275 quotes[691] a verse of Marīci 'one should not disregard the manner of observing śauca and religious usages that are current in particular localities; the dharma is of that sort alone in those localities'. On p. 276 it quotes a passage of the Vāmanapurāṇa to the same effect.

It deserves to be noted that Dakṣa[692] (VI. 15) states that all rules about āśauca apply when the times are easy and peaceful but when a man is overwhelmed by distress there is no (enforcement or application) of the (rules of) āśauca.

Viṣṇu (19. 18–19) provides[693] that at the end of the period of āśauca one should go out of the village, get himself shaved and take a bath after applying a thick paste of sesame or white mustard to the body, change garments and then re-enter the house. Then he should perform a śānti (propitiatory rite) and honour brāhmaṇas. Many medieval digests provide for a more elaborate procedure. For example, the Śuddhikaumudī (pp. 155–164) sets out the procedure of the 11th day separately for the followers of the three Vedas. A few salient points may be mentioned. After a bath for the whole body, the sapiṇḍas should touch a cow, gold, fire, dūrvā, clarified butter and repeat the name of Govinda, then engage brāhmaṇas to sprinkle śānti water over them and say 'svasti'. If a brāhmaṇa cannot be had one should himself perform śānti. The Hāralatā and others say that without śānti water āśauca is not completely removed. The followers of Sāmaveda should sing the Vāmadevagāna for śānti or should repeat the four Vāmadevya verses viz. 'kayā naścitra,' 'kastvā satyo,' 'abhī sū naḥ' (No. 682–684 of the Sāmaveda) together with the last verse of the Sāmaveda ('svasti na Indro') preceded and followed by the sacred Gāyatrī; these form the śānti mantras for Sāmavedins. For followers of Yajurveda seventeen mantras beginning with 'ṛcam vācam prapadye' and ending with 'dyauh śāntiḥ', preceded and followed by the Gāyatrī form the śānti mantras; the Ṛgvedins should employ for śānti Ṛg. X. 9. 4, VII, 35. 1, V. 47. 7 &c. preceded and followed by the Gāyatrī. Then some gold with silver as dakṣiṇā should be donated to a brāhmaṇa, then the Vaitaraṇī cow should be donated, if one was not given at the approach of death, then a gift of the bedstead &c. should be made.

We have seen (p. 270) that originally the sūtras (like Śān Śr.) and smṛtis (like Manu) emphasized that one should not increase the number of the days of āsauca and that men learned in the Veda and consecrating śrauta fires had to undergo only one day's āsauca (Parāśara III. 5, Dakṣa VI. 6). But ultimately a flat period of ten days of āśauca (Manu V. 59) for all sapiṇḍas came to be prescribed. In the old days the means of communication were very limited, and hence the news of a birth or death must have taken considerable time to reach relatives staying even at a short distance and hence the restrictions imposed by the rules of āśauca were not felt to be very irksome It is on account of this reason and also the great penchant of dharmaśāstra writers for all sorts of divisions, sub-divisions and classifications that we find medieval writers bestowing an enormously exaggerated attention in very exuberant and enthusiastic style on such a subject as āśauca Most nations have their own usages to indicate that a person (male or female) or a family is in mourning. But probably no country in the world can equal (much less surpass) the Dharmaśāstra writers in the elaborate rules evolved in books about āśauca on birth and death. In these days when there is a State postal system and the means of communication abound owing to railways, air-mail, telegraph and wireless, the ancient and medieval rules of āśauca are felt by all people to be most galling and troublesome Mischievous people sometimes create trouble in the celebration of marriages by sending information about a death or a birth to persons against whom they have a grudge. Devices have to be employed for dodging the inconvenience due to rules of āśauca. It is therefore necessary to introduce substantial changes in the rules about āśauca that will prevent trouble, loss of time and work and would at the same time be more or less in agreement with the spirit of the dicta of the smṛtis and the sentiments of most common people. At the end in the appendix note 693a is added which gives the text of the Āśauca-daśaka with Sanskrit explanation.

As regards āśauca on birth I would recommend that hereafter in the changed set-up of society in these days one simple rule should be observed, viz. it is only the mother that has to observe impurity for ten days and no one else has to observe impurity on birth. This is in general accordance with the ancient smṛtis set out above.

As regards impurity on death four rules should ordinarily suffice.[693a]

(1) Āśauca for ten days on death should be observed by the father and the mother for the son and by the son for the parents, by the wife for the husband and vice versa and by one who performs the rites of cremation and the rites after death.

(2) For others (than the above) staying near the deceased as members of a joint family āśauca for only three days should suffice.

(3) For all other relatives of the deceased whenever the news of death may reach them within a year after death, only a bath should be enough.

(4) When the death occurred more than a year before the news reached the relatives not even a bath should be required in the case of any relative except those mentioned in the first rule, who should be held clean after a bath.

693 a. Vide appendix.

Practices observed among ancient and modern primitive tribes show that the most important tabus were those on the dead, on women in child-birth and women in their monthly illness Among the ancient Israelites all that were unclean through the dead were put outside the camp and they were not allowed to offer an offering at the Passover (Numbers V. 1-4 and IX 6). Among the Syrians those who belonged to the family of the dead man were tabu for 30 days and could then enter only with shaven heads Child-birth made a woman unclean and the number of days that she was to be unclean depended on whether the child was a male or a female (Leviticus 12 2-5). In India also the ancient Aryans probably inherited their ideas about uncleanness on death and child-birth from their remote ancestors If one may surmise one can say this it must have been found out by the remote ancestors of the Vedic Aryans that if a person touched a dead body or used the clothes worn by the dead man when living, he also suffered from the same disease (particularly in the case of contagious diseases like plague, cholera, typhoid &c.) and that segregating such a person for ten days from other members of the tribe or community made the latter immune from the attack of such diseases. Therefore, those who touched the dead or carried the corpse for cremation or burial and the members of the family were thought to be unclean and were segregated for ten days. Gradually the ideas about the uncleanness on death and the necessity of segregation were made applicable to death due to all diseases or causes whatever. The uncleanness on child-birth might have been a case of extension by analogy derived from the tabu on death At all events smṛti writers put both on the same level (e. g. Manu V 61 "Just as impurity on death is ordained for ten days in the case of sapindas the same holds good in the case of birth"). Rules about women in their monthly illness were prescribed as early as the Tai. S. and have been already dealt with in H of Dh. vol. II. pp. 802-805.

We have now to turn to the subject of śuddhi apart from āśauca. Śuddhi of a dravya means the[694] removal of a taint attaching to a thing and it is of two kinds, purification of the body and the purification of an external object (Manu V. 110 and Aparārka p 253). It has already been seen (note 555 above) how even the Ṛg. lays great emphasis on śuddhi and being pure (śuci). There are Vedic[695] passages laying down that the cups (grahas) used in Jyotiṣṭoma and other sacrifices were to be cleansed with a strainer of wool, but not the camasas. In the Ait. Br. 32.4 it is provided that if the milk of an agnihotrin that was heated by him for the homa became impure (amedhya, by an ant or worm falling therein), the milk is to be taken up in an agnihotrahavaṇī and was to be poured upon the ashes near the Āhavanīya fire. This shows that great care was taken about the purity of vessels to be used in sacrifices and about the offerings to be made. Śauca is one of the eight qualities of the soul (ātmaguṇas) mentioned by Gaut 8 24, Atri (verses 33, 35), Matsyapurāṇa 52. 8–10, Bṛhaspati (q. by Aparārka p 164). Haradatta on Gautama quotes a verse that śauca is of four kinds viz. monetary purity, mental purity, bodily purity and purity in speech; while Atri and Bṛhaspati[696] (q. by Aparārka p. 164), aver that śauca is constituted by avoiding what ought not to be eaten, by associating (only) with those who are not censured (i. e. are not reprehensible) and by firmly abiding by one's own prescribed duties. Many works divide śauca into two varieties viz bāhya (external) and āntara or ābhyantara (internal). Vide H. of Dh vol. II. pp 651–52 for passages from Baudhāyana Dh. S. (I. 5. 3–4), Hārīta, Dakṣa and others defining and subdividing these. Agni 372. (17–18) is the same as Dakṣa V. 3. The Vanaparva 200. 52 speaks of purity in speech, in actions and that brought about by water The Padma (II. 66. 86–87) emphasizes that it is the mental attitude that is the highest thing and illustrates it by saying that a woman embraces her son and her husband with different mental states. There is an interesting passage in the Lingapurāṇa 8. 34–36 (not quoted there) which after stating that ābhyantara śauca is superior to bāhya śauca (verse 31) remarks[697] that one void of inner purity is dirty even after a bath, that moss, fish and animals subsisting on fish are always immersed in water, that in spite of that no one would call them pure, that therefore one must always endeavour to secure inner purity and that one should bathe in the water of correct knowledge of the Self, apply once the sandal paste of faith and purify oneself by the clay in the form of desirelessness and that this is declared to be (the real) śauca. Manu V. 106 provides that of all kinds of purity mental purity is the highest. He who is pure as to wealth (i. e. who does not deprive another of wealth by unjust means) is the (only) pure man and not he who is purified by water and earth. Visnu 22. 89 is the same except that for wealth (artha) it substitutes food (anna). The Trikāndamandana (prakīrnaka 21) has the same verse as Manu V. 106. Vide also Anuśāsana 108. 12 (for purity of conduct, of mind, of a holy place, purity due to correct philosophical knowledge); Brahmānda III. 14. 60 (śucikāmā hi devā vai), and Yogasūtra II. 32 (for śauca as one of the five niyamas).

External purity of the body by various means (rinsing the mouth, bath & c.) has already been described in detail in H. of Dh. vol. II pp. 648–668. The ancient and medieval Indians insisted on a daily bath for all, recommended two baths a day in certain cases and three baths to a hermit and did not subscribe to the view of some of the early Christians. St. Agnes was canonized primarily for her refusal to bathe and St. Francis of Assisi considered dirt as one of the proper insignia of holy poverty.[698].

In śrauta rites (such as Agnistoma) the sacrificer had to undergo a severe discipline of consecration (or dīkṣā), one item of which was the purification of the intending sacrificer's body by the adhvaryu priest by rubbing the former's body twice with three bunches of seven darbhas each (vide H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 1136) Śātātapa q by Sm. C. I p. 120, Śuddhiprakāśa p. 147 provide bath for one who has sexual intercourse with his wife during the period from the 5th to the 16th day after monthly illness begins, but for intercourse after these days the purification is the same as for urination and voiding ordure; bath is also prescribed for vomiting after sunrise, after shaving, after a bad dream, on the touch of foul men (such as cāndālas).

The Āp Śr. II. 12 provides[699] that Pavitreṣṭi should be performed by him who is desirous of śuddhi and that if one performs in each season the three iṣṭis, viz Vaiśvānarī (to Agni Vaiśvānara), Vrātapati (to Agni Vratapati) and the Pavitreṣṭi one purifies ten generations (of his family).

The following pages will deal with the purification of things (dravyaśuddhi). But a few general observations must first be made. The Āp Dh. S (II 6. 15 17–20) states that infants do not become polluted or impure (by the touch of a woman in her monthly course) up to the time the saṃskāra of annaprāśana (taking cooked food for the first time), that, according to some, up to one year or as long as they cannot distinguish between the different directions or up to the time of Upanayana according to others. Manu V. 127–133, Yāj I. 186, 191–193, Viṣṇu Dh. S 23. 47–52, Baud. Dh I. 5 56–57, 64, 65, Śaṅkha 16 12–16, Mārkaṇḍeya-purāṇa 35 19–21 state that the following are always pure.—what is not seen to be polluted; what is cleansed with water; what is commended expressly (by a brāhmaṇa as pure, when there is a doubt), water collected on (pure) ground that is not visibly polluted by an impure thing and that in quantity is so much that a cow can slake its thirst therein and that has the smell, colour and taste (of pure water); the hand of a craftsman (such as a washerman or a cook while engaged in his peculiar work); articles exposed for sale in a market such as rice and barley (though touched by many intending buyers); alms (collected by a brahmacārin though walking from house to house on the road), the mouth of a woman (at the time of dalliance), meat of animals seized or killed even by dogs, cāṇḍālas, and carnivorous birds, rays (of the sun), fire, dust, the shadow (of a tree or the like), a cow, a horse, land, wind, dew drops, flies, a calf at the time of making the cow flow with milk from the udder–these latter are pure when they come in contact with a person. Then it was said that certain birds and animals were either always pure or as to certain parts of the body e. g. Yāj I. 194 says that the mouths of goats and horses are pure but not of the cow. Baudhāyana[700] quoted by Aparārka p. 276 provides that the cow is pure except as to its mouth, and a cat when it is leaping or moving about. Bṛhaspati[701] and Yama (q. by Aparārka p. 276) state: 'the feet of brāhmaṇas, and the mouth of goats and horses, the backs of cows and all limbs of women are pure; the cow as to its back, the elephant as to its shoulder, the horse as to all its limbs and the dung and urine of cows, all these are pure'. Atri (240, 241) contains several verses[702] on this point. 'Things taken out from a mine or from kitchens (or places where grain is pounded &c.) are never impure, since all such places (where anything is prepared in the mass) except a place for the manufacture of liquor are pure. All fried (or roasted) things, fried barley and grain, dates, camphor, whatever else is well fried is pure'. In Atri V. 13 we read[703] 'flies, a continuous stream (of any liquid), the earth, water, fire, a cat, a wooden ladle and a mongoose are always pure'. Parāśara (X. 41) states:[704] 'space (ākāśa), wind, fire, water fallen on the earth, darbhas are not to be deemed polluted just as camasas in sacrifices are held to be not polluted.' Par. M. quotes a verse of Caturviṁśatimata[705] that raw meat, ghee, honey, oils extracted from fruits—these even when contained in vessels belonging to caṇḍālas become free from taint the moment they are taken out of these vessels. Bṛhaspati provides:[706] 'machines for crushing grapes and sugarcane stalks, mines, the hands of craftsmen, the milk pail, fluids that come out from crushing machines, actions (such as cooking) done by women and children when they are impure (by walking barefooted on the road) and are seen to be so, are still free from taint One's[707] own bed, garment, wife, child, water pot—these are free from taint for oneself, but these are impure to others. Śankha 16.15 is to the same effect

Śankha[708] states that whatever removes the dirt (or pollution) that is natural to a substance or arises from contact with another polluting substance must be declared to be its purifier. Śankha-Likhita[709] declare that the substances that bring about purification of all (polluted things) are water, clay, the powder (or paste) of soap berries, bilva fruit, rice and mustard cake, salts (ashes), cow's urine and dung and that according to some when a substance is heaped up in a big mass, sprinkling with water. Manu V. 118, Yāj. I. 184, Visnu Dh. S 23.13 also provide that sprinkling with water is the mode of purification when large quantities of corn or clothes are polluted, but when the quantity is small they must be washed with water. The quantity is said to be large when it is more than what one man can carry as a load (according to Kullūka on Manu V. 118).

The general rule laid down by Gaut. I. 45-46, Manu V 126 (= Visnu 23. 39), Yāj. I. 191 about the purification of things or bodies that are smeared with foul matter is that water and earth are to be employed for purification till the foul odour and the contact of the foul thing is entirely removed[710]. Devala (q. by Aparārka p. 270) defines śauca as the removal by means of clay, water, cowdung and the like of the besmearing, the oiliness and odour of a thing that cause impurity.

Gaut. Dh. S. (I. 28–33) briefly deals[710a] with the purification of things as follows: Purification of metallic substances (like bell-metal), earthenware, substances manufactured from wood, cloth made of threads or yarn is brought about respectively by rubbing (or scouring) them, by baking in fire, by chiselling or planing, by washing in water; objects made of stones, jewels, shells and pearls are purified by the same means as metallic substances; bones (ivory and the like) and mud (floor of houses) are purified in the same way as wooden substances; and earth (when polluted) is also purified by adding to it earth (brought from another pure spot); ropes, chips of bamboos and reeds, leather are purified by the same means as cloth or they may be abandoned when they are extremely polluted (as by the spilling of wine or urine or ordure). Vas (III. 49–53) has almost the same words, employing the word 'bhasmaparimārjana' (scouring with ashes and washing) for 'parimārjana'. The Āp. Dh. S. (I. 5. 17. 10–13)[711] provides: 'If one gets a used vessel only, he shall eat from it after having heated it thoroughly; a vessel made of metal is purified by being scoured with ashes and the like; a wooden vessel becomes pure by being scraped; at a sacrifice, vessels must be cleaned according to the precepts of the Veda.' Yāj. (III. 31–34) states; time (lapse of ten days or a year as to āśauca), fire, religious rites (like Aśvamedha or performing of sandhyā), clay, wind, mind, spiritual knowledge, austerities (such as krcchra), water, repentance (in the case of sins), fasting—all these are the causes of purification. Gifts are the (main) cause of purification for those who do what is forbidden, flow of water in the case of a river, clay and water are means of śuddhi in the case of substances that are not clean, sannyāsa (order of asceticism) in the case of the twice-born, austerities in the case of those that have studied the Veda when they commit a sin (through ignorance), forbearance in the case of those who know the Self, water in the case of dirty limbs, silent recital of Vedic mantras (japa) is the means of purification for those guilty of secret sins, truth in the case of the mind (that is full of or is polluted by sinful thoughts), austerities and esoteric knowledge in the case of the man who identifies his soul with the body, correct knowledge in the case of intelligence, knowledge of God is the pre-eminent purifier of the soul. Manu V. 107–109 (= Viṣṇu 22.90–92) contain almost the same idea in almost the same words.

In prescribing the methods of cleaning polluted objects certain matters have to be considered according to a verse ascribed to Baudhāyana[712] by the Mit. (on Yāj. I. 190) which states: 'One should prescribe means of purification after considering the time, the place, the body (or himself), the thing (to be purified), the purpose for which the thing is to be used, origin (of defilement), the condition (of the thing or person defiled).'

There is some divergence of views about the means of purifying or cleansing certain objects. It is unnecessary to set out in detail these differences. It is proposed to take certain objects one after another and to specify how they were rendered pure according to several of the smṛtis and digests.

Certain foul things were said by the Smṛtyarthasāra p. 70 to be the causes of extreme pollution and certain others as causes of lesser or insignificant pollution. For example, excreta, urine, semen, blood, fat, marrow, liquor and intoxicants were the causes of great pollution; while dogs, village swine, cats, their urine, the wax from the ear, nails, phlegm, discharge from the eyes, perspiration are the causes of insignificant pollution.

Baud. Dh. S. I. 5 66 provides[713] that the purification of the ground is brought about by means of sweeping with a (faultless) broom, by sprinkling (cow's milk, urine or water), by smearing with cowdung, by scattering (pure clay on it) and by scrubbing away (or scraping) some of the soil, when these are employed according to the situation of the ground and the particular impurity (of which it is to be purified). The मिता. reads द्रव्यमानं which means 'the bulk' (or extent of the thing to be purified).

S in another place states:[714] when firm soil is polluted it is purified by smearing it with cowdung, hollow ground (one having holes) is purified by ploughing, ground wet (with impurity) by covering it (with pure clay brought from elsewhere) after removing the impure thing Land is purified by means of four viz, being trodden under the foot of cows, by digging it up, by burning (firewood or grass thereon), by pouring over it (water, cow's urine or milk &c.) and fifthly, by smearing it (with cowdung) and sixthly, by the lapse of time. Vasistha III 57 quotes a verse which mentions five means of purification almost in the same words as those of Baudhāyana (except the sixth viz time) Manu V. 124 mentions five means of purification, viz. sweeping with a broom, smearing with cowdung, sprinkling, digging (and removing), the stay of cows thereon (for one day and night). Visnu Dh S. 23 57 adds dāha (burning) to the five of Manu Yāj. I. 188 mentions seven means of the purification of the ground by adding dāha (burning) and kāla (lapse of time) to the five mentioned by Manu. According to[715] the Vāmanapurāna the ground is purified by digging, burning, sweeping, treading by cows, smearing of cowdung, scrubbing and by sprinkling water. Devala quoted by the Mit and Aparārka on Yāj. I 188 gives a more elaborate treatment According to him polluted ground (bhūmi) is of three kinds, viz amedhyā (impure), dustā (soiled), and malinā (dirty). Where a woman is delivered of a child or dies or is cremated or where a spot has been inhabited by cāndālas or where there are heaps of ordure and the like, ground that is full of foul things in this way is declared to be amedhyā.[716] That ground which is polluted by the contact of dogs, pigs, asses, camels and the like becomes dustā (soiled) and it becomes malinā (dirty) by charcoal, husk, hair, bones or ashes. Then

The definitions of दुष्टा and मलिना as quoted from देवल by शु कौ. p 101 and शुद्धिप्र. p 99 are different.

Devāla[717] prescribes the purification of the three kinds of ground: 'Purity is of five kinds, viz. digging up, burning (with wood or grass), smearing (with cowdung), washing (with water) or the fall of rain Even amedhyā ground may be purified by these five means employed together (where a corpse is cremated or caṇḍālas dwell) or by four (i e. omitting rainfall or burning in other cases of amedhyā); ground that is duṣṭā is purified by three (digging up, burning and smearing with cowdung) or two (viz digging up and burning) and malinā ground is purified by one (i. e. by digging up).

The Smṛtyarthasāra (pp. 73–74) provides that if an idol made of iron or other metal is slightly polluted (as defined above) then it can be purified by means of pañcagavya after rubbing it with ashes; similarly a stone idol, when slightly polluted, should be washed with water mixed with the clay from an ant-hill and becomes pure after being treated with pañcagavya. Any idol, if polluted with ordure, urine or village mud would become pure after first being flooded for five days with pañcagavya, after being well washed with cow's urine, cowdung and clay from an ant-hill and by being again installed (with all installation rites). Questions about the pollution of temples by the entry of the so-called untouchables or by the entrance of persons other than brāhmaṇas in the inmost shrine (garbhagṛha) have come before the courts e. g. in Gopala Muppanar v. Dharmakarta Subramania 27 Madras Law Journal p. 253 at p. 258, where reference is made to the ceremonies for the removal of pollution according to the Āgamas and Tantras. In S. K. Wodeyar v. Ganapati (37 Bom. L R 584) the point arose whether, when a custom was alleged that in a temple at Banavasi in the Canara district none could enter the inner sanctum except persons belonging to the ten sub-divisions of brāhmaṇas and a Lingayat entered it in spite of the protests of the worshippers in charge of the temple, his entry polluted the temple and whether he was liable to pay for the sum spent over the purification of the temple, the High Court of Bombay held that the custom alleged viz of excluding from the inner sanctum all that were not brāhmaṇas was proved and that the Lingayat gentleman who entered it in spite of protests was liable to pay damages for the wrongful entry. In the Nirṇayasindhu (III pūrvārdha pp. 351–52), the Dharmasindhu (III p. 324) and other medieval digests provision is made for the re-consecration (punaḥ-pratiṣṭhā) of an idol in a temple when the idol is polluted by the touch of cāṇḍālas or wine or is burnt by fire or is defiled by the touch of sinners or the blood of a brāhmana [718] If the idol be broken in two or more pieces or if it becomes broken (irregularly), if it be burnt or falls from its pedestal or be insulted, is without worship or is touched by an ass or the like animal, or falls on foul ground or is worshipped with the mantras of other gods,–in these ten circumstances Godhood ceases to indwell in the idol. If an idol be touched by robbers, cāṇḍālas, patita people, by a dog or a woman in her courses or if it be polluted by the touch of a corpse re-consecration is necessary.

The Visnu-dharmasūtra (23. 34) provides that idols when polluted should be purified in the same way in which the substance of which they are made (such as stone or copper &c.) is purified and then they should be re-consecrated. If the worship of an idol already consecrated is stopped for a day, two days, a month, or two months or it is touched by śūdras or a woman in her monthly course, then at a proper time puṇyāhavācana should be performed, an even number of brāhmanas should be fed, the idol should be submerged in water for a night and next day bathed with pañca-gavya from a jar full of it to the accompaniment of the respective mantras, then another jar should be filled with pure water and therein the nine kinds of precious stones should be cast, the jar should then have the

Recently after the attainment of Independence some of the Provincial Legislatures in India have passed laws (e g Bombay Act 35 of 1947, C. P. and Berar Act 41 of 1947) throwing open all Hindu public temples to people who were once called untouchable This is not the place to discuss in detail the arguments for and against these measures. Many orthodox Hindus hold that their inmost feelings are hurt by this tyranny of the majority in the Legislatures. They feel that these measures are contrary to the four freedoms that are promised in many constitutions viz. freedom of speech, freedom of worship, freedom from want and freedom from fear. These measures are likely to be followed by serious consequences. It is felt that the younger generation now being educated has hardly any faith in religion or in anything being sacred, that the so-called untouchables themselves when once they have asserted their right of entering Hindu temples scarcely ever care to frequent them and the orthodox Hindus also often cease to worship therein. There is the further fear that, if religious feelings even when unreasonable according to progressive views could be trampled upon by the views of the majority, there is no knowing where the process would stop. There would be temptation for the majority in a country to say that the sacred places of other religions should either not exist at all or be opened for any one not belonging to the faith of the minorities. It would have been far better that, while removing all the disabilities of the so-called untouchables as to employment, public places, courts and education, temples had been left alone for some years to come. The entrance of one set of people into the temples often entails the departure of another set, as said by P. C. in Sallat v. Bella 28 Bom. L R 161, which is not a very desirable thing. The equality of the former untouchables in all secular matters is sure to spread in a generation or so to other non-secular matters and so to entry into temples. Adjustments on an unprecedented scale are taking place in modern India with regard to usages cherished for ages and the entry into temples of the so-called untouchables would have been effected in a few years without recourse to the threat of punishments and without bitterness and rancour in the hearts of many people.

From very ancient times water has been regarded as a great purifier. Ṛg. VII. 47 and 49 are hymns addressed to waters as divinities and they are there described as themselves pure and as purifying others (as in Ṛg. VII. 49. 2 and 3 'śucayah pāvakāḥ'). Similarly Ṛg. X. 9 and 30 are hymns addressed to waters, in the former of which the waters are invoked to remove whatever sin or wrong one may have committed (Ṛg. X. 9. 8 'idam-āpaḥ pra vahata yat kiñca duritam mayi') Atharva-veda I. 33 is a hymn addressed to waters, wherein also they are described as 'śucayaḥ pāvakāḥ' (in A. V. I. 33. 1 and 4). The Vāj S. VI. 17 (closely following Ṛg. X. 9. 8) invokes waters to remove whatever is censurable and dirty.[719] In Vāj S. IV. 2 the sage prays 'May the Waters, our mothers, purify us!'[720] The Śat. Br. I. 7. 4. 17 (S. B. E. vol. 12 p. 213) states 'water is a means of purification.' Viśvarūpa on Yāj. I. 191 quotes a long Vedic passage[721] wherein it is said "whatever creates doubt (whether it is pure or impure) should be touched with waters; then it becomes pure." It is therefore that water (hot or cold) is said to be the purifier of various kinds of vessels and of the ground in Yāj. I. 182–183, 188, Manu V. 109, 112, 126. Gobhila (I. 31–32)[722] lays down that when a man engaged in any religious rite hears a mantra addressed to the pitṛs, scratches his body, looks at a man of the lowest caste, or allows the wind to escape from his intestines, laughs loudly or speaks an untruth, touches a cat or a mouse, or uses harsh language, has a fit of anger, he should perform ācamana (or touch water).

According to Yāj I. 187 and Viṣṇu Dh. S. 23.56 a polluted house is purified by being swept and cowdunged. But more stringent rules were laid down if a dog, a śūdra, a patita, a mleccha or a caṇḍāla died in a brāhmana's house (vide note 633 above). After keeping the house vacant for the periods stated in note 633, it is provided by Samvarta[723] that a house that is polluted by the existence of a corpse inside it should be dealt with as follows: earthen pots and cooked food should be cast away and thrown out of the house which should then be smeared with cowdung and then a goat should be made to go about in it smelling it and then the whole house should be sprinkled over with water in which gold and kuśas are put in by brāhmaṇas rendered holy by the repetition of the Gāyatrī mantra; then the house becomes pure. Marīci prescribes[724] that if a caṇḍāla (merely) entered a house, it can be purified by plastering it with cowdung, but if he were to stay in it long, purification can be had only by heating it and making flames of fire lick its walls.

The ground in a brāhmaṇa's house, in a temple, in a cow-pen should, says Yama, always be regarded as pure (unless it has been polluted).

A great deal is said in the smṛtis and digests about the purification of water. Āp. Dh. S. I. 5. 15. 2 says[725] in a general way that a person after sipping water from what is collected on the ground becomes pure. But the Baud. Dh. S. I. 5. 65, Manu V. 128, Yāj. I. 192, Śaṅkha 16. 12-13, Mārkaṇḍeya-purāṇa 35.19 and others add that water collected on the ground that is of such volume that a cow can slake its thirst therein, that is in its natural state and is not polluted by any thing impure and that has natural colour (is transparent) and taste and odour (either no odour or a fragrant odour) is pure. Śaṅkha says[726] the same about water collected on a stony surface and adds that the water of a flowing river is always pure. Devala states[727] that water brought in clean vessels is pure but when it is (stale owing to its being stored) for one night (or more) it should be thrown though it was pure (when originally brought). There[728] is no taint in water that cannot be agitated by any beings and in the water of springs (that flow from hills). Tanks (that are so deep) that they cannot be agitated, rivers, wells and lakes (that are similar) should not be used by the usual way of descent (the ghat) if they come in contact with caṇḍālas and other impure persons or things. In Narhari v. Bhimrao, the Bombay High Court had to deal with the question whether a certain tank at Mahad in the Kolaba District could not be resorted to by untouchables for taking water and held that the untouchables were not prevented from using it (vide 39 Bombay L. R. p. 1295).

Bṛhaspati provides that if in a well the dead body of an animal with five nails (man or beast) is found or if the well is otherwise extremely polluted all the water of the well should be taken out and the rest should be dried up by means of clothes, then if the well be built with burnt bricks flames of fire should be made (to lick the surface of the walls), and then pañcagavya should be poured over when fresh water begins to flow in (from the springs)[729]. Āpastamba (q. by Śuddhikaumudī p. 299) states the circumstances when a well may be said to be extremely polluted: 'hair, excrements and urine, menstrual discharge, a dead body—when a well is defiled by these one should take a hundred jars of water from it' (and further purification by putting pañcagavya in it should be resorted to if there is more water). Parāśara VII. 3 says the same about wells (with steps), wells without steps and tanks.

Yāj. I. 197 (=Viṣṇu Dh. S. 23. 41) provides that mud and water on roads which come in contact with lowest castes (like caṇḍālas), dogs and crows and buildings (like mathas) constructed with burnt bricks are purified by the wind alone (blowing on them). Parāśara VII. 34 states[730] that mud and water on roads, boats, paths, grass and whatever is constructed with burnt bricks are rendered pure by the wind and the sun.

Rain water after it fell on the ground was supposed to be impure[731] for ten days. Similarly Yogiyājñavalkya (q. by S. K. p. 291) remarks that water of a river (dried up in summer) coming down in a flood for the first time (after rains) should not be taken (as pure) and also water that is agitated by some one (with the feet &c.) and waters that start in a separate stream by themselves from a holy river (like the Ganges). Even when a well (without steps) or a well (with a flight of steps) or a reservoir with a dam is constructed by men of the lowest castes, no prāyaścitta is prescribed for bathing therein or for drinking water therefrom.[732]

Visnu Dh S 23. 46 provides[733] that the purification of small reservoirs of water that are static (i. e. from which no streams flow down) is made in the same way as that of wells (without steps), while in the case of large reservoirs no pollution is recognised. It is declared that waters are purified by the rays of the sun and the moon and the contact of the wind and by cowdung and the urine of cows; some of these ideas are supported by modern scientific discoveries.

This shows that even in ancient times water was carried in leather bags or drums where there was scarcity of water and was allowed to be used even by twice-born people.

We may now turn to the purification of metals and vessels. Baud. Dh. S. I. 5. 34-35 and I. 6. 37-41, Vasistha III. 58 and 61-63, Manu V. 111-114, Yāj. I. 182 and 190, Visnu 23..2, 7, 23-24, Śankha 16. 3-4, Smrtyarthasāra p. 70 and others lay down rules about the purification of metals which do not agree in details. Therefore it is proposed to set out only what is said by Manu and one or two others. Manu (V. 113 ff.) says 'The wise declare that the purification of metals (like gold), of precious stones (like emerald), of all articles of stone is brought about by ashes, water and clay. Articles of gold that are not smeared (with dirty things like leavings of food &c.) become pure by means of water alone; the same holds good of articles that are found in water (coral and shells), that are made of stone and are made of silver on which no craftsmanship (such as drawing lines or figures) has been expended. Gold and silver sprang forth through the union of water and fire; therefore their purification is brought about best by their causes, viz. water (in case of slight pollution) and fire (in case of extreme pollution). The purification of copper, iron, bell-metal, brass, tin and lead should be brought about by salts (ashes), acids and water according to circumstances (i. e. pollution caused). Vasistha (III. 58, 61-63) says: 'bell-metal is purified with ashes, gold and silver with water alone and copper with acids.' Yāj. I. 190 says 'the purification of tin, lead and copper is brought about by salt water, acids and ordinary water, of bell-metal and iron by ashes and water.' The Lingapurāna (pūrvārdha, 189. 58) says: bell-metal is purified by ashes, iron articles by salt; copper, tin and lead by acids; golden and silver vessels are purified by water and jewels, stones, conches and pearls are purified in the same way as metallic vessels. Vide Vāmanapurāna (14. 70) which states that copper pots are purified by acids, tin and lead ones by salts, bell-metal by ashes and water. Medhātithi on Manu V. 114 quotes a verse [735] which says 'vessels of bell-metal (or brass) when licked (or breathed over) by cows, in which śūdras have taken their food and which have been defiled by dogs and crows are purified by being scoured ten times with ashes (salts).' Śātātapa has a similar verse (vide Par. M. vol II part 1 p 172).

Elaborate rules are laid down about the purification of polluted pots and vessels used in ordinary life, in Baud. Dh. S. I. 5. 34–50, I. 6. 33–42, Yāj. I. 182–183, Visnu 23. 2–5, Śankha 16. 1–5 and others. There is some variation in all these, but, as the Mit. on Yāj. I. 190 remarks, it is not an absolute rule that copper must be purified by acids alone but if purification is possible by other means, they may be resorted to It is not necessary to set out the different modes of purifying vessels. A passage from the Śuddhi-prakāśa pp. 117–118 would be sufficient to indicate how this matter of pātraśuddhi (cleansing of polluted vessels) was dealt with in medieval India. "vessels made of gold, silver, conches, shells, stones, precious stones, bell metal, brass, tin, lead are purified by mere water, provided they have no dirt or pollution sticking to them, if these vessels are polluted by the contact of leavings of food &c. they are purified by ashes and water or acids and water according as anyone of these is appropriate; the vessels made of the above substances that are polluted for a long time owing to being used by śūdras or owing to contact with leavings of food should first be scoured with salts (ashes) and water three times and should be then cast into fire so long as it can be borne (without the vessels being broken, melted or burnt up) and then they become pure. Vessels of bell metal when polluted by only dogs, crows, śūdras and leavings of food only once or licked by cows become pure by being scoured ten times with salts and water; but if they are polluted by the above several times then they have to be scoured 21 times for becoming pure. If in a vessel belonging to the three higher varṇas a śūdra takes his meal, it becomes pure after being washed four times with salts and being cast in fire and then taken up with hands that are washed clean with water. A vessel of bell-metal that is polluted once by the leavings of a woman freshly delivered or by intoxicants or liquors becomes pure after being heated in fire; but if it is polluted several times then it becomes pure by being again manufactured. A vessel of bell-metal that is polluted by being frequently used for holding the water expelled from the mouth after rinsing it or the water in which the feet are washed should be buried in the ground for six months, then heated in fire and then it becomes pure (compare Parāśara VII. 24–25); but if it is polluted thus only once it becomes pure after (being buried in the ground) for ten days All metal vessels polluted for a short time by the bodily dirts such as urine, excrement, semen become pure after being placed for seven nights in cow's urine or in a great river; but if they are polluted as above many times or are polluted by the contact of a corpse, a freshly delivered woman or a woman in her monthly course they become pure after being thrice washed with salts, acids and water and after being heated in fire till they can bear it, but if these are polluted by urine and for a long time and frequently they become pure by being beaten into shape (manufactured) again.

Visnu (23. 2 and 5) provides that all metal vessels when extremely polluted (as stated in note 710) are purified by being cast into fire and that vessels of wood or clay when extremely polluted should be given up, but Devala[736] and others provide that wooden vessels when slightly polluted become pure by being planed or chiselled or by means of clay, cowdung or water and that earthen vessels if not extremely polluted become pure by being baked in fire[737] (also Yāj. I. 187). But Vas. III. 59 provides that an earthen vessel if polluted by the contact of wines, urine, excrement, phlegm, tears, pus and blood is not purified even by being burnt in fire.[738]

are purified according to the special Vedic texts, since the Veda says that camasa vessels do not incur the fault of being ucchiṣṭa when it is soma liquid that is drunk from them. Manu V. 116–117, Yāj. I. 183–185, Visnu Dh. S. 23. 8–11, Sankha 16. 6, Parāśara VII. 2–3 and others lay down rules about the purification of sacrificial implements. For example, Manu (V. 116–117) provides 'sacrificial vessels should be first rubbed with the right hand (or with darbhas or strainer) and then camasas and cups are to be washed with water before using them in the sacrifice; the carusthālī (the vessel in which the oblation of boiled rice is prepared), sruc (a wooden vessel used for pouring clarified butter on sacrificial fire), and sruva (wooden ladle of a semicircular shape) are purified by being washed with hot water; the sphya (wooden sword), the winnowing basket, the cart (for bringing the soma plant), wooden mortar and pestle, are purified with water (or sprinkling water according to Yāj. I. 184).

Several rules were laid down about the purification of polluted corn and polluted cooked food. A reference has already been made to the purification of heaps of corn. Common sense, convenience and the loss that may be caused by very stringent provisions are the considerations which prompt the rules on this subject. Visnu 23.25 provides[740] that where a heap of rice (or other grain) is polluted, one should throw away only that portion of it which is actually defiled and should submit the rest to pounding and washing with water; cooked food that exceeds in volume one drona and that has been defiled does not all become tainted, but that throwing away the defiled portion alone, one should sprinkle over the rest water mixed with gold on which the sacred Gāyatrī verse has been repeated and should hold it before a goat to see it and should also bring fire near it. Vide Baud. Dh. S. I. 6. 44–48. 'If grains of rice are polluted they should be washed and dried. But if it is a large quantity then sprinkling with water is enough; husked rice (if polluted) should be cast away. The same rule applies to cooked offerings. But in the case of large heaps of cooked food that portion which is polluted by dogs or crows should be cast away and the rest should be sprinkled with the Anuvāka paramānaḥ suvarjanaḥ' (Tai. Br. I. 4 8). Gaut. 17. 9–10 provide[741] that one should not partake of food that was cooked along with hair and insects (like ants), nor food that is polluted by the contact of a woman in her monthly illness, by a crow or by being struck with the foot (of some one). But where food is already cooked and then it is smelt by a cow or it is polluted by the falling into it of hair, insects, flies, then Yāj. I. 189 and Parāśara VI. 64–65 provide that in order to purify it water, ashes (with water) or loose earth (with water) should be cast over it. Āp. Dh. S. I. 5 16. 24–29 provide that one should not partake of food in which hair exists (i. e it was there from the beginning) or anything else (like nails) that is impure or of food that is touched with an unclean substance or in which an insect that subsists on impure things exists or food which is struck by the feet of any person or in which the excrement or the tail (or limb) of a rat is found.

The general rule is stated by Manu V. 118 which applies not only to corn and clothes but to many other articles viz. if there is a heap or a large quantity then sprinkling with water (prokṣaṇa) suffices for purification but if the quantity is small then washing with water is necessary. Manu V. 125 (= Viṣṇu Dh. S. 23.38) provides that (a small quantity of) cooked food part of which is pecked by birds (whose flesh is eaten by men), which is smelt by a cow, which is struck with the foot (by a man) and over which some one has sneezed or which is polluted by the falling in of hair and insects becomes pure by casting into it loose earth (and water). Parāśara (VI. 71–74) puts the matter[742] thus: "food licked by dogs and crows or smelt by a cow or ass, if little in quantity, should be thrown away by a brāhmana, but purification should be resorted to if it is a droṇa or āḍhaka in quantity. That portion which is defiled by the saliva of a dog or crow should be thrown away and water in which gold is put should be sprinkled over the remaining portion, then flames of fire should lick the remaining food and brāhmaṇas should loudly recite Vedic hymns (like the Pavamānasūkta) over it and then the food becomes fit for eating". The Śuddhiprakāśa explains that the wealthy should not throw away food if it is more than a droṇa in quantity and a poor man if it is more than an ādhaka[743].

Manu V. 115[744] says that in the case of all liquids (such as oils, ghee &c.) purification (when they are little in quantity) is brought about by means of two kuśas dipped into them (or by straining them through a piece of cloth into another pot) and if the quantity is large then by sprinkling (water). Śankha provides[745] that purification is brought about by mere prokṣaṇa in the case of all exudations (Asafoetida &c.), jaggery, salts, safflower, saffron and in the case of wool and cotton. Vide note 705 above about certain articles being pure the moment they are transferred from the pots of even mlecchas &c.

A few words may be said about the purification of different kinds of cloth and garments and the materials of which they are made. Laghu-Āśvalāyana (I. 28-30) provides that a white garment is always commended for wearing (as a dhoti), but they are commended for wearing as upper garments and both are not defiled by the touch of anybody. Men may take their food or answer calls of nature while covered with both; trasara is purified by being washed while a silken garment is always pure. Manu V. 120-121, Yāj I 186-187 and Viṣṇu (23. 19-22) provide almost in the same words that silken and woollen cloth is cleansed by saline earth (and with water and cow's urine), Nepalese blankets by the powder of soap berry, clothes made of tree bark with Bilva fruit and linen cloth by (paste of) white mustard. Viṣṇu 23. 6 says[746] that when a garment is extremely polluted that portion thereof which when washed with water loses its colour should be cut off. Śankha[747] quoted by Viśvarūpa on Yāj. I. 182 prescribes that garments are purified by being submitted to hot steam, by washing with water or by cutting off only that portion that is defiled. Parāśara VII. 28 provides that garments made from bamboos and barks of trees, linen and cotton garments, garments of wool and birch bark are purified by mere prokṣana.

The smṛtis speak of purification of many other things, which is of little importance and is passed over here. Only a few illustrations are given here. Manu. V. 119 provides that skins and things made of split bamboos (or canes) are cleaned in the same way as clothes, while vegetables, roots and fruits are purified on the analogy of grain. Manu V. 120-121 state that the purification of conches, horns (of buffaloes and rams) and bones and tusks (of the elephant or boar) is to be caused in the same way as that of linen or with cow's urine or water and that grass, wood and straw become pure by being sprinkled with water. Visnu Dh. S. 23. 15, 16, 23 and Yāj. I. 185 are very similar.

From the above it will be clear that purification of substances depends on many circumstances, viz. whether they are metallic or are earthen, whether they are solid or liquid, whether a polluted substance is small in quantity or is a big heap, whether the pollution is extreme or insignificant and so on.

In Manu the purification of substances follows (V. 110) the means of purifying one's own body. Purification of the body by means of ācamana and snāna (bath) has already been described in H. of Dh. vol II. pp. 315-316 and 652-653 (about ācamana), 656-668 (about snāna). Purification by bath on āśauca has already been dealt with before. Special rules were prescribed for women guilty of adultery (vide H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 594, vol. III. pp. 647-649), as also for women raped (vide vol. II p. 575). Snāna (bath) with the clothes on was prescribed for purification of the body when a person touches one who is patita (murderer of a brāhmana &c.), a caṇḍāla, a woman freshly delivered, a woman in her monthly illness, a corpse or one who has touched a corpse; also when a man follows a funeral procession or touches a dog (vide Gaut. 14. 28-30, Manu V. 85 and 103, Angiras verse 152, Āp. Dh. S. I. 5. 15. 15-16, Yāj III. 30). Baud. Dh S I. 5. 140 provides that on touching one who sells the Veda (teaches it for money), a yūpa, a funeral pyre, a patita, a dog and a cāndāla one should undergo a bath.[748] Parāśara also has a similar verse.[749] It has already been stated elsewhere (in H. of Dh vol. II. pp 175-176) how the rules about touching untouchables were relaxed when people congregated in a temple or in a religious procession, at marriages and festivals and at holy places. It is said by some that this refers not to the so-called untouchables, but to men who are untouchable owing to āśauca. But this is not correct. The explanation of the Suddhi-kaumudī and Śuddhiprakāśa given below makes it clear that the untouchables are meant. In the first place, the words are quite general and not restricted. In the second place, there is no untouchability (except for the mother) on the ground of Jananāśauca and it is most unlikely that a person who has incurred mourning on death should visit a temple or go to a marriage or enter a religious procession, or festival. In the third place, looking to the several occasions mentioned together (particularly pilgrimages, battles, fire in a town or village and commotion or invasion of a country) it appears most unlikely that the verse refers only to āśauca on birth and death.[750]

The ancient and medieval Indians put very great emphasis on purity of mind, of body, of the place where they resided or performed religious rites, of the vessels used by them and of the ingredients of their food and worship. Many of the rules about purification of substances may appear to modern minds as very stringent; but it should not be forgotten that the ancient Indians were imbued with the thought that purity of the mind followed from purity of food

(as stated in the Chāndogyopaniṣad VII. 26.2 'āhāraśuddhau sattvaśuddhih' and by Hārīta). It would be conceded that some of their rules about purification (such as about large quantities of corn or heaps of cooked food) are based on common sense and convenience. We are probably going to the other extreme in taking our food anywhere and in any surroundings.

CHAPTER IX

This subject is of great practical importance from several points of view.

The Brahmapurāṇa defines śrāddha as follows· 'whatever is given with faith to brāhmaṇas intending it to be for the (benefit of) pitṛs at a proper time, in a proper place, to deserving persons and in accordance with the prescribed procedure is called śrāddha[751]. The Mit on Yāj I. 217 defines śrāddha as 'abandonment with faith of an article of food or some substitute thereof, intending it for (the benefit of) the departed'. The Kalpataru on śrāddha defined it as 'the giving up of sacrificial material intending it for pitṛs and its acceptance by brāhmaṇas'. The Śrāddhaviveka of Rudradhara and the Śrāddhaprakāśa define śrāddha in the same way as the Mit. but in a more involved manner. Yāj. I. 268 (= Agnipurāṇa 163. 40–41) states that the pitṛs viz. Vasus, Rudras and Ādityas that are the deities of śrāddha, being gratified by śrāddha, give gratification to the ancestors of human beings. This verse and Manu III. 284 make it clear that the three ancestors of a man, viz. the father, paternal grand-father and the paternal great-grand-father are respectively to be identified with the three orders of superintending pitr deities, viz. Vasus, Rudras and Ādityas, when performing śrāddha. According to some,[752] śrāddha denotes three things, viz. homa, the offering of piṇḍa (ball of cooked food) and gratification of brāhmaṇas invited to a dinner; the application of this word to any one of these three can only be in a secondary sense.

A firm believer in the doctrine of karma, punarjanma (re-incarnation) and karma-vipāka (explained above) may find it difficult to reconcile that doctrine with the belief that by offering balls of rice to his three deceased paternal ancestors a man brings gratification to the souls of the latter. According to the doctrine of punarjanma (as very clearly and succinctly put in Br. Up IV. 4.4 and Bhagavad-gītā 2 22)[753] the spirit leaving one body enters into another and a new one. But the doctrine of offering balls of rice to three ancestors requires that the spirits of the three ancestors even after the lapse of 50 or 100 years are still capable of enjoying in an ethereal body the flavour or essence of the rice balls wafted by the wind. Further, Yāj. I. 269 (which is the same as Mārk. 29. 38, Matsya-purāṇa 19. 11-12, Agnipurāṇa 163. 41-42) provides that the grand-fathers (i. e. pitṛs) being themselves gratified (by the offerings of food in śrāddha) bestow on men (their descendants) long life, progeny, wealth, learning, heaven, mokṣa (final beatitude), all happiness and kingdom. In the Matsya-purāṇa (chap. 19, verse 2) a question is asked by the sages how food which a brāhmaṇa (invited at a śrāddha) eats or which is offered into fire is enjoyed by departed spirits that might have assumed (after death) good or evil forms of bodies. The answer given (verses 3-9) is that fathers, grand-fathers and great-grand-fathers are identified with Vasus, Rudras and Ādityas respectively according to Vedic passages, that the name and gotra (mentioned at the time of śrāddha), the mantras uttered and faith carry to the pitṛs the offerings made, that if one's father has become a god (by his good deeds) the food offered in śrāddha becomes nectar and follows him in his state of godhood, if he has become a daitya (an asura) then (the food) reaches him in the form of various enjoyments, if he has become a beast then it becomes grass for him and if he has become a snake the śrāddha food waits on him as wind (serpents are supposed to subsist on wind) and so on. Verses 5–9 of the Matsya, chap. 19 are quoted as from Mārkandeyapurāna by the Śrāddhakalpalatā p. 5. Viśvarūpa[754] on Yāj. I. 265 (p. 171 of Tri. ed.) also raises the same objection and gives several replies. One is that this is a matter entirely based on śāstra and so when śāstra says that pitrs are gratified and the performer gets desired objects no objection should be raised. Another reply is that the gods Vasus and others that have access everywhere have the power to gratify pitrs wherever they may be situated. He does not call the questioners (nāstika) as some other and later writers do.

The Śrāddhakalpalatā of Nandapandita[755] (about 1600 A. D.) enters upon an elaborate reply to these persons (whom he dubs atheists) that aver that the performance of śrāddhas for departed fathers and the rest, who according to the particular actions of each go to heaven or hell or to other forms of existence serves no purpose. He asks: why is śrāddha useless? Is it because there is no prescriptive text laying down an obligation to perform it or is it because śrāddha produces no consequences or is it that it is not proved that pitṛs and the rest are gratified by śrāddha? To the first he replies that there are such passages as 'therefore a wise man must perform srāddha with all his efforts' that lay down the obligation; nor is the 2nd objection proper, since Yāj. I. 269 does declare the rewards (of śrāddha) viz. long life &c. Nor is the third alternative acceptable. In the śrāddha rites it is not that the mere ancestors named Devadatta and the like are the recipients and that they are denoted by the words pitṛ, pitāmaha and prapitāmaha, but that those words denote them as accompanied by the superintending deities viz. Vasus, Rudras and Ādityas. Just as by the words Devadatta and the like what is denoted is not merely the bodies (so named) nor merely the souls, but what is denoted by the words is individual souls as particularised by the bodies; in the same way the words pitṛ and the like denote Devadatta and others together with the superintending deities (viz. Vasus, Rudras and Ādityas). Therefore, the superintending deities viz. the Vasus and the rest, being gratified by the food and drink offered by the sons and the rest, gratify those also viz. Devadatta and the rest and endow the performers (of śrāddha) with such rewards as male progeny and the rest. Just as a woman expecting to be a mother becomes gratified by partaking of the food and drink for which she has a longing in pregnancy and which is given to her by another person for the sustenance of the child in the womb, she satiates also the child in her womb and endows those that offer her the food and drink for which she has longings by bestowing on them some reward in return. Thus the pitṛs denoted by the words father, grandfather and great-grand-father are the deities Vasus, Rudras and Ādityas, and not merely (human beings called) Devadatta and the rest. Hence these deities of śrāddha become the recipients (of gifts) in the śrāddha rite, are gratified by the śrāddha and gratify in their turn the ancestors of human beings. The Śrāddha-kalpalatā then quotes 18 verses[756] from the

Mārkaṇḍeyapurāṇa many of which are found in chap. 28 (verses 3 ff) of the printed text. It is said[757] that just as a calf finds its own mother from among many cows that are scattered about, so the mantras repeated in śrāddha carry the food to the pitṛs.

The explanation offered by the Śrāddha-kalpalatā relying on passages of the Mārkaṇḍeyapurāṇa is not satisfactory and is rather far-fetched. The Mārkaṇḍeya and the Matsya appear to agree with the doctrine of Vedānta that immediately on leaving one body the soul has recourse to another body, either as a god or a man or a beast or a snake &c. The hypothesis propounded is that the food and drink offered in śrāddhas becomes transformed into various substances for the use of the ancestors (Matsya 141. 74–75). But the great difficulty in accepting this explanation is that the ancestors might die at different places, while śrāddha may very often be performed at one place far away from those places. It is difficult to believe that the grass growing in one place where the ancestor has been transformed into a beast as a result of his evil actions is the same that might have been produced from the substances offered in śrāddha at a place hundreds of miles away. Further, if one or all the three ancestors have been transformed into beasts or the like how can they recognize their offspring and bestow on them long life, wealth &c ? If the Vasus, Rudras and Ādityas bestow these, it is better to say so directly and affirm that pitṛs cannot bestow any thing on their progeny. It appears very probable that the worship of ancestors by means of śrāddhas was a very ancient institution and that the doctrines of punarjanma and karmavipāka were comparatively later ones and that Hinduism being all-embracing retained the institution of śrāddhas while adopting also the doctrine of metempsychosis. The institution of śrāddha is from one point of view an excellent one. It provides an occasion for remembrance of one's ancestors and relatives that were dear and near when living The Āryasamāja objects to the institution of śrāddha and interprets pitṛs in the Ṛgveda as meaning living men in the Vānaprastha stage. It may be noted that the texts support both views. The Śat. Br. expressly says that food is offered to the father of the sacrificer in the words 'this is for thee.' Viṣṇu Dh. S. 75. 4 'He whose father is dead may put down a pinda for his father &c.' On the other hand Manu III. 284 states that fathers are spoken of as Vasus, grandfathers as Rudras &c and Yāj. I. 269 provides that Vasus, Rudras and Ādityas are the pitṛs and the devatās of śrāddha. These latter are to be explained as containing an injunction to contemplate upon the pitṛs as Vasus, Rudras &c.

As stated below (p. 347) with regard to the Ṛgvedic passages, it was on account of the supposed power of pitṛs to benefit or harm the living that the cult of the dead became a prominent feature in primitive societies. Offerings and ceremonies which may have in most ancient times been prompted in part at least by the desire to placate the ancestors are continued as tokens of pure affection and remembrance. Various beliefs about pitṛs are mentioned [758] in post-Vedic Literature. The Baud. Dh. S. II. 8. 14 summarizes a brāhmaṇa text stating that pitṛs move about in the form of birds. The Auśanasa-smṛti and Devala quoted by the Kalpataru say the same thing. In the Vāyupurāṇa [759] it is stated that at the time of śrāddha the ancestors enter the brāhmanas (invited) after assuming an aerial form and that when the best of brāhmanas are honoured with clothes, foods, gifts, eatables, liquids, cows, horses and villages, pitrs become pleased. Manu III. 189 and the Auśanasa-smrti also support this notion that pitrs enter the invited brāhmanas. The Matsyapurāna (18. 5-7) enjoins: pindas should be offered to the departed for twelve days after death, since they serve him as food on his journey and give him great satisfaction. Therefore, the soul leaving the dead body is not taken to the abode of the departed for twelve days (after death), the departed spirit hovers near his house, his sons, his wife for twelve days. Therefore for ten days after death milk (and water) should be placed (hung up) in space for ten nights for reducing all torments (or troubles of the departed) and for the removal of the fatigue of the journey (that the departed spirit has to make). The Visnudharmasūtra[760] (20. 34-36) provides "the departed spirit enjoys in the world of pitrs the food offered in śrāddha with the utterance of the word 'svadhā'; whether the departed is in the state of a god or in the place of torments (Hell) or in the form of a lower animal or a human being, the śrāddha food offered by his relatives reaches him; when śrāddha is performed, the performer and the departed soul both certainly secure vigour (or prosperity)."

The Brahmapurāna[761] states that śrāddha is to be treated of under five heads, viz. how, where, when, by whom and with what materials. But before proceeding to deal with these five heads, it is necessary to dilate upon the underlying ideas and significance of the word 'pitarah' from the most ancient times of which we have literary records.

The word 'pitr' means 'father', but the word 'pitarah' is used in two senses, viz. (1) a man's three immediate deceased ancestors, (2) the early or ancient ancestors of the human race that were supposed to inhabit a separate world (loka) by themselves.[762] For this second meaning, vide Ṛg. X 14. 2 and 7, X.15.2 (translated above pp. 191–92, 194) and Ṛg. IX.97.39.[762a] 'That Soma which becomes stronger and stronger and makes others strong, that is strained through a strainer, that flows in a stream, protected us by means of the luminary (the Sun)—that Soma with whose help our ancestors knowing the place (where the cows were kept concealed) and the higher regions, harassed the mountain for (the sake of recovering) the cows.' In Ṛg. X. 15 1 the pitṛs are said to be of three grades, lower, middling or higher. They are also said to be earlier and later ones (Ṛg. X. 15 2). They are all known to Agni, though all pitṛs are not known to their descendants (Ṛg. X. 15 13). The pitṛs are divided into several groups such as Aṅgirasas, Vairūpas, Atharvans, Bhṛgus, Navagvas and Daśagvas (Ṛg. X. 14. 5–6), the Angirasas being particularly associated with Yama who is invoked to come to the sacrifice along with the Angirasas (Ṛg. X. 14. 3–5). In Ṛg. I.[763] 62. 2 it is said: 'through whose (Indra's) help our ancient ancestors (pitaraḥ), the Angirasas, who sang his praises and who knew the place, found out the cows.' The pitṛs called Angiras were, it appears, again subdivided into two classes viz. Navagva and Daśagva[764] both of which words occur in Ṛg. I. 62 4, V. 39. 12 and X. 62. 6. In several passages the ancient fathers are identified with the seven sages [765] as in Ṛg. IV. 42.8 and VI. 22. 2 and sometimes the Navagvas and Daśagvas also are said to be the seven sages (Ṛg I. 62 4). Angirasas are said to be the sons of Agni (Ṛg. X. 62. 5) and also of Heaven (Ṛg. IV. 2. 15). The pitṛs are often said to regale themselves in the company of gods, particularly of Yama (Ṛg VII. 76. 4, X. 14 10, X. 15. 8-10)[766] The pitrs are said to be fond of Soma drink (Ṛg. X. 15. 1 and 5, IX. 97 39), they lie down on kuśa grass (Ṛg X. 15.5), they come with Agni and Indra to partake of the offerings (Ṛg X. 15. 10 and X. 16. 12) and Agni is also said to carry the offerings to the pitrs (Ṛg X. 15. 12). Fire is supposed to take the spirit of a cremated person to the pitrs (Ṛg. X 16. 1-2, 5=A. V. 18. 2. 10, Ṛg X. 17. 3). In later works also (e. g. in Mārk. chap. 45), Brahmā is supposed to have created in the beginning four classes viz. gods, asuras, pitrs and human beings Vide also Brahmāndapurāna, Prakriyā, chap. 8, and upodghāta chap. 9. 35 (ityete pitaro devā devāśca pitaraḥ punah anyonyapitaro hyete).

762. This idea is at least Indo-Iranian, if not Indo-European. The ancient Parsi scriptures speak of Fravashis that were originally the same as pitrs of ancient Hindu works or the Manes among the ancient Romans. They were the everlasting and deified souls of the dead Gradually the meaning of Fravashi was extended and even Gods and objects like the Earth and the sky were supposed to have each a Fravashi. Vide S. B E. vol 4 p. 262 for the Fravashis of the holy Yama and for the different classes of Fravashis, also S. B. E. vol 23 pp. 180, 184, 230.

It was supposed that the departed spirit, after the cremation of the body, was endowed with an ethereal body and became associated with Yama, the gatherer of departed men (Ṛg. X. 14. 1 and 8, X. 15. 14, X. 16 5), and with pitrs. The departed spirit went to the world of the pitrs and Agni was implored to take the spirit to the world of the departed whose deeds were good and to the stride of Visnu (Ṛg. X. 14. 9, X. 15. 3, X. 16. 4).

Although Yama is said to dwell in heaven (divi) in Ṛg. X. 64. 3, he is really a god of the middle region, as the Nirukta states.[767] The Atharvaveda states:[768] 'let us worship with obeisance the fathers and grandfathers of our father, that enter the wide middle regions, that dwell on the earth and in heaven.' In Ṛg. I. 35. 6[769] it is said there are three worlds; two of them (Heaven and earth) are in the lap of Savitr; one (i. e. the middle region) is in the domain of Yama where departed spirits congregate. 'The great Luminary (the Sun) has risen, a gift of the pitrs' (Ṛg X. 107. 1). In the Tai Br. I. 3. 10. 5[770]

it is said that the pitrs dwell in the third world from this. This means that after bhūloka and antarikṣa comes the pitṛloka. In the Br. Up. I. 5.16 three worlds of men, pitrs and gods are separately mentioned. In Ṛg. X. 135. 1–7, Yama is spoken of in somewhat different language. He is in this hymn mentioned as a god by himself and not as the first mortal who made a path (Ṛg. X. 14. 2) or as the gatherer of men (X. 14. 1) or as being in company of the pitrs In a few other places Yama is no doubt called rājan and praised in the same breath with Varuna (Ṛg. X. 14. 7). But such a position is very rarely mentioned. For the further development of Yama and his assistants as the punishers of men for evil deeds, vide pp. 159–160 above and notes 381–386.

There is another division of pitrs viz. pitarah somavantah,[771] pitarah barhiṣadaḥ, pitarah agnisvāttāh The latter two are named in Ṛg X. 15 4 and 11 (which occur also in Tai. S. II. 6. 12. 2). The Śat. Br. defines these as follows.—"those that performed a soma sacrifice are pitarah somavantah; those that offered cooked oblations (like caru and puroḍāśa) and secured a world are pitarah barhiṣadah; those that did none of these (two actions) and whom fire consumes when burning them are 'pitarah agnisvāttāh;' these are the only ones that are pitarah." The Tai.[772] Br. has a somewhat similar passage and the Kāthaka Samhitā IX. 6. 17 also refers to these three kinds of pitrs. Later writers introduced certain changes in the meanings of the words for the different classes of pitṛs and also increased the number of the classes of pitrs. For example, the Nandipurāna q. by Hemādri states: the pitṛs of brāhmanas are called 'agnisvātta', those of ksatriyas 'barhisadah', those of vaiśyas 'kāvyas', those of śūdras 'sukālin' and those of mlecchas and untouchables are called 'vyāma'.[773] Even Manu

(III. 193–198) mentions several classes of pitrs, connects pitrs called Somapās, Havirbhujah Ājyapās and Sukālins with the four varnas and in III. 199 states that the pitrs of brāhmanas are designated as Anagnidagdha, Agnidagdha, Kāvya, Barhisad, Agnisvātta and Saumya Those verses of Manu appear to summarize different traditions about the several classes of pitrs Vide Matsyapurāna 141. 4 for the same last four names and 141. 15–18 for their definitions. In Śātātapa-smrti (VI. 5–6) twelve groups or divisions of pitrs are mentioned viz. pindabhājah (three), lepabhājah (three), Nāndīmukhas (three) and Aśrumukhas (three). This is a classification of pitrs from two different standpoints. In Vāyu 72.1 and 73 60, Brahmānda (Upodghāta 9 53), Padma V. 9 2–3, Visnudharmottara I. 138 2–3 and other Purānas the classes of pitrs are said to be seven, three of which are formless (amūrtimat) and four have forms (mūrtimat) and they and their offspring are described in detail. All this is passed over here. The Skandapurāna (VI. 216. 9–10) speaks of nine groups of pitrs, being Agnisvāttāh, Barhisadah, Ājyapāh, Somapāh, Rasmipāh, Upahūtāh, those called 'āyantunah', Śrāddhabhujah, Nāndīmukhāh. In this list old and new elements are mixed up The Indian mind often revels in divisions, sub-divisions and classifications without much basis therefor and this is probably an illustration of that tendency. Manu (III 201) states that from the sages the pitrs sprang, from the pitrs sprang gods and human beings and from the gods arose the whole world whether moving or immovable. It is remarkable that here the gods are spoken of as springing from the pitrs This is really a mere eulogy of pitrs (i. e. it is an arthavāda).

The pitrs were in a class apart from the gods. On the meaning of the word 'pañcajanāh' occurring in Rg. X. [774] 53. 4

774. पञ्च जना मम होत्रं जुषध्वम्। गन्धर्वाः पितरो देवा असुरा रक्षांसीत्येके। चत्वारो वर्णा निषादः पञ्चम इत्यौपमन्यवः। निरुक्त III. 8. The ऐ. ब्रा. 13.7 has 'एतत् पञ्च जनाना सुकथं देवमनुष्याणां गन्धर्वाप्सरसां सर्पाणां च पितॄणां च' The real meaning of पञ्चजनाः is the same as that of पञ्चकृष्टय. (in Rg X 60 4), पञ्च क्षितीनाम् (Rg VII 79.1), पञ्च चर्षणी. (Rg. V. 86 2) and we have यत् पाञ्चजन्यया विशा in Rg VIII. 63 7. पञ्चजनाः means विशः, the whole Aryan people divided probably into five clans. By the time of the Ait. Br. the original meaning of पञ्चजनाः was probably forgotten. The वेदान्तसूत्र (I. 4. 11–13) explains that the expression पञ्चजनाः occurring in Br. Up. IV 4 17 refers to Prāna, Caksuh (eye), ear, food and mind occurring in the next verse (Br. Up IV. 4 18). Śaṅkarācārya in his bhāsya on Vedāntasūtra I. 4.12 states that the word पञ्चजन in Rg. VIII 63 7 means prajā (people).

(pañcajanā mama hotram juṣadhvam) and other passages, the Ait. Br. (13.7 or 3.31) explains that they are the five classes, viz. Gandharvas with Apsarases, pitṛs, devas, sarpas and rākṣasas. The Nirukta III. 8 partly follows this explanation and also gives another. In the Atharvaveda X. 6. 32 the gods, pitṛs and men are mentioned in that order. The ancient Vedic texts and practice make a sharp distinction between the Gods and the Pitṛs. The Tai. S. VI. 1. 1. 1 states: 'the gods and men divided the quarters, the gods took the east, pitṛs the south, men the west and Rudras the north.' The general rule is that sacrifices for gods are begun in the forenoon, while the pitṛ-yajña is performed in the afternoon (Śān Br.).[775] The Śat Br. II. 4. 2.2 narrates that the pitṛs wearing the sacred thread over the right shoulder (and under the left arm) and bending their left knee approached Prajāpati, when Prajāpati said to them 'you will have food at (the end of) each month (on the Amāvāsyā), your svadhā (cordial) will be swiftness of thought and the moon will be your light,' while to the gods he had said that sacrifice will be their food and the sun their light. The Tai. Br. [776] I. 3. 10. 4 appears to make a distinction between pitṛs who are of the nature and position of gods and pitṛs that are more or less like human beings.

The Kauśika-sūtra (1. 9–23) neatly collects in one place the difference in the procedure of the rites meant for gods and for pitṛs. The performer of rites for gods wears the sacred thread on the left shoulder and under the right armpit, while in the case of the rites for pitṛs it is worn on the right shoulder and under the left arm; the rite for gods is either begun facing the east or north, while that for the pitṛs is begun facing the south; the rite for gods is finished in the north-east (or north or east), while that for the pitṛs is completed in the south-west; an action is done only once for pitṛs, while for gods at least thrice or as many times as the texts direct; in going round (perambulating) the right side is turned towards gods and the left one in the case of pitṛs; offerings are made to gods with the words 'svāhā' and 'vaṣaṭ', while they are made to pitṛs with 'svadhā' and

'namaskāra'; the darbhas employed in rites for Fathers are those that are taken out from the earth with their roots, while for gods darbhas used are cut a little above the roots. The Baud. Śr. II. 2. also mentions some of these in one place.[777] The Ṛgveda itself (in X. 14. 3 'svāhānye svadhayānye madanti') marks this distinction in the words employed at the offerings to Gods and Pitrs. The Śat. Br. (II. 1, 3. 4 and II. 1. 4. 9) speaks of the gods as immortal and of the Fathers as mortal.

Though the gods and pitṛs are placed in separate classes, still the pitrs partake of some characteristics of the divine. As Ṛg. X. 15. 8 shows, the pitrs drank Soma. In Ṛg. X. 68. 11 it is said that the pitṛs adorned the sky with nakṣatras (nakṣatrebhiḥ pitaro dyām-apimsan) and placed darkness in the night and light in the day. The pitrs are said to have found out the light that was secreted and to have produced the Dawn (Ṛg. VII. 76. 4). Here the pitrs are credited with powers possessed by the highest gods. The pitṛs are invoked with affection and regard for conferring various boons and their favour is sought in various ways. In Ṛg. X. 14. 6 the good will (sumati) and favour (saumanasa) of the pitrs are sought. In Ṛg. X. 15. 1 and 5 the protection of pitrs is sought. They are requested to grant happiness unmixed with trouble (Ṛg. X. 15. 4.), to bestow wealth on the sacrificer (Ṛg. X. 15. 7 and 11) and on his son. Ṛg. X. 15. 11 and A. V. 18. 3. 14[778] seek the bestowal of wealth and heroic sons. A. V. 14. 2. 73 says 'May the pitrs who throng round the bride to see her grant her happiness endowed with progeny.'[779] In the Vāj. S. II. 33 occurs[780] the well-known mantra 'Oh pitrs! deposit (in this wife) an embryo, a child that (will wear later) a garland of lotuses so that he may become a grown-up male' repeated when the wife of the performer of the śrāddha eats the middle one out of the three pindas. It should not be, however, supposed that the element of fear of the pitṛs is altogether wanting.[780a] For example, Ṛg. X. 15. 6 prays 'whatever fault we may commit in reference to you through our being (erring) men do not injure us for that.' In Ṛg. III. 55. 2 we read 'May the gods and the ancient pitrs who know the place (of the cows or the path) not harm us here.' In Ṛg. X. 66. 14 it is said 'the Vasisthas praising the gods fashioned speech (hymns) like pitṛs and like sages.' Here pitrs and rsis are separate groups and Vasiṣthas are compared to both.[780b]

In many passages of the Vedic Literature the word pitaraḥ is applied to the three immediate deceased male ancestors of a man. 'Therefore up to three generations they specify (the ancestors) by name; for so many are the ones to whom sacrifice is offered' (vide n. 772 above). The Śat. Br. II 4. 2. 19[781] mentions the presentation formulas of the cakes to the father, grand-father and great-grand-father and

The तै सं. I 8 5 1 is: सोमाय पितृमते पुरोडाशं षट्कपालं निर्वपति पितृभ्यो बर्हिषद्भ्यो धानाः पितृभ्योऽग्निष्वात्तेभ्योऽभिवान्यायै दुग्धे मन्थम्। एतत् ते तत ये च त्वामनु एतत् ते पितामह प्रपितामह ये च त्वामनु अत्र पितरो यथाभागं मन्दध्वम्।. Again in तै. सं III 2.5 5 occurs the passage 'एतत्ते तत...मन्दध्वम्'. This is carried on to later times as in अनु॰ 92 15 'सोमायेति च वक्तव्यं तथा पितृमतेति च'. Vide also अथर्व॰ 18. 4. 71–77 'अग्नये कव्यवाहनाय स्वधा नमः। सोमाय पितृमते स्वधा नमः। पितृभ्यः सोमवद्भ्यः स्वधा नमः। यमाय पितृमते स्वधा नमः। एतत्ते प्रततामह स्वधा ये च त्वामनु। एतत्ते ततामह स्वधा ये च त्वामनु। एतत्ते तत स्वधा।' In Rg IX 112 3 कारुरहं ततो भिषक्, तत means 'father'. नपात् (=पौत्र) and प्रणपात् (प्रपौत्र) occur in Rg. VIII. 17.13.

then states that the performer mutters the words "here, O fathers! regale yourselves, like bulls come here each to his own share' (Vāj. S II. 31 first half). Some (such as Tai. S. I. 8. 5. 1) repeated the formula "this here (ball of rice) is for thee and (for those) that come after thee." But the Śat. Br. emphatically says that he should not offer with this formula, but rather with the formula 'this here is for thee.' In Śat. Br. XII. 8. 1. 7 the three immediate paternal ancestors are said to be svadhā-loving. Relying on these Vedic passages and on the fact that Manu (III. 221) and Visnudharmasūtra (21. 3, 75. 4) prescribe the invocation of pitrs after mentioning their gotra and names that the Śrāddhaprakāśa (p 13) concludes that it is really the father and the other ancestors that are the deities of śrāddha and not Vasu, Rudra and Āditya, since these latter have no gotra and that the description of the father and others as Vasu, Rudra and Āditya is meant only for contemplation (on them as identical with Vasus &c.). On a passage of the Brahmapurāna[782] prescribing that the performer should say to the invited brāhmanas that he would call the pitrs to the rites and that when the brāhmanas give permission to call them he should do so, the Śr. P. (p. 204) remarks that the pitrs here meant are the divine ones viz. Vasus, Rudras and Ādityas and also the human ones viz. the performer's father and the rest. The Vāyupurāna (56 65–66) Brahmānda and Anu. distinguish between pitrs who are above and pitrs who are laukika, viz father, grand-father and great-grand-father. Vide also Vāyu 70. 34 for pitrs that are like gods.

In the post-Vedic Literature, particularly in the Purānas, a great deal is said about the origin and classes of pitrs. For example, the Vāyupurāna 56. 18 speaks of three classes of pitrs viz 'kāvyāh, barhisadah and agnisvāttāh', while the same Purāna, chap. 73, Varāha 13. 16 ff, Padma (Srsti 9. 2–4) and Brahmānda III. 10 1 speak of the origin of pitrs of seven classes that dwell in heaven, four of which have a form (mūrtimat) and three of which are without form (amūrta). The Śātātapa-smrti (6. 5–6) speaks of 12 pitrs viz. pindabhājah, lepabhājah, nāndīmukhāh and aśrumukhāh. All such descriptions have to be passed over from considerations of space.

From the sūtra period (about 600 B. C) to the most modern among medieval Dharmaśāstra works the authors wax eloquent over the praises or the importance or benefits of the institution of śrāddhas. One of the earliest works among these, viz. the Āp. Dh. S gives the following interesting information:[783] "Formerly men and gods lived together in this world. The gods went to heaven owing to sacrifices (i. e. as a reward of sacrifices that they performed), but men remained behind. Those among men who perform sacrifices in the same way as the gods did, dwell in the other world (i. e. heaven) with the gods and Brahman. Then (seeing that men lagged behind) Manu promulgated the rite which is designated by the word 'śrāddha' and which tends to the salvation (or happiness) of mankind. In this rite the Manes (pitarah) are the deities but the brāhmanas (that are fed) are in the place of the āhavanīya fire (in which in sacrifices to gods oblations are offered)". On account of this last sūtra Haradatta (com. of Āp. Dh. S.) and others hold that feeding the brāhmanas is the principal act at a śrāddha. The Brahmāndapurāna (Upodghātapāda 9. 15. and 10. 99) speaks of Manu as the promulgator of śrāddha rites and Visnupurāna III. 1 30, Vāyu 44. 38 and Bhāgavata III. 1. 22 designate Manu as Śrāddha-deva. Similarly, in the Śāntiparva 345.[784] 14–21 and the Visnu-dharmottara I.139 14–16 it is stated that the institution of śrāddha was established in the Boar incarnation by Visnu and that Visnu should be regarded as dwelling in the three pindas offered to the father, grand-father and great-grandfather From this and from the passage of the Āp. Dh. S cited above we may infer that it was believed even several centuries before Christ that the institution of śrāddhas had a hoary antiquity behind it and that it was as old as Manu, the father of mankind according to the Ṛgveda (VIII. 63. 1, VIII 30. 3.). It is, however, very remarkable that the word 'śrāddha' itself does not occur in any undoubtedly authentic and ancient Vedic passage, though the rite called Piṇḍapitṛyajña[785] (performed on the amāvāsyā of each month by an 785 That पिण्डपितृयज्ञ is a श्राद्ध is stated by गोभिलगृह्य IV 4. 1-2 'अन्वष्टक्यस्थालीपाकेन पिण्डपितृयज्ञो व्याख्यात.। अमावास्यां तच्छ्राद्धमितरदन्वाहार्यम्।.' Vide श्रा प्र p. 4 for the same For a description of पिण्डपितृयज्ञ, vide H. of Dh. vol II. pp. 1085–1090, for महापितृयज्ञ ibid. pp. 1101–1103.

Āhitāgni), the Mahāpitryajña (performed in the Cāturmāsya called Sākamedha) and the rites called Astakās were known to the early Vedic literature. The word śrāddha occurs in the Kathopanisad (1. 3. 17) 'whoever proclaims this highly esoteric doctrine in an assembly of brāhmanas or at the time of śrāddha tends to secure immortality.'[786] The other early occurrences of the word śrāddha known to me are confined to the sūtra literature. The most reasonable and probable inference to be drawn from these facts is this that only a few rites (mentioned just above) were known as related to the pitrs and that therefore no need arose for a generic term in very ancient times to comprehend several rites for the pitrs. But when the number of rites in honour of pitrs increased, the generic term 'śrāddha' was hit upon.

A few samples of the panegyrics on śrāddha may be set out here. The Baud.[787] Dh S. states that rites for the Fathers confer long life, heaven, fame and prosperity. The Harivamśa [788] says 'the world derives support from śrāddha and Yoga (i. e. Moksa) springs from it.' Sumantu [789] quoted in the Smrticandrikā (śrāddha p. 333) states 'nothing else is declared to be more beneficial than śrāddha.' The Visnupurāna (III. 14. 1–4) avers that if a man performs śrāddha with faith he thereby propitiates Brahmā, Indra, Rudra and the other gods, sages, birds, men, beasts, creeping animals, hosts of pitrs and whatever else is styled a being and the whole world. Yāj. I. 270 [790] promising long life and several other benefits arising from gratifying pitrs has already been quoted above (p. 337). Yama has a similar verse. It is said in a passage of the Visnudharmottara [791] quoted by the Śrāddhasāra (p. 6) and Śrāddhaprakāśa (pp 11–12) that the pinda offered to the great-grandfather is declared to be god Vāsudeva himself, the one to the grandfather is designated Sankarsana, that to the father is known as Pradyumna and the offerer of the pindas is himself in the position of Aniruddha. In Śāntiparva 345. 21 it is stated that Visnu should be looked upon as staying in the three pindas. In the Kūrmapurāna it is stated 'on the day of Amāvāsyā the pitrs assuming an aerial form come to the door of their former haunt and mark whether śrāddha is being performed by men of their family. This they do till sunset. When the sun sets, being oppressed by hunger and thirst, they become full of despair and feel sorrow, breathe heavily for a long time and go away condemning their descendants. The pitrs of him who does not offer śrāddha on amāvāsyā, even with water or vegetables, go away after cursing him'.

It is necessary to say a few words about the derivation of the word 'śrāddha'. That the word is derived from 'śraddhā' is quite clear. In the definition quoted above from the Brahmapurāna and the definition[792] given by Marīci and Bṛhaspati the connection of śrāddha with śraddhā is emphasized. In śrāddha one entertains the firm faith or conviction that what is given up to the brāhmanas for the benefit of the departed man or the Fathers will reach him or them in some way. The Skandapurāna VI. 218.3 says that śrāddha is so called because śraddhā is the root (or main spring) of that rite. This means that there is not only the conviction stated above but that there is a firm belief that a person is under an obligation to offer it. Śraddhā is deified and addressed as a deity in Ṛg.[793] X. 151. 1-5, the first verse of which is explained in the Nirukta (IX. 31). The word also occurs in Ṛg. II. 26. 3, VII. 32. 14, VIII. 1. 31, IX. 113. 4. In some verses the two components of the word 'śraddhā' (viz. 'śrat' and 'dhā') are separated without any change in the meaning For example, in Ṛg. II. 12. 5 (= A. V. 20. 34. 5) it is said 'Have faith in him; O people! he is Indra'. In Ṛg. X. 147. 1, addressed to Indra, we have 'I have faith in that high wrath of yours &c.' (śratte dadhāmi prathamāya manyave). In the Tai S VII 4. 1 1 it is[794] said "Bṛhaspati desired 'may the gods put faith in me, may I reach the position of being their priest'". Vide also Ṛg. I. 103. 5. Śrat and śraddhā are both mentioned in the Nighaṇṭu (III. 10) as meaning 'satya'. In the Vāj. S. 19 77 we are told that Prajāpati put Śraddhā in truth and aśraddhā in falsehood, while in Vāj. S. 19.30, it is said that truth is obtained by śraddhā.

In the post-vedic Literature, Pāṇini explains the forms 'śrāddhin' and 'śrāddhika' in V. 2 85, in the sense of 'one who has eaten a śrāddha dinner ' The word 'śrāddha' may be derived from śraddhā according to Pāṇ. V. 1. 109[795]. Śraddhā is variously defined In the bhāṣya on Yogasūtra I. 20, 'śraddhā' is defined as the composure of the mind[796] (or mental approval). Devala defines śraddhā: 'confidence (in the efficacy) of religious acts is called śraddhā, one who has no faith has no reason (or motive) for engaging in religious acts'[797]. The Śrāddhasūtra[798] of Kātyāyana prescribes 'one endowed with śraddhā should offer śrāddha even with vegetables (if nothing else is available)'. Vide Manu III. 275 which emphasizes śraddhā for the gratification of pitṛs The Mārkaṇḍeyapurāṇa (29. 27) emphasizes[799] the relation of śrāddha to śraddhā and states that what is offered at śrāddhas becomes transformed into that kind of food for the use of the pitṛs who require food in the new bodies they might have assumed according to the doctrine of karma and punarjanma and it also remarks that śrāddha offered with wealth acquired in an improper or unjust way is a means of gratification to the pitṛs that are born as cāṇḍālas, pukkasas and similar very low grades of people.

It has already been stated above (pp. 349–350) that in very ancient times there were only three rites for departed ancestors, viz. Piṇḍa-pitṛ-yajña (offered by those who had consecrated the śrauta fires) or monthly śrāddha in the case of those who had not done so (vide e. g. Āśv. Gṛ. II. 5. 10, Hir. Gṛ. II. 10. 1, Āp. Gṛ. VIII. 21. 1. Viṣṇupurāṇa III. 14. 3 &c.), the Mahāpitṛyajña and the Aṣṭakā śrāddhas. The first two have been already described in vol. II. (as said above), but the Aṣṭakā śrāddhas have not been described at all so far. Therefore some remarks will be offered here about them. They are of special importance, but the authorities present great variations on almost all points such as the number of days and the months in which they were to be performed, the deities to be worshipped, the offerings to be made and the procedure to be followed.

Gaut. (VIII. 19) mentions 'Aṣṭakā' rite as the first among the seven kinds of pākayajñas and as one of the forty saṁskāras. Aṣṭakā appears to have meant the 8th tithi in any month after the Full Moon day (vide Śat. Br. VI. 4. 2. 10). The Śat. Br. states [800] 'On the 8th day (after full moon) he (the performer of agnicayana) collects the materials for the fire pan, for sacred to Prajāpati is the 8th day (after full moon) and sacred to Prajāpati is this rite viz. the firepan.' Śabara in his Bhāṣya on Jai.[801] I. 3. 2 cites a verse occurring in the A. V. III. 10. 2 and in the Āp. M. P. II. 20. 27 as a mantra indicative of Aṣṭakā. The mantra is "May that (Aṣṭakā) night be very auspicious for us, whom people welcome like a cow coming towards a person and which is the wife of the Year.' In the A. V. III. 10. 8 the Ekāṣṭakā is said to have the year (Saṁvatsara) as husband. The Tai. S. VII. 4. 8. 1. provides [802] 'Men about to take dīkṣā (consecration) for a Saṁvatsarasattra should undergo dīkṣā on the Ekāṣṭakā; what is called Ekāṣṭakā is the wife of the year.' Jai. (VI. 5. 32–37) explains that Ekāṣṭakā is the 8th tithi after the Full Moon of Māgha. The Āp Gṛ. (quoted by Haradatta on Gaut. 8 19) says[803] the same, but adds that on it (the 8th tithi) the moon is in Jyeṣṭhā constellation. This means that if the 8th tithi is spread over two days, then that day on which the moon is in Jyeṣṭhā would be called Ekāṣṭakā[804] The Hir. Gr. (II. 15. 9) also says that Ekāṣṭakā is called the wife of the year[805]

According to the Āśv. Gr. II. 4. 1 the Aṣṭakā days (and rites) were four, viz the 8th tithis of the dark halves of the four months of the two seasons of hemanta and śiśira (i. e of Mārgaśīrṣa, Pauṣa, Māgha and Phālguna). Most of the Gṛhya-sūtras viz Mānava Gr. II. 8, Śān. Gr III. 12 1, Khādira Gr. III. 3 27, Kāṭhaka Gr. 61. 1, Kauśītaki Gr. III. 15. 1 and Pār. Gr. III. 3 say that there are only three Aṣṭakā rites viz. on the 8th after the Full Moon day of Mārgaśīrṣa (called āgrahāyaṇī) i e. in the dark halves of Mārgaśīrṣa, Pauṣa (or Taiṣa) and Māgha. The Gobhila Gr. III 10. 48 mentions that the Aṣṭakās are four according to Kautsa and in all flesh is to be offered, but that Gautama, Audgāhamāni and Vārkakhaṇḍi prescribe only three and Gobhila follows these latter. The Baud. Gr. II. 11. 1 provides that the three Aṣṭakā homas are performed in the months of Taiṣa, Māgha and Phālguna. Āśv. Gr II. 4. 2 refers to an option that Aṣṭakā rites were performed only on one Aṣṭamī (and not on three or four). The Baud. Gr. provides that[806] the rite may be compressed into the three days (7th, 8th and 9th) of the dark half of Māgha or even in one day (i e 8th of the dark half of Māgha). The Hir. Gr (II 14 2)

804 According to a Vārtika on Pāṇ. VII 3. 45 the word Aṣṭakā is formed from 'aṣṭan.' वार्तिक 9 on पाणिनि VII. 3.45 teaches that from अष्टन् we get Aṣṭakā as meaning a rite in which the pitṛs are the deities and Aṣṭikā in any other sense (such as अष्टिका खारी)

805 The Full Moon night of Māgha is said to be the mouth of the year i. e. the year began on that day in ancient times. The Aṣṭakā day after the Full Moon day was the first and most important festival after the Full Moon and it was younger than the beginning of the year. It is probable that because of this it was spoken of as the wife of the year.

describes only one Aṣṭakā rite viz. the Ekāṣṭakā in the dark half of Māgha. The Bhāradvāja Gṛhya II. 15 also speaks of only Ekāṣṭakā but adds that the 8th of the dark half of Māgha on which the moon is in Jyeṣṭhā is called Ekāṣṭakā. According to Hir. Gṛ. II. 14 and 15 the one Aṣṭakā extended over three days viz. 8th, 9th (on which a cow was sacrificed for the pitṛs) and 10th (which was the Anvaṣṭakā). The Vaikhānasa-smārta-sūtra (ed. by Caland) IV. 8 says that Aṣṭakā is to be performed on the 8th of the dark half of Māgha and Bhādrapada or on the 7th, 9th or 10th tithi.

There is divergence in the offerings also. The Kāthaka Gr (61. 3), Jaimini Gr. 2. 3 and Śān. Gr. (III. 12. 2) provide that on the three different Aṣṭakās the offerings are of cooked vegetables, flesh and apūpas (cakes), while the Pār. Gr. III. 3 and Khādira Gr III. 3. 29–30 put apūpas for the first Aṣṭakā (and hence Gobhila Gr. III. 10. 9 designates it apūpāṣṭakā) and boiled vegetables on the last. According to Khādira Gr. III. 4. 1 a cow is sacrificed. According to Āśv. Gr. II. 4. 7–10, Gobhila Gr. IV. 1. 18–22, Kauśika 138. 2, Baud. Gr. II. 11. 51–61, on the 8th day very many options are given, viz. either to sacrifice a cow or a ram or a goat; or to offer some jungle flesh that may be available or flesh mixed with sesame and honey, or flesh of the rhinoceros, deer, buffalo, ram, boar, spotted deer, hare, Rohita deer, pigeons, śārnga and other birds, or an old red goat; fishes or rice cooked in milk so as to form thin gruel, or gifts only of uncooked corn or fruits and roots, or gold may be offered or only grass for cows or oxen or one may burn some thickets in a forest or present jars for holding water to those deeply learned in the Veda or should recite the mantras relating to śrāddhas, saying 'this is the Aṣṭakā I offer,' but one should not remain without observing the Aṣṭakā day in some such manner as the above [807]

It is remarkable that although the Vārtika quoted above, and the Kāthakagṛhya 61. 1 state that the word 'Aṣṭakā' is applied to a rite in which the pitṛs are the deities worshipped, the greatest divergence prevails as to the devatā of the Aṣṭakās. The Āśv Gr. (II. 4. 3 and II. 5. 3–5) provides that on the 7th of the dark half the offerings are made to the pitṛs and on the 9th also, but Āśv. II. 4. 12 refers to the eight options as regards the deity of the 8th day, viz Viśve-devāḥ (all the gods), Agni, Sūrya, Prajāpati, Rātrī (night), Nakṣatras (constellations), the seasons, the Pitṛs, Paśus (cattle). The Gobhila Gr III. 10 1 starts[808] by saying that Night is the devatā of Aṣṭakā, but adds that there are other views about the devatā being Agni, the Pitṛs, Prajāpati, Ṛtus (seasons) or all Gods.

The procedure of Aṣṭakā comprises three parts, viz. homa, inviting brāhmaṇas for dinner (up to seeing them go away after dinner) and the rite called Anvaṣṭakya or Anvaṣṭakā When the Aṣṭakās were deemed to be three or four performed in the several months noted above, all these were gone through at each Aṣṭakā When the Aṣṭakā rite was performed only in one month i. e. after the Full moon in Māgha, the above parts were performed on three days, 7th, 8th and 9th of the dark half. When compressed in one day only, they must have been performed one after another on the same day.

Many of the Gṛhyasūtras, such as those of Āśvalāyana, Kauśika, Gobhila, Hiraṇyakeśin and Baudhāyana describe a very elaborate procedure in the case of Aṣṭakās One of the shortest being that contained in Āp. Gr. (VIII 21 and 22) is given here by way of sample[808a]. After defining Ekāṣṭakā (in VIII. 21 10) Āp. proceeds: 'He (the performer of the Aṣṭakā rite) should perform subsidiary (or preparatory) rites in the evening of the previous day (i e. on the 7th of the dark half). He cooks (or bakes) a cake from rice taken up (from a heap) in four cups; according to some teachers the cake is prepared on eight potsherds (like a puroḍāśa) After the actions up to the

On the following day he prepares the cow for immolation by touching her with a darbha with the words 'I make thee that are agreeable to the Fathers ready (for sacrifice)'. Having silently (i. e. without uttering the word svāhā) offered five[812] oblations of clarified butter, having cooked the omentum of that (cow) and having spread under (the cooked omentum) and sprinkled over it clarified butter he offers it with a palāśa leaf from the middle or the end of the stalk with the next verse (i e. He offers the food of flour cooked (in milk) with the next verse (Āp. M P. II. 21. 1 'Ukthyaścātirātraśca'),[814] Then (he offers) the oblations of clarified butter with the following (eight) verses (Āp. M. P. II. 21. 2–9). The rites from Svistakrt[815] down to the placing of the pindas are the same as at the monthly śrāddha (described in Āp. Gr. VIII 21. 1–9). Some teachers prescribe that the piṇḍas are to be offered the day after the Astakā (i. e. on the 9th of the dark half). Here follows another method (of celebrating the Astakā rite). He sacrifices curds with his joined hands in the same way as he offers the cake. Having left over from the meat (of the cow) as much as may be required, he performs on the day following

Though Āp. Gr. (II. 5 3) and Śān. Gr. III. 13. 7 state that the Anvastakya rite follows the procedure of Pindapitryajña, some Grhyasūtras (such as Khādira III. 5, Gobhila IV 2-3) give very elaborate descriptions of that rite. The Āśv. Gr. and Visnudharmasūtra 74 follow a middle course. The description in Āśv. Gr. is comparatively brief and it is set out below. It may be noted that some Grhya-sūtras state that the Anvastakya rite is performed on the 9th or 10th of the dark half (e. g. Khādira Gr III. 5. 1 'navamīm daśamīm vānvastakyam)'. Further, it may be stated that though most Grhyasūtras call the rite Anvastakya still it is also called Anvastakā by Pār. Gr. III. 3. 10, Manu IV. 150, Visnudharmasūtra 74. 1 and 76. 1. The most notable peculiarity of this rite is that therein female ancestors are invoked and offerings are made to them of which liquor (surā), scum of boiled rice, collyrium, salves and garlands form part. Though some sūtras (like Āśv. Gr. II. 5) declare that the Astakā and Anvastakya are modelled on the monthly śrāddha or Pindapitryajña, others (like the Baud. Gr. III. 12. 1, Gobhila Gr. IV. 4., Khādira III. 5. 35) say that the Astakā or Anvastakya is the norm which is followed in the Pindapitryajña and all the śrāddhas. The Kāthaka Gr. (66. 1, 67. 1, 68. 1, 69. 1) avers[816] that the first śrāddha, the other śrāddhas (such as sapindīkarana), Paśuśrāddha (in which the flesh of an animal is offered) and the śrāddha performed every month follow the procedure of Astakā. The Pinda-pitryajña could be offered on amāvāsyā only by one who was āhitāgni (i. e. had kept the sacred vedic fires). It is impossible to believe that everyone became āhitāgni. The case was probably the reverse i. e. only a few became āhitāgnis and the rest had only the grhya fire or many of the rest were without even the grhya fire. It appears possible that all were required to offer śrāddha on amāvāsyā on the analogy of pindapitryajña. As the latter became rare, the requirement of offering śrāddha on amāvāsyā remained and in the sūtras and smrtis all the details were mentioned under māsiśrāddha and in the case of the other śrāddhas the sūtras and smrtis pointed out only what was to be omitted. It is owing to this that the māsiśrāddha came to be called the prakrti and the other śrāddhas were called vikrtis or variations of the māsiśrāddha. Most of the details of the piṇḍapitṛyajña were required in māsiśrāddha and a few (such as giving arghya, gandha, dīpa) were added and more elaborate rules evolved.

The Anvastakya[817] is described in the Āśv. Gr. (II. 5. 2–15) as follows :—Having prepared a portion of the same meat,[818] having established the fire on a surface sloping towards the south, having fenced it in and made a door on the north side of the enclosed shed, having strewn round the fire three times sacrificial grass with its roots without touching it, turning the left side (of one's body) towards the fire, he should place down the things to be offered, boiled rice, boiled rice mixed with sesamum, rice cooked in milk, meal pap with curds and meal pap with honey. The ceremony should follow the ritual of the Piṇḍapitṛyajña (vide Āśv. Śr. II. 6). Having sacrificed (part of the foods specified except meal-pap) with honey let him offer portions of those substances to the pitṛs and to their wives with the addition of liquor and the scum of boiled rice. Some place the portion to be offered into pits, which may be two or six. In those situated to the east he should present the offerings to the pitṛs; in those to the west, to the wives. Thereby the ceremony celebrated in the rainy season on the Maghā day in the dark fortnight after the full moon of Prauṣṭhapada (i. e. Bhādrapada) has been declared. And thus he should offer (a festival like the Anvastakā) to the pitṛs every month, observing uneven[819] numbers. He should give food at least to nine (brāhmaṇas) or to any un-even number of brāhmaṇas. (Food should be given) to an even number on auspicious occasions[820]

817. अन्वष्टक्य is explained by रुद्रस्कन्द on खादिरगृह्य III. 5. as 'अष्टकामनु क्रियते इत्यन्वष्टक्यं कर्म एतच्च मध्याष्टकामनन्तरं कर्तव्यम्' and by देवपाल on काठकगृह्य 65 1 as 'अष्टकाया अनु पश्चाद्भवमन्वष्टक्यमित्यन्वर्थिकेयं संज्ञान्वष्टक्यमिति। एतच्च केचिदष्टकाया अङ्गं वदन्ति केचित्तत्सदृशं विकारभूतं कर्मान्तरम्।'.

818. The meat is that of the animal killed on the Aṣṭakā day (Āśv Gr. II. 4. 13).

819. That is, selecting an uneven number of brāhmaṇas or on uneven tithis.

820. 'Vṛddhi' or "Ābhyudayika" (referring to prosperity or good luck) Śrāddha is performed on such occasions as the birth of a son, the marriage of a son or daughter, the pitṛs in the Vṛddhi-śrāddha being designated Nāndīmukha Pūrta means charitable works such as construction of wells and tanks, building of temples, dedication of parks. Vide H. of Dh vol II p 844 n. 1992 and Yāj I. 250, Śāṅ. Gṛ IV 4 1 ff.

or on the performance of meritorious deeds; to an uneven number (on other occasions). The rite is performed from left to right. Barley grains are to be used instead of sesamum.

The Anvaṣṭakya rite was performed after each of the three or four Aṣṭakās and if only one Aṣṭakā in Māgha were performed, then after the 8th of the dark half.

There are two views about the rite called Māghyāvarṣa[821] in Āśv. Gr. II. 5. 9. Acc. to Nārāyaṇa, the rite is performed in the dark half of Bhādrapada for three days on 7th, 8th and 9th.[822] The other view is that it is a rite like the Aṣṭakās but performed on the 13th of the dark half of Bhādrapada, when generally the moon is in the Maghā nakṣatra. There is doubt about the very name of the rite, as the mss. present various forms (vide Oldenberg's note in S. B. E. vol. 29. p 103 on Śān. Gr. III. 13 1). The real name appears to be Māghyāvarṣa or Maghāvarṣa (meaning 'a śrāddha in the rainy season when the moon is in the Maghā nakṣatra)'. The Viṣṇu Dh. S 76 1[823] mentions the following times for offering śrāddha viz. (twelve) Amāvāsyās (in a year), the three Aṣṭakās, the three Anvaṣṭakās, the 13th of the dark half of Bhādrapada when the moon is in the Maghā asterism, the seasons of śarad and vasanta. In Viṣṇu Dh. S. (78. 52–53) also a śrāddha on the 13th of the dark half of Bhādrapada is highly eulogised Manu III. 273 also states that whatever food mixed with honey is offered on the 13th day in the rainy season when the moon is in Maghā procures endless satisfaction. To the same effect are Vas XI 40 (in the rainy season and on Maghā), Yāj I 26 and Varāhapurāṇa.[824] In the

821. The word माघ्यावर्ष (as an attribute of Karma or Śrāddha) may be derived from मघावर्ष (मघायुक्तं वर्षं वर्षर्तुः) or वर्षमघा (or वर्षामघा meaning वर्षे मघा or वर्षासु मघा). In the latter case the words are transposed on the analogy of राजदन्त (पा II 2 31). हरदत्त on आश्व गृ explains 'मघासु वर्षासंयोगाद् माघ्यावर्षमिति भवति तच्च त्रयोदश्याम्' and then quotes या I 261.

822. In the गृह्याग्निसागर of नारायणभट्ट आर्डे it is stated 'अथाष्टकाविकृतिभूतं माघ्यावर्षश्राद्धं तत्र भाद्रपदापरपक्षे सप्तम्यादिषु त्र्यहेषु अष्टकाकर्मवत् सर्वं कुर्यादिति कारिका। हरदत्तस्तु भाद्रपदकृष्णपक्षे मघायुक्तत्रयोदश्यां माघ्यावर्षाख्यं श्राद्धम्।' folio 155 b (of the ms in the BBRAS) Vide Cat No 680 p. 215.

Hir. Gr. II. 13. 3–4 (edited by Kirste) the name appears to be Madhyāvarsa [825] and it is provided that meat is obligatory in it, but that if meat cannot be had then vegetables may be offered. In Pār. [826] Gr. (III. 3) the name (as printed) is madhyāvarsa which is said to be a 4th Astakā in which only vegetables are offered. Aparārka (p. 422) also appears to call the rite 'madhyāvarsa.' In the Bhavisyapurāna [827] (Brahma-parva), chap. 183. 4 also this rite is referred to but it is said that therein meat is to be offered. It appears probable that this ancient rite on the 13th of the dark half of Bhādrapada is a precursor of the Mahālayaśrāddha of later times.

If Āśvalāyana's view, viz. that there are four Astakās in Hemanta and Śiśira, were followed and if the Māghyāvarsa-śrāddha were to be performed on the 8th of the dark half of Bhādrapada as Nārāyana holds, then there would be five Astakās in all. Bhaṭṭoji in his Caturvimśatimatasangraha says so.[828]

Considerations of space forbid the comparison of the above procedure from Āp. Gr. and Āśv. Gṛ. with the procedure described in the other Gṛhyasūtras. It should be noted that several of the sūtras often employ the same mantras in the various stages of the rite (as pointed out above in notes 813–814).

It must be said that the Astakā śrāddhas gradually fell into oblivion and are not performed now.

The foregoing discussion establishes that the monthly śrāddha on Amāvāsyā was the model śrāddha (prakṛti) of which the Astakās and other śrāddhas were copies (vikrtis) with suitable modifications, though a few dissident texts reverse the position.

In the Gobhilagrhya (IV. 4. 3 ff) another śrāddha called 'Anvāhārya' is prescribed after the Pindapitryajña on the same day. The Śān. Gr. IV. 1. 13 appears also to describe the monthly śrāddha as distinct from the Pindapitryajña. Manu (III.122-23) states: 'After performing the Pitryajña (i. e. pindapitryajña) a brāhmana who keeps sacred fires shall offer every month on the amāvāsyā day the funeral sacrifice Pindānvāhāryaka.[829] The wise call the monthly offering to the Manes Anvāhārya and that must be carefully performed with the approved kinds of flesh mentioned below.' From this it appears that one who has consecrated the śrauta fires (i. e. an āhitāgni) was to perform the pindapitryajña in the śrauta fires and also perform the same day another śrāddha after the pindapitryajña, while those who had not consecrated śrauta fires were to perform on amāvāsyā a śrāddha in the grhya fire, which was called pindānvāhāryaka or simply anvāhārya and also were to offer pindapitryajña in smārta fire (vide Sat. Śrauta II. 7. 64 'grhyāgnau anāhitāgneh'). From inquiries made I learn that nowadays most Agnihotrins (at least in the Deccan) do not perform Pindapitryajña at all or perform it only once a year and that no one performs the Pindānvāhāryaka śrāddha. It is further to be noted that in smārta yajñas no one now sacrifices an animal but employs instead māsa grain and there are āhitāgnis who do not offer meat in śrauta sacrifices also, but only pista-paśu (an effigy of an animal made of flour).

The literature on śrāddha is enormous in extent. From the Vedic Samhitās several thousand years ago up to medieval and modern commentaries and digests the various matters connected with śrāddha have been dealt with in more or less detail. The Purānas contain thousands of verses on śrāddha. An adequate and thorough treatment of all this vast mass would fill a separate volume, but considerations of space forbid such an attempt here. All that can be attempted here at the most (and that too not in all cases) is to present matters chronologically i. e. describe how śrāddha was dealt with in the Saṁhitās and Brāhmana texts, then in the comparatively older Gṛhya and Dharma sūtras, then in such early smṛtis as those of Manu and Yāj., then in some representative Purāṇas, then in the early commentaries of Medhātithi, Vijñāneśvara and Aparārka, and then in the medieval digests. Even in this way only a skeleton of the ceremonies described in some representative work of each class can be exhibited. Many differences of detail which arose owing to lapse of time, the locality, the śākhā and usages of each writer, his individual inclination and his ability, will have to be passed over altogether. In the days of the Purāṇas the differences in detail in the several śākhās have been adverted to.[829a] Apart from the smṛtis and passages of the Mahābhārata (such as Anuśāsana chap. 87–92) and commentaries on the Sūtras, on Manu, Yāj. and other smṛtis, the digests on śrāddha are legion. Only the following digests (arranged in chronological order) have been laid under contribution in this volume: Kalpataru on śrāddha; the Hāralatā and Pitṛdayitā of Aniruddha; the Smṛtyarthasāra; the Smṛticandrikā; the Caturvargacintāmani (section on śrāddha) of Hemādri (which in the B. I. edition covers 1716 pages); the Śrāddhaviveka of Rudradhara; the Madanapārijāta; the Śrāddhasāra (a part of Nṛsiṁhaprasāda); Śrāddhakriyā-kaumudī of Govindānanda; the Śrāddhatattva of Raghunandana; the Śrāddhasaukhya (part of Ṭodarānanda); the Śrāddhakalpalatā of Vināyaka alias Nandapandita; the Nirṇayasindhu; the Śrāddhamayūkha of Nīlakaṇtha; the Śrāddhaprakāśa (part of Vīramitrodaya); the Śrāddhacandrikā of Divākarabhatta; the Smṛtimuktāphala (on śrāddha); the Dharmasindhu; the Bālambhaṭṭī, a commentary on the Mitākṣarā. While presenting this exhaustive and heterogeneous material, some generalisations, when called for, will be made here and there. It will be seen later on how several minor matters such as whether food should be offered to gods before śrāddha, definitions of words like parivitti, vṛṣalīpati increased the extent of treatises on śrāddha.

829 a. The स्कन्दपुराण (नागरखण्ड chap. 215. 24–25) says: दृश्यन्ते बहवो भेदा द्विजानां श्राद्धकर्मणि। श्राद्धस्य बहवो भेदाः शाखाभेदैर्व्यवस्थिताः ॥.

We should now turn to the several matters relating to śrāddhas.

First comes the question as to who are entitled to offer śrāddha (śrāddhādhikārin) This matter has been already dealt with in the H. of Dh. vol. III p 739 ff., and on page 763 and on pp. 256–261 (notes 581–588) above. It would be noticed that some (like the Visṇudharmasūtra) prescribe that whoever takes the wealth of the deceased should offer piṇḍas (i. e. perform śrāddha for him), while others said that whoever was preferable as entitled to offer piṇḍas to the deceased propositus was to take the wealth. A few matters not mentioned there may be added here. In the Śāntiparva 65. 13–21 it is narrated[830] that emperor Māndhātṛ was told by Indra how Yavanas, Kirātas and similar non-Aryan peoples (that are styled Dasyus in the Epic) are to be made to conduct themselves and it is stated that all dasyus may perform Pitṛyajñas (in which they should feed men of their own kind and make monetary gifts to them) and offer money to brāhmaṇas also. The Vāyupurāṇa (83. 112) also speaks of the Mlecchas as persons that offer oblations to Pitṛs. The general rule is stated by the Gobhilasmṛti[831] that the husband should not offer piṇḍa to his wife even if she dies sonless, nor a father to his son nor an elder brother to a younger brother. The moral of the story of Nimi who performed śrāddha for his predeceased son and repented for having done so as it was dharmasaṅkara is the same. Vide Anuśāsanaparva 91. Aparārka (p. 538) quotes a verse from Ṣaṭtriṁśan-mata that a father should not perform the śrāddha of his son nor an elder brother of a younger one. But Bṛhat-parāśara (p. 153) appears to state that even this general rule may have to be set aside sometimes. Baudhāyana and Vṛddhaśātātapa (q by Sm. C. on śrāddha p. 337) allow a śrāddha (except sapiṇḍīkaraṇa) to be performed by any one for any relative through affection, particularly at Gayā. It is emphasized[832] that he alone deserves to be called putra, who, while the father is alive, obeys his words, and gives plenty of food (to brāhmanas) every year (after his father's death) and who offers pindas (to his ancestors) at Gayā. The general rule laid down was that a child, whose upanayana has not been performed, is like a śūdra and lacks authority to utter Vedic passages (vide Āp. Dh. S. II. 6. 15. 19, Gaut. II. 4–5, Vas. II. 6, Visnu Dh. S. 28. 40, Manu II. 172).[833] But an exception was recognized by almost all these authorities that a son, though his upanayana may not have been performed, can repeat the Vedic mantras required in funeral rites. Medhātithi on Manu II. 172 explains that a minor son, even though not initiated into Vedic study by upanayana, can offer water to his father, perform the navaśrāddhas (mentioned above in n. 593) and repeat such mantras as 'śundhantām pitaraḥ' required in these rites, but since he has no śrauta or gṛhya fire of his own he can not perform such śrāddhas as the pārvana. The Smṛtyarthasāra (p. 56) provides that boys whose upanayana has not been performed, women and śūdras should get śrāddhas performed through a priest or they may themselves perform them without mantras but only mention the name and gotra of the deceased or with the two mantras 'devebhyo namaḥ' and 'pitṛbhyaḥ svadhā namaḥ'. The above discussion shows that men and women, adults as well as children, those who are upanīta as well as those that are anupanīta are under an obligation to perform śrāddha.

Tai. S. I. 8. 5. 1, Tai. Br. I. 6. 9 (which will be quoted later on) show that śrāddha was offered to three immediate ancestors, father, grand-father, great-grand-father. The Baud. Dh. S. (I. 5. 113–115) states that there is a group of seven persons closely knit together that is called avibhaktadāya sapiṇḍas viz. great-grand-father, grand-fathsr, father, the man himself (who offers piṇḍas to the preceding three), his full brothers, his son from a wife of the same caste, the grandson and great grandson; that sakulyas are those that are called 'vibhaktadāyādas', that the wealth of the deceased descends to those who are born of the body of the deceased[834]. Manu IX. 137 (= Vas. 17.5 = Viṣṇu Dh. S. 15. 46) solemnly[835] affirms: 'by (the birth of) a son a man wins the worlds (heaven &c.), he secures immortality by a grandson and by the grandson of a son he reaches the abode of the Sun'. This verse shows that all the three descendants of a person confer equally great spiritual benefit on him. Yāj. also (in I. 78) lumps the three together (without making any distinction between them) when he says 'since a man secures perpetuation of lineage and heaven by means of son, grand-son and great-grand-son'. Therefore when Manu (IX. 106) says that by the birth of a son a man discharges his debt to his progenitors the Dāyabhāga (XI. 34) explains that the word putra stands for the three descendants up to the great-grandson, since all the three are entitled to perform the pārvaṇa-śrāddha and equally benefit the ancestors by the piṇḍas they offer, and that the word putra is not to be taken literally but only as illustrative in order to include the great-grandson, since one may with difficulty find a text expressly mentioning the adhikāra of the grandson (as a performer of śrāddha and taker of wealth) but there is no text expressly mentioning the great-grandson separately (as the taker of wealth and giver of piṇḍa)[836]. On Yāj. II. 50 which lays down that when the father dies or has gone to a distant country or is overwhelmed by calamities (incurable diseases or the like) his debts should be paid by the sons or grandsons, the Mit. adds that even when a son or grandson receives no ancestral property the father's debts must be paid, the only difference being that the son has to pay the principal as well as the interest, while the grandson has to return only the principal and has to pay no interest and the Mit. quotes a verse of Brhaspati [837] where all the three descendants are mentioned in one breath and the Mit. adds that the great-grandson has not to pay even the principal if he has received no ancestral property. This last remark implies that the Mit. regarded that the great-grandson was also included in the extended sense of 'putra'. Yāj. II. 51 begins by saying that whoever takes the wealth of a deceased person has to pay the latter's debts, so the great-grandson would have to pay the great-grand-father's debts if he received the assets of the grand-father. Therefore the Mit. on II. 50 expressly mentions that a great-grandson need not pay his great-grand-father's debts if he received no assets, because, otherwise being included in the extended meaning of putra, he would have had to pay. There was no necessity to bring in or mention the prapautra under II. 50 if the Mit. did not include the prapautra in the word putra. Again on Yāj. II. 51 ('putrahīnasya rikthinaḥ') the Mit. included even prapautra under the word putra. This shows that the Mit. is quite conscious that the three descendants of a man form one group and succeed to his estate and liabilities and putra includes three descendants wherever the context so requires. If the word 'putra' is not to be taken as only illustrative and as including both grandson and great-grandson, serious difficulties will arise even in the interpretation of Yāj. on which the Mit. comments. For example, in Yāj. II. 135–136 it is said that when a sonless man dies his wife, daughters and other heirs (named there) succeed one after another. If 'putra' is taken to mean only 'son' and no one else, then on the death of a man without a son his wife or daughter (whoever is alive) will take the wealth even if a son's son exists. But that would be absurd and is not stated by any one. Therefore the word putra has to be interpreted in a wider sense in a proper context. Many works such as the Vyavahāramayūkha, the Vīramitrodaya, the Dattakamīmānsā interpret the word 'putra' as including three generations. Therefore, though the Mit. in its remarks on inheritance and succession expressly names the son and grandson only (lit. it should have mentioned only the son) it must be taken as including the great-grandson also, particularly in view of the fact that it refers to the great-grandson in its comment on Yāj. I. 50 and 51 as taking the riktha which the Mit. (on Yāj. II. 114) interprets as aptratibandha dāya. Baud., Manu, Yājñavalkya speak of the three descendants and Śankha-likhita, Vas. XI. 39 and Yama employ[838] only the word putra or suta in relation to the three ancestors. Therefore, the remark of Dr. Kapadia in 'Hindu Kinship' on p. 162 'Vijñāneśvara understands by the word putra sons and grandsons only' is unjustified. It is impossible to hold with Dr. Kapadia that the Mit. ran counter to the express dicta of renowned Smrtis such as those of Manu, Śankha-Likhita and Purānas like the Visnu-purāna III. 13.30 (quoted above in note 582) and that in its remarks on succession it forgot its own interpretation of putra on Yāj. II. 51. He has also not correctly understood the words of the Mit. introducing Yāj. II. 137: 'sons and grandsons take the wealth; in their absence, the wife and others; thus it is said (by me)'. This is wrong for several reasons. 'Wife and others take the wealth' is said by Yāj. (in II. 135-36). The following words are 'now (the author) declares an exception to both.' This clearly refers to Yāj. (II. 137) and not to Vijñāneśvara and so 'uktam' also must refer to Yāj. and not to Vijñāneśvara. Therefore, according to the Mit. the great-grandson is included in the extended meaning of the word 'putra', is entitled just like a son or a grandson to offer śrāddha (in default of a son or grandson) and to take the wealth and pay the debts of the ancestor. In the matter of payment of debts there is, on account of the difference in the period that elapses, a difference between all the three descendants if no ancestral wealth is left by the ancestor, viz. the son pays the debt with interest, the grandson only the principal lent but without interest and the great-grandson nothing at all. This shows that even between the son and the grandson that are expressly mentioned by Yāj. II. 50 as to the payment of debts there is a difference and that as the great-grandson had to pay nothing when no ancestral property existed he was not mentioned at all in Yāj. II. 50.

Just as the king is an ultimate heir and also the guardian of all minors, so he is like the son of a person (who has no relatives left) for performing śrāddhas

The next question is about the times when śrāddha is to be performed. It has been seen above (vide H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 696 ff) that long before the time of the Śat. Br. five daily observances (called Mahāyajñas) were prescribed for each house-holder, viz the sacrifice to beings, that to men, that to the Fathers, that to the gods and that to Veda The Śat. Br. and the Tai. Ā. (II. 10) say further that this daily rite in which one offers svadhā (food) to the Fathers even up to water was called pitṛyajña. Manu III. 70 defines pitṛyajña as tarpaṇa (satiating ancestors with the offerings of water). Manu III. 82 provides that an householder should daily perform a śrāddha with food or with water or with milk, roots and fruits and thus please the Fathers. Śrāddha originally meant a sacrifice performed for the Fathers on Amāvāsyā (vide Gaut. 15. 1–2).[838a] By applying that word to the daily offering of water to the Manes what is intended to be conveyed is that the special characteristics of śrāddha in the strict sense are to be extended to this daily rite so far as possible. Amāvāsyā is of two kinds, Sinīvālī and Kuhū. Those who keep śrauta fires should perform śrāddha on the former, while those who have not kept śrauta fires and śūdras should offer śrāddha on the latter.

Śrāddhas are divided into three classes, nitya, naimittika and kāmya. An observance is called nitya when it is laid down that it must be performed on a certain or fixed occasion (such as every day, on an amāvāsyā, or on Aṣṭakā day). What is laid down for being done on an occasion which is uncertain is called naimittika (such as the birth of a son). What is ordained to be done in case one desires a certain reward or fruit is called kāmya (e. g. the performance of a śrāddha on Kṛttikā or Rohiṇī by one who desires heaven or progeny). The five daily yajñas including pitṛ-yajña are nitya i. e. they must be performed without any eye to any reward therefrom and the non-performance thereof will lead to sinfulness. Passages mentioning the rewards that follow from the performance of obligatory (nitya) rites are only laudatory, they only convey that such performances make a man pure, but it is not meant that they are not obligatory and may be performed only if a person desires the rewards or results promised (i. e. such performances are not kāmya). Āp. Dh. S. (II. 7. 16. 4-7) provides certain times for the performance of śrāddha viz. that it must be performed in the latter half of every month, that the afternoon is preferable for it, that the last days of the latter half of each month are preferable to the first days of the latter half. Gaut. 15. 3 and Vas. XI. 16 say that śrāddha may be performed on any day of the dark half of a month after the 4th day and Gaut. 15. 5 adds that if particularly appropriate materials or particularly holy brāhmanas are available or the performer is near a very sacred place (such as Gayā) a śrāddha may be performed on any day. Kūrma (II. 20 23) says the same thing. The Agnipurāna 115. 8 says that at Gayā a śrāddha may be performed on any day (na kālādi Gayātīrthe dadyāt pindāmśca nityaśaḥ). Manu (III. 276-278) provides that the days of the dark half of the month beginning with the 10th but excepting the 14th[838b] are recommended for śrāddha, that one performing a śrāddha on even lunar days (i. e. on the 10th, 12th) and on the even naksatras (i. e. on Bharanī, Rohinī &c.) gains the fulfilment of all his desires, that one who worships the Manes on uneven days (11th, 13th &c) and on uneven constellations (Krttikā, Mrgaśiras &c) obtains prosperous offspring and that just as the latter half of a month is preferable to the first half so the afternoon is preferable to the forenoon for the performance of a śrāddha. Anuśāsanaparva 87. 18 is the same as Manu III. 276. Yāj. (I. 217–218), the Kūrma (II 20. 2–8), Mārkaṇḍeya (28. 20 ff) and Varāhapurāṇa 13. 33–35 sum up in one place the times for performing śrāddhas as follows: Amāvāsyā, the Aṣṭakā days, lucky days (such as the birth of a son), dark half of a month, the two ayanas (the two days on which the sun appears to start towards the south or north i e. solstices), possession of sufficient materials (such as rice and pulse or meat), the arrival of a worthy brāhmana, the equinoctial points (visuvat, i. e. the sun's apparent entrance into Aries and Balance), the days on which the sun passes into one rāśi from another, the astrological conjunctions called Vyatīpāta[838c], Gajacchāyā, eclipses of the sun and the moon, when the performer has an intense desire to perform śrāddha–these are times for performing śrāddha. The Mārkan-

The सौरपुराण (51.31–32) puts it as 'भाद्रपक्षे त्रयोदश्यां मघास्विन्दुः करे रवि.' The स्कन्दपुराण (VI 220 42–44) explains हस्तिच्छाया in several ways. The अग्निपु (165 3–4) explains हस्तिच्छाया in two ways Some take गजच्छाया literally and say that śrāddha should be performed in the shadow of an elephant. The Vanaparva 200 121 avers that such a srāddha in which the ears of the elephant serve as a fan gives gratification for thousands of कल्पs. अपरार्क p 427 quotes a verse from the महाभारत about श्राद्ध performed in the rainy season under the shadow of an elephant and fanned by the flapping of its ears and the meat being that of a goat all red in colour.

deya[838d] (chap. 28. 22–23), adds that śrāddha should be performed when a man dreams an evil dream and when evil planets affect the naksatra of his birth. In an eclipse the appropriate time for śrāddha is what is called Sparśa Kāla[839] (i e. when the eclipse begins), as stated in a verse of Vrddha-Vasistha. The Brahmapurāna (220. 51–54) contains all the times specified by Yāj. and a few more. Vide also Skandapurāna VII. 1. 30–32, Visnupurāna III. 14. 4–6, Padma (srsti 9. 128–129). Acc. to Visnu Dh. S. 76. 1–2, Amāvāsyā, the three Astakās and the three Anvastakās, the 13th day of the dark half of Bhādrapada on which the moon is in Maghā, Śarad and Vasanta are obligatory (nitya) times for śrāddha and that if a person does not perform śrāddha on these days he goes to Hell. Visnu Dh. S. (77.1–7) states that the day of the sun's passage from one sign of the zodiac to another, the two equinoctial days, particularly the solsticial days, Vyatīpāta, the constellation on which the performer is born, a time of rejoicing (son's birth or the like)—these are kāmya times and a śrāddha performed on these occasions gives infinite pleasure (to the Manes). The Kūrmapurāna (Uttarārdha 16. 6–8) says that śrāddhas called kāmya are commended on eclipses, solstice days, equinoctial days and on Vyatīpāta and they give infinite pleasure (to the Manes) and śrāddha performed on Sankrānti (sun's passage from one sign of the zodiac to another) is inexhaustible and so also on days of birth and on the several naksatras śrāddhas should be performed. Āp. Dh. S. II. 7. 16. 8–22, Anuśāsana 87, Vāyu 89. 10–19, Yāj I 262–263, Brahmapurāna 220. 15–21, Visnu Dh. S. 78. 36–50, Kūrmapurāna (II. 20. 17–22), Brahmānda III. 17. 10–22 state what rewards a man gets if he performs śrāddhas on each of the days from the first to the 15th of the dark half These lists do not completely agree with each other. That of Āp. being probably the most ancient, is set out here—Śrāddha performed on each of the 15 days of the dark half respectively yields the following results in order, viz. progeny chiefly consisting of females (on 1st tithi of dark half), sons that will be thieves, sons that will be possessed of Vedic learning and the performance of Veda-vratas, son that will own small domestic animals, many sons that will be distinguished (by their learning) and the performer will not die childless, a great traveller and gambler (on the 6th), success in agriculture (on 7th), prosperity (on 8th), one-hoofed animals (on 9th), success in trade (10th day), black iron and tin and lead (on 11th), son possessed of cattle (on 12th), many sons and many friends and handsome children which will die young (13th tithi), success in arms (14th), prosperity (on 15th i. e. Amāvāsyā). Gārgya (q by Par. M. I. 2 p. 324) provides that one should not perform śrāddha on Nandā, on Friday, on 13th of the dark half and on the naksatra of birth and the preceding and the following naksatras for fear of losing one's sons and wealth. The Nandā tithis are 1st, 6th and 11th. The Anuśāsana-parva (87. 16) provides that he who performs śrāddha on the 13th tithi attains pre-eminence among his agnates, but then the young men in his house die as a consequence.

A man can perform a śrāddha on any tithi of the dark half of a month, but he should not perform it on a tithi when the moon is in the naksatra on which he was born or in Pūrvā-bhādrapadā or in Uttarābhādrapadā or Krttikā, Ārdrā, Āślesā or Mūla or in a naksatra, which is 5th, 14th or 23rd from the naksatra of his birth.

The śrāddhas performed on the days mentioned in Visnu Dh. S. 77. 1-6 are naimittika and those performed on certain tithis and days of the week for securing certain rewards would be kāmya śrāddhas. According to Par M. I. 1 p. 63 the performance of obligatory (nitya) actions is samskāraka (i e. effects a purifying change in the mind making it fit for higher things), while in some cases it may also produce the desire to know the Reality behind the appearances (i e. it is 'vividisā-janaka' as indicated by the Gītā 9. 27). Jaimini (VI. 3. 1-7) establishes the proposition that the nitya acts (such as Agni-hotra, Darśa-pūrṇamāsa-yāga) must be performed even though the performer is unable to perform a subsidiary part of the rite; while Jai. VI. 3. 8-10 provide that every part of kāmya actions must be performed and if the performer thinks that he would be unable to perform all he should not undertake to perform a kāmya rite at all.[839a]

The Visnudharmasūtra (78. 1-7) states that one performing śrāddha on Sunday secures everlasting freedom from disease and those who perform śrāddha on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday (Jaiva), Friday and Saturday respectively secure happiness (or admiration by people), victory in battle, all desires, such learning as he desires, wealth and long life. The Kūrma (II. 20, 16–17) also expatiates on the rewards for śrāddhas on the several days of the week.

839 a. This position is stated by the परा मा. I part 1 p. 17८ : 'यदा कृत्स्नाङ्गानुष्ठानशक्तिस्तदैव काम्यमनुष्ठेयम्' The विष्णुपुराण (III. 14.4-8) sets out the times for काम्यश्राद्धs. The two propositions of जैमिनि are often spoken of as यथाशक्तिन्याय and सर्वाङ्गोपसंहारन्याय.

The Visnu-Dharmasūtra (78. 8–15) mentions what rewards follow from performance of śrāddhas on the 28 naksatras from Krttikā to Bharanī (including Abhijit which is placed after Uttarāsādhā and before Śravana). Yāj I. 265–268, Vāyu chap. 82, Mārkandeya-purāna 30. 8–16, Kūrma (II. 20 9–15), Brahmapurāna 220. 33–42, Brahmānda (Upodghātapāda 18.1 ff) also deal with the same topic, but all these works do not present complete agreement For example, Visnu Dh S. and Yāj. agree that śrāddha performed on Krttikā, Rohinī, Aśvinī and Bharanī yield as rewards heaven, offspring, horses and longevity, but they disagree in several others e. g. while Visnu says that prosperity, beauty (or happiness) and all desires are obtained by performing śrāddha on the Pusya, Āślesā and Maghā naksatras respectively, Yāj. provides that a śrāddha on these three yields strength, son and eminence. The Anuśāsanaparva 89 and Vāyupurāna 82 set out the rewards of śrāddhas on the several naksatras from Krttikā as declared by Yama to Śaśabindu.

It is stated in the Agnipurāna[840] that śrāddhas performed at a holy place and on days that are called Yugādi and Manvādi yield inexhaustible gratification (to the pitrs) The Visnupurāna[841], Matsyapurāna (17. 4–5), Padma V. 9. 130–131, Varāhapurāna and Prajāpati-smrti verse 22 and Skanda VII. 1. 205 33–34 state that the third tithi of Vaiśākha (bright half), the 9th of the bright half of Kārtika, the 13th of the dark half of Bhādrapada and 15th tithi of the dark half of Māgha are called Yugādi tithis (i. e the first days of the four Yugas from Krta).

Matsya 17. 6–8, Agnipurāna 117. 61–64 and 209. 16–18, Saurapurāna 51. 33–36, Padmapurāna (Srsti 9. 132–135) mention the first tithis of the 14 Manus (or Manvantaras) as follows· 9th of the bright half of Āśvina, 12th of the bright half of Kārtika, the third of the bright half of Caitra and of Bhādrapada, the amāvāsyā of Fālguna, the 11th of the bright half of Pausa, 10th of bright half of Āsādha and the 7th of the bright half of Māgha, the 8th of the dark half of Śrāvana, the Full Moon of Āṣādha, Kārtika, Fālguna, Caitra and Jyeṣṭha. The Matsyapurāna list is quoted in the Sm. C. I. p. 58, Kṛtyaratnākara p. 543, Par. M. I. 1. p. 156 and I. 2 p. 311, and the Madanapārijāta p. 540. The orders in the Skandapurāna VII. 1. 205. 36–39 and the Smrtyarthasāra (p. 9) are slightly different. In the Skandapurāna (Nāgarakhanda) the first tithis of thirty kalpas from Śveta onwards are specified as fit for śrāddha, but are passed over here.

Āp. Dh. S. II.[842] 7. 17. 23–25, Manu III. 280, Viṣṇu Dh. S. 77. 8–9, Kūrma (II. 16. 3–4), Brahmānda III. 14. 3, Bhavisya I. 185. 1 forbid the performance of śrāddha at night or at twilight or when the sun has just risen except in the case of an eclipse of the moon. Āp. adds that when once a śrāddha is begun in the afternoon and owing to some cause there is delay and the sun sets then the performer should perform the remaining rites the next day and he should observe a fast till the placing of the piṇḍas on the darbhas. Viṣṇu Dh. S. declares that śrāddha performed during an eclipse satisfies the Manes as long as the moon and stars exist and brings to the performer all advantages and the satisfaction of all his desires, while the Kūrmapurāna threatens that he who would not perform a śrāddha in an eclipse sinks (incurs sins or becomes ruined) as a cow in mud. The Mit. on Yāj. I. 217 is careful to point out that though there is a prohibition against eating during the progress of an eclipse of the sun or moon, that prohibition would only affect the eater (the brāhmana who eats śrāddha repast in an eclipse) but not the giver who will secure happiness (or good results) thereby.[843]

Very learned disquisitions are held in Aparārka p. 465 ff, Hemādri p. 313 ff and other writers and digests as to the meaning of aparāhna which is the time for srāddha prescribed by Manu (III. 278). There are several views. Some hold that the part of the day after noon is 'after-noon.' The word 'pūrvāhna' occurs in Ṛg. X. 34. 11. Others relying on a śruti[844] text 'The forenoon is for gods, mid-day for men and afternoon for pitṛs' hold that the third part of the day divided into three parts is 'aparāhna.' A third view is that aparāhna is the 4th part of the day divided into five parts and they rely[845] on Śat. Br. II. 2. 3 9. The five parts are called prātah, saṅgava, madhyandina (or madhyāhna), aparāhna and sāyāhna (or sāyam or astagamana). The first three are expressly mentioned even in the Ṛgveda V. 76. 3 Prajāpati-smṛti (verses 156–157) says that each of these five parts extends over three muhūrtas (the day being divided into fifteen muhūrtas). It further states that kutapa is the 8th muhūrta from sunrise and that śrāddha should be begun in kutapa and should not last beyond Rauhina muhūrta and that five muhūrtas (from 8th to 12th) are the maximum time for śrāddha.[846] The word kutapa has eight meanings as noted by the Sm. C. (śrāddha) p. 433 and Hemādri on śrāddha p. 320. The word is derived from 'ku' meaning 'condemned' (i. e. sin) and 'tapa' means 'what burns.' The eight[847] meanings of 'kutapa' are 'midday, a vessel of rhinoceros horn, woollen seat or blanket from Nepal, silver, darbhas, sesame, cows and daughter's son.' The general rule is that śrāddhas are performed in the afternoon (but this applies to śrāddha on New moon, Mahālaya, Astakā and Anvastakā śrāddhas), while Vrddhiśrāddha and śrāddha in which only corn is offered (āmaśrāddha) are performed in the morning. Medhātithi on Manu III. 245 quotes a smrti text on this [848] The Trikāndamandana (II. 150, 162) provides that when it is not possible to perform a religious rite at the time prescribed for it as appropriate, it should be performed at some other time thereafter and that, between the proper time of a rite and the means, the former is to be preferred and one should not wait for a time later than the proper one with the desire of being able to collect all the principal materials. [848a]

A few words must be said about the proper places for the performance of a śrāddha. Manu (III 206–207) lays down that the performer should make efforts to secure a spot sloping to the south and smear it with cowdung, a spot that is pure and unfrequented (by many persons) and that the Fathers are pleased by śrāddha at naturally clean spots or the banks of rivers and spots that are unfrequented. Yāj. I. 227 very briefly puts the requirements by saying that the place of śrāddha should be covered on all sides, should be pure and sloping to the south. Śankha says: [849] 'one should not perform śrāddha on the backs of bulls, elephants and horses, nor on raised earth platforms nor on land owned by others' The Kūrmapurāna states [850] 'Forests, sacred mountains, holy places, temples—these have no (definite) owner and they cannot be private property (of any one)'. Yama provides [851] 'if one offers śrāddha to his pitrs in spots belonging to others, that śrāddha rite is destroyed by the pitrs of the owner of those spots. Therefore, a man should perform śrāddha on holy spots, on river banks, in sacred places and particularly in land belonging to himself, in bowers near hills and on mountain tops' The Visnudharma-sūtra chap 85 mentions numerous holy places and then adds 'in these and other tīrthas, big rivers, on all natural sandy banks, near streams, on mountains, in bowers, forests, groves and spots that look charming because of being smeared with cowdung (śrāddha may be performed)' Śankha (14 27–29) states 'whatever is given in holy Gayā, in Prabhāsa, Puskara, Prayāga, in the Naimisa forest (on the Sarasvatī), on the banks of the Ganges, Yamunā, Payosnī, on Amarakantaka, on Narmadā, in Benares, in Kuruksetra, Bhrgutunga, on the Himālaya, on Sapta-Venī, on Ṛsikūpa—all that becomes inexhaustible.' The Brahmapurāna (220. 5–7) also specifies river banks, lakes, mountain tops, sacred spots like Puskara as the proper places for śrāddha. The Vāyupurāna, chap 77 and Matsya 22 contain long lists of sacred places, countries, mountains in relation to srāddhas. The Kalpataru (śrāddha p. 40) and Sr. P. p. 147 state that special characteristics of the tīrthas in the several countries that are declared to be fit places for srāddha should be understood from the inhabitants of those various countries.

Sacred places will be dealt with in a separate section (on tīrthas).

The Visnudharmasūtra[852] (chap 84) prescribes that śrāddha should not be performed in Mleccha country, nor should one go to a Mleccha country and then defines a Mleccha country as one in which the system of the four varnas is not established and states that Āryāvarta is beyond that The Vāyupurāna provides[853] that the country of Triśanku which is twelve yojanas in extent and which is to the north of the river Mahānadī and to the south of Kīkata (i. e. Magadha) is not fit for śrāddha, similarly the countries called Kāraskara, Kalinga, the country to the north of the river Sindhu and all countries where the system of varnas and āśramas is not in existence should be sedulously avoided for śrāddhas. The Brahmapurāna (220. 8–10) makes the somewhat startling remark that the following countries should be avoided for śrāddhas viz. the Kirāta country, Kalinga, Konkana, Krimi (Krivi?), Daśārna, Kumārya (Cape Comorin), Tangana, Kratha, the northern banks of the Sindhu river and the south bank of Narmadā and the east of the Karatoyā.

The Mārkandeyapurāna [854] prescribes that for a śrāddha a place (ground) that is full of insects, that is arid, or is burnt by fire, from which proceed sounds that are painful to the ear, that is terrific in its aspect, that emits fetid smell should be avoided.

It was also provided from very early times that certain persons and animals are to be ejected from the place where srāddha is to be performed and are not to be allowed to pollute the śrāddha rite by looking at it or by disturbing it in various other ways. Gaut. (15. 25–28) provides that food seen by dogs, cāndālas and those guilty of mahāpātakas becomes unclean (and so unfit); therefore one should offer śrāddha in a covered (or screened) place; or he should strew round about the place sesame or a worthy brāhmana who purifies a row of diners by his presence should perform a śānti for removing the taint caused (by a dog or cāndāla seeing the food &c). Āp. Dh. S. prescribes that the learned condemn the seeing of a śrāddha by dogs and those who (being patita) are excommunicated and that a leper, a bald man, one having sexual intercourse with another's wife, the son of a brāhmana who follows the profession of arms, the son of a brāhmana woman from a śūdra man—if these eat śrāddha food they pollute the diners sitting to eat in a row. Manu (III. 239–242) states: 'a cāndāla, a village pig or cock, a dog, a woman in her monthly illness, an impotent person—these should not be allowed to see brāhmanas engaged in taking dinner. Whatever is seen by these at a homa

(agnihotra), at a gift (of cows and gold), when brāhmaṇas are being fed, or at a religious rite (like the Darśa-Pūrṇamāsa sacrifice) or at a śrāddha becomes fruitless. A pig taints food (offered to gods or Manes) by merely smelling it, a cock by setting in motion the air with its wings, a dog by casting a glance and a man of low caste by touch. If a servant of even the person who offers śrāddha is lame or squint-eyed or has a limb less or more (i. e. having eleven or nine fingers &c.), he should be ejected from the place where śrāddha is to be performed.' It is provided by the Anuśāsanaparva (127. 13) that śrāddha food should not be seen by a woman in her monthly illness or by a sonless woman or by one suffering from white leprosy. Viṣṇu-dharmasūtra (82. 3 ff) contains a long list of about 30 persons who are not to be allowed near a śrāddha. The Kūrmapurāṇa (II. 22. 34–35) states that one devoid of a limb, a patita, a leper, one suffering from an open ulcer, an atheist, a cock, a pig, a dog, should be kept far away from a śrāddha; one should also avoid one that has a disgusting appearance, an impure person, one who is naked, a mad man, a gambler, a woman in her monthly course, those that wear indigo-coloured or yellow-red garments and those who follow heretical views. The Mārkaṇḍeya 32 20–24, Vāyu 78. 26–40, Viṣṇupurāṇa III. 16. 12–14 and Anuśāsanaparva 91 43–44 also contain long lists which are passed over here. The Skandapurāṇa VI 217. 43 also speaks about a dog, a woman in her monthly illness, a patita and a hog not being allowed to see the śrāddha rite.

The classification of Śrāddhas.

Śrāddhas have been variously classified. One classification, viz. into nitya, naimittika and kāmya has already been described above (p. 369) Another classification is that into Ekoddiṣṭa and Pārvaṇa[855]. The first is offered to one deceased person alone, while the latter is performed on the amāvāsyā of a month or in the dark half of Bhādrapada or on saṅkrānti and in it the three paternal ancestors are principally invoked. pati quoted in the Śrāddhaviveka of Rudradhara mentions five classes of śrāddhas as declared by Manu viz. nitya, naimittika, kāmya, Vrddhi and Pārvana[856]. The Śrāddhaviveka remarks that the sixteen pretaśrāddhas (to be described later on) are included under naimittika and that such śrāddhas as Gosthī-śrāddha enumerated in other smrtis are included in Pārvana. The Kūrmapurāna (II. 20. 26) similarly speaks of the five srāddhas as enumerated by Manu[857]. The Mit. on Yāj. I. 217 states that there are five śrāddhas, viz. 'ahar-ahaḥ-śrāddha, pārvana, vrddhiśrāddha, ekoddista and sapindīkarana. The daily śrāddha is described by Manu III. 82 (= Śankha 13 16 and Matsya 16.4) as one that is performed every day with food (cooked rice, yavas &c.) or with water or with milk, fruits and roots. Two verses of Viśvāmitra[858] quoted by several works speak of twelve kinds of śrāddhas, viz. nitya, naimittika, kāmya, vrddhi-śrāddha (performed on the birth of a son, marriage or similar incident of good luck), sapinḍana (sapindīkarana), pārvana, gosthīśrāddha, śuddhiśrāddha, karmānga, daivika, yātrāśrāddha, pustiśrāddha. Explanations of all these are quoted from the Bhavisyapurāna by the same works. Sapindana and Pārvana will be described below. Some of the rest not already defined may be briefly explained as follows: The Gosthī-śrāddha[859] is one which is performed when a man becomes enthusiastic owing to a talk about śrāddha or when many learned men gather together at a sacred place and, finding it impossible to have separate cooking arrangements for each, pool their resources for collecting śrāddha materials and perform simultaneously śrāddha for the pleasure it affords to themselves and for the gratification of pitrs The Śuddhiśrāddha is one where brāhmanas are fed when a person undergoes śuddhi (purification) after being guilty of some sin or transgression (it is a subsidiary act in a prāyaścitta) That śrāddha is called 'karmānga' which is performed at the time of the Garbhādhāna rite or at the performance of a soma sacrifice, or at sīmantonnayana, pumsavana (it is like Vrddhiśrāddha). That is called daivika śrāddha which is intended to propitiate gods (it is like nityaśrāddha and is performed on the 7th or 12th tithi or the like with sacrificial food) When a man going to a distant country on a pilgrimage or the like performs a śrāddha in which clarified butter is served (to brāhmanas) in abundance or when he comes back to his house, that is yātrāśrāddha. That is called pustiśrāddha which is performed for the health (or fattening) of the body (when taking some medicine for the purpose) or for the increase of one's wealth. Out of these[860] twelve the principal ones are pārvana, ekoddista, vrddhi and sapiṇḍana. There are works called Ṣan-navati-srāddha such as those of Śivabhatta, son of Govinda, and of Raghunātha. The 96 srāddhas to be performed in a year are briefly enumerated in a verse[861] quoted in the note. They are · 12 srāddhas on the 12 amāvāsyās in the year, the four śrāddhas on the Yugādi days (note 841 above), the fourteen śrāddhas on the Manvantarādi days (p. 375 above), the śrāddhas on 12 saṅkrāntis (i. e. the sun's apparent motion from one sign of the Zodiac to another), the 13 śrāddhas on the Yoga called Dhṛti (i. e. Vaidhṛti) and the 13 śrāddhas on the Vyatīpāta yoga, the 16 Mahālaya śrāddhas, the four Anvaṣṭakā days (according to Āśv. as noted on pp 359–360), the four Aṣṭakā days and the four days (i e. 7th of dark half of the months of Hemanta and Śiśira) of the day previous (to the Aṣṭakā). These classifications and enumerations of śrāddhas will afford an idea how the doctrine of śrāddhas was carried to an exaggerated extent in the course of centuries. It goes without saying that only a few people could have indulged in the luxury of so many śrāddhas a year and most people were content with the performance of only one Mahālayaśrāddha and one or two more. It may be noted that Manu (III. 122) first prescribed that on the amāvāsyā of each month an elaborate śrāddha should be performed, but knowing that this was almost impossible Manu recommends to all (III. 281) that an elaborate śrāddha should be performed on three amāvāsyās in one year[862] (viz. in Hemanta, Grīṣma and Varṣā) and one should perform every day the śrāddha which is one of the five daily sacrifices (III. 82–83). Devala went further and recommended that an elaborate śrāddha may be performed only once a year.

The next important question is about the qualifications of the brāhmaṇas that were invited to dinner on a śrāddha day. Only brāhmaṇas were and are entitled to be invited for śrāddha

The महालयs are 16 as stated by शाट्यायनि and देवल q. by परा मा. I. 2 p 319 and by स्मृ मु. Generally there are 13 वैधृतियोगs and 13 vyatīpāta yogas in a year, though sometimes there may be 14 of each. There are in a month 27 yogas beginning from विष्कम्भ. The शतपथब्रा (VI. 4. 2, 10) speaks of 12 अष्टकाs 'द्वादश पौर्णमास्यो द्वादशाष्टका द्वादशामावास्याः'.

dinner whoever may be the performer of the śrāddha. In this connection many works contain high eulogies of brāhmaṇas, but they are passed over here, as the eulogy of brāhmaṇas has been already dealt with at some length in H. of Dh vol. II. pp. 37–38, 135–138. It may be noted that the gṛhyasūtras contain a few requirements, but as we proceed the smṛtis and purāṇas go on adding qualifications and enlarging the lists of those that should not be invited. For example, the Āśv. Gr [862a] IV. 7. 2, Śān. Gr. IV. 1. 2. Āp. Gr VIII. 21. 2, Āp. Dh. S. II. 7. 17 4, Hir. Gr II. 10. 2, Baud. Gr. II. 10. 5–6 and II S. 2–3, Gaut. 15. 9 provide that the brāhmaṇas to be invited should be possessed of Vedic learning, should be of excellent character (free from anger and passion and possessed of control of mind and senses) and of meritorious conduct, pure, not deficient in a limb or not having an excessive limb (e. g. having six fingers). The Āp. Dh S states that he who has studied the three Vedic verses in which the word 'madhu' occurs (Rg I. 90. 6–8, Vāj. S 13 27–29, Tai. S. IV. 2. 9 3), he who has studied the Trisuparṇa, one who is a Triṇāciketa, one who has studied the mantras required for the four sacrifices (Aśvamedha, Puruṣamedha, Sarvamedha and Pitṛmedha) or who has performed these four sacrifices, one who keeps the five fires, he who knows the Sāman called Jyeṣṭha, he who carries out the duty of daily Vedic study, the son of one

862 a ब्राह्मणान् श्रुतशीलवृत्तसम्पन्नानेकेन वा । आश्व. गृ IV. 7. 2, ब्राह्मणान् शुचीन् मन्त्रवतः समङ्गानयुजः आमन्त्रयते । योनिगोत्रासम्बन्धान् । नार्थापेक्षो भोजयेत् । हिर गृ II 10 2. त्रिमधुस्त्रिसुपर्णस्त्रिणाचिकेतश्चतुर्मेधः पञ्चाग्निर्ज्येष्ठसामिको वेदाध्याय्य- नूचानपुत्रः श्रोत्रिय इत्येते श्राद्धे भुञ्जानाः पङ्क्तिपावना भवन्ति । आप ध II. 7. 17–22. त्रिसुपर्ण is the name applied, according to Haradatta, to the three anuvākas beginning with ब्रह्ममेतु माम् (तै. आ X 48–50) or to the verse चतुः— शिखण्डा युवतिः सुपेशा in तै ब्रा I. 2 1.27 or Rg. X 114. 3–5. 'त्रिणाचिकेत' is explained in different ways viz (1) one who knows the Nāciketa fire, (2) a person who has thrice kindled the Nāciketa fire, (3) a person who has studied the Anuvāka called Virajas. For the Nāciketa fire, vide Kathopaniṣad I. 1. 16–18 The word 'Triṇāciketaḥ' occurs in Katha Up I. 1. 17 and is explained by शङ्कर as 'त्रिः कृत्वा नाचिकेतोऽग्निश्चितो येन सः त्रिणाचिकेतस्तद्विज्ञानस्त- दध्ययनस्तदनुष्ठानवान् वा । Tai Br (III. 11. 7–8) describes the नाचिकेत fire and the story of Naciketas The five fires are Gārhapatya, Āhavanīya, Dakṣiṇāgni, Āvasathya (or aupāsana) and Sabhya Vide H. of Dh. vol II. p 679 Vide ibid. II. p 767 note 1838a for explanations of पङ्क्तिपावन, ज्येष्ठसामिक and the other words explained above देवल defines श्रोत्रिय as 'एकां शाखां सकल्पां वा षड्भिरङ्गैरधीत्य वा । षट्कर्मनिरतो विप्रः श्रोत्रियो नाम धर्मवित् ॥' q. by श्रा प्र p 59. who has studied the Veda and is able to teach the whole Veda with its aṅgas, a Śrotriya—these persons sanctify the company if they eat at a funeral repast. Gaut. 15. 28, Baud. Dh. S. II. 8.2, Manu III. 185–186, Yāj I. 219, Varāhapurāna 14.2 contain almost the same words about those who sanctify the company of diners (i. e. who are paṅktipāvana). The Anuśāsanaparva (90. 25–31), Kūrmapurāṇa II. 21. 1–14, Matsya 16 7–13, Brahmapurāna 220. 101–104, Vāyu 79. 56–59 and 83. 52–55, Skanda VI. 217. 21–25 give long lists of paṅktipāvana brāhmaṇas. The Hir. Gṛ. II. 10.2, Baud. Dh. S. II. 2. 7, Kūrma (II. 21. 14) and others say that a performer of śrāddha should invite one who is not a relative connected by marriage (such as a maternal uncle) nor one who is of the same gotra, nor one who is connected with the performer by Veda study (i. e. is his teacher or pupil), nor a friend nor one who expects monetary help from the performer. Manu (III. 138–139) provides that one should not invite at a śrāddha dinner a personal friend, that one may gain a friend by making valuable gifts to him (on other occasions), that one should feed at a śrāddha a brāhmana whom he does not deem either his friend or foe and that he who performs śrāddhas and offerings to gods chiefly to gain friends reaps no reward after death by those śrāddhas or offerings. But Manu III. 144 (= Kūrma II. 21–22) provides that one may invite even a friend but not a foe though the latter may be learned. Manu (III. 135–137 and 145–147) lays down that the main or best rule to be followed is to present śrāddha food to those who are devoted to spiritual knowledge, that between a man who has studied one whole recension of the Veda but whose father was not a śrotriya and one who is himself not a śrotriya but whose father had studied a whole recension of the Veda (i. e. whose father was a śrotriya) the latter is the more worthy of the two, that one should strive to feed at a śrāddha an adherent of the Ṛgveda who has studied one entire recension of that Veda or a follower of the Yajurveda who has studied one Śākhā thereof or a singer of sāmans who has finished one recension of the Sāmaveda and that if one of these preceding three is honoured and dines at a śrāddha, the ancestors of the performer will be gratified up to the seventh generation for a very long time. Hārita (q. by Hemādri on śrāddha p. 392 and Kalpataru on śr. pp. 66–67) describes the qualifications of those who are pāṅkteya brāhmanas viz. they must be born in a high family (possessing four characteristics), must be endowed with learning (of six kinds) and śīla

(character of 13 kinds) and good conduct (of 16 kinds). Śankha-Likhita[863] give a long list of pānkteya (fit to be associated with in a paṅkti i. e. row of diners) brāhmaṇas, viz he who knows the Veda and the Vedāṅgas (viz. phonetics, kalpa or śrauta ritual, grammar, Nirukta, metrics and astronomy); one who keeps the five fires; one who has studied the Veda with its angas; one who knows Sāṅkhya, Yoga, Upaniṣads and Dharmaśāstra; a śrotriya, a trināciketa, trimadhu, trisuparṇaka and one that has studied Jyesthasāman; one who has studied Sāṅkhya, Yoga, Upanisads and Dharmaśāstra; who is devoted to Veda; who always keeps sacred fires; who is obedient to his parents and devoted to Dharmaśāstra. Similar rules are laid down by Visnu Dh. S 83, Bṛhat-Parāśara p. 150, Vṛddha-Gautama p. 581, Prajāpati verses 70-72, Laghu-Śātātapa verses 99-100, Auśanasasmrti (Jiv. vol. I, pp. 523-524). As Medhātithi[864] on Manu III. 147 says the gist of all these passages is that a learned brāhmana who has studied the Veda, whose conduct is good, whose family is famous, who is the son of a śrotriya father and who is not related to the performer must be invited and all the rest is mere arthavāda (by way of eulogy). Manu (III. 128) laid down two propositions viz. all food offered as sacrifice to the gods and manes must be given only to a brāhmana who studies the Veda and that whatever is presented to the most worthy brāhmana (among brāhmanas studying the Veda) brings in the greatest rewards. Then Manu (III. 183) declares that paṅktipāvana brāhmanas are those that sanctify a row of diners among whom sit some who are tainted by (latent) blemishes that make them unfit to be among the diners. Then Manu (III. 184-186) gives examples of panktipāvana brāhmanas viz. those who are the foremost among students of all the Vedas or their expository works and who are born in a family of unbroken descent of Vedic students, who are Trināciketa &c. Hemādri (on śr. pp. 391-395) and Kalpataru (śr. pp. 64-65) quote numerous verses from Yama on paṅktipāvana.

Manu III. 147 asserts that the best course is to invite a brāhmana who fulfils the conditions laid down in Manu III.

132–146, but adds that if it is not possible to secure such a brāhmaṇa then the next best course[865] ('anukalpa') may be followed, viz. the performer may invite his own maternal grandfather, his maternal uncle, sister's son, father-in-law, his teacher of the Veda, daughter's son, son-in-law, a bandhu (such as mother's sister's son), wife's brother or a sagotra, or his family priest, or his pupil. Similar provisions occur in Yāj I. 220, Kūrma (Uttarārdha 21. 20), Varāhapurāṇa 14. 3, Matsya 16. 10–11, Viṣṇupurāṇa III. 15. 2–4 (anukalpeṣvanantarān). But Manu is careful[866] to point out in a later chapter that one who is able to observe the best course, but observes the second best does not reap other-worldly rewards by his actions. Even Āp. Dh. S.[867] expressly says that if strangers do not possess the requisite qualifications, then even one's full brother possessed of all the qualifications (as to Vedic learning, good conduct &c.) and pupils may be fed at a śrāddha. Baud. Dh. S. also allows even a sapiṇḍa to be fed.[868] Gaut 15. 20 appears to be of the view that even pupils and sagotras may be invited when they are possessed of excellent qualities and strangers with good qualifications are not available. Even in these times very learned brāhmaṇas are unwilling to be fed at a śrāddha, particularly within a few years (three or five) from the death of the person for whose benefit the śrāddha is to be performed. Smṛtis attach a certain stigma to the fact of being the recipient of a śrāddha dinner and prāyaścittas are prescribed. For example, the Mit. on Yāj. III. 289 quotes several verses of Bhāradvāja, one of which says 'If a brāhmaṇa dines at a pārvaṇa śrāddha he has to perform six prāṇāyāmas (as expiation), if he dines at a śrāddha from the third month after a person's death to one year, he has to undergo a fast; if he dines at a vṛddhiśrāddha, he has to perform three prāṇāyāmas, and a fast for a day and night if he dines at a sapiṇḍana śrāddha.' The Mit. further quotes a

The Varāhapurāna (189. 12–13) provides that if a brāhmana dies while the food offered to a preta is still in his stomach he dwells for a kalpa in a horrible hell, becomes a rāksasa and then becomes free from the sin.

According to Gaut. 15. 10 young persons with the requisite qualifications are to be preferred to older ones, while, according to some, young men were to be invited at a śrāddha for one's deceased father and old men for a śrāddha for one's grandfather. On the other hand, Āp. Dh. S. says among brāhmanas possessing the same qualifications, the older ones are to be preferred and among those that are old are to be preferred the poor that are anxious to earn money.[868a]

Some of the works lay special emphasis on inviting ascetics or yogins at a śrāddha dinner. The Visnu Dh. S states that yogins [869] are particularly paṅktipāvana and quotes a stanza as recited by the pitrs 'May (a descendant) be born in our family who feeds a brāhmana yogin at a śrāddha by which we are ourselves satisfied.' The Varāhapurāna 14. 50 says that a yogin is superior to 100 brāhmanas. The Mārkandeya-purāna provides 'a wise man should always feed yogins at a śrāddha since the pitrs rely for support on Yoga; if a yogin is fed by being seated as the first among thousands of brāhmanas he saves the performer and the other diners as a boat saves men in water.' Then it quotes stanzas sung by the pitrs (29. 32–34) to king Aila. The Saurapurāna, after mentioning the qualifications (in 19. 2–3),[870] winds up by stating that even one may suffice provided he be a single-minded devotee of Śivā (verse 6)

The important पितृगाथाs are 'कदा नः सन्ततावग्र्यः कस्यचिद्भविता सुतः॥ यो योगिभुक्तशेषान्नो भुवि पिण्डं प्रदास्यति। गयायामथवा पिण्डं खड्गमांसं तथा हविः। कालशाकं तिलाज्यं च तृप्तये कृसरं च नः॥' ब्रह्मपुराण 220. 113–115 and मार्कण्डेय 29, 33–34.

The Matsyapurāna (16. 11–12) recommends 'He who expounds (the meaning of) texts; he who enters upon the discussion of śrauta sacrifices and he who knows the rules about the accents of sāmans is a purifier of paṅktipāvanas; one proficient in the Sāmaveda, a Vedic student, one endowed with knowledge of the Veda or of Brahma —where these are fed in a śrāddha it yields the highest benefit.' [871] Though in the above passages the greatest emphasis was laid on the possession of Vedic learning by the brāhmanas to be fed, one had also to see whether they were men of good character and observers of the rules of proper conduct, as provided by Āśv. Gr. IV. 7. 2 (note 862), Gaut. 15.9 and Manu II. 118 who says 'a brāhmana [872] knowing only the sacred Gāyatrī but living a well-regulated life is to be preferred and not one who knows the three Vedas but who is not well-regulated in conduct and who eats anything (even forbidden food) and who is a vendor of everything.' The Skandapurāna VI. 217. 27 recommends that one should make every effort to know the family of the brāhmanas, then their character (śīla), then their age and then the facts about whom they marry or to whom they give their daughters in marriage. The Brahmāṇḍa (Upodghāta, chap 15) says that there should be no scrutiny of a brāhmaṇa about whom nothing is known because siddhas (yogins) roam about on the earth in the form of brāhmanas. But if faults in a brāhmana are easily seen or if one knows his disqualifications on account of one's dwelling near him, he should not be invited (verses 5–6). The same Purāna (Upodghāta 15. 24–26) arranges the orders of preference as follows · first yati (ascetic), then a brāhmana who knows the four Vedas and itihāsa, then one who knows three Vedas, then one who knows two, then one who knows one Veda, then one who is an upādhyāya. Hemādri (on śrāddha p. 443) quotes the Agnipurāna [873] as follows: 'what is the use of (birth in a) famous family if the man is himself devoid of good conduct? Are not insects found in fragrant flowers?' Jātūkarnya says 'one should not honour even with a word (much less with food &c.) in rites for gods and Manes bad brāhmanas void of good conduct, even though they be endowed with learning and be born in a good family.' This insistence on worth was due to the conception that pitrs assuming an aerial form enter brāhmaṇas at the time of śrāddha. Vide Brahmāndapurāna (Upodghātapāda 11. 49).

These requirements of learning, character and good conduct would naturally make it incumbent on the performer of a śrāddha to inquire into the antecedents, qualities and defects of the brāhmanas to be invited. Manu and others lay down several rules about the testing of the brāhmanas to be invited. Manu III. 149, Visnu Dh.[874] S. 82.1-2, provide 'at an offering to the gods let a man not enquire into (the qualities of) a brāhmana (when he wants to invite), but at a śrāddha offering to the Manes close inquiry (into qualities) is declared to be proper and just.' Manu III. 130 says that even if a brāhmana be master of the Veda, one should enquire far (into his ancestry). The Vāyupurāṇa[875] appears to provide that inquiry into (the qualifications of) brāhmanas should not be always undertaken when gifts are to be made, but enquiry is declared (necessary) in the case of rites for gods and Manes. The Anuśāsanaparva provides[876] that in rites meant for gods a ksatriya knowing the rules about gifts should not (closely) inquire into the qualifications of brāhmanas, but in rites for the gods and Manes such inquiry is quite proper. Vrddha-Manu and the Matsya-purāṇa[877] lay down that a brāhmana's character is to be inquired into at the place where he resides for a long time, his purity by his acts and transactions with other people, his intelligence by discussion with him: with these three one should inquire whether the brāhmana (to be invited) is a worthy person.

The Nrsimhapurāna[878] forbids close inquiry into the character and learning of one who comes by chance as a guest at the time of śrāddha. That inquiry was allowed as to brāhmanas who were invited and not as to those who came by chance uninvited as atithis. There are no doubt certain passages particularly in the Purānas where scrutiny into a brāhmana's qualifications is condemned. For example, the Skandapurāna quoted by Aparārka (p. 455) and Kalpataru (on śr. p. 102) states 'The Vedic revelation is that śrāddha is to be offered (to a brāhmana) after inquiry (into his learning and character), but straightforward action is better than scrutiny. When one offers śrāddha straightforwardly without inquiry his pitrs are gratified and also gods'. The Bhavisyapurāna (q. by Bālambhatti) states 'it is my view also that one should not test (the qualifications of) brāhmanas; one should only consider their caste and not their virtues'. Such passages are explained away as referring to a śrāddha at sacred places or as applicable to gifts or to atithis (vide Hemādri on śrāddha p. 513, and Bālambhatti on ācāra p. 494)[878a].

Brāhmanas were declared to be apāṅkteya[879] (not fit to sit in the row of brāhmana diners or as defiling a row of diners at śrāddha) on various grounds, such as bodily and mental defects and diseases, pursuit of certain avocations, moral lapses, being guilty of crimes, being followers of unorthodox systems, being inhabitants of certain countries. A distinction has to be made between brāhmanas who should not be invited and brāhmanas that are apāṅkteya or paṅktidūṣaka. For example, one should not ordinarily invite a friend or a sagotra brāhmana even though learned, but these are not apāṅkteya. The Ap.[880] Dh. S. states that one suffering from white leprosy, a bald man, the violator of another man's bed, the son of a brāhmaṇa who was a soldier by profession, the son of (brāhmaṇa who had become like) a śūdra from a brāhmaṇa woman—these defile the company if they are invited at a śrāddha repast. Vas. Dh. S. XI. 19 also gives a brief list viz. 'one should avoid naked (ascetics), those suffering from white leprosy, impotent men, blind men, those who have black teeth, those afflicted with black leprosy and those who have deformed nails.' Very long lists of persons unfit to be invited at a śrāddha are given by Gaut. XV. 16–19, Manu III. 150–166, Yāj. I. 222–224, Viṣṇu Dh. S. 82. 3–29, Atri (verses 345–359 and 385–388), Bṛhad-Yama III. 34–38, Bṛhat-Parāśara pp. 149–150, Vṛddha-Gautama pp. 580–581, the Vāyu-purāṇa 83.61–70, Anuśāsana-parva 90.6–11, Matsyapurāṇa 16.14–17, Kūrma (II. 21. 23–47), Skanda VII. 1.205.58–72, VI. 217.11–20, Varāhapurāṇa 14.4–6, Brahmapurāṇa 220. 127–135, Brahmāṇḍapurāṇa (Upodghāta 15.39–44 and 19.30–41), Mārkaṇḍeya 28.26–30, Viṣṇupurāṇa (III. 15.5–8), Nāradapurāṇa (pūrvārdha 28.11–18), Saurapurāṇa (19.7–9) and several other works. The list in the Manusmṛti is one of the longest and that is set out here. One should not invite a brāhmaṇa that is (1) a thief, (2) an outcaste, (3) an impotent man, (4) an atheist, (5) one who wears his hair in braids (a student yet learning Veda); (6) one who does not study the Veda, (7) one who is afflicted with a skin disease, (8) a gambler, (9) one officiating as a priest for a multitude of men, (10) a physician, (11) temple priest (who worships images for money), (12) vendor of meat, (13) one who makes his livelihood as shopkeeper, (14 and 15) a paid servant of a village or of a

881. There is some divergence of views among the commentators about the meanings of certain words occurring in Manu III, 150-166. For reasons of space that matter is not discussed here in detail. A few points alone are noted here निराकृतिः is explained in two ways viz (1) one who does not perform the daily five Mahāyajñas, (2) one who after learning the Veda forgets it. The evil diseases are said by Devala to be eight 'उन्मादस्त्वग्दोषो राजयक्ष्मा श्वासो मधुमेहो भगन्दरो महोदरमश्मरीत्यष्टौ पापरोगाः', q by अपरार्क p. 451, स्मृतिच. (आ) p. 401. वृषली is explained in various ways by Skandapurāṇa VII 1. 205 77-80 as meaning a śūdra woman, as one who abandoning her husband cohabits with another, as a girl who is not married though she has reached the age of puberty, as a prostitute, as one who is sterile, or one all whose children are dead अग्रेदिधिषूपति :—When a younger sister gets married before her elder sister the former is called अग्रेदिधिषू while the latter is called दिधिषू. देवल says 'ज्येष्ठायां यद्यनूढायां कन्यायामुह्यतेऽनुजा। सा चाग्रेदिधिषूर्ज्ञेया पूर्वा च दिधिषूर्मता॥' q. by अपरार्क p 451, मिता on या III. 265. अग्रेदिधिषूपति is taken by मेधातिथि as equal to two words viz. अग्रेदिधिषू and दिधिषूपति. The latter means, according to the Amarakośa, the husband of a remarried woman, while the former means 'one who is the first husband of a remarried woman' पुनर्भूर्दिधिषूरूढा द्विस्तस्या दिधिषुः पतिः। स तु द्विजोऽग्रेदिधिषूः सैव यस्य कुटुम्बिनी॥ अमरकोश q. by हरदत्त on गौ 15 15. मनु. III 173 explains दिधिषूपति as one who lasciviously dallies with the widow of his deceased brother, though she be appointed (to bear a son by him) according to the sacred law. The स्मृतिs said that the brother appointed should cohabit as an act of duty and not through passion for the widow. Hemādri p 485 gives another meaning of अग्रेदिधिषू 'जीवत्स्वामिनं भ्रातृभार्यामनुरक्तोऽग्रेदिधिषूः'. वसिष्ठ I. 18 includes both अग्रेदिधिषू and दिधिषूपति among those who are called एनस्विन Even the तै ब्रा. III. 2.8. 12 mentions अग्रेदिधिषु as a sinner and आप ध सू (II. 5. 12. 22) mentions both.

manas at a śrāddha repast. Manu III. 170–182 indulge in pointing out how feeding such unworthy brāhmanas results in the loss of the gratification of pitrs and state that the food eaten by such unworthy persons becomes or is to be deemed as equal to foul things. The Kūrmapurāṇa [882] forbids inviting at śrāddhas Bauddha ascetics, Nirgranthas (devotees who have withdrawn from the world and wander about naked or as beggars), those that follow the Pañcarātra and Pāśupata doctrines, those that are kāpālikas (devotees of Śiva of the left hand order) and other similar heretical people. The Visnupurāna (III. 18. 70 ff) narrates how a king after a bath in a holy place talked with a heretic and had to pass in consequence through the bodies of a dog, a jackal, wolf, vulture, a crow, a crane and peacock and ultimately became freed from the taint by a bath at the avabhṛtha in an Aśvamedha sacrifice. The same Purāna provides (III. 18 97) that one should avoid talking with or touching heretics, particularly at the time of a religious rite or when one has consecrated for a solemn sacrifice. The Vāyupurāna [883] provides that people who are 'nagna' should not be allowed to see a śrāddha and then defines 'nagna' people as follows: 'the three Vedas are declared to be a protective covering for all beings and therefore those who foolishly abandon the Vedas are called 'nagna'; those who vainly keep matted hair, those who shave their heads for no purpose, those who are nagna (naked) without any cause, those who engage in certain observances and mutter certain words aimlessly are called nagnādi'. Just as certain countries were declared unfit for the performance of śrāddhas (vide note 853 above), so certain brāhmaṇas hailing from certain countries were declared in some works as not fit to be invited at a śrāddha.[884] For example, the Matsyapurāṇa states that brāhmaṇas that are ungrateful, that are atheists, that stay in Mleccha countries or the countries of Triśaṅku, Karavīra, Āndhra, Cīna, Draviḍa and Koṅkaṇa should be carefully avoided at the time of śrāddha. Hemādri (on śrāddha p. 505) quotes from the Saurapurāṇa the following: 'Brāhmaṇas hailing from the countries of Aṅga, Vaṅga, Kaliṅga, Saurāṣṭra, (Kāthiawar), Gurjara, Ābhīra, Koṅkaṇa, Draviḍa, Dakṣiṇāpatha, Avanti and Magadha should be avoided at śrāddhas. It will be noticed that putting the above two passages together, brāhmaṇas from half of modern India would have been ineligible for being invited at śrāddhas if these passages were literally followed. This was probably a counsel of perfection prompted by the false pride and prejudices of the authors of those works. The Śrāddhaviveka of Rudradhara (pp. 39–41) contains one of the longest lists of persons unfit to be invited at a śrāddha.

The following reason is advanced by the Varāhapurāṇa[885] and others for honouring a guest who comes by chance at the time when a śrāddha rite is in progress: "Yogins wander over the earth assuming different forms that prevent recognition, but doing good to people; therefore a wise man should honour a guest who arrives at the time of the performance of a śrāddha". The Bhaviṣya-purāṇa[886] similarly says that an atithi (guest) at a śrāddha is one who comes when least thought of and not one who had arrived before the śrāddha rite started. The Mārkaṇḍeya (26. 30) provides that one should not ask such an atithi about his gotra or caraṇa or his Vedic study nor should one consider whether he has a fine appearance. Hemādri (on śrāddha pp. 430–433) quotes verses from the Śivadharmottara, Visnudharmottara and Vāyu (71.74–75) Purānas that gods, siddhas and yogins wander over the earth in the form of brāhmana atithis in order to favour people and to see how śrāddhas are being performed. About the definition of an atithi and the necessity and mode of honouring a guest in general, vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 749–756.

Hemādri (Śrāddhakānda, pp. 380–385) holds an interesting discussion as to whether a performer of śrāddha belonging to one recension of a Veda must restrict himself to inviting brāhmanas that are students of the same recension of the Veda or whether he can invite any brāhmana that may have studied any of the three Vedas. Some people relying on a maxim ('as in the case of a bride so in the case of an offering') invite only brāhmanas of their own śākhā possessed of the qualifications above set forth. Hemādri replies that this is a wrong notion, relies on Āp. Dh. S. II. 6. 15. 9 'one should feed[887] in all (religious) acts brāhmanas that are pure (in their conduct) and that have studied the Veda' and asserts that no smrti, Itihāsa, Purāna, Grhyasūtra nor Kalpasūtra contains the restriction of inviting only brāhmanas of the performer's own śākhā. He further says that in such texts as 'trināciketastrimadhuh' (quoted in note 862a above) the rule laid down is to invite brāhmanas that have studied different śākhās and Vedas. He rejects the idea about any restriction as to selecting a bridegroom of the same śākhā as the bride's father and remarks that if some people are not prepared to give their daughters in marriage to young men belonging to other śākhās, that is due to ignorance about the families and is also due to pride and vanity. He winds up by saying that in Āryāvarta countries it is found on all sides that marriage connections are entered into with persons studying different śākhās but living in the same district, (such connections) not being condemned, while persons who study the same śākhā of the Veda but do not know each other do not enter into marital connections.[888] As a contrast to this commonsense view it should be noted that the author of the Bālambhatti recommends that 'Mahārāstra brāhmanas should not invite brāhmanas of other castes (of brāhmanas) and particularly the Konkanastha brāhmanas should be avoided and it goes so far as to say that a person belonging to one's own caste not possessed of good qualities and of a blemished character (provided he is not guilty of mahāpātakas or the like) should be preferred to one belonging to another sub-caste even if endowed with good qualities.

The Vas Dh. S. provides [889] that the performer should invite ascetics, house-holders, well conducted men, who are not very old &c. The Kūrmapurāna states [890] 'that man whose offering (of food) is eaten by a yati that knows the truth about prakrti (primordial matter) and the guṇas (sattva, rajas and tamas) reaps the reward (merit) of feeding a thousand (other brāhmaṇas). Therefore one should feed in offerings to gods and manes an excellent yogin who is intent on true knowledge of God and others only if such a one is not available.' Similar verses about ascetics and yogins occur in Varāhapurāṇa 14. 50, Skanda (VI. 217. 7 ff) and Vāyupurāṇa[891] chap. 71. 65–73, chap. 76. 28 &c. Bṛhaspati provides[892] a special rule that, if a person cannot afford to feed at a śrāddha more than one brāhmaṇa, then he should feed one who has studied the Sāmaveda, since in him all the three viz. Ṛks, the Yajus and Sāmans co-exist, that the father is pleased by Ṛks (i. e. by the feeding of a brāhmaṇa who has studied the Ṛgveda), the grand-father by Yajus, the great-grand-father by a Sāman and a chandoga (a chanter of the whole of Sāmaveda) is superior. A verse of Śātātapa is[893] quoted to the effect that if a student of the Atharvaveda is fed in a rite for the gods or manes, that yields endless and inexhaustible rewards.

Some of the smṛtis were very strict in laying down the qualifications of brāhmaṇas to be invited at a śrāddha. Auśanasa (chap. 4) asserts: 'that brāhmaṇa[894] is called durbrāhmaṇa and should never be invited at a śrāddha in whose family Veda study and Vedī (i. e. the performance of Śrauta sacrifices) have been stopped for three generations'. author[895] further says that six persons are merely brahmabandhus (i. e. brāhmanas by birth or caste alone) viz. one who is hired by a śūdra or a king as a servant, who has a śūdra woman as his wife, who is a village priest and he who subsists by killing (animals) or by catching them. So early as the Mahābhāsya[896] it was stated that austerities (leading a life of restraint and strict observances), Vedic learning and birth (from brāhmana parents) are the causes of (a man being called) a brāhmana and that he who is devoid of the first two is a mere brāhmana by caste (but not a real brāhmana). It is curious to note that Yama stated that, if brāhmanas that do not declare (or point out) the auspicious naksatra or tithi or day or muhūrta and other auspicious matters, eat (śrāddha) food it becomes inexhaustible.

But the requisite qualifications were so exacting that it must have been found almost impossible to secure for a śrāddha brāhmanas altogether free from any of the blemishes set out above from Manu. Gautama (15 15–18) contains long lists[897] of over 50 kinds of brāhmanas that were not to be invited at a śrāddha dinner or at a sacrifice for gods, but Gaut. adds that according to some only those beginning with 'durvāla' (Gaut. in 15. 18) were to be shunned at a śrāddha (but could be invited at a sacrifice for the gods). The persons so to be shunned, according to some who flourished before Gautama (i. e at least before 600 B C) are, a bald man, a man who has deformed nails or has black teeth (naturally), one suffering from white

Vas. quotes a verse [898] as follows: If a brāhmana knowing the Vedas is afflicted with physical defects which (ordinarily) exclude a person from a row of diners, Yama declares that he is irreproachable and that he does sanctify the row of diners. But it must be said that even in modern times emphasis is laid on inviting learned and well-conducted brāhmanas for śrāddha. The idea (expressed by Manu III. 189 and the Padmapurāna) persists that the pitrs enter into and hover round the invited brāhmanas and that the latter are to be looked upon as representing the pitṛs.[899] The Garudapurāna states that Yama allows the departed souls and the pitrs to visit the world of men at the time of śrāddha from the nether regions.

The Visnu Dh. S. (79. 19–21) prescribes that the performer should avoid wrath, should not shed tears and should not do things in a hurry. The Varāhapurāna [900] provides that the performer should not employ twigs for brushing the teeth (but should rinse his mouth twelve times with water), should remain chaste and pure. Āp. Dh. S prescribes [901] that the performer should not eat food from the commencement (from the time he goes out to invite) up to the end of the śrāddha rite. The Kūrma (uttarārdha 22. 8) states that if a person first invites a brāhmana and then foolishly invites another (passing over the first) then he becomes a greater sinner (than the brāhmana who after accepting one invitation promises to dine at another śrāddha) and is born as a worm in human faeces. The Bhavisyapurāṇa [902] provides that honouring gods, pitrs and men and feeding (brāhmanas) should not be done without wearing an upper garment; otherwise the rite will bear no fruit.

About the number of brāhmaṇas to be invited at a śrāddha there were several options and several views. The Āsv. Gr. S. states [903] that at the Pārvana—śrāddha (performed on a parvan day i. e. on Amāvāsyā), the Ābhyudayika śrāddha, the Ekoddista or Kāmya, the larger the number of brāhmanas the greater is the reward, that in no case should a person invite only one brāhmana at a śrāddha meant for all pitrs or he may optionally invite only one brāhmana except at the first śrāddha, that he may invite one, two or three brāhmanas for each of the three paternal ancestors. The Sān. Gr. (IV. 1.2) and Kausītaki Gr III. 14. 1–2 prescribe that one should [904] invite an uneven number of brāhmanas, at least three, to sit down as (representing the) fathers. Gaut. requires [905] 'He shall feed an uneven number of brāhmaṇas, at least nine or as many as he is able (to feed) and that they should be learned in the Veda and endowed with polished speech, good appearance, mature age and good character'. If five were invited two would be for gods and three for pitṛs; if seven, then four for gods and three for pitṛs and so on. Vas. XI. 27 (= Manu III. 125 = Baud. Dh. S. II. 8. 29), Yāj. I. 228, Matsya 17. 13-14, Viṣṇupurāṇa III. 15.14 provide that one must feed two brāhmaṇas at the rite for the gods and three for the manes or one only for each of the two purposes and even a rich man should not go in for a large company. The Padmapurāṇa (Sṛṣṭi 9.98 and 141) says the same thing. So the number of brāhmaṇas to be invited did not depend so much upon the means of the inviter, but upon the point whether the inviter would be able to honour them all properly and with ease. The idea was that at the same time when śrāddha was to be performed two brāhmaṇas should be fed for gods and three for the pitṛs. When only one brāhmaṇa could be invited or was available, Vas. (XI. 30-31) provides that portions of the several foods cooked should be put in a vessel and should be placed at the place where Vaiśvadevika brāhmaṇa would have been seated, then served in a plate and the viśve devāh be invoked and should be contemplated as present and then the food should be thrown into the fire or offered to a Vedic student (as alms) and then śrāddha rite should be continued. Śankha[906] 14.10 provides a similar rule. The result is that if a man can afford to invite only one brāhmaṇa or can secure one only, then that brāhmaṇa is meant for the rite in honour of pitṛs and the offering for the gods is to be cast into fire. Baud. Dh. S. II. 8.30, Manu III. 126, Vas. XI. 28, Kūrma (uttarārdha 22 28) contain the same verse which emphatically states 'A large company destroys these five desiderata, viz the respectful treatment (of those invited), the securing of a proper place (such as one sloping to the south) and time, purity and (the choice of) meritorious brāhmaṇas; therefore one should not desire a large company'[907] The Kūrmapurāṇa (uttarārdha 22.32) insists that an atithi must be fed at a śrāddha or otherwise the śrāddha is not praiseworthy. Though these ancient works insisted upon the avoidance of large preparations and expenses for śrāddhas in honour of a deceased person, there were other smṛtis that favoured lavish distribution of wealth in śrāddhas. For example, Bṛhaspati lays down: '(An heir) should lay aside half of the wealth that comes to him (by inheritance) for the benefit of the deceased owner and should expend it in the monthly, six-monthly and yearly śrāddhas'. The Dāyabhāga XI. 12 approves[908] of this and also quotes Āp. Dh. S. II. 6. 13.3 'On the failure of a sapiṇḍa the teacher of the Veda takes the wealth of the deceased, on failure of the teacher, the pupil takes it and having inherited it he should employ it in the performance of works of charity for the benefit of the deceased' (or he himself may enjoy it). These passages show to what lengths the cult of benefit to the soul of the deceased was carried in India by certain writers. More practical authors such as Haradatta did not relish these extreme views. In several purāṇas such as the Vāyu[908a] and Viṣṇu there are express directions that when a śrāddha is performed at Gayā, it should be on a profuse scale and no stinginess[909] (lit. cheating in money matters) in spending wealth should be shown there; otherwise the performer would not reap the benefit of the performance of śrāddha at that holy place. The Padmapurāṇa appears to inculcate profuse expenditure of wealth in all śrāddhas. The Vāyupurāṇa [910] (82. 26–28) further says that the brāhmaṇas of Gayā are supermen, that when they are gratified (at a śrāddha) the gods together with pitṛs become gratified, that no question should be raised about the family, the character, the learning and the austerities (of the Gayā brāhmaṇas), that by honouring them a man attains liberation, that a man after honouring the brāhmaṇas should proceed according to his resources and strength to the performance of śrāddha, thereby he secures all heavenly desires and obtains the means of Mokṣa. The Skandapurāṇa goes so far as to say that Gayā brāhmaṇas even if they are depraved in their conduct and are backward deserve to be invited at śrāddha and are superior to brāhmaṇas who have mastered the Veda and Vedāṅgas. The Nirṇayasindhu (III. p. 401) notes that, according to the Tristhalīsetu of his grandfather, this provision holds good only in the case of the śrāddha at the Akṣayya Vaṭa in Gayā and nowhere else. In modern times the brāhmaṇas at Gayā used to require the performer of śrāddha while he was in the sacred Phalgu river to make a declaration about his wealth and demanded fees accordingly, thereby carrying to the letter the words of the Vāyupurāṇa. Many people returned from Gayā thoroughly disillusioned and disgusted with the conduct of the brāhmaṇas at Gayā. In the Varāhapurāṇa [911] it is said that two verses were sung by the pitṛs viz 'Would such a blessed and intelligent man be born in our family who will offer piṇḍas (i. e. śrāddha) to us without being stingy about wealth and who would bestow on brāhmaṇas with reference to us (i. e. for our benefit) jewels, clothes, land, costly vehicles and all other kinds of wealth including water, when he has riches enough?' Here lavish expenditure on all śrāddhas (not only at Gayā-śrāddha) appears to be strongly recommended. Devala prevides that on the days of śrauta sacrifices, of the celebration of charitable acts, of śrāddhas on the anniversary of death or on amāvāsyā, on lucky occasions (vṛddhi), on Aṣṭakā days, one should never give a frugal or poor dinner to[911a] the worthy brāhmaṇas invited for dinner.

The words नत्वेवैकं सर्वेषाम् in आश्व. are opposed to मनु III. 125. नारायण gives several meanings of अनाद्ये, viz. आद्य refers to सपिण्डीकरण which is the first of the śrāddhas for a deceased person in which three ancestors are invoked. आद्य may refer to पार्वण which is mentioned first by आश्व. गृ सू; or अनाद्य means अभोजन and so refers to आमश्राद्ध or हिरण्यश्राद्ध; or अनाद्ये means दुर्भिक्षे The words एकैकमेकस्य... त्रींस्त्रीन्वा contradict आश्व गृ II. 5 11–12 'नवावरान् भोजयेत्। अयुजो वा.'

If no brāhmaṇa is available, then the Śrāddhaviveka, Śrāddhatattva and other digests say that effigies of brāhmaṇas made with seven or nine darbhas (except in the case of a performer following the Sāmaveda who is not restricted as to the number of darbhas) should be got ready and śrāddha should be performed and afterwards the fee and other materials may be given later on to other brāhmaṇas[912].

Rules were laid from very ancient times about the method of inviting brāhmaṇas. The Āp. Dh. S. states[912a] that the performer should make a request to the brāhmaṇas on the previous day, that on the day of the śrāddha he should request a second time (saying 'today is the śrāddha day') and then he should address them a third time (with the words 'food is ready, come'). Haradatta on the first of the three sūtras explains that the request should be 'tomorrow there is a śrāddha, you should do me the favour of being in the place of the Āhavanīya fire' i. e. you should partake of the food that will be prepared. Manu III. 187 also says that the invitation should be on the previous day or on the day of the śrāddha itself. The Matsyapurāna[913] and Padma (Srsti-khanda 9.85–88) provide that the person intending to perform a śrāddha should in an humble manner invite the brāhmanas on the previous day or (in the morning of) the day of śrāddha, that he should touch the right knee (of the brāhmana to be invited) with the words 'you are given this invitation by me' and repeat in their hearing the following observance 'you should be free from anger, should be intent on purity (of body and mind) and should abstain from sexual intercourse and I, the performer of śrāddha, shall also act in the same way and that the pitrs in an aerial form wait upon the invited brāhmanas.' The Brhan-nāradīya-purāna states that the invitation should be in the words 'O best men! You should do me a favour and accept the invitation for śrāddha.' It is noteworthy that the Prajāpati-smrti (63) prescribes that one should invite brāhmanas for a śrāddha or sacrifice for gods in the evening of the previous day after uttering the verse 'akrodhanaiḥ &c.'[914] The Skandapurāna VI. 217. 37 says that the performer should address the brāhmana as follows: 'my father (is or will enter) into this your body and so will my grand-father; let him (the grand-father) come with his father and you should strictly observe the vrata' (the rules). The invitation to the brāhmanas representing pitrs is to be given with the sacred thread in the prācīnāvīta form and to those for Vaiśvadevika in the yajñopavīta form. On the question whether the Vaiśvadevika brāhmanas were to be invited first or the brāhmanas for pitrs were to be invited first

The verse निमन्त्रितान् occurs in मनु III. 189 (which reads वायुवच्चानुगच्छन्ति). हेमाद्रि (श्रा. p. 763) quotes the verse दक्षिणं जानुं (but reads श्रावयेत् पैतृकान् बुधः) and स्मृतिच (श्रा) p. 406 quotes both. पद्मपुराण (सृष्टिखण्ड 9. 85–88) has the same verses with some slight variations. Vide हेमाद्रि (on श्रा) p. 1258.

914. अक्रोधनैः शौचपरैरिति गाथामुदीरयन्। सायमामन्त्रयेद्विप्रान् श्राद्धे दैवे च कर्मणि॥ प्रजापति 63. It is therefore likely that the Prajāpati-smrti is much later than the Matsyapurāna or it is possible that the verse अक्रोधनै is an ancient one and only repeated by the मत्स्य. Compare मनु III 192 where we have the words 'अक्रोधना शौचपरा. सततं ब्रह्मचारिण.' नारदपुराण (पूर्वार्ध 28 20) puts the request as 'श्राद्धे क्षणस्तु कर्तव्यः प्रसादश्चेति सत्तम'. This supports the Mit on Yāj I 225.

there is a conflict among smrtis and the medieval digests propose an option (vide Hemādri on śrāddha pp. 1154–1157). Manu III. 205 appears to lay down that the daiva brāhmana should be invited first (daivādyantam tad-īheta). Yama quoted by several digests [915] says that the performer should request in the evening of the previous day brāhmanas with the words 'You should all be free from exertions and should avoid passion and anger for the śrāddha in my house which is to be performed tomorrow,' that the brāhmanas should reply 'let it be so if the night passes happily and without any mishap to us.' The digests (e. g. Śrāddhakriyākaumudī p. 81, Śrāddhatattva p 194 and Nirnayasindhu III. p. 804) say that the verse 'sarvāyāsa &c' may be repeated when the invitation is given on the day previous to the day of śrāddha and the verse 'akrodhanaih' when the invitation is given on the morning of the śrāddha day. The words of invitation differ according to different authorities. For example, according to the Mit. on Yāj I. 225 the words are 'śrāddhe ksanah kriyatām.' Vide Śr. Pr. p. 106 also. Manu III. 187 and 191 show that the words 'nimantrana' and 'āmantrana' are used as synonyms. In the Śrāddhasūtra [916] of Kātyāyana the word 'āmantrana' is used. But Pānini [917] (III. 3 161) apparently makes a difference between the meanings of the two words and the Mahābhāsya explains that invitation is called 'nimantrana' which if rejected (without proper cause) involves a fault or sin, while that invitation which one is free to reject (without incurring blame) is called 'āmantrana.' Therefore, it must be held that the few writers such as Kātyāyana who employ āmantrana use it in a secondary sense. The invitation should be given by a performer himself or by his son, brother or a pupil or a brāhmaṇa, but it should not be given through a person of another varṇa [918] or a woman or a child or person belonging to another gotra nor from a distance (Prajāpati 64). Pracetas provides that a brāhmaṇa performer of śrāddha when giving an invitation should touch the right knee, a kṣatriya inviter the left knee of the invitee, a Vaiśya inviter should hold both feet of the invitee and a śūdra should prostrate himself at the feet of the invitee (vide Śr. Pr. p. 106 and S. K. L. p. 47). The Mārkaṇḍeya (28. 35) states an exception that if, when a śrāddha rite is going on, brāhmaṇas or Vedic students or ascetics come by chance begging for food, the performer should make them pleased by falling at their feet and feed them (i. e. no formal invitation is necessary in these cases). Vide Viṣṇupurāṇa III. 15. 12 for feeding uninvited ascetics. It is provided by Bhṛgu quoted by Hemādri that the brāhmaṇas on accepting the invitation should pronounce the finely-worded and comprehensive Vedic benediction quoted below.[919]

Uśanas [919a] provides that the performer should wash the floor of his house with water, cowdung it and cleanse the vessels on the day previous to the śrāddha and then give an invitation to the brāhmaṇas with the words 'tomorrow I am going to perform śrāddha'. The Varāhapurāṇa and the Kūrma also provide for this and for the washing of the clothes. Manu III. 206 also requires that the spot where śrāddha is to be performed should be clean, secluded, cowdunged and should slope to the south.

mana who has been invited (to a śrāddha dinner) by a faultless performer should not refuse the invitation nor should he, after being invited (and having accepted the invitation), accept a gift of even (uncooked) food from another person. Manu III 190 and Kūrmapurāṇa provide that if a brāhmana after receiving an invitation for a sacrifice to gods or manes according to śāstra directions and after having accepted it violates the appointment, he incurs sin and becomes a hog[921] (in his next birth). This does not apply where he is unable to go on account of illness or other valid reason.

The smṛtis laid down some strict and elaborate rules which were to be observed by the brāhmanas invited for śrāddha and by the performer himself. Many of the rules are applicable to both. Gaut prescribes[922] that the brāhmana who has partaken of śrāddha dinner should remain chaste (i. e. shun sexual intercourse) that whole day, and if he has intercourse with a wife of the śūdra caste he thereby makes his own pitṛs stay in the ordure of that wife. Vas XI. 37 makes this rule applicable both to the performer and the invited brāhmana and as regards wives of all varnas. Manu III. 188 provides that the brāhmana invited to dine at a sacrifice in honour of pitṛs and the performer of the śrāddha should remain controlled (i. e. chaste and free from anger and passion) and should not study the Veda (except japa). Yāj. I. 225 (latter half) briefly puts the matter by saying 'they should be controlled as to their bodies, speech and thoughts'. The Matsyapurāna[923] prescribes that both the performer of śrāddha and the brāhmana invited to dine at it should avoid dining again (after the śrāddha dinner), journey, going in a conveyance, exertions, sexual intercourse, study of the Veda, quarrel and sleeping by day. Similar rules to observe continence are laid down for both on the day of śrāddha if invitation be given on the morning of the day of śrāddha and also on the previous day if invitation be given on the day previous to the śrāddha day. Vide Viṣṇu Dh. S. 69. 2–4. The Mit. on Yāj. I. 79 appears to strike a dissenting note about sexual intercourse with one's wife during the days from the 5th to the 16th; while most other medieval writers such as Hemādri (śr. pp. 1006–7) and Śr. P. p. 111 are opposed to this view. The Śrāddhasūtra[924] of Kātyāyana provides that the performer should, from the time of giving invitation to the time when the brāhmaṇas sip water (i. e. perform ācamana after śrāddha dinner), remain pure, free from anger, hurry, negligence, should speak the truth and should shun a journey, sexual intercourse, hard work and study of the Veda and control speech (should remain mostly silent) and the brāhmaṇas invited should observe the same rules. Auśanasa (Jīv. vol I. pp. 526–527) contains verses very similar in import to Kātyāyana. The Brahmapurāṇa (220. 106–108), Mārkaṇḍeya (28. 31–33) and Anuśāsana 125.24 have identical verses[925] and Vāyu 79. 60–61 are very similar in import. Laghu-Śaṅkha 29, Laghu-Hārīta 75 and Likhita 60 have the same verse requiring the invited brāhmaṇas to avoid eight matters, viz. dining again, journey, carrying loads, Vedic study, sexual intercourse, making gifts, accepting gifts, performing homa, while Prajāpati 92 substitutes the brushing of the teeth (with a twig), tāmbūla, bath after applying oil to the body, and fast for the first four of the above eight. The Anuśāsanaparva (90. 12–13) and Padma (Pātālakhaṇḍa 101. 94–95) also contain a list of actions that should be avoided. Briefly put, the following were the observances for both inviter and invitee, viz. avoidance of sexual intercourse, dining again, falsehood, hurry, vedic study, heavy work, gambling, carrying burdens, giving gifts and acceptance of gifts, theft, journey, sleep by day, quarrels; the performer alone was to abstain from eating tāmbūla, shaving, applying oil to the body, brushing the teeth with a twig; while the brāh-mana invited was (alone) to observe the following, viz. not absenting oneself after accepting an invitation, making no delay when called for dinner (vide Śrāddhakalikā folio 4b and 5a and Pitṛ-bhakti on śrāddha [926]).

Elaborate provisions are made from ancient times about the substances and utensils proper for being used at śrāddha and about those that should not be used therein. Āp. Dh. [927] S. remarks: 'the materials in śrāddha are sesamum, māṣas, rice, yavas (barley), water, roots and fruits; but the pitṛs are extremely gratified by food that is mixed with clarified butter and for a very long time; so also they are gratified by wealth that is obtained lawfully and is bestowed on worthy persons'. Manu III. 267 (= Vāyu 83. 3) is to the same effect as Āp. Dh. S. Yāj. I. 258 is content to say that food which is fit to be offered in sacrifices (haviṣya) should be served. Manu III. 257 explains that food eaten by hermits in the forest, (cow's) milk, soma juice, meat that is not prepared with spices (or that is free from a bad smell), rock salt are by their very nature havis (sacrificial food). According to Gaut. 27. 11 the sacrificial food (havis) comprises boiled rice, food obtained by begging, ground barley (after being baked or fried), grain separated from husk, barley gruel, vegetables, milk, curds, clarified butter, roots, fruits and water. [928] Other smṛtis and digests very much elaborated these brief indications in the early works. The three kinds of wealth (viz. śukla, śabala and kṛṣṇa) and the several lawful or uncondemned means of acquiring wealth have been described already in H. of Dh. vol. II. pp 130 ff. The Mārkaṇḍeya (29. 14–15) condemns the use in śrāddhas of wealth that is obtained by taking bribes or from a patita (one guilty of a grave sin), that springs from bride-price or that is declared to be unlawful or is obtained by saying to another 'give me for the sake of a śrāddha to be offered to my father' (q. by Sm. śrāddha p. 412). The Skandapurāṇa emphasizes that at a śrāddha purity (śuddhi) must be specially secured in seven matters viz. the body (of the performer), the materials, the wife, the place (where śrāddha is to be performed), the mind, the mantras and brāhmaṇas.[929] Manu III. 235 (=Vas. 11.35) states: three are the sanctifying things in a śrāddha, viz. a daughter's son, a Nepal blanket and sesamum grains and three are commended in śrāddha viz. cleanliness, freedom from anger and absence of hurry.[929a] Pracetas mentions several kinds of corn that are commended as food in śrāddha. Manu III. 255 summarises that in śrāddha the riches (i. e. the most important matters) are afternoon, darbhas, proper cleansing of the place (or house) for śrāddha, sesame, generous expense (on food &c.), seasoning food, eminent brāhmaṇas.

The Mārkaṇḍeya-purāṇa says that several kinds of corn-yielding plants (some due to tillage in villages and some growing wild) were produced by Brahmā when he milked the earth for famished people, while Brahmavaivarta (q. by Hemādri on śrāddha p. 537) affirms that when a few particles fell down on the earth while Indra drank Soma, from them arose such corn as śyāmāka, wheat, yava, mudga and red paddy and as they were produced from soma they were like nectar to the pitṛs and food prepared from these should be offered to pitṛs. The Mārkaṇḍeya speaks of seven kinds of grāmya corn and seven kinds of wild (āraṇya) corn. Prajāpati 119 recommends the use of eight kinds of corn, viz. nīvāra, māṣa, mudga, wheat, paddy, yava, grain and sesamum. The Matsya (q by Hemādri on śrāddha p. 538) narrates that when the Sun drank nectar some drops fell down from which arose the several kinds of 929. शरीरद्रव्यदाराभूमनोमन्त्रद्विजन्मनाम्। शुद्धिः सप्तसु विज्ञेया श्राद्धकाले विशेषतः॥ स्कन्द VII. 1. 205. 17.

929 a. त्रीणि श्राद्धे पवित्राणि दौहित्रः कुतपस्तिलाः। त्रीणि चात्र प्रशंसन्ति शौचमक्रोधमत्वराम्॥ मनु. III. 235, वसिष्ठधर्मसूत्र XI. 35. This very verse (the first half) is quoted in several Purāṇas as in विष्णुपुराण III. 15 52, भविष्य I. 185. 20, मार्कण्डेय 28. 64, स्कन्दपुराण (प्रभासखण्ड 205. 13). The पद्मपुराण (सृष्टिखण्ड 47. 278-279) has the whole verse but reads श्राद्धे त्रीणि.. दौहित्रं and सत्यमक्रोधमत्वरा It appears clear from the preceding verse that in Manu at least दौहित्र means daughter's son. But in the स्कन्द (प्रभासखण्ड 205 14 ff) several meanings of दौहित्र are given such as 'a vessel made of the horn on the nose of the rhinoceros' or 'clarified butter made from the milk of a cow of variegated colour.' The word कुतप also has nine meanings acc. to a Smṛti text quoted by Aparārka p. 474 'ब्राह्मणः कम्बलो गावः सूर्योऽग्निरतिथिरेव च। तिला दर्भाश्च कालश्च नवैते कुतपाः स्मृताः॥'; vide note 847 for कुतप paddy, mudga, sugarcane and that therefore sugar is sacred and may be employed in sacrifices to gods and manes. The Mārkandeya [930] mentions several kinds of corn that may be employed for śrāddha food. The Brahma-purāna 220. 154–155, Vāyu 82. 3, Visnupurāna, III. 16. 5–6, Visnu, Dh. S, [931] Brahmānda II. 7. 143–152 and III 14. contain similar lists of different kinds of corn that may be used in śrāddhas. The Vāyupurāna (80. 42–48) mentions various desirable eatables prepared from corn of various kinds, sugar and clarified butter and milk.[932]

Certain kinds of corn and cereals were forbidden. For example, the Matsya-purāna and Padma (Srstikhanda, chap. 9 62–66)[933] declare that masūra, linseed, nispāva, rājamāsa, kusumbhika, kodrava, udāra, gram, kapittha, madhūka and linseed are forbidden Visnu Dh S. 79. 18 provides that the performer should avoid the bean called rājamāsa, masūra, stale food and salt manufactured from seawater. The Sat-trimśanmata [934] forbids the use in śrāddha of all kinds of cereals covered with dark husk except sesamum, mudga and māsa.

From considerations of space this matter cannot be pursued further. The Mit. on Yāj. I. 240 puts together a long list of allowed and of condemned kinds of grains and other articles.

What milk should be ordinarily partaken of and what should be avoided has been dealt with in H. of Dh. vol. II pp. 782–783. A few words are added here. Manu III. 271 and Yāj. I. 258 provide that if cow's milk or rice cooked therein (called pāyasa) is offered in śrāddha the pitṛs are satisfied for one year. Vāyu 78. 17, Brahma[935] 220 169, Mārkaṇḍeya 32 17–19, Viṣṇupurāṇa III.16.11 forbid the use in a śrāddha of the milk of a she-buffalo, of a camarī or female deer, of sheep or ewes, of she camels, of human females and of all animals with one hoof and the use of the curds and clarified butter prepared from such milk. But ghee prepared from buffalo milk was allowed by Sumantu and Devala (q. by Hemādri on śrāddha p. 572).

The Mārkaṇḍeyapurāṇa[936] (29.15–17), Vāyu (78.16) and Viṣṇupurāṇa (III 16 10) lay down that the water to be employed in śrāddha must not have a bad smell, must not be foamy, or taken from a puddle or a small reservoir which cannot slake the thirst of a cow, must not have been brought overnight, must not be taken from a reservoir not dedicated to all or from a trough or the like meant for beasts.

Several rules are laid down about the fruits, roots and vegetables recommended or condemned for use in śrāddha. For example, the Brahma-purāṇa (220.156–158) enumerates several kinds of fruits such as mangoes, bilva, pomegranate, cocoanut, dates, grapes, as fit to be given in śrāddha. Vide Śaṅkha 14 22–23 also. Vāyu (78 11–15) states[936a] that garlic, leeks and onions, other things that are of bad odour or taste and all exudation from trees not permitted by the Veda and sa gathered from saltish earth, should be avoided in śrāddha. Th Visnudharmasūtra[937] (79.17) contains a long list of fruits bulbs and vegetables that were not to be employed in śrāddha. The Rāmāyāna states[938] that Rāma when an exile in the Daṇḍakā forest gratified his pitrs by offering the fruits of inguda, badara, and bilva trees and generalises that deities are offered that food which is partaken of by a person (who is a devotee of that deity). From considerations of space detailed references to the smrtis and purānas are passed over. The Smṛtyarthasāra pp. 52–53, Śrāddhaviveka (pp. 43–47) of Rudradhara and other digests collect in one place the foods, vegetables, fruits and roots that are allowed to be offered in śrāddha and that are condemned in śrāddha. Manufactured salt was forbidden, but natural salt from a lake (called saindhava) was allowed. Salt was not to be served directly (as Visnudharmasūtra 79. 12 says) but when put in while cooking vegetables it was not prohibited. There was a difference of opinion about the employment of asafœtida (vide Hemādri on Śrāddha p. 565). The Viṣṇudharmasūtra (79. 5–6) provides that flowers having a strong (or nasty) odour or no odour at all, the blossoms of thorny plants and red flowers should not be given, but one may give white and sweet-smelling flowers even though they are taken from thorny plants and flowers though red in colour may be taken from aquatic plants. Śankha (14. 15–16) is to the same effect (q. by Hemādri p 684). Vāyu (75. 33–35) is to the same effect and adds that the flowers called Japā, Bhaṇḍi, Rūpikā (of arka plant), Kurantakā should be avoided in śrāddha. The Brahmapurāna (220. 162–165) specifies the several kinds of flowers that may be offered in śrāddha such as jāti, campaka, mallikā, mango blossom, tulasī, tagara, ketakī and various kinds of lotuses (white, blue and red &c.). The Smṛtyarthasāra includes tulasī among things to be avoided in śrāddha. The Sm. C. notes this and remarks that it is not clear on what this dictum prohibiting tulasī is based[938a].

Kuśas are required in śrāddha. Vide H. of Dh. vol. II. p. 657 for general remarks on kuśas. A few words may be added here. The Śat. Br. VII. 2. 3. 2 states that the waters that loathed Vṛtra went out to waterless deserts and became bushes of darbhas[939]. Similarly, Āśv. Gr. III. 2.2 summarizes a Brāhmaṇa text stating that darbhas are the essence of waters and herbs (apām vā eṣa oṣadhīnām raso yad-darbhāḥ). Prajāpati (verse 98)[939a] provides that darbhas should be gathered from a pure spot in the morning by a brāhmaṇa, should have mantras repeated over them, should be greenish in colour, should be as long as a cow's ear and then they are holy. The Gobhila gr. (I. 5. 16-17) states 'the barhis consists of kuśa grass cut off at the points at which the blades diverge from the main stalk and that the blades should be cut off near the roots at the rites meant for the Fathers'. Dakṣa (II. 33 and 35) provides that the second part of the day (divided into eight parts) is the proper time for collecting fuelsticks, flowers and kuśas. The Gobhilasmṛti (I. 20-21) says[940] that the darbhas used in sacrifices are greenish, those to be used in Pākayajñas should be yellowish, those in rites for the pitṛs must be taken out from the roots and those that are to be used in Vaiśvadeva should be dark-pale, and that greenish darbhas together with ends uncut, that are smooth and well nourished, one aratni in length and touched with that part of the hand called pitṛtīrtha are pure. The Padmapurāṇa (Sṛṣṭikhaṇḍa 11.92) and Skanda VII.1. 205.16 state that kuśas and black sesamum spring from the body of Viṣṇu and the Viṣṇudharmottara I. 139.12 says that tilas and darbhas sprang from the perspiration and hair of Viṣṇu in the Boar incarnation. The Matsya (22.89) says the same.

The Garuḍa[941] (Pretakhaṇḍa 2.21–22) states that all the three gods dwell in kuśa grass viz. Brahmā at its root, Viṣṇu in the middle and Saṅkara at the end and that brāhmaṇas, mantras, kuśas, fire, tulasī leaf—these do not become nirmālya (stale and so unfit to be used again) even when the same are employed again and again. But an exception is made by Gobhila[942] that those darbhas which are spread on the ground for placing piṇḍas on them or that are used in tarpaṇa and those that are held in the hand while a man is answering the calls of nature should be given up (and not used again). The Viṣṇu Dh. S. 79.2 and Vāyu 75.41 provide that if kuśas are not available, kāśa grass or Dūrvā may be substituted. The Skandapurāṇa VII (Prabhāsakhaṇḍa) part 1.206.17 says that straight darbhas are used in giving gifts, at baths, in japa, homa, dinner and worship of gods, but they are double-folded when used in rites for pitṛs. The Skanda VII. 1 205.16 provides that the top of darbhas is for divine rites, while darbha with the root and tip is meant for paitṛka rites. This is based on the Śat. Br II 4. 2.17 which states that the top of the darbha belongs to gods, the middle to men and the root part to the fathers.

Great importance was attached to the use of tila (sesamum) in śrāddha. The Jaiminigṛhya II.1 states that the whole house should have sesamum grains scattered about in it. Baud Dh. S II. 8 8 provides that when the invited brāhmaṇas come they should be given water mixed with sesame. The Baud. gṛ. II. 11.64 provides that sesamum grains are holy in śrāddha for making gifts of them or as part of food or for being mixed in water. The Prajāpatismṛti speaks[943] of four kinds of tilas viz. white, black, very black and jartilas and states that each succeeding one gives greater gratification to the pitṛs than each preceding one. The Tai. S. V. 4.3.2 refers to jartilas and Jai. X. 8.7 holds a discussion thereon. The Nāradapurāṇa (pūrvārdha 28 36)[944] provides that the performer of śrāddha should scatter tilas in the midst of the brāhmaṇas invited and at the doors with the mantra 'apahatā' (may the asuras and evil spirits that sit on the altar be struck and run away). Yaj. I. 234 also recommends this mantra (which is Vāj. S. II. 29). The Kūrma-purāṇa (II. 22. 18) states that sesame should be scattered all round and a goat should be tied near the spot, since śrāddha polluted by asuras becomes purified by sesame and a goat. The Viṣṇupurāṇa (III. 16.14) prescribes that by tilas scattered on the ground one should ward off evil spirits (Yātudhāna). The Garuḍapurāṇa[945] (Pretakhaṇḍa 2. 16) makes Śrīkṛṣṇa say 'tilas have sprung from the perspiration on my body and are holy; asuras, dānavas and daityas run away on account of tilas.' The Anuśāsana-parva (90.22) says that yātudhānas and goblins snatch away the haviṣ when the śrāddha is offered without tilas. The Kṛtyaratnākara (p. 540) quotes a verse as follows: 'he who applies as unguent tilas, who bathes with water in which tilas are mixed, offers tilas into fire, makes gifts of tilas, eats tilas and who grows tilas—these six never sink (i. e. are not unlucky nor in trouble).

A great deal is said about the vessels to be used in offering arghya (water for honouring the invited brāhmaṇas and piṇḍas), for cooking śrāddha food, for dining and for serving. The Śrāddhasūtra of Kātyāyana[946] provides that the arghya water should be taken in camasas (cups) made of sacrificial trees (such as palāśa, aśvattha, udumbara) or in vessels of gold, silver, copper, rhinoceros horn, precious stones whichever may be available, or in a vessel made of leaves. The Visnu Dh. S. (79. 14–15) provides that the performer should employ metallic vessels, particularly vessels made of silver. The Mārkandeya (31.65) and Vāyu (74.3) state that in a vessel of silver the (ancient) pitrs milked svadhā and hence a silver vessel is highly desired by pitrs and brings delight to them. Yāj. I. 237 also specially recommends silver vessels. The Vāyu (74. 1–2), Matsya (17. 19–22), Brahmānda (Upodghāta 11. 1–2) and Padma (Srstikhanda 9. 147–150) state that vessels of gold, silver or copper are the (proper) ones for pitrs; that even the talk about silver or the sight or gift of silver gives inexhaustible results to pitrs in heaven, that vessels to be used for arghya, for pinda and for the food to be offered should be preferably of silver and that in rites for gods a silver vessel is not auspicious. Atri (q by Sm. C. II. p. 464) says that in rites for the gods and pitrs, vessels of gold and silver should be respectively employed and in default of these vessels of other metals (such as copper, bell-metal) should be used (as stated by Visnu Dh. S. 79.22 and 24). The Padma provides[947] that the vessels may be of sacrificial wood or of palāśa or of silver or made from a sea product (such as conch shell) and that since silver was produced from the eye of Śiva, it is a great favourite with pitrs. Prajāpati (111) provides that the three pindas should be cast in a vessel of gold or silver or copper or bell-metal or of rhinoceros horn but not in earthenware or a wooden vessel, that (verse 112) the cooking vessels should be of copper or of any metal, but an earthen vessel baked in fire and immersed in water is the best (for cooking), that food cooked in an iron vessel is like crow's flesh, that (115) the vessels to be used for taking food by the brāhmanas should be made of gold, silver or of an alloy of five metals or they may take their food in patrāvali (i. e. leaves stitched together); vide also Matsya

17. 19–20. The use of plantain leaves for bhojana is forbidden[947a] by some. Brāhmaṇas should not take ācamana from a vessel made of bell-metal, kharpara, śukra, stone, clay, wood, fruit or iron. Ācamana should be performed with water from a copper vessel. Atri (153) prescribes that no food should be served from an iron vessel; if so served the food is like ordure to the diner and the server goes to hell. The vessels for cooking śrāddha food are to be made of gold, silver, copper or bell-metal or even of clay provided the last are new ones and strong (well baked) but never of iron. Vide Sr. Pr. p. 155 for details. The Visnu Dh S. (79. 24) quotes a verse which says that food offered in vessels of gold, silver, copper, rhinoceros horn or of phalgu wood becomes inexhaustible.

Visnu Dh. S 79. 11 provides that for unguents (anulepana) to be applied to the bodies of the invited brāhmaṇas, sandal-wood, saffron, camphor, aguru, padmaka may be used. The Brahmapurāna (220. 165–166) mentions kustha, jaṭā-māṅsī, nutmeg, uśīra, mustā and some others as proper perfumed articles to be used at śrāddhas.

It has already been seen at pp. 413–14 what kinds of food were recommended or condemned for śrāddha. The Matsyapurāna [948] states that food containing milk and curds and clarified butter from cow's milk mixed with sugar gives satisfaction to all pitṛs for one month and that whatever food, whether cow's milk or ghee or rice cooked in milk, is mixed with honey, yields inexhaustible results. The Brahmapurāna also (220. 182–184) provides that such eatables as are sweet and oily and are slightly sour and pungent should be served in śrāddha and one should shun eatables that are very sour or very saltish or very pungent, since they are āsura (fit for asuras). Great emphasis was laid on serving preparations of food made from māṣa beans. The Auśanasa[949]—smrti pronounces the threat that the brāhmana, who, when dining at śrāddha, does not eat māsa food, becomes a beast for twenty-one births after death. The Sm. C. quotes a smrti text saying that a śrāddha in which no māsa preparation is offered is as good as not performed.

The greatest divergence has prevailed about the employment of flesh at śrāddhas among writers from the earliest times. The subject of flesh-eating in general has been discussed at great length in the History of Dharmaśāstra, vol. II. pp 772–782. A few remarks about flesh in relation to śrāddha will not be out of place here. The Āp. Dh. S. prescribes[950] that the obligatory śrāddha (to be performed every month) must contain food mixed with fat, the best course (for supplying fat) is to employ clarified butter and flesh; on failure of these two, sesamum oil and vegetables may be employed. The same sūtra also provides[951] that the pitrs are gratified for a year by the offering of cow's flesh in a śrāddha, that by the flesh of a buffalo the gratification of pitrs extends to more than a year, that this rule extends to the flesh of wild animals (like hares) and village (or domesticated) animals (like goats) that are declared to be fit for being sacrificed, that the gratification of pitrs extends to endless time if the flesh of a rhinoceros is offered to brāhmanas seated on rhinoceros skin, so also by the flesh of the fish called 'śatabali' and the flesh of a Vārddhrinasa. Vas. XI. 34 contains the following remarkable verse: 'an ascetic, when invited in a rite for the gods or pitṛs, who avoids (does not partake of) flesh, dwells in Hell for as many years as the number of hair (on the body of the animal whose flesh he avoids).' Even the Visnudharmottarapurāna (I. 140. 49–50) emphatically asserts that he who does not partake of flesh-food in a row of diners at a śrāddha which has been properly employed goes to hell Manu V. 35 and Kūrma II. 17.40 contain a similar verse applicable to all those who are invited as brāhmanas at a śrāddha The Kūrmapurāna II. 22.75 provides that the brāhmana who is employed for the performance of a śrāddha and does not eat flesh offered therein becomes a beast for 21 births. Manu III. 257 states that the following are said to be proper offerings in a śrāddha by their very nature viz. food (prepared from nīvāra grain and the like) fit for a forest hermit, milk, soma juice, flesh that does not emit foul smell and unmanufactured salt. An ascetic was ordinarly required not to partake of flesh; but Vasistha insisted on his partaking of it when invited at a śrāddha.

Manu III. 267–272, Yāj. I. 258–260, Visnu Dh. S. 80 1 ff, Anuśāsanaparva chap. 88, the Śrāddhasūtra of Kātyāyan (kandikās. 7–8), Kūrmapurāna II. 20. 40–42, 29. 2–8, Vāyu 83. 3–9, Matsya 17. 31–35, Visnupurāna III. 16.1–3, Padmapurāna (Srsti 9. 158–164), Brahmapurāna 220 23–29, Visnudharmottara I 141.42–47 state at length the periods of time for which pitrs are gratified by the flesh of certain animals being served at śrāddha. The verses of Yāj being the shortest in all these works are given below. Yāj.[952] states; Pitrs are gratified by the serving of sacrificial food (such as rice, fruits, roots &c) for a month, for a year by (cows's milk or) rice cooked in cow's milk, for 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11 months respectively by the flesh of fishes (pāthīna), of (red coloured) deer, of ram, of a bird (such as a tittri), of a goat, of a spotted deer, of a dark-coloured deer, of a ruru deer, of a wild boar, of a hare the offering of rhinoceros flesh, of a fish called Mahāśalka, of honey, of food fit for hermits (wild corn such as nīvāra), the flesh of a red goat, of Mahāśāka (i. e. Kālaśāka), and the flesh of Vārdhrīnasa—these secure inexhaustible fruit There is some divergence of views among the several works. For example, Manu III. 267 and 271, Kātyāyana (in śrāddhasūtra 7) appear to hold that by offering food prepared from village corn (such as rice, māsa & c.) or wild eatables (such as nīvāra or fruits and roots) the gratification is only for one month and the flesh of Vārdhrīṇasa produces gratification for twelve years only (and not for all time). Visnu Dh. S. 80.10 and Manu III. 270 bring in buffalo flesh and tortoise flesh as giving gratification for ten and eleven month respectively. Hemādri (on śrāddha p 590)[953] is careful to point out that these words about the duration of time are not to be taken literally but what is really intended is to convey greater and greater gratification of the pitrs according to the kind of flesh offered. Pulastya quoted by the Mit and Aparārka p. 555 provides that a brāhmana should generally or mainly offer at a śrāddha hermit's food, a ksatriya or a vaiśya should offer flesh, a śūdra should offer honey and all varnas may offer anything else (except these three) which is not forbidden.[954] Whoever may be the offerer, the eater at a śrāddha dinner was to be a brāhmana alone and so it follows that brāhmanas invited to a śrāddha by a ksatriya or vaiśya had to eat flesh. Yet it is remarkable that even the Mitāksarā and the Kalpataru written about 1100–1120 A. D. do not expressly say that in the Kali age flesh-eating at śrāddha is totally prohibited at least for brāhmanas. It has been shown already (H. of Dh. vol III. pp. 775–776) that even when animal sacrifices were the order of the day in the Ṛgveda and the Brāhmanas there was an undercurrent of thought that the offerings of fuel-sticks or of boiled rice when made with heart-felt devotion to the gods were as good as flesh offerings for securing their favour. In course of time that conception grew stronger and stronger, so much so that Manu (V. 27–44 and V. 46–47) and Vasistha appear to be in two minds (vide H. of Dh. vol. II pp. 778–780). Gradually the offering of flesh in Madhuparka and in śrāddhas came to be totally condemned in works of the 12th and 13th centuries and onwards as a matter prohibited in the Kali age (Varātithipitṛbhyaśca paśūpākaranakriyā). (Vide H. of Dh. vol. III pp. 945–946 and p. 964). Now except among the brāhmanas (in Northern India) who have no objection to include fish in diet as permissible to them no brāhmana offers flesh in śrāddha. The usage of Northern India would be in accordance with the view set out in Bṛhannāradīya purāna that one should offer honey, flesh and other things according to the usage of the country, as explained by the Pṛthvīcandrodaya.

Manu (V.11–18) contains long lists of animals, birds and fishes whose flesh was not to be eaten even by those who were flesh-eaters.

If a person is destitute, some of the Purānas such as the Visnu (III. 4.24–30) and the Varāha (13.53–58) mercifully provide in identical[955] verses that instead of entertaining brāhmanas with a sumptuous dinner or flesh the poor man may offer only uncooked corn, or some vegetables growing wildly or some slight daksinā if he cannot offer even uncooked food or vegetables, or he may offer a few grains of sesamum (7 or 8) to a brāhmana with water in his folded hands, or grass to a cow enough for one day and if he cannot afford even any one of these, then he may repair to a thicket of trees, raise his arms so that his armpits are exposed and loudly address the guardians of the worlds such as the Sun in the following words: 'I have neither wealth nor money nor anything else fit to be offered by way of śrāddha; I bow to my pitrs; may the pitrs be satisfied by my devotion; I have stretched these arms in space!' (lit. the path of the wind).

The पृथ्वी॰ (folio 56 b) notes 'धान्यं मासानित्यत्र वन्यं शाकमिति वराहपुराणीयः पाठ '; in the printed विष्णुपुराण the reading is not धान्यं मासं, but the निर्णयसिन्धु had these words and it appears that the text was tampered with in modern times.

It is now time to describe the procedure of the Pārvaṇa-śrāddha[955a] which is the pattern or norm (prakṛti) of the other śrāddhas[956] (even including the Aṣṭakās). Here one meets with great divergences of views even from the times of the sūtras up to modern times. Though the main items and stages in the rite of śrāddha are generally the same, there is variation in the mantras, the details and sometimes in the order of the several items. Kātyāyana lays down that every man has to follow his own sūtra as to the use of the word 'svāhā' or the words 'svadhā namaḥ', as to wearing the sacred thread in the yajñopavīta or prācīnāvīta way and as to the number of āhutis[957].

It would be very interesting first to find out the vestiges of the sacrifice to the fathers in the most ancient Vedic texts. The Tai. S. (I. 8 5. 1–2) deals[958] with the Mahāpitṛyajña per-

This for thee, O father and for those who come after thee (i. e. for thy descendants); this for thee, O grandfather, great-grandfather and for those who come after thee; do, ye Pitrs rejoice in your portions. May we gladden thee, O Indra, that castest thy glance at us, come forth now with full chariot seat; being praised (by us) thou goest to places desired by you. Yoke, O Indra, thy two bay steeds. They (pitarah) have eaten, they have rejoiced, the dear ones have dispelled (evil); the radiant sages have been praised with newest hymn, Yoke, O Indra, thy two bay steeds. Then reach ye the pitrs that well know you (or everything) and that revel in the company of Yama."

In the Tai.[959] Br. I. 2 10 the Pindapitryajña is dealt with at some length. In the note below the important passages are set forth leaving out the legends, repetitions and matters not relevant to our purpose: "Therefore the rite (called pinda-pitryajña) is performed the day previous (to the Darśesṭi).

He says 'to Soma drunk by the pitrs, svadhā! Adoration!' He says 'to Agni, the carrier of kavya, svadhā! Adoration! (Thereby) he pleases the fire that pertains to the pitrs. He offers (into fire) three oblations; he puts down (on the darbhas spread on the ground) three pindas. (These) thus come to six in number. Six indeed are the seasons. He (thereby) pleases the seasons The seasons are indeed the shining (or divine) pitrs......The darbha grass is cut with one stroke; the pitrs have as it were (passed away) once for ever. He puts down thrice (the pindas) The pitṛs are indeed in the third world from here. He (thereby) pleases them. He (the performer) turns his face away (to the north from the south), for the Fathers are shy. He remains with his face turned away till the steam (of the boiled rice of the piṇḍas) ceases to rise, for the Fathers have the steam of rice as their share; he should simply smell (the piṇḍas). That as if does not amount to eating or non-eating. The pitṛs when departing (from the śrāddha rite) take away or grant a valiant son. He cuts off the fringe (of a garment to place it on the piṇḍas), for the share of Fathers is taking away (what is offered). He (thereby) allots their proper share to the pitrs (and dismisses them). When (the performer) is in the latter part of life (i e. over 50 years of age) he cuts off hair (from his chest instead of presenting a daśā) At that time he is nearer to the pitrs (when above 50 years of age). He offers adoration, because adoration (namaskāra) is dear to the pitrs. Adoration to you, O Fathers, for vigour; adoration to you, O fathers, for life, adoration to you, O fathers, for svadhā, adoration to you, O fathers, for ardour; adoration, O fathers, for the terrible! O fathers! here is adoration to you. This (piṇḍapitryajña) is indeed a sacrifice of men (i e. sacrifice to departed men) and other sacrifices belong to the gods" In the Tai Br. I, 4 10 the Pitryajña performed in sākamedha is praised (in 2) and further on it is said that Ṛtus (seasons) are pitrs and they offered pitryajña to Prajāpati, their father. This passage supports the provision made in Manu and some of the digests that the Ṛtus are to be identified with pitrs and obeisance is to be made to them.[960]

The Śat. Br. (II. 4. 2) contains the following somewhat fuller account of the Piṇḍa-pitṛyajña, omitting legendary or other irrelevant matters —When the moon is not seen either in the east or in the west, then he (the performer of the Darśa sacrifice) presents food to the Fathers in each month ...... He presents it in the afternoon. The forenoon indeed belongs to the gods; the midday to men; and the afternoon to the Fathers; therefore he presents (food to the Fathers) in the afternoon. While seated behind the Gārhapatya fire with his face turned towards the south and the sacred thread on his right shoulder he takes that material (for the offering from the cart). Thereupon he rises from thence and threshes the rice while standing north of the Dakṣiṇa fire and facing the south. Only once does he clean the rice, for it is once for all that the fathers have passed away. He then boils it. While it stands on (the Dakṣiṇa fire) he pours some clarified butter on it. After removing it (from the fire) he offers to the gods two oblations in the fire ...... Here he is engaged in a sacrifice to the Fathers; hence he thereby propitiates the gods and being permitted by the gods, he presents that food to the Fathers. He offers to both Agni and Soma .. He offers with the formula 'To Agni, the carrier of kavya (what is offered to the Manes), svāhā!', 'To Soma accompanied by the Fathers, svāhā!' (Vāj S. II 29). He then puts the pot-ladle (mekṣaṇa) on the fire, that being in lieu of the Sviṣṭakṛt. Thereafter he draws (with the sphya, the wooden sword) one line south of the Dakṣiṇa fire, that being in lieu of the altar. He then lays down a firebrand at the further (south) end of the line. For, were he to present that food to the Fathers without having laid down a firebrand, the Asuras and Rākṣasas would certainly tamper with it. ... He lays it down with the text 'whatsoever Asuras roam about being attracted by the svadhā (offering to Fathers), assuming various shapes, be they large-bodied or small-bodied, may Agni expel them from this world (Vāj S. II 30) ... He then takes the water jar and makes the Fathers wash (their hands) merely saying 'N. N., wash thyself' (naming) the sacrificer's father; 'N. N. wash thyself (naming the sacrificer's) grandfather; 'N. N., wash thyself offered to the manes, while it is doubtful whether in Ṛg X. 16. 10 the word पितृयज्ञ means the same thing But as the verse that immediately follows (Ṛg. X. 16 11) mentions pitṛs in the plural, it looks as if the meaning of पितृयज्ञ being well known was used in a secondary sense in Ṛg. X. 16.10.

(naming) the sacrificer's great-grandfather. As one would pour out water (for a guest) when he is about to take food, so in this case. Now those (stalks of sacrificial grass) are severed with one stroke and cut off near the root; the top belongs to the gods, the middle part to men and the root part (of darbhas) to the fathers. Therefore they are cut off near the roots ...... He spreads them along with the line with their tops towards the south. Thereon he presents (to the fathers the three round cakes of rice). He presents thus :—for the gods they offer thus for men they ladle out; and in the case of the fathers they do in this very way; therefore he presents (the cakes to the fathers) thus With 'N. N., this for thee !' he presents one cake to the sacrificer's father. Some add 'for those that come after thee', but let him not say this, since he himself is one of those to whom it would be offered in common. Let him therefore merely say 'N. N., this for thee !' as to the sacrificer's father; 'N. N., this for thee' as to his grandfather; 'N N., this for thee' as to his great-grandfather He then mutters 'Here, O fathers, regale yourselves; like bulls come hither each to his own share !' (Vāj. S. II. 31). Whereby he says 'Eat each his own share'. He then turns round to the left so as to face the opposite (north) side; for the fathers are far away from men; and thereby he also is far away (from the fathers). 'Let him remain (standing with bated breath) until his breath fail' say some; 'for thus far extends the vital energy'. However, having remained so far a moment—he again turns round (to the right) and mutters 'the Fathers have regaled themselves; like bulls they have come each to his own share' (Vāj. S. II. 31); whereby what he says is 'they have eaten each his own share'. Thereupon he takes the water jar and makes them wash themselves (by pouring water on the piṇḍas), merely saying 'N. N., wash thyself' (naming) the sacrificer's father; 'N. N. wash thyself' (naming) his grandfather; 'N. N., wash thyself' (naming) his paternal great-grandfather. Even as one would pour out (water for a guest). When he has taken his meal, so it is here. He then pulls down the tuck (of the sacrificer's garment) and performs obeisance. The tuck is sacred to the Fathers; therefore he performs obeisance to them after pulling down the tuck. ... Six times he performs obeisance, for there are six seasons and the fathers are the seasons. He mutters 'Give us houses, O fathers', for the fathers are the rulers of houses; and this is the prayer for blessing at this sacrificial performance. After the pindas have been put back (in a dish) the sacrificer smells at (the rice); this (smelling) being the sacrificer's share. The stalks of darbha cut with one stroke he puts on the fire; and he also throws away the firebrand on to the fire.[960a]

It will be noticed that many of the fundamental conceptions of a pārvana-śrāddha are very clearly brought out in the Śat. Br. Wearing the sacred thread on the right shoulder, afternoon as the proper time, cleansing the paddy only once, boiling the rice on the Daksina fire, offering into the same fire two oblations to the gods first, the two formulas of presentation to Agni Kavyavāhana and to Soma Pitrmat, drawing a line or furrow to the south of the Daksina fire, laying down a firebrand, making the three paternal ancestors wash (avanejana),[961] darbha grass severed from near the root, spreading the darbhas on the line or furrow and offering three pindas to the three ancestors to regale themselves, turning away from the pindas for a moment and then resuming his position and saying that the ancestors have regaled themselves, offering water for washing (pratayavanejana), pulling down the tuck and performing obeisance six times (and identifying the Fathers with seasons) and praying to the Fathers to bestow houses, smelling the boiled rice, throwing the darbhas and firebrand into the fire—these are the principal matters even now in the Pārvana-śrāddha performed by students of the Śukla Yajurveda, although several other details (such as the introduction of the mother's paternal ancestors) and some mantras are added. The Kātyāyana Śr. IV. 1. closely follows the Śat. Br., but adds certain details viz. he folds his hands and repeats the six mantras (Vāj. S. II. 32 'namo vah pitaro rasāya' &c) throwing three threads on each pinda with the mantra 'etadvah' (Vāj. S. II. 32) or the woollen fringe of a garment or hair from the chest of the sacrificer when he is beyond fifty years of age, sprinkling water on the pindas or on the ground near them with (Vāj. S II. 34)[962].

The other samhitās also contain identical mantras. For example, the Vāj. S. II. 29-34 [963] are mantras most of which are

This he loosens or pulls out at this stage It will have been noticed that the Sat. Br. in dealing with Pindapitryajña employs Vāj. S II. 29 (except 'apahatā asurā raksāmsi vedisadah'), 30, 31.

monthly śrāddha (māsi-śrāddha) is the prakṛti of Aṣṭakā and other śrāddhas in which three ancestors are to be invoked. It is as follows· Now then at a Pārvana-śrāddha, or at a śrāddha celebrated for securing some desired object, or at an Ābhyudayika-śrāddha or at an Ekoddiṣṭaśrāddha, the performer causes to sit down brāhmaṇas who are endowed with learning, moral character and proper conduct or who are endowed with (at least) one (of these three characteristics), who have been invited already in proper time, who have taken a bath, whose feet are washed (by the performer) and who have sipped water (taken ācamana), as representatives of (or equal to) the Fathers, with their faces turned to the north, one for each of the Fathers, or two for each or three for each. The larger the number of brāhmaṇas invited the greater is the fruit or reward. But in no case (should he invite) only one for all (the Fathers), or he may invite only one brāhmaṇa except at the first śrāddha[967]. By the exposition of the Piṇḍapitṛyajña the rules for the pārvana-śrāddha have been declared. Having given water (into the hands of the invited brāhmaṇa or brāhmaṇas after they sit down) and double-folded darbha blades as a seat (on which the darbhas are to be kept), having again given water to them and having poured water into three vessels of metal (silver &c.), of stone and of earthenware or into three vessels made of the same substance (out of these three) which are covered over with darbha blades and having recited (over the water in the vessels) the verse 'śanno &c.' (Ṛg X. 9.4)[968] the performer puts sesamum grains into the water with the mantra "Sesamum art thou, Soma is thy deity, at the Gosava[969]

970. The rules about Pindapitryañja have been set forth in Āśv. Sr. S. II. 6 Nārāyana notes (on Āśv gr. IV 7 2) that Āśvalāyana treats of only the procedure relating to the rite for pitrs and that he does not at all refer to the dinner given to daiva or Vaiśvadeva brāhmanas at the time of śrāddha It is therefore possible that feeding daiva brāhmanas was added to the ancient ritual, though it must be said that Manu III. 125, Yāj. I. 224-28 and Vas XI. 27 prescribe such feeding. Dr. Caland (in 'Ahnencult' p 161) asserts that he can prove that the detail of feeding daiva brāhmanas spread from the Śrāddhasūtra of Kātyāyana to the other sutras and he relies on the fact that Kātyāyana (in Kandikā 2) prescribes that the viśve devāh should be invoked with the verse 'Viśve devāsa āgata' and the performer should mutter the verse 'viśve devāḥ śrnutemam' which are respectively Vāj S. VII. 34 and XXXIII 53. But Dr. Caland tries to prove too much. The first verse occurs twice in the Rg. (II 41. 13 and VI 52 7) and the second occurs in Rg. VI. 52 13, Tai S II 4 14 5. They are not found only in the Vāj. S as Dr. Caland seems to have thought It is possible that other works took over those mantras from the Rgveda or the Tai S It may also be noted that Yāj. I. 229 mentions only 'Viśve devāsa' and specifies that it is a rk (and not a mantra or yajus). So Yāj. at least does not appear to have borrowed the prescriptions of Kātyāyana. It is not necessary to examine the other arguments.

971 The part of the hand between the thumb and forefinger is called पितृतीर्थ and water is offered by that part of the hand for the pitrs; vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 316 note 652. नारायण explains इतरपाण्यङ्गुष्ठा° in two ways as follows: 'येन पाणिना कर्म करोति दक्षिणेन वा सव्येन वा तस्मिन्नंसे यज्ञोपवीते स्थिते प्राचीनावीती भवति ततोऽन्यस्मिन्नंसे स्थिते उपवीती भवति। अत्र तूपवीतित्वात्प्राचीनावीतित्वसिद्ध्यर्थं सव्यपाणिपितृतीर्थेन दातव्यमित्यर्थः। अथवा सव्यपाणे. शिष्टगर्हितत्वाद्दक्षिणं पाणिं सव्येन पाणिना गृहीत्वा दक्षिणेनैव पाणिनोपवीत्येवार्घ्यं प्रयच्छेत् ॥. The कल्पतरु. (on श्रा. p. 148) explains: प्रसव्येन वामेन हस्तेन। तत्रापि न केवलं वामेनैव अपि तु इतर पाण्यङ्गुष्ठान्तरेण इतरस्य दक्षिणस्य पाणेः अंगुष्ठान्तरेण पितृतीर्थेन। तेनैतदुक्तं भवति। वामहस्तेन अर्घ्यपात्रं धृत्वा दक्षिणहस्तेन पितृतीर्थं संस्पृश्य यथा ब्राह्मणहस्तेषु जलं पतति तथा देयमिति।. अर्घ्य is respectful offering of water or water with husked rice grains, flowers etc to gods or venerable persons.

maṇas to accept the arghya water he should once only (for each brāhmaṇa or group of brāhmaṇas for each of the Fathers) say to them 'svadhā! these are arghya waters' and then over the waters that are poured out he recites the verse (separately for each brāhmaṇa) 'The heavenly waters which have been produced on the earth, in the aerial regions and the waters that are terrestrial, that are golden-hued, and fit for sacrifice-may these waters bring us welfare and be favourable to us'. Pouring together (in the first vessel) what has been left in the vessels (for holding arghya water) he anoints his face with that water if he (the performer) desires that a son be born to him. 'He should not remove the first vessel into which the arghya water for the Fathers has been poured (till the end of the rite). The Fathers dwell therein concealed; thus did Śaunaka say'[972]. Just at that time the gifts of sandalwood paste, flowers, incense, lamp, and clothes are to be offered (to the brāhmaṇas).[973] Having taken some food (from the Sthālīpāka prepared for Piṇḍapitṛyajña) and smeared it with ghee he asks the brāhmaṇas' permission in the words 'I shall offer it in the fire' or in the words 'let me offer in the fire'. The permission is given (by the brāhmaṇas) in the words 'Let it be done' or in the words 'do it'. He then sacrifices in the fire as stated before[974] or (if the brāhmaṇas give permission) in the hands of the brāhmaṇas; since the Brāhmaṇa text says 'fire is verily the mouth of the Fathers'. If he offers in the hands of the brāh-

972. 'He should not remove etc' नारायण gives two explanations of this verse of Saunaka 'तृतीयेन पात्रेण प्रथमपात्रस्यापिधानमिच्छन्ति। अन्ये तु तत्रेति तृतीयार्थे सप्तमी। अर्घ्यपातितं प्रथमं पात्रं न्यग्बिलं कुर्यात् तच्च नोद्धरेदा समाप्तेरिति व्याचख्युः।' आश्व. गृ IV. 8 14.

973. Gifts of गन्ध etc.—नारायण notes on आश्व. गृ IV, 7. 10 that from अर्घ्यदान up to (excluding) the gift of the five articles गन्ध etc the performer is यज्ञोपवीती (i. e wears the sacred thread on the left shoulder and under the right arm). When giving these be becomes प्राचीनावीती (i. e wears the sacred thread on the right shoulder and under the left arm) manas[975], then he assigns other food to them after they have sipped water and the food (that remains) is mixed with the food that is served to the brāhmanas, since it is said 'what is abandoned and given to (brāhmanas)[976] brings prosperity'. When he sees that the brāhmanas are satiated (with the food served at the dinner) he (the performer) should recite to the brāhmanas the verses containing the word 'madhu' (Ṛg. I. 90.[977] 6–8) and also the verse 'they have eaten, they have enjoyed themselves' (Ṛg. I. 82.2). Having asked the brāhmanas 'was the dinner perfect?' (they should reply that it was) and then having taken (portions of) the different foods that were enjoyed by the brāhmanas together with the sthālīpāka food in order[978] to make lumps (pindas) thereof he should present all (the rest of the food) to the brāhmanas. After the brāhmanas have either accepted (the rest of the food) or given him permission (to use it for his family and friends), and after they have finished eating he should, before they have sipped water (performed ācamana after finishing their dinner), put down the lumps[979] (pindas) for the Fathers. According to some teachers (piṇḍas are put down) after the brāhmanas have sipped water (on getting up from the dinner). Having strewn the food on the ground (near the remnants of food) and wearing the sacred thread on his left shoulder[980] he should (after turning the first vessel with top upside and after giving dakṣiṇā to the brāhmanas) bid adieu to the brāhmanas saying 'utter Om!

974 यथोक्तं पुरस्तात् The reference is to आश्व श्रौ सू II. 6. 12 which reads: प्राचीनावीतीध्ममुपसमाधाय मेक्षणेनादायावदानसम्पदा जुहोति। सोमाय पितृमते स्वधा नमः अग्नये कव्यवाहनाय स्वधा नम इति.' The word अथ in आश्व. गृ IV. 8. 4 indicates that all the items of the पिण्डपितृयज्ञ upto होम (i. e excluding it) are performed before this stage is reached If the performer has no sacred fire and offers into the hands of the brāhmaṇas the same mantras are employed. The आश्व. श्रौ. सू II. 6.13 allows an option viz the word स्वाहा may be used but then the order of मन्त्रs will be अग्नये कव्यवाहनाय स्वाहा, सोमाय पितृमते स्वाहा and he will be यज्ञोपवीती.

975. 'If in the hands.' मनु III. 212 provides that if a man has no Smārta fire, he should offer in the hand of the brāhmana only. सृष्टं is explained by हरदत्त and नारायण as प्रभूतम्.

976 On IV. 8. 7. नारायण remarks. अर्थद्वयमत्र विधातुमिष्टमिति गम्यते । तत्राग्नौ कृत्वा भोजनेषु भोक्तुनार्थमन्यदन्नमत्त्वादिशति ददात्येकोऽर्थः । यदि पाणिहोमः कृतस्तदाचान्तेषु अन्यदन्नं ददातीत्यपरः ।

977. Rgveda I. 90 6–8 (मधुवाता ऋतायते etc.) are called मधुमती verses because each contains the word मधु several times

978 On 'स्थालीपाकेन सह' नारायण observes 'स्थालीपाकेन सहेति नान्नापूर्वः स्थालीपाकश्चोद्यते।.. तेन यत्र स्थालीपाको विहितस्तत्र तेन भुक्तशेषेण च पिण्डनिपरणं भवति। यत्र तु स्थालीपाकविधिर्नास्ति तत्र भुक्तशेषेणैव केवलेन निपरणं भवति।'. In some श्राद्धs such as काम्यश्राद्ध, आभ्युदयिक, अष्टमीश्राद्ध and एकोद्दिष्ट there is no स्थालीपाक.

979. 'He should put down the lumps'. Here आश्वलायन appears to differ from मनु III. 253, 260.

980 The word 'उपवीय' shows that till then the performer was प्राचीनावीती.

Svadhā' or he should say 'Om! Svadhā!' (and they should reply 'Om! Svadhā!). [980a]

From considerations of space it is impossible to set out all the differences among the several gṛhyasūtras of the Ṛgveda, of the Taittirīya śākhā (viz. Baudhāyana, Āp., Hir., Bharadvāja and Vaikhānasa), of the Vājasaneya śākhā (such as Śrāddhasūtra of Kātyāyana), of the Sāmaveda (such as Gobhila and Khādira) and of the Atharvaveda (being Kauśika sūtra). A few matters may be set out by way of illustration. The Āp. gr. (21. 3-4)[981] states that (after the brāhmaṇas are invited for śrāddha dinner) from the food prepared for the dinner a portion is taken out in a vessel and therefrom seven āhutis are cast into the fire with the seven mantras beginning with 'yan me mātā' (in Āp. M. P. II. 19. 1-7), the first two for the father, the next two for the grand-father, next two for the great-grand-father and the 7th to pitṛs in general with svāhā (but without naming any one) and then six oblations of clarified butter are offered with the six formulas beginning with 'svāhā pitre' (Āp. M. P. II. 19 8-13). Thus the agnaukaraṇa in Āp consists of two parts viz. āhutis of food and of clarified butter, while in Āśv it is made only with food. Then the performer should touch all food (cooked food and the remainder of what is employed for offering into fire) with the three mantras 'eṣa te tata madhumān' (Āp M. P. II. 19. 14-16), he should make the brāhmaṇas touch the food served to each with the Yajus formula 'the earth is thy vessel' (Āp. M. P. 2. 20. 1) quoted in n. 992 below.

Āp. gr. prescribes the mantra, 'putrān pautrān' (Āp. M. P. II. 20. 24) for moistening the piṇḍas, while Baud. gr. and Vaikhānasa gr. (IV. 6) employ the mantra 'ūrjam vahantīr' (Vāj. S. II. 34) for the same purpose. It may be noted that 980 a. It will be noticed that Āśv. omits several details viz. (1) he does not say that the brāhmaṇas for all the gods are to be seated, facing the east, (2) he mentions no mantra such as 'ye agnidagdhā &c,' (3) nothing is said about dakṣiṇā or about the performer following the brāhmaṇas a few paces and then returning with their permission.

981. The आप. गृ 20. 9 sets down the whole procedure very succinctly after the brāhmaṇas have taken the dinner as follows: भुक्तवतोऽनुव्रज्य प्रदक्षिणीकृत्य द्वैधं दक्षिणाग्रान् दर्भान् संस्तीर्य तेषूत्तरैरपो दत्त्वोत्तरैर्दक्षिणापवर्गान् पिण्डान् दत्त्वा पूर्ववदुत्तरैरपो दत्त्वोत्तरैरुपस्थायोत्तरयोदपात्रेण त्रिः प्रसव्यं परिषिच्य न्युब्ज्य पात्राण्युत्तरं यजुरनवानं प्यवरा-र्ध्यमावर्तयित्वा प्रोक्ष्य पात्राणि द्वन्द्वमभ्युदाहृत्य सर्वतः समवदायोत्तरेण यजुषा शेषस्य ग्रासा-वरार्ध्यं प्राश्नीयात्।. The mantras referred to here occur in आप. म. पा. II. 19. 1 to II. 20. 26.

these sūtras which belong to the Taittirīya śākhā employ a verse from another recension viz. the Śukla Yajurveda.

The Hir. Gr. (II. 10–13) is more elaborate than the Āp. Gṛ. and not only sets out at length many of the mantras in Āp. M. P. II. 19–20, but adds some more. The Śrāddhasūtra of Kātyāyana (1–3) sets out the procedure of the monthly śrāddha almost in the same way as the Yājñavalkyasmṛti (which is set out below). It states that in the monthly śrāddha first come the daiva rites and then the various items occur as in the Pinda-pitryajña 'pindapitryajña-vad-upacārah' (first sūtra of the 2nd kandikā) Some details which it contains (and Yāj. does not expressly mention) may be set out here. It gives in full the mantras 'tilosi', 'yā divyā' (both of which occur in Āśv. gr.), 'pṛthivī to pātram' (which is Āp. M. P. II. 20.1). It prescribes that in addition to the Gāyatrī and the Madhumatī verses the word 'madhu' should be repeated thrice. The holy texts to be repeated while the brāhmanas are engaged in eating according to Kātyāyana are the Gāyatrī (once or thrice), the five Rāksoghnī verses (Ṛg. IV. 4. 1–5, Vāj. S. XIII. 9–13, Tai. S. I 2. 14. 1–2), Purusasūkta, the Apratiratha hymn (Ṛg. X. 103. 1–13 = Vāj. S. 17. 33–34, 46 = Tai. S. IV. 6. 4 1–4) and others. It expressly states that the svadhāvācana (Yāj. I 244) relates to both paternal and maternal ancestors. Besides the blessing contained in Yāj I. 246, Kātyāyana provides that the performer is to pray for and the brāhmanas are to pronounce two more viz. 'May the pitṛs be kind (lit not dreadful) to us' and 'May our family prosper'. Dr Caland in his learned work 'Altindischer Ahnencult' (pp. 150–152) appears inclined to hold that when a sūtrakāra has not actually said anything on certain items in the śrāddha ritual, one has no right to anticipate, on the authority of later authors, that those items existed in the times of that sūtrakāra. I demur to this conclusion. Dr. Caland has attached no weight to the fact that Jaimini (as stated in H. of Dh. vol III p 870) laid down the principle that one may include certain items from another śākhā. Jaimini's sūtras cannot be supposed to have laid down those propositions for the first time. Jaimini's sūtras are at least as old as some of the extant śrauta sūtras such as that of Kātyāyana Therefore hardly any chronological conclusions can be drawn with certainty from the silence of a sūtrakāra as to a certain item in the śrāddha ritual.

We shall now turn to the metrical smṛtis. Manu treats of the procedure of śrāddha at some length in III. 208–265. But as the procedure prescribed by the Yājñavalkyasmṛti (I. 226–249) is more compact and at the same time more lucid it is set out here. "When the invited brāhmaṇas come in the afternoon the performer having a pavitra[982] in his hand should seat them on seats and make them sip water. The brāhmaṇas invited should be even in number (2, 4 &c.) according to the performer's resources at the daiva rite (i. e. the Vaiśvadevika brāhmaṇas should be two, four &c.) and uneven (three or five &c.) at a (pārvaṇa) śrāddha for the pitṛs; the brāhmaṇas should be seated in a pure (cowdunged) plot screened on all sides and sloping towards the south. At the daiva (part of pārvaṇa-śrāddha when Viśve-devāḥ are to be invoked) two brāhmaṇas facing the east should sit down and three brāhmaṇas facing the north should be seated in the rite for the pitṛs or only one may be seated for each (i. e. in daiva and in pitrya). The same rule applies to a śrāddha for maternal ancestors. In both (pitṛśrāddha and mātāmahaśrāddha) the worship of Viśvedevas may be performed separately or simultaneously[983]. Then having poured water on the hands of the brāhmaṇas (meant for the rite in honour of viśve-devāḥ) and having given kuśa blades for a seat[984] (towards their right side on the seat already 982 For the meaning of pavitra see H of Dh vol II p 657 notes 1553–54. It is a ring-like loop of darbhas to be worn in the right hand or in both hands on the finger next to the little finger. The Mit. supplies that the invited brāhmaṇas also should have a pavitra The गोभिलस्मृति I. 28 defines it and is quoted by अपरार्क pp 43 and 480.

983. On Yāj I. 228 'तन्त्रं वा', the मिता remarks यदा तु द्वावेव ब्राह्मणौ लब्धौ तदा तु वैश्वदेवे पात्रं प्रकल्प्य उभयत्र एकैकं ब्राह्मणं नियुञ्ज्यात्। यथाह वसिष्ठ । Vide p. 403 above for Vas. 11. 30–31 which the मिता quotes. The विष्णुपुराण III. 15. 16 says. तथा मातामहश्राद्धं वैश्वदेवसमन्वितम्। कुर्वीत भक्तिसम्पन्नं तन्त्रं वा वैश्वदेविकम्॥ तन्त्र means उभयोद्देशेन सकृदनुष्ठानम् or as शबर on जै. XI 1 1 explains 'यत् सकृत् कृतं बहूनामुपकरोति तद् तन्त्रं यथा बहूनां ब्राह्मणानां मध्ये कृतः प्रदीपः'. Yāj I 228 contains several options about the number of brāhmaṇas. तन्त्रं वा–If the three paternal ancestors and the three maternal ancestors are to be invoked in one śrāddha one may separately invite two वैश्वदेवब्राह्मणs for पितृत्रय and two वैश्वदेवब्राह्मणs for मातामहत्रय, or only two ब्राह्मणs may do as वैश्वदेविकब्राह्मणs for both पितृत्रय and मातामहत्रय. Or even one may do as वैश्वदेवब्राह्मण for both

984. For विष्टर (in या I 229), a seat made with 25 darbhas, vide H. of Dh. vol. II p. 543 n. 1259. The मिता says that in addition to the vedic verse, a smārta verse should be recited for invoking the विश्वेदेवाः viz. 'आगच्छन्तु महाभागा विश्वेदेवा महाबलाः। ये यत्र विहिताः श्राद्धे सावधाना भवन्तु ते॥'. This verse is स्कन्दपुराण VII 1. 217. 32–33 and गरुडपुराण I 218.7. On p. 478 अपरार्क attributes this स्मार्तमन्त्र to बृहस्पति and to the ब्रह्मपुराण on p. 481. The occupied), he should, with the permission of the invited brāhmanas, invoke the Viśvedevāḥ with the verse 'O! all the gods come!' (Ṛg. II. 41. 13 or VI. 52. 7; Vāj. S. VII. 34) Having scattered on the ground (near the brāhmanas representing Viśve-devāh) barley grains and then having cast into a vessel (of metal &c) covered with a pavitra water with the verse 'śan no devīr' (Ṛg. X. 9. 4, Vāj. S 36.12, Tai. Ār. IV. 42.4) and barley grains with the mantra, 'Yavosi' (Vāj. S. V. 26, Tai. S. I. 3. 1. 1) and (also sandalwood paste and flowers) he should place in the hands (of the brāhmanas) the arghya[985] water with the verse 'yā divyā' (those heavenly waters &c., Tai. Br. II. 7. 15. 4). Then he should pour water into the hand (of the Vaiśva-deva brāhmana or brāhmanas) for washing the hand and give to them perfumes, flowers, incense, lamp[986] and garment. Then wearing the sacred thread on the right shoulder[987] and कल्पतरु (on श्रा pp. 142, 151) also attributes it to both. हेमाद्रि (on श्रा. p.-1226) quotes it from the ब्रह्मपुराण, while the मद पा p. 574 quotes it as बृहस्पति's. The मिता notes that this and the following items up to (including) the gift of perfumes and four other things should be done by the performer being यज्ञोपवीती and having his right side towards the brāhmanas "एतच्च यज्ञोपवीतिना प्रदक्षिणं च कार्यं 'अपसव्यं ततः कृत्वा पितॄणामप्रदक्षिणम्' इति पित्र्ये विशेषस्मरणात् ।." अपसव्यं तत. कृत्वा—is या. I. 232 latter half. हेमाद्रि (on श्रा pp 1257–58) explains 'प्रदक्षिणादन्यदप्रदक्षिणम् । प्रदक्षिणं नामाभिमुखपुरुषवामाङ्गोपलक्षितं प्रदेशं प्रति कर्मणो निर्वहणं यथा पूर्वाभिमुखोपविष्टदैविकपङ्क्तिमूर्धन्यद्विजादारभ्य तत् पङ्क्तिचरमद्विजापवर्गेना'

985. 'Arghya water'—The मिता. states 'विश्वेदेवा इदं वो अर्घ्यमित्यर्घ्योदकं विनिक्षिपेत्.' The arghya is to be offered to each ब्राह्मण separately as required by गोभिलस्मृति III 74 'अर्घेऽक्षय्योदके चैव पिण्डदानेऽवनेजने । तन्त्रस्य तु निवृत्तिः स्यात्स्वधावाचन एव च ॥' The printed मिता reads the मन्त्र as यवोसि धान्यराजो वा, which is not found in the Vāj. S. or other samhitās. Similarly, the मिता reads the मन्त्र 'या दिव्या आप· पयसा' for अर्घ्य, which is probably Ṛg. VII. 49 2 with the order of words changed. अपरार्क (p 479) states that if there are two वैश्वदेवब्राह्मणs then water and yavas should be put in two vessels and the मन्त्र is to be repeated each time when putting water, putting यवs and at each अर्घ्य. हेमाद्रि (on श्रा p. 1229) defines: 'अर्घ्यो नामार्हणीयान. पुरत. संमाननार्थः प्रशस्तद्रव्यप्रक्षेपः'.

986. 'दीपे च विशेषः शङ्खेनोक्तः । घृतेन दीपो दातव्यास्तिलतैलेन वा पुन· । वसामेदोद्भवं दीपं प्रयत्नेन विवर्जयेत् ॥' मिता. on या. I. 231. The विष्णुधर्मोत्तर has the verse घृतेन (I. 141 12).

987. या. I. 232—अपसव्यं ततः. The Mit quotes वृद्धशातातप that from hence the performer should face the south 'उदङ्मुखस्तु देवानां पितॄणां दक्षिणामुखः । प्रदद्यात् पार्वणे सर्वं देवपूर्वं विधानत· ॥'. 'Double-folded kuśas'—compare Āśv.

under the left arm (i. e. being prācīnāvītī) the performer should offer to the pitrs (i. e. to the three brāhmanas representing them) double-folded kuśas (with water) for a seat on the left (i e on the seats already occupied kuśas should be placed on the left side for a vistara), he should then invoke[988] the pitrs after taking the permission of the brāhmanas with the rk 'uśantas-tvā' (Rg. X. 16. 12, Vāj. S. 19. 70, Tai. S. II. 6. 12. 1), and should then recite in a low voice the mantra (āyantu nah pitarah) 'may the pitrs come to us' (Vāj. S 19. 58). The performer, having scattered sesamum seeds all round (the brāhmanas) with the mantra 'Apahatā' (Vāj S II. 29), should employ sesamum for all purposes where yavas were employed (in the daiva part of the ceremony) and should perform all the items such as giving arghya (water for worship) for the pitrs as before (for the daiva rite). After offering arghya water, he should collect the drops of the arghya water fallen from the hands (or fingers) of the brāhmanas in one vessel (the pitr vessel), them turn it upside above (p. 434). The स्कन्दपुराण (VII. 1. 206. 17) provides 'दाने स्नाने जपे होमे भोजने देवतार्चने। देवानामृजवो दर्भाः पितॄणां द्विगुणास्तथा॥' In offering each of the things in daiva or pitrya rite in śrāddha water must be given before and after. The मिता says that here the method called काण्डानुसमय (and not पदार्थानुसमय) has to be followed. These two are dealt with in Jai. V. 2 1–15. Vide H of Dh vol II. pp. 739–740 In this case if there are three brāhmanas, water, kuśas and water are all to be given to one, then the same three to the second and the same three to the third This is काण्डानुसमय If water is given one after another to the three, then kuśas one after another to them, then water one after another to three, that would be पदार्थानुसमय. काण्ड means पदार्थवर्ग. हेमाद्रि (on श्रा pp. 759–766) has an exhaustive and lucid discussion on these two He states that पदार्थानुसमय is the rule but काण्डानुसमय also has to be followed in certain cases For example, on p 764 he says 'चरणप्रक्षालना-चमनमङ्गानासनोपवेशनानि पदार्थानुसमयेन । आसनक्षणावाहनार्घगन्धपुष्पधूपदीपाच्छादनानां पदार्थानां कृत्स्नं काण्डं वैश्वदेविकेषु द्विजेष्वपवर्ग्य पैतृकेष्वारम्भणीयम्' and relies on या I. 229–234 to show that all items relating to वैश्वदेविकब्राह्मणs are first finished and those relating to पैतृकब्राह्मणs are then taken up i e. there is काण्डानुसमय as to वैश्वदेविक and पैतृकब्राह्मणs. Vide हेमाद्रि (श्रा) p. 1215 also.

988. आवाह्य (या. I 233). The मिता. remarks "अथ पितॄन् पितामहान् प्रपितामहा-नावाहयिष्य इति ब्राह्मणान् पृष्ट्वा आवाहयेति तैरनुज्ञातः उशन्तस्त्वा निधीमहि इत्यनयर्चा पित्रावाहनीनावाह्य 'आयन्तु नः पितरः' इत्यादिना मन्त्रेणोपतिष्ठेत". It may be noted that in all cases where a question is to be put or permission is to be asked the performer addresses the chief among them or all of them as the श्राद्धसूत्र of का. says—'सर्वेषु प्रश्नेषु पङ्क्तिमूर्धन्यं पृच्छति सर्वान्वा (2nd कण्डिका of श्राद्धसूत्र).'

down[989] on the ground (over a bunch of kuśas with ends turned towards the south) with the mantra 'thou art a place for the pitṛs.'[990] Then, being about to perform 'agnaukaraṇa' (offering in sacrifice), he takes the food mixed with clarified butter and asks the brāhmaṇas (in the words 'I shall offer into the sacred fire') and when permitted by them with the words 'do so', he offers into the fire (two portions cut off from the food mixed with ghee) with a mekṣaṇa[991] according to the

989. The मिता remarks that on the vessel turned upside down the pavitras covering the three vessels should be placed and unguents, flowers, incense, lamp and garment should be offered to the brāhmaṇas with the words 'पितरयं ते गन्धः' etc.

990 पूर्ववत्—The मिता very briefly sets forth how the items are to be repeated for पैत्र्यब्राह्मणs 'राजतादिषु पात्रेषु त्रिष्वयुग्मकुशनिर्मितकूर्चान्तर्हितेषु 'शं नो देवी.' इति मन्त्रेणाप क्षिप्त्वा 'तिलोसि सोमदेवत्यः' इत्यादिमन्त्रेण तिलान् गन्धपुष्पाणि च क्षिप्त्वा स्वधार्घ्या'—इति ब्राह्मणाना पुरतोऽर्घ्यपात्राणि स्थापयित्वा या दिव्या इति मन्त्रान्ते पितरिदं ते अर्घ्यं पितामहेदं ते अर्घ्यं प्रपितामहेदं ते अर्घ्यमिति ब्राह्मणानां हस्तेष्वर्घ्यं दद्यात्। Vide आश्व गृ in note 966 above for शं नो देवी, तिलोसि, या दिव्याः The मन्त्र is 'अपहता असुरा रक्षांसि वेदिषदः' (वाज. सं. II. 29) The बह्वृचगृह्यपरिशिष्ट, अपरार्क (p 484) and others say that the name and gotra of the ancestors should be mentioned in offering पाद्य, अर्घ्य, गन्ध etc Therefore the अर्घ्य will be offered in the form 'अमुकगोत्र पितरमुकशर्मन्नेतत्तेऽर्घ्यम्'. हलायुध (folio 18a on श्राद्धसूत्र) notes that in the case of वाजसनेयs the last words are एष तेऽर्घः

991 मेक्षण is a rod of Aśvattha wood one aratni long having at one end a square board four angulas in length (to be used like a mixing spoon). Two offerings are made with the words अग्नये कव्यवाहनाय स्वधा नमः, सोमाय पितृमते स्वधा नमः (वाज सं II. 29 where the same formula occurs with स्वाहा for स्वधा नम.) Acc to Baud. Dh S II. 8. 8-11 the offerings are three viz to सोमाय पितृपीताय, यमायाङ्गिरस्वते पितृमते, अग्नये कव्यवाहनाय स्विष्टकृते Acc. to मद पा. p. 590 this is peculiar to Baudhāyanīyas The ब्रह्मपुराण q. by मद. पा. (p 591) speaks of आहुतित्रय and so does Brahmāṇḍa (upodghāta, 11.93–94) If the performer is आहिताग्नि and has observed सर्वाधान method he offeres into दक्षिणाग्नि; if he is not आहिताग्नि or has followed अर्धाधान method he offers into gṛhya or āvasathya fire and if he has neither the śrauta or gṛyha fire he offers into the hand of the brāhmaṇa. For the procedure of पिण्डपितृयज्ञ (which varies from one śākhā and sūtra to another) vide H. of Dh vol. II pp 1085–1090 and मनु III. 212 for पाणिहोम. The food offered on the hand has to be mixed with the food served in the plate and then eaten. When there are several pitrya brāhmaṇas invited the पाणिहोम is to be made on the hand of the best of the brāhmaṇas acc. to the मद. पा. 585 and स्मृतिच (श्रा. p. 462), both of which quote गोभिल II 120 'पित्र्ये यः पङ्क्तिमूर्धन्यस्तस्य पाणावनग्निमान्। हुत्वा मन्त्रवदन्येषां तूष्णीं पात्रेषु निक्षिपेत्॥'. हलायुध holds that, since या. (I. 237 हुतशेषं प्रदद्यात्तु भाजनेषु समाहित.) employs the word भाजनेषु without any qualification, the remnants of the food for होम should be put in all plates including those for दैवब्राह्मणs The सौरपुराण (19.22) says. अग्नेरभावाद्विप्रस्य पाणौ होमो विधीयते। महादेवस्य पुरतो गोष्ठे वा श्रद्धयान्वित.॥

procedure laid down for Piṇḍapitryajña. He, being intent (only on performing śrāddha correctly), should serve the food that remains after (making the two offerings mentioned above) in plates (except earthen one) that he may be able to secure, and particularly silver oness (plates are meant for feeding pitrya brāhmanas). After serving the food in the plates, he should invoke over the plates the mantra 'the earth is thy[992] support', he should take hold of the thumb of the brāhmanas and put it on the food (served in the plates) with the mantra[993] 'idam Visnur' ('Visnu strode over this' Ṛg. I. 22. 17, Vāj. S. V. 15, Tai S. I. 2. 13. 1). The performer should then mutter the Gāyatrī verse (Ṛg. III 62. 10, Vāj. Ṣ. III. 35, Tai. S. I. 5. 6. 4) together with 'Om' and the 'Vyāhrtis' and the three verses beginning with 'Madhu vātā' (Ṛg. I. 90. 6–8, Vāj. S. 13. 27–29, Tai. S IV. 2 9. 3), he should say 'partake (of the food) as you please' and the brāhmanas also should eat the food silently. He should serve without anger or bustle food fit for being offered as havis (in a śrāddha) and liked by the brāhmanas till they are satiated (so that some food is left in their plates) and should repeat (while the brāhmanas are engaged in eating) sacred texts and the texts for Japa (Gāyatrī &c. already referred to in Yāj I. 239 above). The sacred texts to be repeated according to the Mit on Yāj. I. 240 are the Purusasūkta (Ṛg. X. 90. 1–16), the Pāvamānī verses (i. e. verses like 'svādisthayā madisthayā' from the 9th mandala of the Ṛgveda as stated by Medhātithi on Manu III. 86 and Haradatta on Gautama (19. 12). Manu III. 232 mentions other works for recitation such as the dharmaśāstras, ākhyānas, itihāsa (Mahābhārata), purānas and khilas (like Śrīsūkta and Vidyāsūkta). There is great divergence of views about the sacred texts to be recited by the performer in a low voice, while the brāhmanas are engaged in partaking the food

992. या I. 238. The मन्त्र meant is. पृथिवी ते पात्रं द्यौरपिधानं ब्रह्मणस्त्वा मुखे जुहोमि ब्राह्मणानां त्वा प्राणापानयोर्जुहोम्यक्षितमसि मैषां क्षेष्ठा अमुत्रामुष्मिँल्लोके। आप. म. पा. II. 20 1. The मन्त्र is addressed to the remainder of the food used for अग्नौकरण. पात्र means support. As stated in n. 783, in श्राद्ध the आहवनीय is the ब्राह्मण invited for dinner. About अङ्गुष्ठ, यम q. by कल्पतरु (श्रा p 183) says: अङ्गुष्ठमात्रो भगवान् विष्णुः पर्यटते महीम्। राक्षसानां वधार्थाय को मेऽस्य महरिष्यति॥ तस्माच्छ्राद्धेषु सर्वेषु त्वङ्गुष्ठग्रहणं स्मृतम्।. These are quoted also by अपरार्क p. 494, स्मृतिच (श्रा.) p. 462 and by हेमाद्रि (श्रा.) p. 1378.

993. यम q. by अपरार्क p. 494 says 'विष्णो हव्यं च कव्यं च ब्रूयाद्रक्षेति च क्रमात्.' The मिता quotes it as मनु's and says that in the पित्र्य rite the performer being प्राचीनावीतिन् should say 'विष्णो कव्यं रक्ष.'

cooked for śrāddha Vide note 1005 below. It may be that the japa of sacred texts is to be done by the performer wearing the sacred thread in the upavīta way as stated by Hemādri p. 1070 and the Madana-pārijāta p. 599, but the Śrāddhatattva (p. 231) is opposed to this and relies on Manu III. 279. Certain verses from the Purāṇas also are to be recited such as the verses from the Varāhapurāṇa (14. 26-31) and Viṣṇupurāṇa (III. 15. 31-36, which are identical with the preceding) quoted by the Kalpataru on śrāddha (p. 197), Aparārka (p. 502) and Hemādri (on śrāddha p. 109), the first and last of which are quoted in the note below[994]. The Garuḍapurāṇa (Ācārakhaṇḍa 218.20 ff.) prescribes that while the brāhmaṇas are eating one may recite a eulogy of pitṛs such as the 'saptavyādha' verses[994a]. Then, after holding the food in his hands, the performer should ask the brāhmaṇas 'are you satisfied' (and after they reply that they are satisfied) he should tell them that there is food still left (and ask them what to do with it) and after taking their per-

994 a. The सप्तव्याध verses from the हरिवंश (I. 24. 20-21) and गरुडपुराण are. सप्तव्याधा दशार्णेषु मृगाः कालञ्जरे गिरौ। चक्रवाकाः शरद्वीपे हंसाः सरसि मानसे ॥ तेऽभिजाताः कुरुक्षेत्रे ब्राह्मणा वेदपारगाः । प्रस्थिता दूरमध्वानं यूयं किमवसीदथ ॥. On these the श्राद्धतत्त्व (p. 231) says 'अपहृतगुरुगवीमांसकृतश्राद्धमहत्त्वप्रकाशकपितृगाथात्वेन सप्तव्याधा इति च पठ्यते ॥'. These very verses occur in the अग्निपुराण chap. 117. 56-57. The story is very clearly set out in हरिवंश 1, chapters 21-24 and the Matsyapurāṇa chap 20-21. Seven pupils of Garga guarding their guru's cow thought of eating that cow as they were famished. But the youngest said 'let us make use of the cow's flesh in śrāddha, so that we may be saved from sin'. Two of the brothers became daiva brāhmaṇas, three became pitṛ-brāhmaṇas, one became the giver and the 7th became a guest. They told the guru that the cow was eaten by a tiger They passed through several births first as seven hunters, then deer in Kālañjara hill and so on Śrāddha ultimately saved them. The same story is narrated in Padma V. 10.49-125, and V. 47.282-304 (in which last the disciples are said to have been those of वसिष्ठ) After becoming hamsas three of them became kings (a king and two ministers, acc. to मत्स्य) and cared not for the other world. The four others knew the path to mokṣa, sent word to the three with these verses saying that they four had started on the long road to the other world (प्रस्थिता ..ध्वानं) and asking the other three not to be immersed in the mire of wordliness (यूय...दथ). The story also occurs in the शिवपुराण (उमासंहिता chap. 41.24 ff). It is interesting to note that in the Jaina Uttarādhyayana-sūtra (S. B. E vol. 45 p 56) the echoes of this story of the brothers are heard for illustrating the influence of karman.

mission[995] (in the words 'partake of it along with your friends and relations'), he should spread (in front of the brāhmanas for pitrs) the remaining food on (darbhas with their ends to the south placed over) the ground (with the mantra 'ye agnidagdhāh', those that were cremated and those that were not cremated &c.) and he should pour water once for each into his hand (for rinsing the mouth). Collecting all the cooked food (i. e. portions from each food) with sesamum mixed with it, the performer facing the south should offer the pindas near the remains of the food (eaten by the brāhmanas) according to the procedure of the pindapitryajña. For maternal ancestors also the same procedure is to be followed (from invoking the Viśvedevāh to offering pindas). Then he should give water to the brāhmanas for sipping. Then (he should say to the brāhmanas 'pronounce benediction'); after making the brāhmanas say 'svasti', he should offer water into their hands for saying 'let it be inexhaustible (after he requests them 'let it be inexhaustible'). Then after giving to the brāhmanas daksinā (fee or presents)[996] according to the ability of the performer, he should say to the brāhmanas "may I request you to repeat the word 'svadhā'" and when they permit him in the words 'do request us', he should say 'let svadhā be pronounced for the persons concerned' (i. e. the pitrs and maternal ancestors). Then the brāhmanas should say 'let there be svadhā'. On the brāhmanas saying so, he should sprinkle water on the ground and say 'let the Viśvedevāh be pleased' and when the brāhmanas have responded with 'let the Viśve-devāh be pleased' he should mutter the follow-

X, 15 14 translated above (p 196). Sesamum grains and water were to be cast before as well as after placing the food on the ground The Mit. speaks of the verse ये अग्निदग्धा as a rk, so it should be taken to be Rg X. 15. 14; but later works like the श्राद्धतत्त्व (pp 231-32) prescribe that the two verses quoted in the beginning of note 1007 below should be recited here. Vide तै. ब्रा III 1. 1. 7 for pitrs that were अग्निदग्ध and that were not so in another connection.

996. या. I. 244 दत्त्वा तु दक्षिणां शक्त्या—देवल prescribes that दक्षिणा was to be given to the पित्र्यब्राह्मणs first and then to the वैश्वदेविकब्राह्मणs 'दक्षिणां पितृविप्रेभ्यो दद्यात्पूर्वं ततो द्वयोः' q. by स्मृतिच. Having muttered this, having spoken pleasing words to the brāhmanas,[999] having fallen at their feet (after going round them) he being pleased in his heart should dismiss the brāhmanas with the mantra 'Vāje vāje' (Ṛg. VII. 38.8, Vāj. S. 21.11, Tai. S. I. 7 8.2), the sending them away being so arranged that the brāhmanas representing the pitṛs start first,[1000] (i. e. first goes the representative of the great-grandfather, then the one for the grandfather, then the one for the father and then the one representing the Viśvedevāh). The vessel in which the drops of arghya water from the hands of the brāhmanas had been collected before should be turned face upwards[1001] and then the brāhmanas should be dismissed. After following the departing brāhmanas (up to the boundary) and going round them, he (should return) and should eat the food that (remains in the 997 दातारो नो—या I 246 This very verse occurs in मनु III. 252, विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 73.28, पद्मपुराण (सृष्टिखण्ड 9. 117), मत्स्य 16 49-50, विष्णुधर्मोत्तर I 140.42.

998 The विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 73.30, मत्स्य 16 50-51, पद्म (सृष्टि 9 118) add another verse to या I 246 viz. अन्नं च नो बहु भवेदतिथींश्च लभेमहि। याचितारश्च नः सन्तु मा च याचिष्म कंचन ॥.

999 इत्युक्त्वोक्त्वा प्रिया वाच—या I 247. अपरार्क p 512 quotes from बृहस्पति two verses stating what should be said 'अद्य मे सफलं जन्म भवत्पादाभिवन्दनात्। अद्य मे वंशजाः सर्वे गतास्तेऽनुग्रहाद् दिवम् ॥ अत्र शाकादिपानेन क्लेशिता ये मयेदृशाः। तत्क्लेशजातं चित्तेन विस्मृत्य क्षन्तुमर्हथ ॥.'

1000. For पितृपूर्वं विसर्जनम् (या° I 247), compare विष्णुपुराण III 15 48 and विष्णुधर्मोत्तर I. 140. 15 which say 'वैश्वदेवनिविष्टाना चरमं हस्तधावनम्। विसर्जनं च निर्दिष्टं तेषु रक्षा यतः स्थिता ॥'. The मिता adds, following the मत्स्यपुराण 17 59, that before dismissal he should touch the brāhmanas with the tip of a darbha 'वाजे वाजे इति जपन् कुशाग्रेण विसर्जयेत्'.

1001. The Mit. notices that the upturning of the vessel should be done (as the termination त्वा in कृत्वा indicates) first before the mantra 'vāje vāje' (Yāj I. 247) is recited and after the brāhmanas recite the benedictory mantras, and then the brāhmanas start. Compare Jai IV.3.37 for क्त्वा denoting पूर्वकालता. संस्रव has two meanings, viz. (1) the drops of water fallen from the hands of the brāhmanas when arghya water was offered to them (Mit.), (2) the drops of water that remain in the arghya vessels. श्रीदत्त in his पितृभक्ति (D C Ms 152 of 1892-95) says 'संस्रवपदं ब्राह्मणहस्तस्रुतजलपरमिति निबन्धारः। कर्कभाष्ये तु अर्घपात्रस्थशेषीभूतजलं संस्रवपदमित्युक्तम्। युक्तं चैतत्। शेषे प्रतिपत्तेरपेक्षितत्वात्।' folio 25b.

house after) the brāhmanas representing the pitrs have partaken of it. He and the brāhmanas that partook of the śrāddha dinner should abstain from sexual intercourse on the night of the śrāddha day [1002].

Many of the Purāṇas contain detailed descriptions of the śrāddha to be performed on every amāvāsyā; for example, Matsya 17. 12–60 (closely resembling Yāj. 225–259), Visnupurāna III. 15. 13–49, Mārkandeya 28 37–60, Kūrma (II. 22. 20–62), Padma (sṛṣṭikhanda) 9. 140–186), Brahmāṇḍa (Upodghātapāda, chap. 12), Skanda VI. 224. 3–51, Visnudharmottara I. 140. 6–44. The Agnipurāna chap. 163 verses 2–42 are the same (with very slight variations and the omission of 2½ verses) as Yāj. I. 227–270; while Agni chap. 117 contains many verses that closely follow the Āśv. Gr and Yāj. Similarly the Garudapurāna contains numerous verses that are identical with Yājñavalkya's. For example, compare Yāj. I. 229–239 with Garuḍa I. 99. 11–19. The Purānas closely follow the Gṛhyasūtras, Manu and Yājñavalkya and often employ the same mantras and formulas, though here and there they introduce some details. As remarked by the Varāhapurāna 14 51, the procedure for śrāddha is the same in all Purānas (iyam sarvapurānesu sāmānyā paitrikī kriyā). For sample, a summary of the procedure in the Padma (srsti 9. 140–186) is set out here. The performer having honoured the Viśve-devāh (i e. the brāhmana or brāhmanas invited to represent them) with a seat and with yava grains and flowers should fill two vessels with water and should place them on a pavitra of darbhas The water should be offered with the verse 'śam no devīr' (Ṛg. X. 9.4) and the yava grains with 'Yavosi'. They should be invoked with the verse 'Viśve devāsah' (Ṛg. II. 41 13) and yavas should be scattered about with the two verses 'Viśve devāsah' (Ṛg. II. 41. 13–14) and he should scatter about yava grains with the verse 'thou art yava, the king of grains &c.' (quoted [1003] below). After decking the brāhmanas with sandalwood paste and flowers

1002 या I. 249. मिता. adds that by reason of the word 'tu' in Yā I 249 the performer and the brāhmanas have to shun eight actions enumerated in n. 924 above.

1003. यवोऽसि धान्यराजस्तु वारुणो मधुमिश्रितः। निर्णोद सर्वपापानां पवित्रमृषि-संस्तुतम्॥ पद्म (सृष्टि) 9.144 बौ. ध सू III. 6 5 is almost identical The मिता. on या. I. 231 refers to the मन्त्र 'यवोसि धान्यराजो वा' which appears to be the same, अपरार्क p 479 speaks of 'यवोसि' as a yajus.

he should honour them with water with the verse[1004] 'yā divyā' (vide n. 985). After taking leave of the Vaiśvadeva brāhmaṇas that have been honoured with arghya he should begin the pitṛ yajña. He should prepare seats with darbhas on them, worship three vessels, place pavitras on them and pour water in them with 'śam no devīr' (Ṛg. X. 9 4), should cast sesamum grains in them with 'tilosi' and then put in them sandalwood and flowers. (Then verses 147–152 speak about the vessels to be employed). He then should announce the names and gotra of his ancestors and give darbhas in the hands of the brāhmanas. He should then request brāhmanas with the words 'I shall invite the pitrs' and when they reply 'let it be so' he should invoke the pitrs with the two verses 'uśantas tvā' (Ṛg. X. 16.12) and 'ā yantu' (Vāj. S. 19.58). Then, having offered arghya to the brāhmanas (representing the pitrs) with 'yā divyā' (vide n. 985), having given them sandalwood paste and the other things including garment as the last, he should collect the remainder of the water (in the arghya vessels) into the vessel meant for the father and should keep aside the latter to the north with its top turned downwards with the words 'thou art a seat of the pitrs'. Then he should begin to serve various kinds of food after bringing the utensils in which the food was cooked and holding them with both hands. (Verses 157–165 speak of the various foods to be offered and the periods of gratification caused thereby to the pitrs). While the brāhmanas are engaged in eating he should recite the Vedic hymns[1005] referring to 1004. मिता. on या I. 231 refers to the मन्त्र 'या दिव्या आपः पयसा'. The mantra in आश्व. गृ. IV. 7.13 'या दिव्या आप पृथिवी' has been translated above, as also the mantra 'tilosi' from Āśv. gr. IV. 7.8. How the offering of tila water in the midst of mango trees serves two purposes is finely stated in the following verse एको मुनिस्ताम्रकराग्रहस्तो ह्याम्रेषु मध्ये सलिलं ददाति। आम्राश्च सिक्ताः पितरश्च तृप्ता एका क्रिया द्व्यर्थकरी प्रसिद्धा॥ पद्म (सृष्टिखण्ड 11 77). वायु 111. 37, अग्नि 115. 40, compare महाभाष्य 'आम्राश्च सिक्ताः पितरश्च प्रीणिताः।' vol. I p 14.

1005 The verses of the पद्म (सृष्टि 9. 165–169) about what is to be recited are quoted by अपरार्क p 502, the first verse स्वाध्यायं etc. being मनु III. 232. Compare नारदपुराण (पूर्वार्ध 28 65–68) which among others mentions राक्षोघ्न, वैष्णव and पैतृक (Rg X. 15 1–13) मन्त्रs, पुरुषसूक्त, त्रिमधु, त्रिसुपर्ण. The Śāntika chapter, acc. to हेमाद्रि (श्रा.) p. 1075, is वाज सं. 36.10 ff which begins शं नो वात. पवताम्, The मधुब्राह्मण is what is called मधुविद्या contained in the बृह. उ II 5 (beginning with इयं पृथिवी सर्वेषां भूताना मधु) and छान्दोग्य III 1 (beginning with असौ वा आदित्यो देवमधु). The मण्डलब्राह्मण is an उपनिषद् (vide Indische Studien III, p. 325). हेमाद्रि (on श्रा) p. 1075 says 'यदेतन्मण्डलं तपतीत्यादि मण्डलब्राह्मणम्.

After the brāhmanas have finished their dinner the performer should collect together in a lump portions from all kinds of food, put water over them and spread[1006] it (on the ground over darbhas) in front of the plates of the dining brāhmanas and should say[1007] 'May those persons in our

These verses of the पद्मपुराण about what it is to be repeated occur in मत्स्यपुराण also (17.37-39). The रक्षोघ्नमन्त्रs are five verses (Rg IV. 4 1-5=Vāj. S. XIII. 9-13=Tai S. V. I. 2.14). हेमाद्रि (श्रा pp. 1069-1073) first sets out the texts mentioned by मनु, विष्णुधर्मसूत्र and the पुराणs, then gives the vedic texts to be repeated by the respective followers of the four Vedas (pp 1073-1074), then deals with the Saptārcis mantra (vide note 1020). Ultimately Hemādri and Śr. P. say that if a man does not know much he should engage in गायत्रीजप.

1006. The verse सार्ववर्णिकमन्नाद्यं · विकिरन्भुवि in पद्म (सृष्टि 9 170) is the same as Manu III. 244, मत्स्य 17.41 and विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 81.21

1007 अग्निदग्धाश्च ये जीवा येऽप्यदग्धा कुले मम। भूमौ दत्तेन तृप्यन्तु तृप्ता यान्तु परां गतिम्॥ येषां न माता न पिता न बन्धुर्न चान्यमित्रं न तथान्नमस्ति। तत्तृप्तयेऽन्नं भुवि दत्तमेतत्प्रयान्तु योगाय यतो यतस्तत्॥ असंस्कृतप्रमीतानां त्यागिनां कुलयोषिताम्। उच्छिष्टभागधेयानां दर्भेषु विकिरासनम्॥ पद्म॰ (सृष्टि 9 171-173) These verses occur in मत्स्य 17. 42-44 which presents some various and better readings (viz प्रयान्तु लोकेषु सुखाय तद्वत् and त्यक्तानां कुलयोषिताम्), बौ गृ सू II 10.42 (येऽग्निदग्धा जाता जीवा ये ये त्वदग्धा . गतिम्॥) is almost the same as the first verse. The verse असंस्कृत॰ is मनु III 245, विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 81 22, and Skandapurāna VI. 218 10-11. कात्यायन as quoted by अपरार्क p 505 reads 'ये अग्निदग्धा ये अनग्निदग्धा जीवा जाता कुले मम। भूमौ .गतिम्॥' Halāyudha in his com on Kātyāyana's Srāddhasūtra holds that अदग्धा is the proper reading and अनग्निदग्धाः is a bad reading and relies on a verse of the Brahmapurāna (folio 26b) त्यागिनां कुलयोषिता in मनु III 245 and elsewhere is explained in different ways. The words may mean 'of persons who abandoned wives descended from good families' or 'of women who forsook their families' or 'of those who committed suicide and of childless women' One can appreciate the kindly and noble sentiments underlying the above verses. In honouring the pindas, Manu III. 217 (which speaks of salutation to the six seasons) is deemed to provide for salutation of the six seasons as identified with six ancestors mentioned in the words रसशोषजीवस्वधाघोरमन्यु named in वाज सं. II. 32 'नमो व. पितरो रसाय ..पितरो मन्यवे' Vide श्राद्धतत्त्व pp. 241-242.

family that were cremated or not cremated be gratified by the food offered on the ground and being gratified may they attain the highest world (or bliss)! May this food offered on the ground for the gratification of those that have neither father nor mother nor relative nor any other friend and have no food (offered by any one else in śrāddha) proceed for union with them wherever it may have to go'! The remainder of the food cooked for śrāddha and food spread on the ground are the lot (or share) of those that died without the samskāras (caula, upanayana and the like) being performed on them, that abandoned their gurus and of (unmarried) women of the family. Finding that the brāhmanas are satisfied (by the dinner) he should give water once in the hand of each brāhmana, should place on the ground smeared with cow's dung and urine darbhas with their ends turned to the south and place on them pindas made from all kinds of foods (cooked for the śrāddha dinner) following the method employed in Pindapitryajña after washing them with water. He should then utter the names and gotra (of the ancestors to whom the pindas are to be offered) and should offer flowers and the rest and should again wash them (pindas). He should perambulate the pindas thrice holding darbhas in his hand and he should light lamps and offer flowers for the pindas. When the brāhmanas sip water after eating the dinner, he should himself sip water and give water once to each of the brāhmanas and flowers and aksatas and then aksayyodaka with sesamum grains. He should then make according to his means presents (to the brāhmanas) of cows,[1008] land, gold, clothes, splendid beds and whatever else was liked by the brāhmanas or by the performer himself or his father. He should not be stingy in his presents. Then he should request the brāhmanas to say

1008. पद्म (सृष्टि 9 180) is: गोभूहिरण्यवासांसि भव्यानि शयनानि च। दद्याद्यदिष्टं विप्राणामात्मनः पितुरेव च॥. There is epigraphic and other recorded evidence for gifts of land in śrāddhas An inscription of Karnadeva, son of Gāngeyadeva of the Cedi year 793 (1042 A. D) records the grant of a village (called Susi) to a brāhmana on the occasion of the Sāmvatsarika śrāddha of Gāngeyadeva at Prayāga. Vide I A vol. 16 pp. 204–207 for the grant of a village by the Chandella king Devavarmadeva in samvat 1107 (1050–51 A D.) on the anniversary of his mother's death and a grant in 1790 A. D. by Fattesing Bhosle, prince of Akkalkot, to a learned brāhmana of thirty bighas of land on the 10th day of his father's death (Bhārata-itihāsa-samśodhana-mandala, vol. 29, parts 1 and 2, 1948 p. 41). In the Āśramavāsikaparva 14 3–4 युधिष्ठिर is said to have made gifts of gold and jewels, slaves, blankets, villages and fields, elephants and horses with their trappings and of girls to ब्राह्मणs in श्राद्धs for भीष्म, द्रोण, दुर्योधन and others.

'svadhā' and they should do so. Then he should request the brāhmaṇas to pronounce the following benedictions and should receive them from them while he faces the east They are 'May the pitṛs be kind (not dreadful) to us'; the brāhmaṇas should say 'let it be so'; 'May our family increase!'; they should say 'so be it'; 'May donors in my family prosper and also (the study of) the Vedas and progeny and may these benedictions come out true!'; they should respond 'let it be so'. He should then remove the piṇḍas and request the brāhmaṇas to utter the word 'svasti' and they should do so. The remains of the food eaten by the brāhmaṇas remain (unremoved or unwiped) till the brāhmaṇas are dismissed; then he should perform the (usual) daily rites Vaiśvadeva, balihoma[1009] &c. The remnants of food that lie on the ground are the share of the group of slaves that were straight-forward and not roguish (dishonest or shirkers). The performer holding a vessel full of water and muttering the verse 'vāje vāje' (Ṛg. VII. 38 8, Vāj S. IX. 18, Tai. S I. 7. 8. 2) should touch the brāhmaṇas with the tip of kuśas and dismiss them. He should follow them out of his house for eight paces, should circumambulate them, should then return with his relatives, sons and wife, should then perform the daily Vaiśvadeva and balihoma. Then after Vaiśvadeva he should together with his relatives, sons, guests and servants partake of the food that remains in the cooking pots after what was eaten by the brāhmaṇas.

It should be noticed how closely the Padmapurāṇa follows the procedure (including the mantras) contained in Yājñavalkya. What procedure the author of a Purāṇa follows depends upon his learning and the sūtra that he studied. For example, the Viṣṇudharmottara I.140 appears to rely on the Āp gr. and the Āp. M. P. (II. 19-20), since I. 140. 12 refers to Āp M. P. II. 19.1, I. 140. 29-30 to Āp. M. P. II. 19. 14-16, I. 140. 35 to Āp M P. II. 20. 1. Similarly, Skanda (VI 224 3-51) closely follows Āśv. gr and Yāj.

Owing to the difference in details of śrāddha in the several gṛhyasūtras, the smṛtis and the purāṇas, an important question arises whether a person should perform a śrāddha rite only in accordance with the gṛhyasūtra of his own Veda or Śākhā or whether he may perform it after the inclusion (upasaṁhāra) of the several items found in other sūtras and smrtis though not included in the kalpa or grhya sūtra of his own Śākhā. This topic is discussed at great length by Hemādri (on śrāddha) pp. 748–759 and briefly by Medhātithi on Manu II. 29 and XI. 216, by the Mit on Yāj. III. 325, Aparārka p. 1053 and others. Those who are for strictly following the details in one's own sūtra alone argue as follows: If one were at liberty to include details other than those contained in one's own sūtra, the order of the details (krama) given in one's sūtra and the time specified for each detail would be interfered with. Besides, if the addition of details were permissible, one would be liable to the charge of giving up the usages of one's own family handed down for generations. These objectors rely upon such passages as that of the Visnudharmottara which states 'He who violating (the dictates of) his own sūtra acts according to a sūtra meant for others, treats thereby his own sage (the author of his sūtra) as unauthoritative and incurs (the blame of) doing what is improper.'[1010] The smrtis that contain additional details may be meant for those men who have no kalpa or grhya sūtra of their own or they may be useful for śūdras.

Those who espouse the view that as far as possible all details found in several grhyasūtras and smrtis on one rite should be included by every one rely mainly on Jaimini II. 4. 8–33 which is called 'śākhāntarādhikarananyāya' or 'sarvaśākhāpratyaya-nyāya'. The principal sūtra is Jai. II. 4. 9.[1011] It is established in this sūtra that the prayojana (purpose) or phala (reward to be secured) of the rite is the same in different sūtras and smrtis. For example, the rewards of śrāddha are stated to be the same in all sūtras and smrtis (vide notes 787–790 above); then the dravya (materials) and the deity are the same (in Pārvana śrāddha the deities are the paternal ancestors and the materials, viz. kuśas, tilas, water, vessels, foods &c. are the same in all works). The effort that is enjoined (the vidhi) is the same and the name (Pūrvaṇaśrāddha, Ekoddista śrāddha &c.) is the same. Therefore, on account of these various signs one easily recognizes that the same rite is being dealt with by all sūtras, even if many of them differ in details. It cannot be said that smrtis will be useful for those who have no sūtras of their own. Each man of the first three varnas is attached to some sūtra or other by the tradition of his family or caste. Similarly, the smrtis cannot be held to be meant for śūdras alone, since the smrtis mainly deal with upanayana, the study of the Vedas, agnihotra and other matters with which a śūdra has no concern. Similarly, the objection that if details were allowed to be inserted from other sūtras and smrtis the krama and kāla prescribed in one's sūtra might have to be set aside, the reply is contained in Jai. I. 3. 5-7 (explained at great length in H. of Dh. vol. III. pp. 841-848).[1012] The śruti says 'after getting ready a bundle of kuśa grass he prepares the vedi (altar)'. Here a certain order of acts is laid down. If after a bundle of kuśas is got ready, the man has a sneeze, he has to sip water (perform ācamana) immediately as laid down by Manu V. 145 and Vas. III. 38 before he prepares the vedi. So the objector says the krama will be interfered with. The reply is that the sequence (krama) is only a characteristic of the items in the śruti passage, that all that is meant is that the making of the altar follows the getting ready of a kuśa bundle, but that it is not meant that the making of the vedi should follow immediately after the bundle is got ready. Therefore, the conclusion is that whatever detail is not in conflict with one's own śākhā or sūtra may be included in the rite one is about to perform, but if there is a direct conflict, then one should stick to one's own sūtra. As observed by Kātyāyana 'whatever is declared, whether in great detail or in brief, in one's own grhyasūtra about a rite, if he performs that much, it may be taken that he has done all that is required of him; but what is not handed down in one's śākhā (or sūtra) but is contained in another śākhā and is not in conflict with one's own śākhā, should be performed by the learned, as in the case of āgnihotra and the like'.[1013] The first verse of Kātyāyana may be explained as applying where one's śākhā or sūtra deals with a matter without requiring any addition or as the next best course where one is not able to supplement one's sūtra owing to some unseen cause or owing to human difficulties. The Sangraha says that where different items of the śrāddha rite are declared to be performed at different times and there is no agreement among the sages, one should follow one's gṛhyasūtra, but where one's gṛhyasūtra is silent as to a certain item or as to the stage when it is to be performed, there is an option and one may follow the opinion of some sage as to that item.[1014] It appears that even the ancient gṛhya sūtras exhibit tendencies that led to the sarvaśākhā-pratyaya-nyāya e. g. Āśv. gr. (q. in n 966) employs several passages (such as 'Tılosi', 'Yā divyā,' which do not occur in the Ṛgveda.)

The तन्त्रवार्तिक explains 'संयोग इति प्राधान्यात् फलसंयोगग्रहणम्।...चोदनेति सर्वधात्वर्थभावनाविषयो विधिः।'. Vide H. of Dh. vol. III, p. 870 for a brief explanation of this सर्वशाखाप्रत्ययन्याय. मेधा. on मनु XI. 216 puts the maxim very briefly as 'आप्यायस्व सं ते पयांसि-इति स्मृत्यन्तरोक्तो विधिरपेक्षितव्यः। एकशाखत्वात्सर्वस्मृतीनामसति विरोधे समग्रं योज्यं विरोधे तु विकल्पः।'.

It is owing to this maxim of 'sarvaśākhā-pratyayanyāya' that medieval digests go on heaping up details from all smṛtis and purāṇas in their descriptions of the several śrāddhas, the procedures of which were not originally very extensive.

The Kūrmapurāṇa[1015] provides that the performer should before noon tıme is past bring to his house the invited brāhmaṇas

The स्मृतिच (I p 5) adds another half verse of कात्यायन viz. आत्मतन्त्रे तु यत्नोक्तं तत्कुर्यात्पारतन्त्रिकम्' In आत्मतन्त्र, तन्त्र means सिद्धान्त (i e. one's सूत्र) अग्निहोत्रादिकं यथा—This is explained by श्राद्धसौख्य (टोडरानन्द folio 64a) as follows. who have shaved themselves and pared their nails, should offer them materials for brushing the teeth and request them to sit down on separate seats, then give them oil and water for bathing. It will be seen that here the purāṇa has added several details that were not provided for by the Āśv. gr. (n. 966), Manu (III. 208), Yāj. (I. 226) and even by some of the purāṇas such as the Varāha 14. 8, which begin the procedure with seating the brāhmaṇas in the afternoon on seats after welcoming them. Many more examples could be given, but that attempt is not made owing to considerations of space.

Before proceeding to give some idea as to how the pārvaṇa-śrāddha was dealt with in medieval and modern times, observations must be made on several relevant matters, on which there is a difference of views or which are important in a general way.

When the invited brāhmaṇas come after noon, it is provided in some of the purāṇas that two maṇḍalas should be made in front of the performer's residence for receiving the brāhmaṇas. For example, the Nāradapurāṇa states[1016] 'the maṇḍala for a brāhmaṇa performer should be square (four cornered) in size, for a kṣatriya triangular, circular for a vaiśya and for a śūdra mere sprinkling of the ground with water is enough.' The maṇḍalas should be made on ground smeared with cowdung and with water mixed with cow's urine. Of the two maṇḍalas one should be on the northern side sloping towards the north and the other on the southern side sloping towards the south. On the northern maṇḍala kuśas with points towards the east should be placed along with akṣata (unbroken or whole) grains and on southern one double-folded kuśas should be placed along with sesamum grains. The northern maṇḍala should generally be two cubits on each side while the southern one should be four cubits on each side. The brāhmaṇa or brāhmaṇas that represent the Viśvedevāḥ should be honoured in the northern maṇḍala first by the performer himself with water for washing their feet after bending his right knee and the brāhmaṇas representing the pitṛs should be then honoured in the southern maṇḍala with water for washing the feet (hence called pādya) after bending his left knee. The mantra at the time of offering pādya is 'śan no devīr' Ṛg. X. 9. 4).[1017] After the mantra is recited he should give the water to the Vaiśvadeva brāhmaṇas and to the pitrya brāhmaṇas as noted below (in n. 1017). After the pādya water is offered the brāhmaṇas should come in front of the maṇḍalas and sip water (take ācamana).

The ancient sūtras and smṛtis like those of Manu and Yāj. (I. 229) say generally that the Viśvedevāḥ are to be invoked, but some of the later smṛtis (such as Prajāpati, verses 179–190) and purāṇas contain verses enumerating ten names of Viśvedevās and assign two each (out of the ten) to five classes of śrāddhas. They say:[1018] "in śrāddha performed in an iṣṭi the Viśvedevas are Kratu and Dakṣa, in a Nāndīmukha śrāddha they are Vasu and Satya, in Kāmyaśrāddha Dhuri and Locana, in naimittika śrāddha Kāla and Kāma and in Pārvaṇa-śrāddha Purūravas and Ārdrava'. According to the Sm. C. and Hemādri a seat (āsana) is to be given to the Vaiśvadeva brāhmaṇas and invocations are to be made in the several śrāddhas after taking the names enumerated above. The Mit on Yāj I. 229, Hemādri (on śrāddha p. 1225) and other digests state that the mantras for invoking the Viśvedevas in Pārvana-śrāddha are two viz. 'Viśvedevāsa āgata' (Ṛg. II. 41. 13) and 'āgacchantu mahābhāgā' (q. above in note 984), while the Sm. C. (p. 444) prescribes an additional mantra 'viśve devāh śrunuta' (Ṛg. VI. 52. 13).

The श्रा कि कौ (p 56) reads पुरोरवा and माद्रवा' कल्पतरु (श्रा p. 142) reads मार्द्रवश्च दशैते तु The ब्रह्माण्डपुराण (III. 3, 30–31) enumerates the ten विश्वेदेवा somewhat differently. It reads 'पुरूरवो माद्रवसौ रोचमानश्च' The ब्रह्माण्ड (III. 12, 3 ff.) states that ten sons were born to विश्वा, one of the daughters of दक्ष. When they performed severe tapas on a Himālaya peak Brahmā gave them the boon they wanted (श्राद्धेऽस्माकं भवेदंशो ह्येष नः काङ्क्षितो वरः) and the pitrs agreed. The pitrs said (verse 13) 'अग्रे दत्त्वा तु युष्माकमस्माकं दास्यते तत। विसर्जनमथास्माकं पूर्वं पश्चात्तु दैवतम्॥.' This legend is obviously an attempt to explain the usage about vaiśvadeva brāhmaṇas at a श्राद्ध.

The general rule is that the Vaiśvadeva brāhmanas are to be seated facing the east and the pitrya brāhmanas facing the north (Yāj I. 228, Varāha 14. 11), but there were at least five differing views about the directions which the brāhmanas were to face as Hemādri (on śrāddha p. 1200) points out. It is further pointed out by Hemādri and others (like Yāj I. 247) that in all items in the procedure of śrāddha the Vaiśvadevika brāhmanas have precedence except in the matter of washing the hand smeared with the remains of food and the final dismissal of the brāhmanas at the end of the śrāddha.[1019] It may be noted that in southern and western India brāhmanas invited at śrāddha are worshipped, while in Bengal it is the effigy made with darbhas (darbhabatu) that is worshipped as shown by the late M. M. Haraprasad Shastri (Catalogue of Mss. vol. III p. 406). The Śrāddha-tattva (folio 2b) of Raghunandana provides for the same: 'purūravā-mādravasoı viśvesām devānām pārvana-śrāddham kuśamayabrāhmane karisye iti precchet.'

In the Vāyupurāna[1020] it is stated that the following mantra should be repeated thrice at the beginning and end of a śrāddha and at the time of offering pindas; on repeating it the pitrs come quickly to the śrāddha and rāksasas run away and that the mantra saves the pitrs in all the three worlds. The mantra is 'Perpetual adoration to the gods, to pitrs and to the great Yogins, to svadhā, to svāhā'. The Sm C (on śrāddha

A certain order of words about referring to the ancestors in offering a seat, offering kuśas on seat, and arghya is laid down by Bṛhaspati,[1021] some of the purāṇas and the digests. As almost in every case there are different views here also. Bṛhaspati says: 'when giving a seat, when offering arghya, or pindas, in offering ablutions of water on pindas, the performer has to declare his relation to each of the ancestors, the names and gotras of the ancestors and also the form in which each of the ancestors is to be contemplated (viz as Vasu, Rudra, Āditya respectively). It is further laid down that the genitive is to be employed for the ancestor's name in offering a seat (to the pitrya brāhmaṇa) and akṣayyodaka, the objective in invoking the pitṛs, the dative in offering food, the vocative in other cases.

It is laid down that the performer has to take ācamana (sip water) in śrāddha rite six times viz., at the commencement of śrāddha, when washing the feet of invited brāhmanas, in worshipping them, in making the vikira, in offering pindas and at the end of the śrāddha [1022]

An important question which exercised the minds of many medieval writers was 'who was the real recipient (sampradāna)[1023] of the offerings made in śrāddha, whether the brāhmaṇas or the pitṛs'. Relying on the words of the Āśv. gr. IV. 8. 1 (quoted above in n. 966 'etasmin kāle ... dānam) and passages of the purāṇas such as the Varāha (13. 51) 'vibhave sati viprebhyo asmān uddiśya dāsyati', the Mahārṇavaprakāśa, Harihara and some others held that brāhmaṇas were the recipients, while others like Śrīdatta, relying on indications furnished by śruti passages like Vāj. S. 19. 36 (akṣan pitaraḥ amīmadanta pitaraḥ) and such formulas as 'pitar-etat te arghyam' or 'etad vaḥ pitaro vāsaḥ,' held that the real recipients intended were the pitṛs, but, as the pitṛs had gone to another world and could not be bodily present to receive the gifts of such things as sandlewood paste, flowers and clothes, the latter were only handed over or assigned to the brāhmaṇas who were for the moment contemplated as not different from the pitṛs.[1023a] Vide Sm. C. (śrāddha pp. 447–449), Śr. Pr. pp. 30–31 for a discussion of these two view-points. It should, however, be noted that the water given to the brāhmaṇas and the dakṣiṇā given to them were only meant for the brāhmaṇas, the former for purification and the latter for the inexhaustible merit that dakṣiṇā to brāhmaṇas conferred.

It is to be noted that in the invocation (āvāhana) of the pitṛs there is a divergence of views as to the mantras to be employed and also as to the stage when it is to be made. Hemādri (śrāddha, pp. 1254–56) states that there were five different views on the latter point, the three most important of which were that āvāhana should come before giving darbhas as āsana on the left side of the seats of the pitrya brāhmaṇas or after giving such darbhas or after agnaukaraṇa. As regards the former (viz. the mantras), Yāj. (I 232–233), the Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa and several others say that the invocation mantra is 'uśantas-tvā' (Ṛg. X 16. 12, Vāj. S 19 70, Tai S II. 6. 12. 1) and after the āvāhana the performer should perform japa of the verse 'ā yantu naḥ' (Vāj. S. 19. 58). The Viṣṇudharma-sūtra[1024] (73. 10–12) states 'The performer after having received permission from the brāhmaṇas should invite the Manes. Having driven away the Yātudhānas (demons) by strewing grains of sesamum and by reciting the two mantras (the first of which begins with 'may the Asuras go away') he should invite the Manes with the four mantras 'come near, ye Manes!', 'conduct them here, O Agni!', 'May my (ancestors) come near', 'this is your (share), O Manes'. Hemādri (śrāddha pp. 1260–1267) points out how the mantras differ according to different writers.

There is a great deal of discussion about agnaukaraṇa mentioned in Yāj. I. 236–237. The Mit points out that if a man has kept śrauta fires by the sarvādhāna method then in the pārvaṇa-śrāddha that he offers after piṇḍapitṛyajña he offers homa in the Dakṣiṇāgni, as he has no aupāsana (i. e. gṛhya) fire and supports this by quoting a passage which occurs in the Viṣṇudharmottara-purāṇa.[1025] But if a man consecrates the śrauta fires by the ardhādhāna[1026] method, then he has to offer pārvaṇa homa in the aupāsana fire and one who is without śrauta fires and has kept up only aupāsana fire has to offer homa in that fire. One who has neither the śrauta fires nor the gṛhya fire offers it in the brāhmaṇa's hand only. The Mit. relies on Manu III. 212 and on two verses from a gṛhya and comes to the conclusion that one who has consecrated śrauta fires performs homa in dakṣiṇa fire in the case of Anvaṣṭakya śrāddha, the śrāddha on the day previous to Aṣṭakā, the śrāddha performed in the dark half of each month on some day from the 5th and in the case of pārvana-śrāddha, but he performs, in the case of kāmya, ābhyudayika, Ekoddista and Astakā śrāddhas, homa only on the pitrya brāhmana's hand; while for one who has kept no sacred fire the homa is to be made only in the pitrya brāhmana's hand. Vide Hemādri (śrāddha pp. 1328–1344), Bālambhatti (on ācāra p. 518). The Todarānanda (śrāddha-saukhya) following Manu III. 282 states that one who is an Agnihotrin cannot perform a pārvana-śrāddha on any day except on darśa (i. e. on amāvāsyā).

Another important question on which there is great divergence concerns the number of āhutis to be offered in agnaukarana, the deities to whom the homa was to be offered, the order in which the deities were to be named and the form of words to be used. On these matters there appears to have been divergent views from very ancient times. According to the Śat. Br. II. 4. 2. 12–13 the āhutis were only[1027] two, they were offered to Agni and Soma in that order and the word svāhā was used at the end. According to the Tai. Br I. 3. 10. 2–3[1028] the āhutis were three, they were to be offered to Soma, Agni and to Yama in that order and the formula ended with 'svadhā namah' (and not with 'svāhā'). It is therefore that a verse of Kātyāyana[1029] says "whether to employ the word 'svāhā' or the words 'svadhā namah', whether and when to wear the sacred chord in the yajñopavīta form or prācīnāvīta form and what was to be the number of āhutis—all these have to be understood from one's own sūtra." The difference of views which is noticed as far back as the Brāhmanas persists in the sūtras, smrtis, purānas and is briefly indicated here. The Āp. Gr S. (quoted above in n. 981) speaks of thirteen āhutis, seven with food and six with clarified butter. Two āhutis only are mentioned by Āśv. Śrauta II. 6. 12 (quoted in note 974), Āsv. gr. IV. 7. 20, Śankha-Likhita,[1030] Kāthaka-gṛhya, Nārada-purāṇa (pūrvārdha 28. 48) and Mārkandeya-purāṇa. Three āhutis are mentioned by most of the smṛtis and purāṇas, such as Baud. Dh. S. II. 14. 7,[1031] Śān. Śrauta IV. 3 and gṛhya IV. 1. 13, Visnu Dh. S. 73. 12, Manu III. 211, Varāhapurāṇa[1032] (14. 21-22), Brahmāṇḍa-purāṇa (Upodghātapāda 11. 93-94), Viṣṇudharmottara I. 140. 19. It is here that various combinations of the order of the deities and of the words 'svāhā' and 'svadhā' occur. The texts of a few works are cited below for illustration. Some give the order as 'Soma accompanied by the pitṛs, Agni the carrier of kavya, Yama Aṅgiras;' while others give it as 'Agni the carrier of kavya, Soma accompanied by the pitṛs, Yama Vaivasvata &c.' It is further provided that the āhuti to Agni is made to the southern side of the fire, to Soma on the northern part of it and in the middle of the two sides to Vaivasvata (Yama).[1033]

Various rules of etiquette about serving food, about the way brāhmaṇas are to eat and related matters have been laid down from ancient times and are observed even now. The Sm. C (p. 465-470), Hemādri (śrāddha pp. 1367-1384), the Śr. Pr. pp. 116-123 and other digests contain elaborate rules on these matters. Yāj. I. 237 prescribes that what remains after offering homa should be served in the plates meant for the brāhmaṇas representing the Fathers and the plates should preferably be of silver. Kātyāyana says that the performer who has no fire (either śrauta or smārta) should offer the homa on the hand of the most eminent among the pitrya brāhmaṇas to the accompaniment of a mantra and should offer the remainder in the plates of the other pitrya brāhmaṇas.[1034] The Sm. C. notes that Yama and the Vāyupurāṇa say that the homa should be in the hand of the daiva brāhmaṇa and that on account of this conflict there is an option. It is further provided that a portion of the food from which agnaukaraṇa was effected should be kept aside for making piṇḍas (Mārkaṇḍeya and Garuḍa). The food should be served by the performer himself wearing the sacred thread in the yajñopavīta form or by his wife of the same caste or by some attendant who is purified. Manu (III. 224–229, 231–233, 236–238) contains several rules [1034a] 'Himself holding the vessels full of food with both hands the performer should slowly place them near the brāhmaṇas seated for dinner while thinking of his ancestors. That food, which is brought near the brāhmaṇas without (the containing vessel being held in) both hands, is snatched away by wicked asuras. The performer being himself pure and concentrating his mind (only on the serving of food) should place the vessels containing the

Or ब्रह्मोद्या कथा' may mean 'talks relating to the exposition of Brahma' (the cause of the world), as Kullūka explains. विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 81. 19 is हविर्गुणान्न ब्राह्मणा ब्रूयुर्दात्रा पृष्टाः. This is like Manu III 236. मनु III. 237 is the same as वसिष्ठ XI 32, Viṣṇu Dh. S. 81. 20, Aṅgiras verse 133, Bṛhad-Yama III. 27, Laghu-Śātātapa 103, Viṣṇudharmottara I. 140 46. side dishes viz. broths, vegetables, milk, curds, ghee and honey on the ground (and not on a wooden stool or the like). The vessels placed on the ground should contain various kinds of food (such as sweetmeats, pāyasa), fruits and roots, delicious flesh, spiced or perfumed drinks. Having brought near the brāhmanas all the vessels containing food, he should serve it in the plates declaring the characteristic of each kind of food (saying 'this is sweet, this is sour' &c.). The performer while serving should not shed tears (remembering his ancestors), he should not become angry, should not utter falsehood, he should not touch the (vessel containing) food with his foot and should not serve food with a violent jerk. Whatever is liked by the brāhmanas should be served to them without any grumbling and he should talk about Brahma (or about Vedic riddles), because that is agreeable to the pitrs. The performer himself, being pleased, should (by his sweet speech) gladden the brāhmanas, should make them partake of food without hurry, and should urge them on frequently (to take more food) by declaring the good points of the various items of food. All food should be steaming hot and the brāhmanas should partake of it silently and should not themselves speak of the good points of the food even when questioned by the performer. When the food is hot, when the brāhmanas eat in silence and when the good qualities of the food are not declared by the brāhmanas, the Fathers partake of it. When a brāhmana (at a śrāddha dinner) partakes of food, having his head covered with a garment (a turban &c)or facing the south or having his sandals on, evil spirits partake of the food (and not the Fathers).' As early as Gaut., it is provided that the food for the brāhmanas should be of the highest sort and should be enriched by condiments and flavoured.

Some of the other rules are: The Prajāpati-smṛti (verses 57-62) states who should cook the food for the śrāddha dinner. The wife, any fortunate (or handsome) woman of the performer's gotra whose husband is living and who has a son or brother and is devoted to waiting upon her elders, the performer's teacher's wife, his maternal uncle's wife, paternal or maternal aunt, his sister, his daughter or daughter-in-law, all of them having their husbands alive, should engage in the cooking of the food for śrāddha. Women of good family, who have a large progeny, whose husbands are alive and who are about 50 years old or these women if they have become widows, and the wife of one's paternal uncle or brother, one's mothers (natural or step-mothers) and the mothers of one's father may cook the śrāddha food and also a woman of the same gotra who is mild by temper. In the Anuśāsana parva (92.15) it is stated that a woman belonging to a gotra other than that of the deceased should not be employed for cooking śrāddha food. One's brother, paternal uncle, brother's son, sister's son, one's son, pupil, one's daughter's son or daughter's husband may also engage in cooking the srāddha food, but not a woman who wears a white and wet garment, who has let her hair loose, who does not wear a bodice, who is ill or who has bathed her head. Before the brāhmanas begin to eat, the food should be first served in the plates for the Vaiśvadeva brāhmanas and then in those of the pitrya brāhmanas (Visnu Dh S. 73 13-14), but once the brāhmanas have begun to eat there is no such precedence, whatever each brāhmana may be noted as requiring should be served to him (as indicated by Manu III. 231). The performer of the śrāddha when serving food to the brāhmanas (including pitrya) wears his sacred thread in the upavīta form Though it is said that the food should be hot, that does not apply to such eatables as curds, fruits and roots and flavoured[1035] drinks (as Śankha XIV.13 and Skandapurāna say) As Hemādri (śrāddha p. 1371) points out, the serving of food in a śrāddha rite should be done with the right hand supported by the left; besides, nothing should be served with the bare hand or with a single hand, but with a wooden ladle or other utensil (but not an iron one). All cooked food, all side dishes and ghee should be served with a ladle (and not with the bare hand) but not water or eatables like laddus No salt was to be directly served (Visnu Dh S. 79. 12). In Kātyāyana's Śrāddha-sūtra it is provided[1036] "The food that remains after agnaukarana should be served in the plates of the pitrya brāhmanas and the performer should touch each plate for those brāhmanas after repeating the mantra 'the earth is thy vessel, the sky is the cover, I offer nectar in the brāhmana's nectar-like mouth; svāhā'. Then the performer plunges the (right) thumb of the pitrya brāhmana in the food (the remains of the homa in fire) with the ṛk or yajus addressed to Visnu; and after scattering sesamum grains all round the place where the dinner is to go on with the mantra 'the asuras and rāksasas) are struck and driven away' he (the performer) should serve hot food very much liked (by the departed or by the brāhmanas)". Yāj. I. 238 briefly refers (as translated above) to the mantras and the item of plunging the thumb of the brāhmanas in the food; and so does the Baud. Dh. S. also (II. 8. 15–16). The Kālikā-purāna prescribes[1037] that the thumb of the brāhmana should be moved about in the food covered with ghee and honey with the mantra 'the earth is thy vessel &c.' because Visnu in the form of the thumb protects food meant for sacrifices to gods and manes. The Baud. Pitṛmedhasūtra provides that while plunging the thumb of the brāhmana in the food served it should be so arranged that the nail of the thumb is not smeared with food.[1038] Vasistha provides that the brāhmanas eating śrāddha food should always hold the plate from which they are eating with (the left) hand till the end of the dinner. Śankha-Likhita provide[1039] that brāhmanas (eating śrāddha food) should not declare the good or bad points of the food served, should not say what is untrue, should not praise each other, nor should they say 'there is plenty of food and drink (and so do not serve more food), except by signs made with the hand.' Whatever is offered in a brāhmana's hand (by way of agnaukarana) and whatever food is placed in the plates should be mixed up and eaten. Hemādri quotes passages from the Maitrāyanīya-sūtra and from the Skandapurāna setting out the mantras wherewith certain articles were to be served; e. g. the Skandapurāna says that pāyasa should be served with the verse 'namo vah pitaro' (Vāj. S. II. 32, Tai. S. III. 2. 5. 5), clarified butter with the mantra 'Tejosi śukram', curds with the mantra 'dadhikrāvno' (Rg. IV. 39. 6, Vāj. S. 23. 32, Tai. S. 1. 5. 11. 4). Āp Dh. S. (II. 8. 18. 11) provides that the leavings of a śrāddha dinner should not be given to one who is inferior to the invited brāhmanas in qualities and Manu III. 249 states that the man who after eating śrāddha dinner gives the leavings to a śūdra falls in the Kālasūtra Hell.

The Matsyapurāna and some other works provide that the brāhmanas should pronounce blessings on the performer (who faces the east) after they have sipped water and have been given water, flowers and akṣata grains. The performer prays 'May our Fathers be not terrible (i. e. be kind) to us.' The brāhmanas reply 'let it be so'. The performer prays 'May our family grow', 'May donors increase in our family and also food', 'May these blessings turn out to be true'. To all these the brāhmanas reply after each one of the prayers[1040] 'May it be so'. There are rules about the time when the leavings or particles of food in the plates of the brāhmanas that ate the dinner should be removed or swept away Vas. (XI. 21–22) and the Kūrmapurāna provide that the leavings of food should not be removed till the Sun sets, since streams of nectar flow from them, which are drunk by the (spirits of) those departed persons for whom no water was offered. Manu III. 265 (which is the same as Matsya 17 56 and Padma, Srstikhanda 9.185) provides another rule that the leavings of the food in the plates may remain where they are till the brāhmanas are dismissed and depart.

Hemādri (śrāddha, p. 1512)[1041] therefore provides that if the performer has another house the leavings may not be removed till sunset, but if he has only one house, they may be removed after the brāhmanas have gone away (vide Yāj I. 257, Matsya 17.56). It is further provided by Brhaspati[1042] that the plates should not be removed before the brāhmanas pronounce the word 'svasti', and Jātūkarnya[1043] and the Skandapurāna say that the plates and the leavings should be removed by the performer himself or by his pupil or son, but not by women nor by a child nor by one who is not of the same caste Manu III. 258 provides that, after the brāhmanas have left, the performer should look at the south and pray to the pitrs for certain blessings contained in Manu III. 259 which are the same as Yāj I 246 translated above (vide p. 447), Visnu Dh. S 73. 28, Matsya 16. 49–50. The Āp. gr. 209 (q. in note 981), Āp Dh. S II 7. 17. 16, Manu III. 264, Yāj. I. 249 provide that the performer should partake of the remainder of the food cooked for the śrāddha along with his wife, paternal and maternal relatives after reciting (according to Haradatta) the Yājusa mantra (Āp. M. P. II. 20.26) which means 'entering the life breath I offer nectar; my soul is centred in Brahman for the sake of immortality.' The Āp. gr and Āp. Dh. S. provide[1044] that the performer must eat at least a morsel of the food left after serving to the brāhmanas. Vyāsa and Devala prescribe that on the day of śrāddha the performer must not observe a fast (even if he usually does so as on Ekādaśī or Śivarātra). A way out was provided by the Brahmavaivarta-purāna by recommending that the performer should merely smell the remnants of the śrāddha food. Vide

Hemādri (śrāddha, pp. 1519-1521) for the discussion. Hemādri (p. 1485) refers to the practice (observed even now) that after the performer receives the blessings referred to above, his son, grandson and the like should offer adoration to the devatās in the form of pindas. The brāhmanas should praise the good characteristics of the food served at the end of the śrāddha ceremony.[1045] The brāhmanas should not get up from the dinner, carelessly leaving remnants of food in their plates, but they may leave in the plates a little food except milk, curds, honey or barley flour.[1046]

There were several views as to the exact stage at which the offerings of pindas were to be made. According to Śān. Gr. IV. 1.9., Āśv. gr. IV. 8. 12,[1047] Śankha 14.11, Manu III. 260-261, Yāj. I 242 and several other works, the performer offers the lumps of boiled rice after the brāhmanas have finished eating their dinner. The pindas are made with boiled rice mixed with sesame and are placed on darbhas on a clean spot and at a distance of about one aratni from [1048] the plates in which the brāhmanas ate and the performer faces the south. Here again there are two opinions, one being that pindas were to be offered before the brāhmanas sip water (perform ācamana) after dinner (e. g. Āśv. gr. IV. 8. 12-13, Śrāddha-sūtra of Kātyāyana, kandikā 3), while others hold that they were to be offered after the brāhmanas have rinsed their mouth and taken ācamana. Another view referred to as the view of some by Śān. gr. IV. 1. 10 and Manu III. 261 was that pindas were to be offered to the ancestors first after honouring the invited brāhmanas or after agnaukarana and then the brāhmanas were to partake of the dinner The Brahmāndapurāna[1049] emphatically asserts that this is the correct position as stated by Brhaspati. The Visnu Dh. S. (73 15–24) provides that the pindas are to be offered to the ancestors while the brāhmanas are actually eating. A fourth view is that of the Āp. gr. 24.9, Hir gr. (II. 12.2–3) which state that the performer[1050] should, after the brāhmanas have eaten and gone away and he has followed and circumambulated them, offer pindas. Owing to this conflict of views Hemādri (quoting smrti) and the Madanapārijāta (p 600) say that each one should follow the procedure laid down in his own śākhā[1051] Hemādri adds that those in whose grhyasūtra no special time is mentioned for pindadāna should follow the view that pindas are to be offered after the brāhmanas have partaken of the dinner and sipped water. The Śr. P. (p. 247) endorses this view.[1052] The pindas were to be deposited on bunches of (25) darbhas for each pinda. Aparārka on Yāj. I. 24 states that in all cases without exception pindas were to be offered near the plates from which the brāhmanas took their meals, while Hemādri who relies on Kātyāyana's word 'ucchistasannidhau' says that where the performer is an āhitāgni the pindas were to be offered near his sacred fire, but when a performer had not kept the sacred fires pindas were to be offered near the plates from which brāhmanas ate the śrāddha food. The Śrāddhasāra (p 163) quotes Atri to the effect that pindas should be offered at a distance of three aratnis from where the brāhmanas ate the śrāddha dinner and that in such śrāddhas as Navaśrāddhas Vaiśvadeva is to be performed before pindadāna and that it is to be performed after pindadāna in Sāmvatsarika śrāddha, Mahālaya and the like (p. 164).

There is another conflict of views as regards the ancestors to whom pindas are to be offered at the śrāddha on amāvāsya. Most of the ancient Vedic works refer only to the three paternal ancestors as the devatās of the Pārvana-śrāddha and not to any other relatives. The three paternal ancestors are separately the devatās of śrāddha and not cumulatively, as indicated by the Āśv. Śrauta II. 6.15 and Visnu Dh S. 73 13–14. The important questions are whether the wives of the paternal ancestors, viz. the mother, the grandmother and the paternal great-grandmother were associated with their husbands in ancient times and secondly, whether the three paternal ancestors of one's mother viz. the maternal grandfather, the maternal great-grandfather and the maternal great-great-grandfather were invoked together with their wives in the Pārvana. The answer to both these questions so far as the Vedas and Brāhmanas are concerned is in the negative. Vide Tai. S. I. 8. 5.1, Tai. Br. I. 3. 10, II. 6. 16, Vāj. S. 19 36–37, Śat. Br. II. 4. 2. 16, in all of which the only persons expressly named are the pitrs and three paternal ancestors. It may be noted, however, that in Vāj S. 9. 19 (which is cited by Kātyāyana at the end of Śrāddhasūtra 3 as the mantra to be recited when following the brāhmanas that are dismissed) there is a clear reference to paternal ancestors and also to mothers. Almost all sūtras also are silent as regards the invocation of the maternal ancestors in Pārvana-śrāddha along with paternal ones. Vide [1053] Āśv. Śr.; Sudarśana on Āp. gr. VIII. 21. 2 states that the Sūtrakāra and Bhāsyakāra did not speak of Mātāmahaśrāddha as it is not obligatory for a daughter's son to offer it. The Śrāddhasūtra of Kātyāyana [1054] speaks of three pindas being made for the paternal ancestors and three for the mother's paternal ancestors. The Gobhilāsmṛti provides[1055] that six pindas should be offered except in the Anvastakāśrāddha, the first śrāddha (on the 11th day), the sixteen śrāddhas and the yearly śrāddha for a deceased person. Dhaumya[1056] prescribes that where the paternal ancestors are honoured (or fed) the maternal ancestors also should be certainly honoured without making any difference (between the two classes); if he makes a distinction the performer will go to Hell. The Visnupurāna,[1057] the Brahmāndapurāna and the Varāhapurāna say that some hold that a śrāddha for maternal ancestors is to be performed separately while other sages hold that one śrāddha is to be offered at the same time to the paternal and maternal ancestors. Brhaspati (q. by Kalpataru on śrāddha p. 204) prescribes[1058] that one should offer pindas made from all food cooked for the śrāddha and mixed with honey and sesamum grains for both paternal and maternal ancestors according to the rules of one's gṛhyasūtra. The Varāhapurāna (14 40–41) says that pitrya brāhmanas should be dismissed first and then the daiva brāhmanas together with those for the mother's ancestors and that separate pindas were to be offered to the mother's paternal ancestors (14 37). Some held the view that the offering of pindas to maternal ancestors was obligatory for the putrikā-putra[1059] (son of the appointed daughter) or for a daughter's son that inherited the wealth of his maternal grandfather. Bṛhat-Parāśara (chap. V. p. 153) mentions several views on this point. It seems probable that when the appointment of a daughter as a son became rare or went out of vogue the maternal ancestors came to be associated with the paternal ancestors in pārvana-śrāddha.

The question when the wives of ancestors became associated with the male ancestors cannot be solved satisfactorily. The pitāmahī is not mentioned in the extant Vedic Literature. But it is certain that the wives of male ancestors had come to be associated with their husbands in the sūtra period. For example, the Hir. Gr. II. 10 associates the mother, the paternal grandmother and the paternal great-grandmother with their respective husbands in the monthly śrāddha performed in the dark half. Similarly, the Baud. gr. II. 11.34 not only associates in the Astakā śrāddha the male maternal ancestors with the male paternal ancestors, but also their respective wives. The Āp. M. P. [1060] has mantras referring to the three male paternal ancestors as well as their wives. The Śān. gr. (IV. 1.11) provides that behind the lumps for the paternal ancestors the performer places the lumps for their wives, putting something between the two sets of pindas and the commentator explains that darbhas are placed between the two sets. The Kauśika sūtra (88 12) also provides for the offering of pindas to the wives of male ancestors to the south of the pindas for male ancestors. The Āśv. gr. (II. 5. 4-5), while speaking of the Anvastakya rite, refers to pindas to be offered to the wives of ancestors with the addition of rum and the scum of boiled rice. The Vaikhānasa-smārta-sūtra IV. 7 (after describing the Pinda-pitryajña in IV. 5-6) notes that the difference between it and the ordinary monthly śrāddha is that in the latter pindas are offered to the wives of the pitrs [1061]. Dr. Caland (in 'Ahnencult' p. 164) thinks that this inclusion of the women ancestors among those to whom pindas were to be offered was made by taking over from Anvastakya ceremonial described above. This conjecture does not look very probable. The Astakā rites existed from remote antiquity as shown above. If the offering of pindas to women ancestors were borrowed from the Anvastakya this item would have figured in all sūtras just as Aṣṭakā śrāddha does. It is rather more probable that the extension to women was a natural growth in course of time. Some of the smṛtis emphasize the participation of the wives of paternal ancestors in the pārvaṇaśrāddha offerings. Śātātapa states[1062]: 'In what is offered to the pitṛs after Sapiṇḍīkaraṇa, the mother is a participant everywhere. A śrāddha may be separately offered to the mother in the Anvaṣṭakā rites, in Vṛddhi-śrāddha, at Gayā and on the anniversary of the day of her death; but in other cases it is performed along with the husband'. It is stated by Bṛhaspati that the mother partakes of the śrāddha food along with her husband (i. e. the father of the performer); that the same rule applies to the paternal grandmother and the paternal great-grandmother[1063]. The Kalpataru[1064] and others held that the wives of the paternal ancestors were not devatās in the pārvaṇa-śrāddha, but they only enjoyed the ethereal food which came to the pitṛs, while Hemādri and other southern writers held that the mother and other female ancestors were among the devatās of pārvaṇa-śrāddha, but not the step-mother. There was a divergence of views whether the words 'mother', 'paternal grandmother' and 'paternal great-grandmother' included the co-wives (sapatnīs) of these. Hemādri (on śrāddha pp. 97–104) has a long disquisition on this question. According to one view the step-mother, the co-wife of the pitāmahī and the co-wife of the prapitāmahī would be included in the presentation formula (as quoted below), while according to Hemādri only the real mother, the real paternal grand-mother and the real paternal great-grandmother would ordinarily be included except on rare occasions such as a Mahālayaśrāddha or a śrāddha at Gayā.[1065]

As regards the mantra to be recited when offering each of the pindas there is some divergence of views, which reaches far into antiquity. The pinda[1066] is offered to each ancestor after stating his gotra, his relationship to the performer and name (all in the vocative). According to several writers the form of the presentation of the pinda is 'this is for thee, O Father! N. N. (by name) and so and so by gotra.' In the Tai. S. I. 8.5 1, in the Āp. M. P. II. 20.13 and in some sūtras, the following is added 'and for those who follow thee' (ye ca tvām-anu)[1067] In the Gobhila-gṛhya IV. 3 6 and Khādiragṛhya the formula is still longer 'This pinda is thine, O father! and of those who follow thee and of those whom thou followest.[1068] To thee, Svadhā!'. The Bhāradvāja[1069] gr. II. 12 introduces slight changes. It has been already noted above (n. 781) how the Śat. Br. disapproves of the usage of the Tai. S. in this matter, the reason being[1070] that when the son offers a pinda to his father and employs the formula 'this is thine and of those that follow thee', he would be included among those that follow the father and be thus offering a pinda to himself, which is inauspicious. It is provided by Gobhila-grhya[1071] that if he does not know the names of his ancestors he should put down the first pinda with the Formula 'svadhā to the Fathers dwelling on the earth', (he should put down) the 2nd pinda with the formula 'svadhā to the fathers dwelling in the air', the third with the formula 'svadhā to the Fathers dwelling in heaven' and should recite in a low voice the words 'Here, O Fathers, gladden yourselves, show your vigour each according to his own part.' Yama quoted by Kalpataru (on Śr. p 203), following Gobhila provides generally (whether the ancestors be known or not) that the first pinda should be offered to the father with the expression 'prthivī', the second to the grandfather in the aerial regions and the third to the paternal great-grandfather with the mantra 'dyaur darvī'. The Visnu Dh. S (73 17–19) has similar provisions, the mantras respectively being 'prthivī darvīraksitā', 'antariksam darvīraksitā,' dyaur-darvīraksitā'. Medhātithi on Manu III. 194 says (following Āśv. Śr and others) that if the names of the ancestors are not known he should simply say 'O Father, Grandfather' &c. If the gotra be not known then he should employ the gotra name Kaśyapa.[1072]

Certain matters pertaining to pindas must be stated in one place once for all. There is a good deal of discussion about the size of the pindas. Marīci (quoted by Aparārka p. 507) provides that in pārvana-śrāddha the pinda should be of the size of undried āmalaka fruit, of the size of a bilva fruit in Ekoddista, in navaśrāddhas the pinda should be bigger than in any one of the preceding when offered every day during the days of impurity on death. The Skandapurāna says that pindas should be of such a size as would enable a calf two years old to put it easily into its mouth.[1073] Angiras (q. by Sm. C p. 475 and Hemādri, śrāddha p. 1429) prescribes that the pindas may be of the size of kapittha or bilva fruit or of the size of a hen's egg or of an āmalaka or badara fruit. In the Maitrāyanīya-sūtra[1074] it is said that the pinda for the paternal grandfather should be bigger than that for the father and should be in the middle (of the three pindas), that the pinda for the great-grandfather should be the largest of all. The next point is from what materials the pindas were to be made. If pindas were offered before agnaukarana they were to be made from the boiled rice (caru) prepared for agnaukarana. If made after agnaukarana, the pindas were to be made from the cooked food (remaining after agnaukarana) mixed with sesamum (vide Yāj I. 242). If pindas were to be offered after the brāhmanas took their dinner, the pindas were to be made from the remainder of the food cooked for the brāhmanas which was to be mixed with the boiled rice for agnaukarana as stated in Kātyāyana's Śrāddha-sūtra.[1075] The pindas were to be placed according to the Matsya[1076] on darbhas spread on the ground cleaned with water mixed with cow's dung and urine. There were others such as Devala, the Brahmapurāna and Bhavisyapurāna that prescribed that an altar, either circular or square, of sand was to be raised on ground 4 fingers in height and one cubit in extent near the plates from which brāhmanas were to eat and thereon darbhas were to be placed and then pindas. The Vāyupurāna provides that a line should be drawn on the altar or the ground with the root of a darbha to the accompaniment of the following mantras viz.[1077] 'I destroy whatever is impure; I have killed all asuras, dānavas, rāksasas, yaksas, piśācas (goblins), guhyakas and yātudhānas' and the mantra 'struck down (are the asuras and rāksasas sitting on the Vedi)'. In Āp. Śr. I. 10.2, Manu III 217, Visnu Dh. S. 73.17–19, Yama (q. by Hemādri p. 1440), the Kalpataru (on Śr. p. 203), Mahārnavaprakāśa (q by Hemādri), Hemādri (Śr. pp. 1440–42) and Śr. P pp. 266–267 reference is made to adoration of the six seasons and the obeisance (namaskāra) to the pitrs in the words 'namo vaḥ pitaro' (Vāj S II. 32)[1078] and the repetition of three mantras when each of the three pindas is offered, some holding that the seasons were to be deemed as identified with 'rasa', 'śoṣa' and four other words (in Vāj. S II. 32), while others held that the adoration of the seasons is quite distinct from the namaskāras to the pitrs. In the Śaunakātharvanaśrāddha-kalpa, the piṇḍas are offered in the reverse order i. e. first to the great-grand-father, then to the grandfather and then to the father (Hemādri on śrāddha p. 1442). Āp. Śr. I. 9. 4 refers to this method in 'pitāmahaprabhrtīn vā'.

In the other two mantras in honour of पितामह and प्रपितामह substitute अन्तरिक्षं and द्यौः for पृथिवी, वायुः and सूर्यः for अग्निः wherever necessary. The meaning is 'the earth is a ladle giving inexhaustible gratification' &c. The काठकगृह्य (63 14) provides 'पृथिवी दर्विरिति निपरणं कुर्यात्' and the कौशिकसूत्र (88. 8–10) also mentions the three mantras uttered at the time of offering the three pindas (viz पृथिवी दर्विरक्षिता, अन्तरिक्षं दर्विरक्षिता, द्यौ दर्विरक्षिता). Compare काठकसंहिता IX. 23.

About the final disposal (pratipatti) of the pindas several views were entertained. We have already seen (note 780) that the Vāj. S. and several sūtras provided that the middle one of the three pindas for paternal ancestors was to be eaten by the wife of the performer of the śrāddha if she was desirous of a son. Manu (III. 262-263) provides that the dharmapatnī (i. e. a wife of the same varna and married before any other wife) should eat the middle pinda with the mantra 'ādhatta pitaro garbham' (q. in n. 780) and then she gives birth to a son who lives long, secures fame, is intelligent and obtains wealth and progeny and who is of a good and righteous turn of mind. The same rule is provided for by the Laghu-Āśvalāyana 23.83, the Kūrma II. 2. 71, 76, Matsya 16.52, Vāyu 76.31, Visnudharmottara I. 171 8, 220. 149, Padma (srstikhanda 9.121) and other purānas. As regards pindas in general, the Āśv. Śr. (II. 7. 14-17) says that the other two pindas (except the middle one) should be cast into water or in fire or they may be eaten by a brāhmana who has suddenly developed a distaste for food or they may be partaken by one who has been suffering from a serious disease (such as tuberculosis or leprosy) and that in the latter case the man either recovers or dies. The Gobhila-gr. (IV. 3. 31-34) provides that the pindas should be thrown into water or in fire or should be given to a brāhmana or a cow to eat. Manu (III. 260-261) says the same and adds that they may be given to a goat for eating and that some allow them to be devoured by birds Yāj. I. 257, Matsya 16.52-53, and Padma[1079] mention the same five ways of disposal but the last adds one more viz. placing them near a mound of earth. The Varāha-purāna[1080] (190 121) says that the performer may eat the first pinda himself, he should give the middle to his wife and the third he should cast into water. The Anuśāsanaparva (125. 25.26) provides that the first and the third should be thrown into water or fire and the middle pinda should be eaten by the wife. It is provided by Brhaspati that if the wife is suffering from a disease or is already pregnant or is staying in some other place, then an old bull or a goat may eat the middle piṇḍa (quoted by Sm. C. on Śr. p. 486, Kalpataru on Śr p 224). The Visnudharmottara (I. 141. 8) prescribes that when a śrāddha is performed at a tīrtha, the pindas should be cast into the sacred water. The Anuśāsanaparva 125. 38–40 and some of the purānas such as Vāyu (76 32–34) and Brahma (220 150–152) provide that certain consequences follow from the disposal of pindas in one way or another viz. the best worlds by giving pindas to cows, intellect and fame from casting into water, long life from offering them to birds &c. Vide also Brahmānda (upodghāta, chap. 12. 31–35) which provides that if given to cows the result is best complexion, if to cocks then delicacy, long life if given crows In this connection it should be noted that pindas of rice or of flour were not to be offered in all śrāddhas. The Śrāddha-kalpalatā (pp. 86–89) has a long discussion about the śrāddhas in which the offering of pindas of food is forbidden. For example, it quotes Pulastya to the effect that in śrāddhas performed on the two ayana days, on the two equinoctial days, on any sankrānti, no pindas are to be offered, so also in śrāddhas on Ekādaśī, Trayodaśī, on Maghā and Krttikā naksatras, if a man desires to have sons and wealth.

On the question as to what is the principal item in the śrāddha there are three views. Some, like Govindarāja,[1081] hold that feeding of brāhmaṇas is the principal thing and they rely on Manu III. 129 which says 'One may feed even a single learned brāhmana in a rite for gods and manes and not many who do not know vedic mantras; by doing so he reaps abundant reward'. Here the reward or fruit is associated with feeding a learned brāhmana There is a maxim[1082] of the Pūrvamīmāmsā that 'whatever is mentioned in proximity with an action that has a reward or fruit but has no special reward of its own, is subsidiary (aṅga) to what is declared to have a reward.' Besides, there is no piṇḍadāna in certain śrāddhas such as āmaśrāddha, śrāddha on the Yugādi days.[1083]

1081. पुष्कलं फलमाप्नोतीत्यभिधानात् ब्राह्मणस्य भोजनमत्र प्रधानं पिण्डदानादि त्वङ्गमित्यवसीयते । गोविन्दराज on मनु III. 129 (Mandlik's ed.). कुल्लूक on the same verse refers to this opinion.

1082. The न्याय is फलवत्संनिधावफलं तदङ्गम् mentioned by शबर on जै. IV. 4. 19 and by शङ्कर on वेदान्तसूत्र II. 1. 14. Vide जै. IV. 4. 29–38.

Others like Karka hold the view that pindadāna is the principal item in śrāddha. They rely upon the fact that in the śrāddha at Gayā it is the offering of pindas that is the most important matter and upon the fact that in the Visnudharmasūtra (78. 52–53, and 85. 65–66) and in several Purānas such as the Varāha (13.50), Visnu (III. 14.22–23), Brahma (220.31–32), Visnudharmottara (I 145.3–4) the pitrs are stated to have expressed a deep yearning for a son who would offer them pindas at Gayā and water on sacred rivers &c (vide note 911). Further support is sought for this view in the fact that in the śrāddha on the birth of a son and in śrāddha offered even by a good śūdra the feeding of brāhmanas is forbidden. A third view is that both the feeding of brāhmanas and the offering of pindas are the principal matters in a śrāddha. The Gobhila-smrti, after stating[1084] the other two views and some of the reasons therefor, tells us that the author of it is himself in favour of this third view. In cases where the word śrāddha is employed and there is neither brāhmana feeding nor pindadāna as in Daiva śrāddha, the word śrāddha is applied in a secondary sense (gauna). Vide Hemādri (śraddha) pp. 157–160. In the Dharmapradīpa it is said that among the followers of the Yajurveda (i e. Vājasaneyins) the offering of pindas is principal, among the followers of the Ṛgveda the feeding of brāhmanas is principal, while among the followers of the Sāmaveda both are principal. In this way śrāddha partakes of two characters viz it is a yāga (sacrifice) and also [1085] a gift (dāna) Haradatta, Hemādri, Kapardī and others appear to hold that all three (bhojana pindadāna and agnaukarana) are principal. Vide Samskāraratnamālā p. 1003.

The Matsyapurāna says in a famous passage 'ancestors from the fourth (i. e. the father, grand-father and great-grandfather of the great-grandfather of performer) are entitled only to the wipings of the articles of food (sticking to the hand of the performer of śrāddha); the father, (the grand-father and great-grandfather) are entitled to the pinda; the offerer of the pinda is the 7th; thus sapında relationship extends to seven generations[1086]. The Mārkandeya-purāṇa states that three ancestors beginning from the paternal grand-father of the paternal grandfather enjoy the wipings (of the hand of the performer when he offers pindas).[1087] The Brahma-purāna (220. 84–86) has similar verses. Manu provided[1088] that the performer should place three pindas on darbhas and then wipe off from his hand the particles of food and water sticking to it with the roots of the darbhas (on which the pindas were placed) and that such wipings are meant for those who are called 'lepabhāgin' (the three paternal ancestors after the paternal great-grand-father). Similar provisions are made by the Visnu Dh. S. 73.22, Varāhapurāna 14.36, Garudapurāna (Ācārakānda 218 24), Kūrma II. 22.52. Medhātithi on Manu III. 216 says that even if no food or water sticks to the hand still the performer rubs the hand against the roots of the dar-bhas on which the first pinda was placed. A special rule was provided by Devala quoted in Śrāddhakalpalatā (p. 14) that if the father or mother became a mleccha (by forcible or volun-tary conversion &c.) one should not observe any impurity for him or her and no śrāddha should be offered and when offering the three pindas in place of the father the name of Visnu should be uttered.

One question that exercised the minds of well-known writers was whether the daily Vaıśvadeva should be performed before starting the śrāddha ceremonies or after the latter were finished. We have to remember first that several works state that rites for pitrs deserve pre-eminence over those for the gods[1089]. Manu (III. 265) states[1090] that after the brāhmaṇas have been dismissed the performer of śrāddha shall offer the (daily) domestic bali offering and that this is the settled rule of dharma. Medhātithi explains that the word 'bali' is merely illustrative. The Matsyapurāṇa[1091] 17 61, the Varāha-purāṇa (14.43), Skanda VII. 1. 266. 101–102, Devala, Kārṣṇājini and others provide that after the rites for the fathers are finished Vaiśvadeva should be performed. When Vaiśvadeva is performed after the completion of śrāddha rites, it is to be offered from the food that remains after being utilized for the śrāddha dinner. But Hemādri (pp. 1058–1065) holds a long discussion and arrives at the following conclusions In the case of an āhitāgni (p. 1064), Vaiśvadeva is to be performed before śrāddha except in the case of the śrāddha on the 11th day after death. In the case of one who has not kept the sacred fires there are three optional times for Vaiśvadeva, viz. after agnaukaraṇa or after the vikira (scattering of food on darbhas for those dying without the saṃskāras being performed for them), or after the brāhmaṇas are dismissed on the completion of the śrāddha (p 1064). If Vaiśvadeva is to be performed before śrāddha or in the midst of it, then the cooking of food must be done separately for Vaiśvadeva and for śrāddha. In the case of all, whether sāgnika or anagnika, Vaiśvadeva must be performed with the remainder of the food left after use in śrāddha, if the former is performed after the latter. There were sages like Paiṭhīnasi[1092] that held that Vaiśvadeva should not be performed with the food cooked for śraddha without first offering the food to the brāhmaṇas invited for śrādda dinner i e. Vaiśvadeva must be performed after śrāddha if the same food is to be used for the former. The Nirṇayasindhu (III. p. 459) states that as most smṛtis place the performance of Vaiśvadeva after śrāddha and as many writers of commentaries and digests such as Medhātithi and Smṛtiratnāvali do the same all should perform Vaiśvadeva after finishing śrāddha.

It is now necessary to illustrate how pārvaṇa śrāddha is performed in modern times. Here the greatest variety prevails. The details of the rite vary in the different parts of India. They vary also according as the performer belongs to a particular Veda or a particular recension of the Veda, they vary according to the particular eminent writer that is followed and further additions are made according as the performer is a Vaiṣṇava or a Śaiva. Such differences have to be passed over here, particularly because they are not material. We saw above that the Pārvaṇa-śrāddha was very simple in the days of the Brāhmaṇas and most of the sūtras. There was then no express mention of the worship of Viśvedevāḥ in Pārvaṇa-śrāddha, or of the maternal ancestors or of the wives of any ancestors. Gradually these came to be added and by the time of the Yājñavalkyasmṛti there was special invocation of the Viśvedevāḥ But these latter were probably not expressly divided into groups at the time of that work. During the smṛti period groups of Viśvedevāḥ came to be assigned to different kinds of śrāddhas (vide p 457 note 1018). The Purāṇas prescribed several Paurāṇic mantras for being recited during the śrāddha rite, such as the verse 'āgacchantu' (note 984) and the verse 'devatābhyaḥ pitṛbhyaśca' (p. 458 note 1020). Then there arose the principle of the Pūrvamīmāṁsā that all rites described in the different śākhās and sūtras constitute but one rite, and that one may take over from another śākhā or sūtra details described therein, which are not opposed to one's own śākhā or sūtra (vide pp 453-55 notes 1011-1013). This principle tended to make the śrāddha rites all inclusive and the whole procedure became swollen to an enormous extent. How even the slightest variation causes difference in the details may be illustrated by an example. In Mithilā villages even among poor men eleven brāhmaṇas are invited for pārvaṇa-śrāddha, but it is often difficult to secure a very learned man (who is called pātra or mahāpātra) to officiate. In such a case where a mahāpātra or a pātra brāhmaṇa is not available the śrāddha is called apātraka-pārvaṇaśrāddha (for which really there is no śāstric authority) and is distinguished from the sapātraka pārvaṇa-śrāddha in several matters, two of which in the case of the Vājasaneyins may be stated here. Though the Śrāddhasūtra of Kātyāyana, which is of special authority among Vājasaneyins, declares (at the end of kandikā III) that the brāhmanas are to be dismissed at the end of the śrāddha with the verse 'Vāje vāje' (Vāj. S 9. 18) and the performer should circumambulate the brāhmanas with the mantra 'ā mā vājasya' (Vāj S. 9. 19), it is not the practice among the śistas in Mithilā according to the editor of the Śrāddharatna to observe these directions in what is called 'apātraka-pārvana-śrāddha' in these days. In Rudradhara's Śrāddhaviveka (pp. 138–146) the 'apātraka-pārvana-śrāddha-prayoga' is set out at length.

In medieval and modern times in the different provinces of India different manuals are followed by the followers of the several Vedas. For example, in Bengal the Sāmavedins, Yajurvedins and Ṛgvedins follow the procedure of pārvana-śrāddha laid down in the manuals (or paddhatis) of Bhavadeva, Paśupati and Kālesi respectively and there are many persons who follow the rules laid down by Raghunandana in his Śrāddhatattva and Yajurvediśrāddha-tattva. In Mithilā, Śrīdatta wrote his Pitṛbhakti for Yajurvedins and the Śrāddha-kalpa for Sāmavedins and the Śrāddha-ratna of Mahāmahopādhyāya Lakṣmīpati (between 1500 to 1640 A. D) which is printed at Darbhanga and claims to be the traditional manual for Maithilas (Maithila-sāmpradāyika-śrāddhapaddhati) in several places says that it follows the Sugatisopāna of Pratihastaka for Chandogas and also for Vājasaneyins. In the Madras State Vaisnava brāhmanas follow special treatises on Pūrva and Apara kriyās of Vaidika-Sārvabhauma or Hārīta Venkatācārya or Tolappar and Smārta brāhmanas follow the Smṛtimuktāphala of Vaidyanātha, which does not much differ in major matters from the works of Vaidikasārvabhauma. Often the only differences are in the sankalpa and at the end It is impossible to exhibit in this work the contents of all these manuals and to compare and contrast them. Therefore I shall set out here a model pārvanaśrāddha rite as performed by Ṛgvedins in Western India and then a Śukla Yajurveda rite. The Pratisāmvatsarika śrāddha[1093] rite for Ṛgvedins in 1093 The darśaśrāddha differs only very slightly from the above The summary here is taken from the 'Ṛgvedibrahmakarma-samuccaya' published by the Nirnayasāgara Press in Bombay in Pothi size, folios 98–108 (ed of 1936, śake 1858).

Western India may be set out as follows:—(From the references added in the text and notes it will be clear that this modern rite is all inclusive i. e. it follows the Āśv. Śr. often taking passages verbatim from it, the smrtis and purānas). The performer wears white garments (lower and upper) and sits on a seat of kuśas or of wool or deer skin and then sips water twice and wears a pavitra on the finger next to the small finger with Ṛg. IX. 83 1. He ties his top knot on the head and sacred thread with kuśas, and ties three kuśa blades with tilas on the left of the dhoti worn by him. Then he performs prāṇāyāma and declares the resolve (saṅkalpa)[1094] to perform (the Sāmvatsarika) śrāddha after referring to the time and place and together with agnaukaraṇa, piṇḍadāna &c The invited brāhmaṇas reply 'do so'. Then the performer puts into a copper vessel water with the mantra 'imam me Gange' (Ṛg X. 75. 5), sandalwood paste with the mantra 'Gandhadvārām,' yava grains with the mantra 'thou art yava, king of cereals, Varuna is thy patron, thou art endowed with sweetness, thou art the remover of all sins and art known by all sages as holy', betelnut (with Ṛg X. 97,15), gold (or some coin) with the mantra 'Hiranyarūpah' (Ṛg. II. 35.10), flowers and basil leaves. (Then he becomes prācīnāvītī)[1095] and puts sesamum grains in the water

The performer becomes प्राचीनावीती when repeating the words अस्मत्पितृ ..स्वरूपाणां and reverts to उपवीत form when saying एतेषां etc. Among the Mādhvas the सङ्कल्प contains the words 'पित्रन्तर्यामिणो विश्वेदेवान्तर्यामिणोऽनिरुद्ध-प्रद्युम्न-सङ्कर्षण वासुदेव-चतुर्मूर्त्यात्मक-श्राद्धस्वामि-श्रीमध्वजनार्दनस्य समाराधनं करिष्ये ।.'

1095. The terms प्राचीनावीतिन्, यज्ञोपवीतिन् or उपवीतिन्, सव्यं and अपसव्यं occur almost at every step in the श्राद्धप्रयोग. They will be explained once for all here and instead of repeating lengthy translations the original Sanskrit words will be kept in the prayoga set out hereafter. Gobhila gr. I. 2 2–3, Khādiragr I. 1. 4–6 and Manu II. 63 define yajñopavītin or upavītin as one who suspends the sacrificial chord round his neck and raises the right arm so as to wear the chord on his left shoulder and prācīnāvītin as one who raises the left arm and wears the chord on his right shoulder Savya means left. (in another vessel) with the mantra 'Tilosi' (quoted in note 966), Bhrngarāja leaf with the mantra 'mā kākam' (Rg. VI. 48. 17), betelnut, gold (or coin). Then he repeats the Purusa-sūkta [1096] (Rg. X. 90), Rg X 128 1–9, IX 58 1–4, Rg X. 126. 1–8, Rg. IV. 40 5, Rg. VII. 89 5, the sacred Gāyatrī with om and the three Vyāhrtis, Rg. VII 56. 12, Rg VIII. 44. 21, 17, Rg. VIII. 95. 7–9. Then after repeating the well-known verse 'apavitrah pavitro vā' [1097] (whoever, whether pure or impure or being in any state whatever, remembers the name of Visnu becomes pure externally as well as internally), he requests 'May everything such as the place and the materials be rendered pure'. The brāhmanas reply 'let it be so.' Then placing some coin on the ground, the performer having in his hand sesamum grains, water and kūśas goes round (pradaksinā) the brāhmanas thrice, and repeats three verses (in classical sanskrit) in praise of the dust of the feet of brāhmanas and a Vedic passage from Tai Ā. II. 15 [1098] 'All the devatās reside in a brāhmana who knows the Veda; therefore every day one should perform obeisance to brāhmanas knowing the Veda. He should not utter anything derogatory or evil (either true or false) about them. (By doing so) he pleases all these devatās.' After making obeisance (to the brāhmanas) twice he should be prācīnāvītī, repeat the verse 'akrodhanaih' (note 913 p. 407 above) and request the brāhmanas 'may you be pleased to say that I have complete adhikāra to perform the sāmvatsarikaśrāddha of my pitrs this day.' The brāhmanas should reply 'let there be this adhikāra for the performance of śrāddha.' Then being upavītin the performer requests 'may you declare that this time is the proper time and that the food cooked is fit for being offered' The brāhmanas reply 'let it be so.' Then he asks the permission to give invitation to the brāhmanas. They give it. Then he touches the right knee of one brāhmana and says 'you should find time to accept the invitation to act as representing the Viśve-devas named Purūrava and Ārdrava in this pratisāmvatsarika śrāddha of my pitrs'. The brāhmana replies 'yes, be it so.' Then the performer addresses the second Vaiśvadevika brāhmana in the same way (if two brāhmanas have been invited for the purpose) and then wearing the sacred thread in the prācīnāvīta way should touch the left knee of the brāhmana (pitrya) and say to him 'you should accept the invitation to represent my father, grandfather and great-grandfather in this pratisāṁvatsarika śrāddha.' The brāhmana should reply 'so be it.' He should request 'you should repair to my house.' The brāhmana replies 'I shall do so' Then he should make mandalas [1099] for the daiva and pitrya brāhmaṇas. Then savyam. The performer should offer seat, sandalwood paste, flowers and say 'may all the items (upacāras) of showing honour be complete by means of yava grains.' Then apasavyam. He offers āsana (seat), sandalwood paste and flowers and declares 'may all the upacāras be completed by means of sesamum grains.' Then savyam. He offers welcome to the daiva brāhmanas, to which they respond by saying 'susvāgatam' (it is a good welcome). Then he should say 'here is pādya for you, O Viśve devas called Purūrava and Ārdrava! Bhūr-bhuvaḥ-svaḥ to the (daiva) brāhmana'; the response is 'supādyam'. He should wash the feet of (the daiva) brāhmana or brāhmanas with the mantra 'śan no devīr' (Ṛg X. 9.4, vide n. 968). Then he wears the thread in the apasavya way and offers welcome to the pitrya brāhmana or brāhmanas representing the three male ancestors [1100] and offers to give pādya to them and they respond with the words 'susvāgatam' and 'supādyam'. He also employs the verse 'śan no devīr' as in the case of daiva brāhmanas.

Then the performer casts away the pavitra worn so far, washes his hands and feet, performs ācamana and wears two pavitras. Then savyam. He says 'welcome to all.' They respond with 'susvāgatam'. Then holding the right hand (except the thumb) of the daiva brāhmanas he says 'Ye gods, occupy seats'; they respond by saying 'susamāsmahe' (we have well occupied them). Then apasavyam. He addresses similar words to pitrya brāhmaṇas who respond in a similar way. Then savyam. He seeks permission in the words 'I shall perform the Pratisāṁvatsarika śrāddha of my pitrs that has been begun'. The brāhmaṇas say 'do so'. Then the verse 'śam no devīr' (Ṛg. X. 9. 4) is repeated and also the words 'thou art yava, separate from us those who hate us and who are our enemies'. Then apasavyam. The following texts are repeated viz. Ṛg. X. 9.4, Ṛg. X. 15.1 and with the mantra 'The asuras, rākṣasas, the piśācas, that dwell along the earth are struck down; may they go from this place elsewhere wherever their mind may be fixed', he scatters sesamum grains everywhere and repeats the mantra, Ṛg. X. 87.1 There are eight Vasus, eleven Rudras and twelve Ādityas. Let there be protection given by Viṣṇu at the door where śrāddha is being performed and may this spot be Gayā. The brāhmaṇas reply 'Let it be a good spot.' Then savyam. He sprinkles drops of water with darbhas over the food that is cooked for the śrāddha dinner with the mantras viz. Ṛg. IX. 58, 1, IX. 67. 26-28 and with the three Vyāhṛtis and the Gāyatrī. Then he requests 'May there be purity of the cooking' and 'may the sprinkling of the cooked food be according to the rules prescribed,' to which the response is 'so be it.' Then the verse 'āgacchantu mahābhāgāḥ' (vide note 984) is recited and the brāhmaṇas reply 'we are careful (or attentive).' Then apasavyam. He announces 'contemplating upon this spot where śrāddha is being performed as Gayā and concentrating the mind on Gadādhara (Viṣṇu) and the pitrs in the form of Vasus and the like, the śrāddha (rite) proceeds'. The brāhmaṇas say 'do proceed.' Then savyam. He gives water on the hand of the daiva brāhmaṇas, places on the right side of the seat occupied by them two darbhas together with yavas with his upturned right hand held by the left hand and says with the Vyāhṛtis (Bhūr, bhuvah, svah) 'this is the seat for the brāhmaṇa representing the Viśve devas called Purūrava and Ārdrava'. The brāhmaṇa replies 'svāsanam'. This is done also for the second daiva brāhmaṇa. He then says 'Please sit down here, though art Dharma' and seizing the brāhmaṇa's hand (except the thumb) he says 'accept the invitation for being daiva brāhmaṇa in the Pratisāmvatsarika śrāddha.' The response is 'so be it.' Then reaching the arghya water, he sprinkles the ground in front of the (daiva) brāhmaṇas with water, spreads two darbhas (in front of each daiva brāhmaṇa) with their tips towards the east, places down two vessels with their tops turned downwards, sprinkles water over them with the Gāyatrī mantra, raises the vessels up (i. e. turns their tops upwards), again sprinkles water over them and places over them (the two vessels) two kūrcas[1101] with the tips turned to the east, pours into them water and invokes the water once with the mantra, 'śan no devīr' (Ṛg. X. 9. 4). Then he puts yava grains into the two arghya vessels for daiva brāhmanas with the mantra 'Yavosi dhānyarājo vā' (note 985) and also sandalwood paste, flowers, basil leaf and performs obeisance. He says 'May all the upacāras be completed by means of yavas; the two arghya vessels for daiva brāhmanas are fully ready'. The response is 'susampanne'. He says 'svāhā, these are arghya waters'. The response is 'let there be arghya waters'. Placing his left hand in which he holds kuśas and yava grains on the right knee of the daiva brāhmana and holding in his (right) hand yava grains he says 'I shall invoke the Viśve devas called Purūrava and Ardrava to be present in you' They respond 'do invoke'. He invokes the Viśve-devas with the mantra 'viśve devāsa' (Ṛg II. 47. 13) separately repeated as regards each daiva brāhmana. He says, 'I invoke the Viśve devas with the mantra 'viśve devāh śrnutemām' (Ṛg. VI. 52. 13). Having invoked Viśve devas he casts the remaining yava grains on the ground near the feet of the daiva brāhmanas. Then he gives water to them (daiva brāhmanas) and he puts in their hands the darbhas placed over the arghya vessels; he says 'O Viśve devas called Purūrava and Ārdrava! this is arghya water for you; svāhā, adoration'. They respond 'let there be arghya'. Repeating the mantra 'yā divyā āpah' (vide Āśv. Gr. IV. 7. 13 above in n. 966) he says 'this arghya has been offered, it is no longer mine.' They respond 'let it be so offered'. The same process is followed as to the second daiva brāhmana. Then he offers fragrant[1102] substances (sandalwood paste etc.), flowers, basil leaves, incense, lamp, and cash according to his ability as substitute for garment, gopīcandana for unguent, sacred chord and two kuśa blades for pavitra with the words 'O Viśve devāh, called Purūrava and Ārdrava! these are fragrant substances for you according to your portions; svāhā, adoration'. When offering a garment or cash therefor he recites 'yuvā suvāsāḥ' (Ṛg. III. 8.4). Then he says 'these items viz. gandha, leaves, flowers, incense, lamp ending with covering (garment) be all of them complete. Let there be good worship in the rite of worship; May that which is wanting or is excessive be according to prescribed rules'. The brāhmanas respond 'astu vidhivat' and the performer recites the verse 'I do obeisance to Acyuta by remembering whom or by uttering whose name whatever is wanting in tapas (observances) or sacrifices becomes at once perfect'.

Then he says to the pitrya brāhmanas 'with your permission I shall offer worship to the pitrs'. They reply 'do offer.' Then apasavyam. After bending his right knee, the performer says 'Bhūr bhuvah svah to Brahman, this is the seat for my father, grandfather and great-grandfather, named N. N., whose gotra is so and so and who are identical with Vasu, Rudra and Āditya'. So saying he offers double-folded darbhas with sesamum grains to the pitrya brāhmanas who reply 'svāsanam'. Then follows the same procedure as regards pitrya brāhmanas which has been already set out as to daiva brāhmanas. The only difference is that instead of two darbhas three darbhas are spread on the ground with their tips towards the south, three vessels are placed towards south-east with faces downwards and three double-folded darbhas are placed on each of the three vessels, instead of 'yavosi' the mantra is 'tilosi somadevatyaḥ' (vide note 966) and instead of 'svāhā namah' the words 'svadhā namah' are employed, and instead of tulasī leaf bhrngarāja leaf is employed. In āvāhana the performer places his left hand holding kuśas and sesame on the left knee of the pitrya brāhmana and the verse repeated is 'uśantas tvā' (Ṛg. X. 16. 12) as to each pitrya brāhmana and he should honour the pitrs by repeating one mantra 'ā yantu nah' (Vāj. S. 19. 58). He offers arghya[1103] water with the right hand supported by the left to the father and the other two paternal ancestors. He brings together the samsravas[1104] in the first pitrya vessel and anoints his face with that water. if he desires a son. The brāhmanas respond 'may you have a son'.

1103. The form will be: अपो दत्त्वा पात्रोपरिस्थदर्भान् विमृज्य दत्त्वा अस्मत्पितरिदं ते अर्घ्यम्। अस्त्वर्घ्यम्। अपसव्यम्। या दिव्या आपः पृथिवी०। पित्रे इदमर्घ्यं दत्तं न मम। अस्तु दत्तम्। सव्यम्। पितामहेद तेऽर्घ्यम्। अस्त्वर्घ्यम्। अपसव्यम्। या दिव्या०। पितामहायेदमर्घ्यं दत्तं न मम। and so on for प्रपितामह.

He places the vessel containing saṁsravas with the top upside down on darbhas to the north of the daiva vessel, with the mantra 'thou art a place for the pitrs.' Then gandha, flowers with tulasī and bhrngarāja leaves, incense, lamp, garment or cash therefor, gopīcandana, sacred chord, betelnut, kuśas for pavitra are offered to the pitrs and he repeats the verse 'idam pitrbhyaḥ' (Ṛg. X. 15. 2). After repeating the verse 'yat smrtyā' (vide above) there is 'savyam'. The performer says 'with your permission I shall prepare maṇḍalas and place the plates'. The response is 'do so'. On the spot where the plates for daiva brāhmanas are to be placed a four-cornered maṇḍala beginning from the south-west to north-east and made with the right hand towards it and on the spot for the plates for pitrya brāhmanas the mandala is circular beginning from north-east to south-west made with the left hand towards it. Then the plates for the diners are to be placed inside those maṇḍalas. Then taking holy ashes (apasavyam) he draws a line round the plates for pitrya brāhmanas with the mantra 'piśanga-bhriṣṭim' (Ṛg. I. 133. 5). Then savyam. Then round the plates of the daiva brāhmanas he draws lines with the mantras 'rakṣā no' (Ṛg. IV. 3. 14) and 'brahma ca' (Ṛg. X. 4. 7) and two more verses (probably Paurānic) which pray that the mark made with ashes may guard all, just as Visnu protects the worlds. Just as Visnu renders ineffective the eyes of all men of evil sight, so one should make a mandala with ashes and when this is done there is no blemish in sitting in the same row for dining. Then the purification of the hand (right) of the brāhmanas is done, beginning with the pitrya brāhmana first. Then the performer requests 'let me perform agnaukaraṇa with your permission in the hand[1105] 'of the (pitrya) brāhmana.' The reply is 'do so'. Then apasavyam. Taking some cooked food and anointing it with clarified butter and dividing it into parts, having touched the two parts placed towards the south he says 'this for Soma accompanied by the Pitṛs, this for Agni, the carrier of kavya' and having spread the left hand underneath the right hand, having cut off portions from the middle and the part to the east according to the rules for avadānas[1106]

1105 If there are three brāhmanas to represent the three paternal ancestors, then he should say 'in the hands of the brāhmanas'. The Nirnayasindhu (III. Uttarārdha p. 440) says that a widower performs agnaukarana in the hand of the daiva brāhmana.

1106 As laid down in Āśv. gr I. 7. 10-12 the अवदानधर्मs are उपस्तरणं द्विश्चावदानं हविरवदानयोश्च प्रत्यभिधारणम्.

and having poured clarified butter on the food in the vessel and on the food cut off for oblations, he should offer the oblations with the words 'To Soma accompanied by pitrs, svadhā and adoration; this for Soma with the pitrs and it is not (now) mine' and 'to Agni the bearer of Kavya, svadhā and adoration; this is for Agni Kavyavāhana and not mine.' This is the mode everywhere. He touches water with the left hand and repeats the following (which is called 'samsthā-japa' and occurs in Āśv. Śr. I. 11.15) 'Om ca me.. te namah'. Obeisance to Agni. Svasti. Then he prays 'O Kavyavāhana! bestow on me faith, memory, glory, intelligence, learning, intellect, wealth, strength, long life, brilliance, health.' He says 'offering has been made on the hand'. The response is 'suhutam'. Then he pours ghee on the vessel containing the food and repeats 'mūrdhānam divah' (Rg VI 7. 1) Then the brāhmaṇas should cast the food on their hands in the vessel over which ghee has been poured and then mutter Trisuparna,[1107] the hymns to anna (Rg. I. 187. 1-11 and several others) and other hymns Then certain pauranic verses should be repeated, viz 'Devatābhyah' (note 1020), the verse 'one should always recite at a śrāddha these holy places viz Kuruksetra, Gayā, Gangā Prabhāsa and Puskara', the two verses[1108] 'saptavyādhā' (note 994a) and three more verses, one speaking of adoration to pitrs and the other two praying to Visnu and Śiva for favours. Then savyam. Then he sprinkles water (proksana) on the food with the Gāyatrī mantra. Then bending his right knee he silently spills water. Then holding the plate with the right hand above and the left hand below he utters the mantra 'the earth is thy vessel[1108a], the heaven is the lid I sacrifice thee in the brāhmana's mouth. I sacrifice thee in the Prāna (breath) and Apāna (breath) of learned brāhmanas. Thou art imperishable. Do not perish for these (Fathers) here and in the next world.' Then he repeats 'ato devā' (Rg. I. 22. 16) and 'O Visnu, guard the sacrificial food'. With the hand turned downwards he thrusts in the food (served in the plate) the root of the thumb of the brāhmana turned downwards and should revolve it (in the food) from right to left. Then touching the plate with his left hand the performer should say 'The Viśve devās called Purūrava and Ārdrava are the deity, this food is the sacrificial offering, this brāhmana serves as āhavanīya fire, this place is Gayā, this brāhmana diner is Gadādhara, this food is Brahma, the golden vessel is the shade of the Aksayyavata (at Gayā). This food together with the flavouring dishes which is already served (in the plate) and which may be served therein (later), is the sacrificial food offered to the Viśve devas called Purūrava and Ārdrava till this brāhmana is satisfied. Adoration. It is not mine. Om Tat Sat. May the food offered at the fourteen spots such as Visnupada at Gayā be inexhaustible!'. So saying he should cast on the ground towards the left side of the plate water mixed with darbhas and yavas. He says 'May Gadādhara (Visnu) of Gayā be pleased'. The brāhmaṇas respond 'May he be pleased'. Then he repeats 'Ye devāso' (Rg. I. 139.11). Then he says 'with the permission of the daiva brāhmanas I shall present food to the Father and others'. They reply 'do so'. Then apasavyam. Then silently sprinkling water round the plate, and touching the plate (of the pitrya brāhmana) with the left hand above and the right hand below it, he repeats the formula 'prthivī te pātram ..loke' (vide p 444 note 992) and the verse 'idam Visnur' (Rg. I. 22. 17) and say 'O Visnu! guard the kavya food,' he should thrust the root of the thumb of the (pitrya) brāhmana in the food (served in the plate) and revolve it from right to left. Then touching the plate (of the pitrya brāhmana) with the left hand he should say 'the father, grand-father and great-grandfather are devatā, this food is of the nature of kavya, the brāhmana is in place of the āhavanīya fire, this place is Gayā, this dining brāhmana is Gadādhara, this food is Brahma, this silver plate is the shade of the Aksayyavaṭa (at Gayā), svadhā to my father, grandfather and great-grandfather named so and so, of gotra so and so, that are Vasu, Rudra and Āditya respectively, this food with the side dishes that is already served in the plate and that may be served (later) is kavya up till this brāhmana is satiated. Adoration! It is not mine. Tat sat. May the food given at the 14 spots such as Rudrapada at Gayā be inexhaustible May Gadādhara of Gayā be pleased.' The brāhmana replies 'May he be pleased.' He then repeats the verse 'ye ceha pitaro' (Rg. X. 15. 13) and says 'May the food intended for the pitrs please them'. Then savyam.[1109] Then naivedya is offered with the verse 'brahmārpanam' (Gītā 4. 24) and with three more verses in which Hari is said to be giver and the enjoyer and the food as having both natures viz. those of pitrs and devas and ultimately he winds up by saying 'tat sat brahmārpanamastu'. Then apasavyam. Then two verses are repeated in which adoration is offered to the feet of Śiva, Visnu, Brahmā and other gods, in which even remembrance of Gayā-ksetra is highly eulogised. Adoration to Kāśī Viśveśvara! adoration to Visnu and Gadādhara at Gayā! Then savyam. Then he says 'I shall repeat in your hearing the madhumatī verses beginning with 'madhu vāta' (Ṛg. I. 90. 6-8). Then he repeats the word 'madhu' thrice. The brāhmanas respond 'sumadhu, all food is sweet.' Then apasavyam. Then a verse in praise of Visnu (eko Visnur &c.) 'there is one great Being viz. Visnu &c.' is recited and the performer says 'May Janārdana Visnu who has assumed the form of my father, grandfather and great-grandfather be pleased by this feeding of brāhmanas at the pratisāmvatsarika śrāddha of my pitrs'. The response is 'may he be so pleased'. Tat sat brahmārpanam-astu. Then having given water to the brāhmanas for apośana[1109a] (then savyam) he says 'partake of (the food) at your pleasure' and 'though art the first layer of nectar'. Then he repeats the mantra[1110] 'fixing myself in faith and in Prāna I offer nectar; being beneficent enter me without burning me. Svāhā to Prāna'. This is repeated as to Apāna, Vyāna, Udāna, Samāna with the substitution of each of these four remaining life-breaths. Then he winds up 'my soul is in Brahma for the sake of immortality' and then 'svāhā to Brahma'. Then the hands are purified (by washing them with water). After muttering the Gāyatrī verse ten times or three times, he repeats the hymn to Śraddhā (Ṛg.

1109. The printed text is पितृभ्यः सङ्कल्पितः प्रीयताम् This makes hardly any sense. I take that what is intended is पितॄन् सङ्कल्पितमन्न प्रीणयतु or पितरः सङ्कल्पितेन (अन्नेन) प्रीयन्ताम्.

1109a. 'Apośana' literally means 'taking or drinking water' It is a technical term applied to the sipping of water before beginning a meal with the words 'amrtopastaranamasi' and after the eating is finished with the words 'amrtāpidhānamasi'. Vide Tai Ā. X. 32, Āp. M. P. II.10.3-4, Āśv. gr I.24.12, Yāj. I.31 and 106.

1110 The mantras are श्रद्धायां प्राणे निविष्टोऽमृतं जुहोमि शिवो माविशाप्रदाहाय। प्राणाय स्वाहा। श्रद्धायामपाने निविष्टो॰ and so on प्राणे निविष्टोऽमृतं जुहोमि ब्रह्मणि म आत्मामृतत्वाय—is आप म पा II. 20.26. The whole passage from प्राणे निविष्टो to अमृतत्वाय occurs in तै. आ. X 34.

X. 151. 1-5). Then the performer requests 'you should ask for what is wanted; seating yourself you should with minds at ease eat at your pleasure. You should take from the foods and vegetables that are cooked and are ready whatever pleases you and should discard what you do not like You should eat at ease'. They respond 'we partake (of the food)'. He says 'I shall recite the hymns called Rākṣoghna [1111] as far as I can.' They respond 'repeat'. Then towards the end of the dinner a little boiled rice with curds (should be served) and nectar-like Ganges water. He says 'everything is perfect Ask for whatever you like out of the sacrificial food that is cooked'. They respond 'we have had enough'. He says 'I shall recite the Madhumatī verses (Ṛg. I. 90 6-8) in your hearing'. They respond 'recite them'. Then apasavyam. He recites Ṛg. I.82.2 [1111a] and should say 'The śrāddha called so and so is completed'. They should respond 'susampannam' Then savyam. He asks 'Ye Viśvedevāḥ! are you satisfied?' They reply 'we are satisfied'. Then apasavyam. He asks 'Ye (brāhmaṇas) representing my father, grandfather and great-grandfather! are you satisfied?'. They reply 'We are satisfied'. He asks 'what is to be done with the food that remains?'. They reply 'it may be eaten in the company of your friends (and relatives)'. Then savyam.

Then the performer declares that he would perform in the Prati-sāmvatsarika-śrāddha piṇḍapradāna (the offering of lumps of rice) together with water and sesamum grains. They reply 'do so'. 'Let food be given to those who take as their share what remains outside the plates of the brāhmaṇa diners'. The performer says [1112] 'May all the (deceased) men and women slaves that were born in the performer's household obtain satisfaction by the food given by me on the ground'. (Then he offers water to the brāhmaṇas with the words) 'thou art the nectarial lid' (or covering). He says 'May the water given to those who hanker for it, who dwell in Padma and Arbuda and

1111. The hymn beginning with कृणुष्व पाजः (Ṛg IV. 4. 1-15) is called राक्षोघ्न. The first five verses of it are वाज सं. 13. 9-13 All fifteen verses occur in तै सं I. 2. 14. 1-6. So also are Ṛg. Raurava (hells) full of pus reach them inexhaustibly'. Then apasavyam. He repeats the mantra[1113] 'The asuras and rākṣasas that sit on the altar are struck and driven away' (Vāj S. II. 29). Sprinkling the ground with water and strewing thereon darbhas cut with one stroke that have their tips turned towards the south-east he says[1114] 'May the Fathers wash themselves, may the grandfathers wash themselves, may the great-grandfathers wash themselves'. In the same way he should sprinkle on the kuśa grass water mixed with sesamum grains for the mothers and the rest. Then he says 'This (food) is for thee, my father named so and so, of such and such gotra, who is (to be contemplated) as Vasu and for those who come here after thee; this is the pinda for thee[1115], svāhā! This pinda occupying the position of a pinda offered at Gayā is presented to my father named so and so and of such and such gotra and who is in the place of Vasu, it is (now) not mine'. Similar formulas are repeated for the pinda offered to the grandfather (who is styled 'Rudrarūpa' instead of 'Vasurūpa') and to the great-grandfather (who is styled 'Ādityarūpa'). Then he utters 'Tat sat.' 'May whatever is offered in Gayā at the fourteen spots such as Visnupada be inexhaustible'. Then he wipes off on the roots of[1116] the darbhas on which the pindas are placed the particles (of rice, ghee and water) sticking to his hand for the gratification of those that are entitled to the wipings. Having uttered[1117] once over the pindas the mantra 'O fathers; regale yourselves here, come as bulls each to his share', he should turn towards the north with the left side of his body, 1113. He draws with the roots of darbhas as many lines (as the number of pindas offered, 3 or 6) repeating this mantra at each line (Vāj. S. II 29).

1114 This is taken from आश्व श्रौ. सू II 6 14-15 'मेक्षणेनानुप्रहृत्य प्राचीनावीती लेखां त्रिरुदकेनोपनयेत् शुन्धन्तां पितरः . प्रपितामहा इति। तस्यां पिण्डान् निपृणीयात् पराचीनपाणि. पित्रे पितामहाय प्रपितामहायैतत्तेऽसौ ये च त्वामन्वत्रिति।' Compare आप. म पा II 20. 4-7 मार्जयन्तां मम पितरो etc q. in note 1060 above; vide n 1053 for पराचीनपाणिः.

and having held his breath according to his ability he should return to the original position and utter the words 'the Fathers regaled themselves and came like bulls, each to his share' and having smelt the remains of the boiled rice from which pindas are made from the left side (to the right) he should cast the pindas (on the darbhas) and should partake of the boiled rice by taking in as much steam and flavour out of it as he can by smelling it. He should say 'my father! N. N. by name, so and so by gotra, apply unctuous substance'; with these words he should anoint the pindas by means of darbhas with ghee or sesamum oil. And he should apply collyrium to the piṇḍas with the words 'O father! N. N. by name and so and so by gotra apply collyrium'. He should put on the pindas unctuous substance, collyrium and garment,[1118] the last being the fringe of a garment or a tuft of wool with the words 'O fathers! this is the garment for you, do not take up any other (garment) than this'. Then savyam. He then says 'I shall offer worship to the pindas for the prosperity of my family'. He then offers to the pitrs present in the piṇḍas pādya, arghya, water for ācamana, bath, gandha, flowers, bhrngarāja leaf, incense, lamp and naivedya of apūpa (cakes) and pāyasa (rice cooked in milk), tāmbūla and daksinā, using the word 'svadhā' after each of them. Then he should worship[1119] them with the mantra 'Fathers! obeisance to you for the sake of food, for strength, for śusma, for the non-terrible (aghora), for jīva, for rasa; svadhā to you, O pitrs, obeisance to you; these are yours, O pitrs! these are ours; we are your living (descendants), may we be alive here'! He then recites the verses[1120] Ṛg. X. 57. 3–5. Having thus worshipped them he then (apasavyam) with the palm of the hand turned upwards moves the piṇḍas with the mantra[1121] 'paretana' which means 'O fathers who love soma drink! Go away by the sombre ancient paths, after bestowing on us wealth and endow us here with auspicious prosperity and all valiant sons'. He should repeat thrice the prayer 'O fathers! bestow on us a valiant son'[1122].

Then savyam. On the ground near the plates of the Vaiśvadeva brāhmanas he scatters food together with yavas and water with the verse 'I shall offer food scattered (vikira) near the Vaiśvadeva brāhmanas to those gods to whom no soma drink is offered and who are bereft of a share in sacrifices; this scattered food is offered to Viśvedevas who do not partake of the soma drink; it is not (now) mine'. Then apasavyam He says 'I shall offer food scattered near pitrya brāhmanas on the ground covered with darbhas to those who died without the saṃskāras being performed for them and to those women of my family who left the family (for bad deeds); this scattered food is presented to those boys and girls that came out of the womb; it is not mine'. So saying he strews food with water and sesamum seeds and then says after reciting Ṛg. X. 15.14 'this pinda made from the remainder of the food and occupying the position that a pinda given at Gayā occupies, has been offered to those persons who were born in my family and died and who were cremated or were not cremated; this is not mine'. So saying he offers near the pitrya brāhmanas a ball of rice and water mixed with sesamum grains.

Then he washes his hands and feet, sips water twice and puts on his finger a pavitra with the mantra 'pavitravantaḥ' (Ṛg IX. 73. 3). He then requests that the water in the hands of the daiva brāhmanas be auspicious (or beneficial). The brāhmanas reply 'may the waters be auspicious.' In the same way there are requests for goodwill, for protection due to yavas, for long life, welfare, peace, prosperity, contentment and responses by the daiva brāhmanas giving blessings as to these. Then apasavyam. Then the same request for auspiciousness of waters, goodwill, protection by sesamum grains &c. and blessings about them by pitrya brāhmanas. Then the performer requests 'may my family increase (or prosper) and may the procedure of worshipping the pindas be good,' to which the pitrya brāhmanas respond 'may it be so.' Then raising the pranītā[1122a] vessel the performer requests 'May you say that the water and food and the like offered in the Pratisāmvatsarikaśrāddha to pitr, pitāmaha and prapitāmaha, so and so by name and gotra, be inexhaustible.' The pitrya brāhmanas reply 'so be it.' Then savyam. The same request is made to the daiva brāhmanas and the reply is the same. Then gold is given to the daiva brāhmaṇas and silver to pitrya brāhmanas and the performer says 'may the daksinās (fees) given to the brāhmanas that ate the śrāddha dinner protect (me).' They reply 'may they do so.' Then he says 'I shall request you to utter the word svadhā!' They reply 'do so.' Then apasavyam. Then he says 'May (the brāhmanas representing) father, grandfather and great-grandfather utter the word svadhā.' They reply 'let there be svadhā.' Then he should place over the pindas sesamum grains and water. Then he says 'May you declare that svadhā be accomplished.' They reply 'may svadhā be accomplished.' Then savyam. Then he says 'may you say that the gods led by Agni be pleased.' They reply 'may the Viśvedevāḥ be pleased.' Then apasavyam. Then he requests 'May you declare that the pitrs led by the Vasus be pleased'. They reply 'may the pitrs be pleased.' Savyam. He says 'May you declare that there is accomplishment of the sankalpa' (made at the beginning of the rite). They reply 'May there be accomplishment of the sankalpa'. He asks 'were the vegetables and cooked food liked by the pitrs'. They reply 'they were most excellent'. Then the performer decks himself by applying sandal paste to his forehead. After doing obeisance to the pindas he requests for blessings for his family (which are the same as those set out above from the Padmapurāna on p 452 above) and one more blessing 'May persons beg of us but may we not beg of any one' (vide n. 998). The brāhmanas reply in the same words only employing the words 'you' or 'your' for 'us' or 'our'.

He says 'I shall remove the pindas'. They reply 'do remove'. Then he repeats the verses 'Tad Visnoh' (Ṛg. I. 22.20), 'Tad viprāso' (Ṛg. I 22.21) and two more verses and then a Paurānic verse enumerating the seven holy cities of Ayodhyā, Mathurā, Māyā, Kāśī, Kāñcī, Avantikā and Dvārakā. He says 'May there be peace, prosperity and contentment on the spot where the pindas are'. They reply 'these (peace &c) dwell in their own places'. He says 'I shall remove the plates in which the brāhmanas had their dinner.' Then he lays aside the kūrca. He then recites the verse 'Vāje vāje' (Ṛg. VII. 38. 8). Then savyam. Then he says 'O pitrs, get up together with the devas' and repeats the verses 'ā mā vājasya' (Vāj. S. 9. 19), 'svādusamsadah' (Ṛg. VI. 75 9), 'brāhmanāsah pitarah' (Ṛg. VI 75. 10), 'ihaiva stam' (Ṛg. X. 85. 42). Then he recites 'may the grandfathers being pleased grant to men (their descendants) long life, progeny, wealth, learning, heaven, moksa, happiness and kingdom' (Yāj. I. 270, but reads 'prayacchantu' for 'prayacchanti'). Then he prays 'May these blessings turn out to be true, may my family prosper, may this Pratisāmvatsarika-śrāddha have the same fruits as that of a śrāddha performed at Gayā ! May the pitrs secure inexhaustible gratification.' Then he proceeds 'Today my birth has had its reward by bowing to your feet &c.' (vide n. 999 for the two verses repeated here). The brāhmanas reply 'we forget the trouble and excuse you.' Then he says 'Today this tithi is like a day sacred to the sun, the brāhmanas invited are like Vyāsa, Vasistha and Vāmadeva; may you declare that whatever is lacking as regards seats, dinner, mantras, procedure, materials and fees in this pratisāmvatsarika śrāddha of my pitrs performed by me today become all perfect at the words of brāhmanas'. They reply 'May all be perfect'. Then he recites the two verses 'Vasisthāsah pitrvad' and 'devān vasistho' (Ṛg X. 66. 14–15) and then at the end he repeats the verse containing a salutation (the word 'namah') viz 'idam pitrbhyo namo astvadya' (Ṛg. X. 15. 2). Therefore at the end (of a śrāddha rite) one does obeisance to the pitrs (in the words 'namo vah pitaro &c'). Therefore they say "should one repeat the pitryā verses with āhāva mantra specially recited with each verse or without repeating the āhāva mantra separately with each verse, for it is better not to finish Pitryajña quickly. He who separately recites the āhāva with each verse makes the pitryajña that is imperfect, complete and therefore one must recite specially employing the āhāva with each verse."[1123] The conclusion is

The words in the प्रयोग (p 108a) are 'इद पितृभ्यो नमो अस्त्वद्येति नमस्कारवतीमन्तत शसति तस्मादन्तत. पितृभ्यो नमस्क्रियते। तदाहुर्व्याहावं पित्र्या. शंसेत् अव्याहावाँ ३ इति। व्याहावमेव शंसेदसस्थितं वै पितृयज्ञस्य साध्वसस्थित वा एष पितृयज्ञ सस्थापयति यो व्याहावं शंसति तस्माद् व्याहावमेव शस्तव्यम्।' The passage इदं पितृभ्यो नमो ... up to शस्तव्यम् is taken verbatim from the ऐतरेयब्राह्मण 13th chapter 13th khanda (end). The khanda (13) starts with the question whether the one should repeat each verse with āhāva separately uttered. The performer should follow the brāhmaṇas up to the boundary (of the village). He says 'whatever blemish there may be in japa, tapas or śrāddha rite—may all that become free from blemish by the favour of brāhmaṇas. I do adoration to that Acyuta (Viṣṇu) by remembering whom &c. O best of brāhmaṇas! may this śrāddha, even if devoid of mantras, or of some rite or of faith, become perfect by your favour'. Then he concludes 'May Janārdana Vāsudeva who assumes the forms of father, grand-father and great-grandfather be pleased by this sacrifice, viz. the pratisāṁvatsarika-śrāddha of the pitṛs This is a sacrifice to the manes. Tat sat. May it be dedicated to Brahma.' Then he repeats the verse 'Vaṣaṭ te' (Ṛg. VII. 99 7) and then says 'adoration to Viṣṇu (Viṣṇave namaḥ) thrice and sips water twice. The fruit of offering piṇḍas is stated by Bṛhaspati and Vṛddha-Parāśara as follows: If the pitṛs are in the world of gods they are gratified by the food offered in fire, if they are in the world of pitṛs they are gratified by the dinner to brāhmaṇas and if in hell they are gratified by the balls offered on the ground.[1123a]

verse 'devānām patnīr' (Ṛg V. 46 6) or the ṛk verse referring to Rākā should be recited first in the आग्निमारुतशास्त्र in तृतीयसवन. The conclusion reached is that the verse referring to देवपत्नीs should be recited first by the होतृ. In the same context a question is raised whether the Yāmī verse (Ṛg X 14 4 'Imam yama prastaram') or the Pitryā verses (Ṛg. X 15 1–3) should be recited first. The conclusion is that the यामी verse should be first recited, then the Kāvya verse (Ṛg X. 14. 3 'Mātalī kavyair') and then the pitryā verses, out of which Ṛg X. 15. 2 (इदं पितृभ्यो नमो अस्त्वद्य) is recited last in which the word नमः occurs. आहाव means the mantra शोंऽसावोऽम्. The figure 3 is a sign of the प्लुत accent. The sign of प्लुत shows deliberation आहु —we have to understand ब्रह्मवादिन as the subject Then comes the question whether the आहाव should be recited at the beginning of each of the three pitryā verses or not The conclusion is that the आहाव should be recited at the beginning of each of the three pitryā verses Apparently it is rather difficult to say why this passage of the ऐतरेयब्राह्मण should occur in this प्रयोग The only reason appears to be that the ऐ. ब्रा. passage has something to say about पितृs and hence as this is a प्रयोग for पितृs it ts introduced here practised in Madras in these days only a few points of differences in detail emerge. In the Madras procedure the numerous mantras as set out above (p. 448) do not occur nor does the Tai. Ā. passage occur therein, but the verses in praise of the dust of brāhmaṇa's feet do occur. Most of the mantras both Vedic and Paurāṇic are the same. The blessings (āśīrvādas) in the Madras manual are more elaborate and include even the performer's cattle in the blessing of health and long life. In the Madras manual several mantras are set out as 'annasūkta' mantras in the procedure itself. The Madras paddhati adds at the end the well known verse 'kāyena vācā manasendriyairvā'.

The procedure for Yajurvedins of the Mādhyandina Śākhā in Bengal as set out by Raghunandana in his Yajurvedi-śrāddhatattva is entirely based on the 2nd and 3rd kaṇḍikās of the Śrāddha-sūtra of Kātyāyana. The Pārvaṇaśrāddha-prayoga in Halāyudha's Brāhmaṇasarvasva closely follows Kātyāyana and I am assured by a careful student of Dharmaśāstra that the procedure of pārvaṇaśrāddha followed by Mādhyandinas at Bhatpara in Western Bengal is in strict conformity with the procedure laid down by Raghunandana. The Śrāddhasūtra of Kātyāyana is translated here with some explanations and additions made by Halāyudha and Raghunandana and the whole text, being not very extensive, is given in the note below[1124].

"The pārvana-śrāddha is preceded by the rite for Viśvedevas. The procedure follows that of Pindapitryajña[1124a]. In the rites for the pitrs double-folded darbhas are to be used (while in Vaiśvadevika rite straight darbhas are used). Whenever any thing is to be gifted, the performer (in all daiva as well as pitrya rites) wears a pavitra and makes the gift sitting. (When questions are to be asked) the performer puts the question to the most eminent in the row of diners (to the best daiva brāhmana in daiva rites and to the best pitrya brāhmana in pitrya rites) or he may put the question to all (and the reply is given by one or by all) Spreading darbhas on the seats (he makes the brāhmanas occupy them), he puts the question 'shall I invoke the Visvedevas (to the daiva brāhmana)'. Being permitted (by the daiva brāhmanas) in the words 'do invoke', he invokes the Viśvedevas with the mantra[1125] 'Viśve devāsa āgata' (Vāj. S. 7. 34 'Ye All Gods, come, listen to this my call and sit down on this darbha grass'). Then he scatters yavas (in front of the brāhmanas), mutters a mantra 'Viśvedevāḥ srunutemam' (Vāj. S. 33. 53, 'Ye All Gods, hear this call of mine'). After this japa he asks (the pitrya brāhmanas) 'I shall invoke the pitrs'. When permitted (by the pitrya brāhmanas) in the words 'do invoke', he invokes them with the mantra 'usantas tvā' (Vāj. S. 19. 70, 'O Agni! we longing for our fathers place you down' &c.). Then he scatters (sesamum grains in front of the pitrya brāhmanas) and mutters the mantra 'ā yantu naḥ pitaraḥ' (Vāj. S. 19. 58, 'May the soma-loving pitrs come to us' &c.). Then he pours water in each of the cups made of a sacrificial tree (such as palāśa, udumbara &c.), in which a pavitra is dipped with the mantra 'śan no devīr' (Vāj. S. 36. 12, 'May the divine waters be for our happiness' &c.). (He puts yavas in the vessel for daiva rite). He puts in each of the cups sesamum grains with the mantra 'Thou art Tila[1126] &c.'. He offers on the hands of each of the brāhmanas (first daiva and then pitrya) that wear a pavitra water in a vessel made of gold, silver, copper, rhinoceros horn or precious stone or in whatever vessels may be available or in vessels made of bunches of leaves with the mantra 'yā divyā[1127] āpah &c.'. The water is offered in the words 'O father' N. N. by name, this is arghya for you' (and then to other ancestors). Having mixed together in the first vessel (meant for the father) the drops of water remaining in the other vessels[1128] for other ancestors, he puts down on the ground the first vessel face downwards with the words 'thou art a place for the pitrs'. Then (at this stage) gandha[1129] (sandalwood paste), flowers, incense, lamp and garment are offered (to the brāhmanas representing the ancestors).

Having taken out in another vessel some food from out of the food already cooked for śrāddha and having anointed it with ghee he (the performer) asks 'I shall perform agnau-karana'. Being permitted by the brāhmanas in the words 'do so', he offers into (grhya) fire oblations[1130] as in Pinda-

1126. तिलोसि This mantra occurs in आश्व. गृ. सू. quoted in note 966 above. हलायुध and रघुनन्दन state that यवs are to be scattered with the mantra 'यवोऽसि यवयास्मद् द्वेषो यवयारातीः' (वाज. सं 5.26) and sesamum grains are to be scattered with the mantra अपहता असुरा रक्षांसि वेदिषदः (वाज. सं 2.29). Vide या. I. 230.

1127. For the मन्त्र 'या दिव्या etc.' vide note 966 above.

1128. There are six ancestors, three paternal and three maternal and therefore six vessels, drops of water from five vessels are poured into the first vessel. रघुनन्दन adds that the first vessel is covered with the vessel for great-grandfather and is then put down with top downwards. The ब्राह्मणसर्वस्व explains 'तत्र च पितरस्तिष्ठन्तीति बृहस्पतिः। आवृतास्तत्र तिष्ठन्ति पितरः श्राद्धदेवताः'.

1130. Both हलायुध and रघुनन्दन state that the two मन्त्रs in अग्नौकरण are 'ओं अग्नये कव्यवाहनाय स्वाहा, ओं सोमाय पितृमते स्वाहा'.

pitryajña, having served (into all the plates for all the brāhmanas invited) the food that remains after being offered in fire, he touches with his hands (above and below each plate) and repeats the mantra 'The earth is thy vessel &c.' (notes 992, 1108a). (He keeps some food aside for making pindas later on). Then (having served the food in the plates) he plunges the thumb of the brāhmanas in the food with a ṛk (Ṛg. I. 22. 17, 'idam Visnur vicakrame') addressed to Visnu or with a Yajus so addressed ('Visno kavyamidam raksasva'). Then he scatters about (yavas before daiva brāhmanas silently and) sesamum grains with the mantra 'apahatā asurā raksānsi vedisadah' (Vāj. S. 2. 29). Then he should serve hot food very much liked (by diners or by the departed) or he may serve such food as he can afford. While the brāhmaṇas are engaged in eating (the dinner) he should perform japa of the following[1131], viz. the sacred Gāyatrī once or thrice preceded by om and the vyāhrtis, the verses called Rāksoghnī (note 1111), mantras addressed to the pitrs (Ṛg. X. 15. 1–13 beginning with 'udīratām-avara ut parāsah)', Purusasūkta (Ṛg. X. 90. 1–16), Apratiratha hymn (Ṛg. X. 103. 1–13) beginning with 'āśuh śiśānah') and other holy texts. Then finding that the brāhmanas are satiated with food, he should scatter some food in front of the dining brāhmanas, he should give to each brāhmana water once (for apośana at the end of dinner). Then he should mutter as before the Gāyatrī, the (three) Madhumatī verses (Ṛg. I. 90 6–8) and the word 'madhu' (thrice). Then he asks 'are you satiated'. Being permitted by them in the words 'we are satiated', he makes them give their consent as to the rest of the food, collects together all food in one vessel (in order to make pindas from it); he offers (two sets of three pindas, three for paternal ancestors and three for maternal ancestors) on darbhas near the spot where[1132] the brāhmanas dined and left uneaten food in plates and pours water over the piṇḍas for ablution[1133]. Some authors say that piṇḍas are to be offered after the brāhmanas perform ācamana at the end of the dinner. After they perform ācamana he gives to the brāhmanas water, flowers, aksatas and aksayyodaka[1134]. Then he prays for the following blessings. He prays 'may the pitrs be not terrible (i. e. be kind) to us'. The brāhmanas reply 'may they be so'. He prays 'May our family prosper'. They reply 'may it be so'. He prays 'May donors increase in our family'. They reply 'let it be so'. He prays 'May Vedas and our progeny prosper'. The reply is 'May they do so'. He says 'May faith not depart from me'; they say 'May it not depart'. He says 'May we possess many things that we can donate'. They reply 'so be it'. After receiving these blessings he spreads kuśas called svadhāvācanīya[1134a] together with pavitras (on the ground near the pindas or, on the pindas themselves according to Devayājñika and others); he asks (all the brāhmanas or the most eminent one) 'shall I request you to utter the word svadhā'. Being permitted by them in the words 'May svadhā be recited' he prays 'May there be svadhā to the pitrs, to the grandfathers, to the great-grand-fathers, to the maternal grandfather, maternal great-grandfather and maternal great-great-grandfather'. When the brāhmanas reply 'May there be svadhā' he sprinkles water over the svadhāvācanīya darbhas with the mantra 'ūrjam vahantīr' (Vāj S. II. 34). Then he turns the vessel top upwards (which had been placed with top downwards) and he should give to the brāhmanas daksinā according to his ability. He should make the daiva brāhmanas repeat 'May all the gods be pleased'. He should then dismiss the brāhmanas with the mantra 'Vāje vāje' (Vāj. S 9. 18), he should follow the brāhmanas (up to the village boundary) with the mantra 'ā mā vājasya' (Vāj S. 9. 19), circumambulate them and then enter his own house.

employed for पितामह, प्रपितामह, मातामह etc. Some writers proposed that nine pindas may be offered, three to पितृवर्ग, three to मातृवर्ग and three to मातामह-वर्ग हेमाद्रि (श्रा p. 1445 and 1447) provides that a line for मातृवर्ग should be drawn to the west of the one for पितृवर्ग and another line to the west of the one for मातृवर्ग for मातामहवर्ग and पिण्डs should be offered in that order.

1134. On अक्षय्योदक, गदाधर explains 'अक्षय्योदकशब्देन दत्तासपानादेरानन्त्य-

1134-a. सपवित्रान् कुशानास्तीर्य-कर्क and गदाधर explain 'सपवित्रान्समानि-

It is to be noted that in the Bengal Manual of Pārvana-śrāddha based on the Brāhmanasarvasva of Halāyudha and also on Raghunandana's Yajurvedi-śrāddhatattva the following details are added after the pindas are placed on the darbhas and before the dismissal of the brāhmanas. He turns towards the north and says 'O pitrs, regale yourselves here and come like bulls each to his portion.' Then he turns round to his former position and says 'the pitrs regaled themselves and came like bulls each to his own share.' Then he loosens[1135] the side of his dhoti which has been tucked up and then folds up his hands (i.e. offers six namaskāras) with the mantra[1136] 'Namo vah pitaro rasāya' (Vāj. S. II, 32). He smells[1137] the pindas and gives the middle one to his wife, if she desires a son, with the mantra 'ādhatta' (Vāj. S II. 33).

From considerations of space the procedure of pārvana śrāddha among Hiranyakeśins in modern times is passed over here. Moreover, it closely resembles the procedure in Āśv. Gr. set out above, the principal difference being that some of the mantras are different. The Samskāraratnamālā of Gopīnātha deals with this from p. 985 onwards But one noticeable feature of this last work is that of making hair-splitting distinctions. On p. 985 it refers to two śrāddhas (other than pinda-pitryajña) to be performed on amāvāsyā, viz. māsi-śrāddha and māsika-śrāddha, the first being described by the Dharmasūtra of Hiranyakeśin and the second by the Grhyasūtra. Gopīnātha further says that māsikaśrāddha is the model of the other śrāddhas described in the Grhyasūtra and māsiśrāddha is the model of śrāddhas described in the Dharmaśāstras, such as Mahālayaśrāddha or Sāmvatsarika-śrāddha, that Darśaśrāddha itself is māsi-śrāddha (p. 988) and that māsika-śrāddha may be performed on each darśa or on any one darśa day in a year and that māsi-śrāddha follows immediately after Pindapitryajña as 1136 नमो वः पितरो रसाय-vide note 963 above. रघुनन्दन (यजुर्वेदिश्राद्धतत्त्व) remarks that in नमो वः पितरो रसाय...मन्यवे he offers obeisance to the pitrs identifying them with the six seasons, that in 'namo vah pitarah' (Vāj S. 2 32) he offers namaskāra to the pitrs as identified with Agni Kavyavāhana and then prays to the pitrs to bestow on them a house in the words 'namo vo grhān nah pitaro datta' Vāj. laid down by Manu (III. 122) and māsikaśrāddha may be performed after māsi-śrāddha. In modern times no one performs māsiśrāddha or māsika-śrāddha strictly in accordance with the ancient rules. Śrāddha is supposed to be performed by feeding a brāhmana and giving him a daksinā of a few annas. The Śrāddhatattva (Jiv., part 1 p. 254) provides, after quoting Matsya and Bhavisya, that, if a person is unable to perform a pārvanaśrāddha every month, he should perform one at least thrice a year when the sun is in the zodiacal signs of Kanyā, Kumbha and Vrsabha and that if he is unable to perform even thrice then he should perform at least once when the sun is in the sign of Kanyā.

The two meanings of sapinda given by the Mit. and the Dāyabhāga have already been explained at great length in H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 452–458 and pp. 472–477. The Dāyabhāga propounded the theory that whoever conferred greater spiritual benefit on the deceased by the performance of śrāddhas and the offering of pindas was entitled to be preferred as an heir to the deceased's wealth. The Mit. said that heirship depended on blood relationship and the nearest in blood to the deceased was the preferential heir. But even under the Mit. whoever took the wealth of the deceased was bound to pay his debts (Yāj. II. 51) and to offer śrāddha and pinda to him. This subject and the several propositions deduced from the texts have been dealt with in H. of Dh. vol. III. pp. 734–745.

One thing to be remembered is that in determining the preferential right regard is to be had to the capacity of a person and the efficacy of the pindas when offered. After a person takes the wealth of the deceased, there is no legal machinery to enforce his duty to offer pindas[1138]. It was argued in Nalinaksha v. Rajani Kanto 35 C. W. N. 726 that, if an heir does not offer pindas or refuses to offer them to his ancestor, he was not entitled under Hindu Law to succeed to him. This argument was repelled by the judges with the remark that there was no authority for such a proposition and that the right to inheritance is based under the Dāyabhāga not on offering pinda but on the capacity to offer it (p. 729). Vide Gooroo Gobinda Saha v. Anand Lal 5 Beng. L. R. 15 (F. B.) and Digamber v. Motilal 9 Cal. 563 (F. B.) for the statement that the principle of spiritual benefit is the sole foundation of the theory of inheritance propounded in the Dāyabhāga. But in certain later cases such as Akshayachandra v. Hari Das 35 Cal. 721 it was rightly pointed out that spiritual benefit is not always the guiding principle under the Bengal school of law, that the principle of spiritual efficacy as the guiding principle fails in all classes of female relations such as the wife, the daughter and the mother whose rights are really based on special texts and that the reason for inheritance by a re-united coparcener was not spiritual benefit but was based on a quasi contract and affection.

The question about how śrāddha was to be performed if one or more of the three paternal ancestors were alive engaged the thoughts of writers from very ancient times. The Āśv.[1139] Śr. S (II. 6. 16–23) first sets out the views of Gānagāri, Taulvali and Gautama and then refutes them. Gānagāri held that out of the three paternal ancestors pindas should be offered to those that were dead and those that were alive should be honoured in person, since the śrāddha rite is meant for pleasing the ancestors; Taulvali opined that piṇḍas should be offered to all the three ancestors, whether living or dead, since in the rite of śrāddha they are only a secondary matter (a detail). Gautama thought that piṇḍas should be offered to dead ancestors, upto three from the father if the latter was living, from the grandfather if he was alive and from the great-grandfather if all the three be living. Āśv. replies; one cannot offer piṇḍas to three ancestors[1140] beyond the father, grand-father or great-grandfather, since one has no adhikāra to do so; one cannot offer pindas to an ancestor after whom there is an ancestor (within three degrees) living. One may offer homa into fire to those that are alive. (If all three ancestors are alive) all the three pindas must be cast into fire or he may not begin the rite at all. The Kātyāyana śr.[1141] sūtra provides that pindas are offered only to deceased ancestors; therefore if a person's father be alive or if there is a deceased ancestor between whom and the performer there is an ancestor that is alive, then one whose father is alive can only perform homa (into fire, but no piṇḍadāna) or he should not undertake at all (the rite of pinda-pitṛyajña or pārvaṇaśrāddha); that Jātūkarṇya prescribes that no piṇḍadāna is possible when a living ancestor (father) intervenes between the performer and a deceased ancestor, since a śruti text says 'one does not offer pindas to ancestors that are beyond a living ancestor.' Manu (III. 220-222) deals with this question as follows: If the performer's father be alive he should offer pindas to three ancestors beginning from the paternal grand-father or he may request the father to dinner as he would do to a stranger brāhmaṇa and offer piṇḍas to the deceased grand-father and great-grand-father. If the father be dead and the grandfather be alive, he may offer a piṇḍa only to the father and the great-grandfather (i. e only two pindas) or the grand-father who is alive may be invited to dinner as if he were the stranger brāhmaṇa invited to represent a deceased grand-father or if permitted by the grandfather who is alive he may offer piṇḍas to father, great-grandfather and great-great-grandfather. The Viṣṇudharmasūtra (chap. 75) has several rules of a similar character. Some of the Purāṇas such as Skanda VI 225.24-25, Agni 117.58-59 deal with this matter. Gobhilasmṛti (II. 93 ff) has a long passage on this question, one verse of which is quoted below.[1142] Many of the commentaries and digests hold divergent views on this subject, viz. the Mit. on Yāj. I. 254, Kalpataru (śr. pp 240 ff), Śr. K. K. pp. 552-556 and Nirṇayasindhu (III. pp. 499-503). It is impossible to reconcile all the views. The Kalpataru (on śr. p. 240) states that there are three alternative courses for him whose father is alive, (1) he should pass over the father that is alive and offer pindas to those three ancestors to whom his father offers pindas; (Manu. III, 220, Viṣṇu Dh. S 75.1); (2) he should simply offer homa into fire as stated in Āśv. Śr. S. quoted above, (3) he should not engage in the rite of piṇḍapitṛyajña or pārvaṇaśrāddha at all (Gobhila-smṛti II. 93). The Nirṇayasindhu says that there are numerous alternatives mentioned by different writers, that they are forbidden in the Kali age and that one view is that a man whose father is alive cannot engage in a pārvaṇaśrāddha and that the real conclusion is that śrāddha may be offered to those to whom the father (of the performer) who is living offers piṇḍas. It is clear that one whose father is living should have nothing to do with piṇḍadāna for deceased ancestors. Manu (in latter half of III. 220) allowed an alternative viz. one should feed one's father at a dinner (and honour him with the details of worship such as gandha, dhūpa, dīpa) and offer pindas to the deceased grandfather and great-grandfather. When any one or two out of the three paternal ancestors are alive and śrāddha is permitted to a descendant several alternatives become possible by permutation and combination, which are passed over here from considerations of space and utility. But the various views held by different writers as described above show clearly what a firm grip the theory of the supreme benefits to be derived from śrāddhas had on the minds not only of common people but of learned men, who, in spite of the fact that the father was alive and was there to offer piṇḍas to his three ancestors, allowed even the son (whose father was living) to offer pindas to the same three ancestors. The Visnu Dh. S. extends the procedure about 'jīvatpitṛka' to one's mother's paternal ancestors (changing the mantra where necessary).[1142a] Similar rules apply where the performer's mother is alive (Agnipurāna 117.60 'evam mātrādikasyāpi tathā mātāmahādike').

1140 One can offer pindas only to three ancestors beginning with the father according to Vedic passages quoted in notes 958, 960a above and Manu IX 186. So there is no ancient authority to offer piṇḍa to 4th or 5th or 6th ascendant.

It is provided by Gobhilasmṛti (III. 157) that a śruti injunction should be made effective by means of anukalpa (of some substituted procedure) if the primary procedure cannot be carried out.[1143] If a person cannot secure several brāhmaṇas but can secure only one, he should perform Pārvana-śrāddha in which six piṇḍas are to be offered with a single brāhmana, provided he is pankti-pāvana[1144] (sanctifier of a row of diners) and in such a case, naivedya should be offered in place of the dinner to the daiva brāhmaṇas and the food should be thrown into fire; so says Śaṅkha 14.10. If even a single brāhmaṇa cannot be had for a pārvaṇaśrāddha, then one should prepare with kuśas the effigy of brāhmaṇa students (baṭu) and the performer should himself ask the questions and give the answers required in pārvaṇaśrāddha.[1145]

When one cannot secure a brāhmaṇa nor materials, or when one is on a journey, or on the birth of a son, or when one's wife is in her monthly illness, one may perform āmaśrāddha (śrāddha with uncooked grains).[1146] This is stated by the Skandapurāṇa VII. 1. 206. 52. Kātyāyana and Saurapurāṇa 19.32 have similar verses 'a twice-born person should perform āmaśrāddha when he is on a journey or is in distress, or if he has no fire for cooking and those who are weak may always perform it.' The Madanapārijāta (p. 483) states that one who has the adhikāra for pārvaṇaśrāddha can alone offer āmaśrāddha. Hārīta says that when there is an obstacle in performing a śrāddha, āmaśrāddha is prescribed except in the case of māsika and sāmvatsarika śrāddhas.[1147] Āmaśrāddha is always prescribed for śūdras. It was further provided that the grains offered in śrāddha should be utilized by the brāhmaṇas for eating the cooked food for themselves and were to be applied for no other purpose (Hemādri, Śr. p. 1527). Vyāsa provides[1148] that the quantity of grains should be at least two or three or four times as much as the grains required for offering cooked food. svadhākāra and dismissal of the brāhmaṇas had to be changed e. g in āvāhana the verse employed is 'uśantastvā' (Vāj. S. 19 70) which ends with the words 'haviṣe attave' (which means 'in order to eat the haviṣ') the words 'haviṣe svīkartave' would have to be substituted.

Āmaśrāddha is to be performed in the first part of the day, ekoddiṣṭa in the noon, the pārvaṇaśrāddha in the afternoon and vṛddhiśrāddha in the first part of the day (divided into five).[1149a]

If even uncooked food grains cannot be offered the performer should perform hemaśrāddha (śrāddha with money) When the sun passes from one sign of the zodiac into another, in default of food and brāhmaṇas, on a journey, on the birth of a son, in an eclipse, in the case of women and śūdras hemaśrāddha is allowed or when one's wife is in her monthly illness. In āmaśrāddha twice the quantity of grains required in offering cooked food and in hemaśrāddha four times (the price of the grains required for cooked food) has to be offered. If no money can be had the digests prescribe several modes which have already been set out above (vide p 425, n. 955).

CHAPTER X

EKODDIṢTA AND OTHER ŚRĀDDHAS

Having dealt at great length with Pārvanaśrāddha which is the model of all śrāddhas it is now time to speak of Ekoddista śrāddha that is a modification of Pārvanaśrāddha[1150] The word Ekoddista means 'that in which only one deceased person[1151] is intended (to be invoked or benefited)'. The Pārvanaśrāddha is intended for three paternal ancestors and is thus distinguished from Ekoddista. In Śān gr. IV. 2, Baud. gr. III. 12.6, the Śrāddhasūtra of Kātyāyana (kandikā 4), and Yāj. I. 251–252, the points of difference between the two are clearly set out.[1152] In this śrāddha only one arghya is offered, there is only one pavitra and only one pinda is offered, there is no āvāhana (as there is in Pārvana), no agnaukarana, there are no brāhmanas invited to represent the Viśve-devas; the question about being satiated by the dinner is to be asked in the word 'svaditam' (did it taste well) and the brāhmanas reply with 'susvaditam') (it had excellent taste); instead of saying 'may it be inexhaustible,' the formula here used is 'May it approach' (or wait upon the deceased person), when the brāhmanas are sent away at the end of the dinner the word used is 'be satisfie d (or delighted)' and they reply 'we are delighted.' The Visnupurāna (III 13. 23-26) and Mārkandeya (28 8–11) closely follow the Śrāddhasūtra and Yāj. According to Śān gr. (IV. 2. 7),[1153] Series). The यजुर्वेदिश्राद्धतत्त्व (Jiv. II, p. 495) explains 'एक एकदलरूप पवित्रम्'.

Manu III. 257, Mārkaṇḍeya (28. 11), Yāj. I. 256 and others, for one year after the death of a twice-born person till the sapiṇḍīkaraṇa śrāddha is performed this is the way in which śrāddha is to be performed for the preta every month. The Viṣṇudharmasūtra 21. 2 provides that suitable changes (ūha) should be made in the mantras employed (e. g instead of 'atra pitaro mādayadhvam' the mantra should be 'atra pitarmādayasva' (O father![1154] regale thyself here). In Ekoddiṣṭa such a formula as 'ye ca tvām-anu' (those that come after thee) cannot be employed and the word 'pitṛ' is not to be employed (till sapiṇḍīkaraṇa is performed), but the word 'preta' (Aparārka p. 525 quoting Śaunaka-gṛhyapariśiṣṭa).[1155]

As seen above (p 262, note 591a) Ekoddiṣṭa śrāddhas are of three kinds, nava, navamiśra and purāṇa Navaśrāddhas are those that are performed till the 10th or 11th day after death, navamiśras (or miśras) are those that are performed after the 11th day till one year (or six months, according to some) after death. Aparārka quotes a verse from Vyāghra[1156] that Ekoddiṣṭa-śrāddha is performed on the 11th day, on the 4th day, at the end of each month for a year after death and every year on the day of death and a verse of Kātyāyana that (ekoddiṣṭa) śrāddha should be performed for one who had kept sacred fires on the 11th day after the day of cremation and that the Dhruva śrāddhas should always be performed on the day of death. Aparārka explains 'Dhruvāṇi' as meaning those that are performed after three fortnights from death. About the navaśrāddha there is again a divergence of views. One meaning has already been given above on p 262 note 593. The Skandapurāṇa VI (Nāgarakhaṇḍa) 205. 1–4 and Garuḍapurāṇa (pretakhaṇḍa 5. 67–69) state that navaśrāddhas are nine viz. the three performed where a man died, where the funeral procession rested on the way and where the burnt bones were collected and six more performed on the 5th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, and 11th days after death.

Numerous works lay down that there are sixteen śrāddhas which must be performed for a deceased person and that if these are not performed then his spirit is not freed from the condition of being a preta and a piśāca.[1157] There is a great deal of divergence of views about what these sixteen śrāddhas are, some works including sapiṇḍīkaraṇa among the 16, others excluding it therefrom. Gobhilasmṛti III. 67 enumerates[1158] the 16 as follows: The twelve monthly śrāddhas (performed every month on the tithi of death), the first (i. e. the śrāddha on the 11th day), two śrāddhas on (a day prior to the expiry of) every six months from the tithi of death and sapiṇḍīkaraṇa are the sixteen śrāddhas. The Garuḍapurāṇa[1159] refers to three groups of sixteen, one of which enumerates the 16 śrāddhas as those performed on the 12th day (after death), after three fortnights, after six months, after every month and at the end of the year, while the Padmapurāṇa[1160] enumerates them as follows: the sixteen śrāddhas are those performed on the 4th day after death, at the end of three fortnights, after six months, after a year and twelve śrāddhas performed each month (on the tithi of death) The Kalpataru p. 25 and Brahmapurāṇa q. by Aparārka (p. 523) state that the 16 śrāddhas are those performed on 4th, 5th, 9th and 11th days after death and the twelve monthly śrāddhas (on the tithi of death[1161]). others say that after performing the 16 śrāddhas according to the procedure for Ekoddista śrāddhas sapindana should be performed.[1162] The Madanapārijāta (p. 615), the Nirnayasindhu (III. p. 599) and others say that in this conflict of views one should follow the usage of one's country, Vedic Śākhā or family. There were two views about the śrāddha on the 11th day. It should be remembered that Yāj. III. 22 laid down impurity on death for 10, 12, 15 and 30 days respectively for the four varnas. One view espoused by Śankha and Paithīnasi was that in spite of the days of impurity not being over śrāddha must be performed on the 11th day (and for the moment the performer becomes pure for that purpose). The other view was that of the Matsyapurāna and Visnudharmasūtra 21.1 that the first śrāddha (ekoddista) was to be performed on the expiry of āśauca.

In the case of ascetics dying it is provided by Uśanas[1163] that by the fact of their taking to the order of sannyāsa (of the ekadandi kind in the Kaliyuga) they have not to undergo the condition of being preta, no Ekoddista nor Sapindīkarana should be performed for them by their son or other relative but only pārvanaśrāddha on the 11th day and every year thereafter. Śātātapa provides[1164] that no Ekoddista, no water, no pinda and no cremation rites should be offered to an ascetic nor mourning should be observed, but pārvana-śrāddha should be performed. Pracetas quoted by Mit. on Yāj I. 256 states that no ekoddista is to be performed for an ascetic nor sapindīkarana, but only pārvana on the day of death every year in Bhādrapada dark half. The Śivapurāna (Kailāsa-samhitā) chapters 22 and 23 deal with the rites to be performed on an ascetic's death on the 11th and 12th days.

In the Navaśrāddhas no incense, no lamps are employed. All mantras having the words 'pitr' and 'svadhā namah' are omitted and so is the word 'anu' omitted and there is no japa and no recital of mantras in the hearing of the brāhmaṇas. As stated in the Brahmapurāṇa, the śrāddhas performed in the house at the end of impurity on the 12th day, at the end of a month etc. are called ekoddiṣṭa. It follows that the rites called navaśrāddhas offered during the days of impurity are performed at the place of death or in the cemetery or at a place where water and piṇḍa are offered (and not in the house), vide Sm. C. (āśauca p. 176). In the navamiśra śrāddha mantras are employed according to some. In former times and now also all the 16 śrāddhas are performed on the 11th day. Hardly any one waits for one year to perform Sapiṇḍīkaraṇa. In former times it was laid down (e. g. by the Mit) that in times of difficulty, Sapiṇḍīkaraṇa should be performed even before a year elapses after performing the sixteen śrāddhas. But now this exception has become the rule.

Sapiṇḍīkaraṇa or Sapiṇḍana is the reception of a deceased person into the community of pitṛs to whom piṇḍas are offered. Several times were prescribed by ancient works for this. Acc to the Kauṣītaki gr. IV. 2 this śrāddha could be performed after the death of the deceased at the end of a year or at the end of three fortnights or on the happening of a lucky event (like the birth of a son or a marriage). The Bhāradvāja[1165] gr (III 17) allowed it at the end of a year (after death) or in the 11th or 6th or 4th month or on the 12th day. The Baud. Pitṛmedhasūtra II. 12.1 mentions five times for sapiṇḍīkaraṇa viz one year, 11th, 6th or 4th month or 12th day. The Garuḍapurāṇa (Pretakhaṇḍa 6 53-54) states the time of Sapiṇḍīkaraṇa to be one year, six months, three fortnights, the 12th day or on a lucky occasion. The Viṣṇupurāṇa (III. 13. 26ff) makes similar provisions about sapiṇḍīkaraṇa (which is an ekoddiṣṭa śrāddha). Aparārka (p. 540) after a long discussion holds that there are three times for a performer who is an āhitāgni viz 12th day, some day between the end of āśauca and the first amāvāsyā (after death) or the first amāvāsyā after āśauca ends and prescribes four times for one who has not kept sacred fires, viz a year, six months, three fortnights or when a lucky event occurs. The Madanapārijāta quotes a verse of Vyāsa that the 12th day is commended (for the sapindana śrāddha) because family usages are innumerable, because man's life is short and because the body is evanescent. The Visnu Dh S. (21.20) provides that for śūdras 12th day after death is the only day for Sapindīkarana (but without Vedic mantras). Gobhila laid down that after Sapindīkarana was performed, there was to be no performance of śrāddhas every month, but Gautama (or Śaunaka, according to Aparārka p 543) held the view that they may be performed according to the procedure of ekoddista śrāddhas. Bhattoji says[1166] that when sapindīkarana is performed before the end of the year, then all the sixteen śrāddhas must be performed before Sapindīkarana, yet the monthly śrāddhas should again be performed at their proper times for one year. Yāj. I. 255 and Visnu Dh. S. 21. 23 prescribe that even if Sapindīkarana is performed for a deceased person within less than a year from death still for one year food and a jar of water should be given to a brāhmana for the whole year (for the benefit of the deceased). Uśanas provides that even if the heirs of a deceased person are divided in wealth, still the navaśrāddhas, the sixteen śrāddhas, and sapindīkarana must be performed by one alone[1167] (e. g. the eldest son), but Pracetas provides that when a year has (elapsed) śrāddha may be performed separately by each heir[1168].

The procedure of Sapindana or Sapindīkarana is described in numerous works such as the Śān. gr. V. 9, Kausītaki gr. IV. 2, Baud Pitrmedhasūtra III. 12.12, Śrāddha-sūtra of Kātyāyana (kandikā 5), Yāj. I. 253–254, Visnupurāna III. 13.27 ff, Visnu Dh. S 21. 12–23, Padma (Srstikhanda 10. 22–33), Mārkandeya-purāna 28. 12–18, Garuda-purāna I. 220, Visnudharmottara II. 77, Smrtyarthasāra pp. 57–58, Nirnayasindhu (III. p. 614). It is briefly set out here.[1169] As said by Baud.

Pitṛmedhasūtra III. 12.12, in this śrāddha there is invitation to the brāhmaṇas the previous day, there is agnaukaraṇa, there is the recital of Vedic texts when the brāhmaṇas are engaged in eating, Vaiśvadeva brāhmaṇas are honoured, the Viśvedevas are Kāma and Kāla (vide n. 1018), there is the presentation of incense and lamp, there is svadhā and also namaskāra. Four vessels for arghya should be got ready and filled with sandal-wood paste, water and sesamum grains, one being for the deceased (the preta) and three for his paternal ancestors, two daiva brāhmaṇas should be invited, one to represent the preta and three to represent the three paternal ancestors of the preta; if a man is unable to invite so many brāhmaṇas, he should invite three, one for Viśvedevas, one for the preta and one for the three paternal ancestors. He should request 'I shall unite the vessel for the preta with the vessels for his three paternal ancestors' When permitted in the words 'do unite', he should cast the kuśas in the vessel for the preta into the vessels for his three paternal ancestors, should keep a little water mixed with kuśas in the vessel for the preta and distribute the rest of the water from the preta vessel into the three vessels for his ancestors with the two mantras[1169a] 'ye samānā' (Vāj. S. 19. 45-46) Arghya is offered to the brāhmaṇa representing the preta with the water that remains in the preta vessel, arghya is offered to the three pitrya brāhmaṇas from the three pitrya vessels. Four piṇḍas should be prepared, one for the preta and three for his ancestors and then the performer requests 'I shall unite the pretapiṇḍa with the piṇḍas for the three ancestors of his'; when permitted in the words 'do unite', the performer divides the pretapiṇḍa into three parts and puts each third into each of the three piṇḍas with the same two mantras (Vāj. S 19. 45-46). The Garuḍapurāṇa (I. 220.6) strikes a discordant note in that it states that the pretapiṇḍa is to be divided in two parts, each of which is to be placed inside the piṇḍas for pitāmaha and prapitāmaha only.

1169 a. The two mantras are . ये समाना समनस पितरो यमराज्ये। तेषा लोक' स्वधा नमो यज्ञो देवेषु कल्पताम्॥ ये समानाः समनसो जीवा जीवेषु मामका । तेषां श्रीर्मयि कल्पतामस्मिँल्लोके शतं समा.॥ वाज. स. 19. 45-46, काठकसंहिता 38 23-24 भारद्वाज-गृह्य III 17 sets out the following formula for तिलप्रदान 'ये समाना ये सजाता इति द्वाभ्यामसौ पितृभिः पितामहेभि प्रपितामहेभि सहैतत्ते तिलोदकं तस्मै ते स्वधा नम इति तिलोदकप्रदानम्।' In place of असौ one has to use the vocative 'अस्मत्पितरमुकगोत्रामुकशर्मन् प्रेत' पितामहेभि. and प्रपितामहेभिः are Vedic Instrumentals (plural).

Sapindikarana partakes of the character of both ekoddista and pārvana, the first applying to the preta and the 2nd to the three ancestors of the preta, so that in it two kinds of śrāddhas are combined. When the sapindīkarana rite is completed by the giving of daksinā to the brāhmanas, then the preta ceases to be so and himself becomes a pitr. The status of being a preta involves the experiencing of great torments due to hunger and thirst and becoming a pitṛ means being brought in contact with the śrāddha devatās called Vasu, Rudra and Āditya.[1170] The word preta has two meanings, (1) a person who is dead and (2) one who being dead has not the sapindīkarana performed for him The result of sapindana is that the[1171] great-grandfather of the deceased whose sapindana is performed drops out from the list of pitrs entitled to pinda and becomes one called 'lepabhāk' (entitled to only wipings of the hand) and the former preta becomes one of the pitrs and entitled to participate in the pindas offered at a pārvanaśrāddha thereafter. As stated in the Garudapurāna I. 220. 2 the sapindikarana-śrāddha is to be performed like the pārvana in the afternoon.

It may be noted that in some works the mantras recited at the time of pouring the water from the preta vessel into the pitr vessels are different For example, the Visnu Dh. S. 21. 14 says[1172] the mantras are 'Samsrjatu tvā prthivī' (May the earth unite thee) and 'samāni va ākutiḥ' (Ṛg. X. 191. 4), while the

The mantra is संसृजतु त्वा पृथिवी वायुरग्नि प्रजापति.। संसृजध्वं पूर्वेभि. पितृभिः सह॥ The काठकगृह्य 66 7 prescribes that when parts of pretapinda are mixed up with पितृपिण्डs, this mantra and two more viz. 'samānā va ākūtāni' and 'sam vo manāmsi' (काठकसंहिता 10. 38-39) are recited.

Gṛhya-pariśiṣṭa[1173] of Āśv. employs the three Madhumatī verses (Ṛg. I. 90.6–8) and the three fine verses at the end of the Ṛgveda beginning with 'sangacchadhvam' (Ṛg. X. 191. 2–4, 'May you unite' &c.).

Yāj. (I. 254) and Mārkaṇḍeya (28. 17–18) provide that Ekoddiṣṭa and Sapiṇḍīkaraṇa śrāddhas are performed for women also (but, not pārvaṇa nor ābhyudayika). About the Sapiṇḍīkaraṇa of the mother there are somewhat conflicting dicta. If a woman dies sonless and her husband is alive, her sapiṇḍana is effected with her mother-in-law (Gobhilasmṛti II. 102). If a woman dies leaving no son and the husband also is dead, then no sapiṇḍana can be performed for her. If she died either on the funeral pyre of her husband[1174] or afterwards (as a Satī) then her son should perform her sapiṇḍana with her husband (i. e. the son's father) and there is no separate sapiṇḍana for her. If she was married in the āsura form or she was made a putrikā, then the son should perform his mother's sapiṇḍana with his maternal grandfather; while a son born of a woman married in the Brāhma and three other proper forms may perform her sapiṇḍana with her husband or the paternal grandmother or the maternal grandfather. In the case of these three alternatives if there is a certain family usage that should be followed; otherwise there is an option. If a woman has a step-son, the latter should perform her sapiṇḍana with his father, as Manu IX. 183 (= Vas. 17. 11) indicates. Vide the Mit on Yāj I. 253–254 and Sm. C. (on āśauca p 169) for discussion of these points and for various alternatives[1175]

The Nirṇayasindhu (III. p. 388) says that there is no sapiṇḍana for one whose upanayana was not performed when he died, but if he was more than five years old then the 16 śrāddhas are performed for him (though not sapindana) and pinda is offered on bare ground. It may be noted that no auspicious rite like marriage in which ābhyudayika śrāddha is necessary can be performed until the sapindana of a deceased person of the family has been effected (except in the case of such absolutely necessary ceremonies as sīmantonnayana).

Manu (V. 89-90) prescribes that no water and other rites like sapindīkarana are offered and performed for those who had left off their faith, who were born of condemned mixed marriages, who entered ascetic orders, who had committed suicide (by hanging, poison &c.), who had embraced heretical doctrines, for women that wilfully seek illicit connection with men, that did harm to their foetus or husband (were guilty of abortion and murder of husband) and that were addicted to drinking surā. Yāj. III. 6 contains similar provisions. It has to be noted that every kind of suicide is not condemned by the ancient smrtis. Vide H. of Dh. vol. III, pp. 939, 958-9 for cases where suicide was not condemned. Except in those cases Yama (q by the Mit. on Yāj. III. 6) provides that in the case of the persons mentioned in Manu and Yāj. there is to be no āśauca observed, no water offered, no tears shed, no cremation and no last rites. The Mit. (on Yāj. III. 6) quotes Vrddha Yājñavalkya and Chāgaleya that in the case of those who are guilty of condemned suicide the procedure of Nārāyanabali should be resorted to after a year and then śrāddha may be offered to them. Then the Mit. describes at length the procedure of Nārāyanabali. Vide note 838 b p. 370 above for the Skandapurāna, Nāgarakhanda 219. 19-21 on the view that śrāddha may be performed on the 14th of the dark half for persons who committed suicide or who met a violent death.

The Ābhyudayika-śrāddha is to be now described. Āśv. gr. IV. 7 mentions in one place only four śrāddhas viz. Pārvana, Kāmya, Ābhyudayika and Ekoddista (note 966 above). Many of the sūtras such as Āśv. gr. II. 5. 13-15, Śāṅ. gr. IV. 4, Gobhila gr. IV. 3. 35-37, Kausītaki gr. IV. 4, Baud. gr. III. 12. 2-5, the Śrāddhasūtra of Kātyāyana (kandikā 6) briefly describe this śrāddha. According to most of these sūtras this śrāddha is performed when there is a lucky event such as the birth of a son, or his caula, upanayana or marriage or there is the commencement of a charitable (pūrta) act (such as the dedication of a well or a tank or a park to the public). Āśv.

gr. and Gobhila gr. are very brief. They say that in this śrāddha performed on auspicious occasions or on the undertaking of meritorious acts an even number of brāhmaṇas is to be fed, that the rite is to be performed from left to right and that yavas (barley) are to be used instead of sesamum grains. As this śrāddha is only a modification (vikṛti) of pārvaṇa (as said by Aparārka p. 514) all rules of the latter will be applicable to the former except where special directions are given. The Āśv. gr. pariśiṣṭa II. 19, Smṛtyarthasāra (p. 56), Pitṛdayitā pp. 62–71 give a compact but tolerably full description of this śrāddha.

In this śrāddha which is to be performed in the morning (except on the birth of a son when it is to be done at once) the Viśve-devas are called Satya and Vasu, it is performed in the forenoon, the brāhmaṇas to be invited must be even in number, the darbhas are to be straight (and not doublefolded) and are not to be with their roots; the performer wears his sacred thread in the usual form (and not in the prācīnāvīta form), all actions are to be done from left to right (pradakṣiṇam and not prasavyam); the word svadhā is not to be used; yava grains are to be employed instead of sesamum grains, he invites them with the words 'find time to attend Nāndīśrāddha'. The brāhmaṇas say 'be it so'. He says 'May you two come (to my house)'; they reply 'we two shall come'. The performer faces the east or north (but never the south); the mantra about yavas is 'yavosi' (vide note 966)[1176] he requests 'I shall invoke the pitṛs called Nāndīmukha'.[1177] When permitted by the brāhmaṇas in the words 'do invoke' he says 'may the Nāndīmukha pitṛs be pleased'; he offers arghya only once with the words 'O Nāndīmukha pitṛs! this is the arghya for you'. Sandalwood paste, incense, lamp are to be given twice; the homa is made on the hand of the brāhmaṇa, the two mantras being 'to Agni, the bearer of kavya! svāhā' and 'to Soma accompanied by the pitṛs! svāhā'. While the brāhmaṇas are eating the dinner, the Rākṣoghna mantras and mantras addressed to Indra and propitiatory mantras may be recited but not the mantras addressed to pitṛs (viz. Ṛg. X. 15. 1–13); when he sees that the brāhmaṇas are satiated, he recites the five verses (Ṛg. IX. 11. 1–5) beginning with 'upāsmai gāyatā naraḥ' (O men! sing for this soma) instead of the Madhumatī verses (viz. Ṛg. I. 90. 6–8) and at the end he makes the brāhmaṇas hear the mantra 'the pitṛs have partaken (of the food), they have regaled themselves'. The performer should ask 'I shall request the nāndīmukha pitṛs to utter benedictions' at the stage where (in Pārvaṇa) 'akṣayyodaka' is asked for, to which the brāhmaṇas respond with the words 'do request.' The performer employs the word 'sampannam' (was it perfect) in asking about the gratification of the brāhmaṇas, who reply with the word 'susampannam' (it was quite perfect). On the brāhmaṇas sipping water after their dinner, he cowdungs the places where the dinner was taken, strews darbha grass thereon with their tips turned towards the east and offers thereon two piṇḍas for (each of the ancestors) made with the food that remains after the brāhmaṇas have eaten mixed with curds, jujube fruit and pṛṣadājya [1178] (mixture of curds and clarified butter). The piṇḍas are offered to the mātṛs, to the three paternal ancestors and the three maternal ancestors (viz. mother's father, mother's paternal grandfather and her paternal great-grandfather). Some do not offer piṇḍas in this śrāddha (as stated by Āśv. gṛ. pariśiṣṭa II. 19). The Pitṛdayitā and Śrāddha-tattva (Jīv. p. 297) say that no mātṛśrāddha is to be performed in Ābhyudayikaśrāddha by the followers of the Sāmaveda. It is possible that the śrāddha for the mother, paternal grandmother and paternal great-grandmother was inspired by the Anvaṣṭakya śrāddha, as the sūtras from Āśv. gṛ. quoted below will indicate.[1178a]

The words Nāndīśrāddha and Vṛddhiśrāddha are synonymous. When Yāj. I. 250 says[1179] that the Nāndīmukha pitṛs should be worshipped with piṇḍas when there is vṛddhi (a lucky or auspicious event), he indicates that Nāndīśrāddha and Vṛddhiśrāddha mean the same thing. As noted by the Mit. on Yāj. I. 250 quoting Śātātapa this śrāddha is made of three parts, viz. mātr-śrāddha, pitrśrāddha and mātāmahaśrāddha.[1180] On the other hand the Bhavisya-purāna I. 185. 15 states that there are two śrāddhas in this viz Mātr-śrāddha and Nāndīmukha-pitr-śrāddha. Ābhyudayika-śrāddha and Vrddhiśrāddha are treated as synonyms in some works such as the Padmapurāna,[1181] though it may be said that Ābhyudayika śrāddha is wider in import than Vrddhiśrāddha, since it is also applicable to srāddha performed on the commencement of a pūrta act.

The Visnupurāna III. 13. 2–7, Mārkandeya 28. 4–7, Padmapurāna (srsti 9. 194–199), Bhavisyapurāna I. 185. 5–13, the Visnudharmottara I. 142. 13–18 describe briefly the procedure of Nāndīśrāddha and also the occasions on which it is to be performed. The occasions specified are[1182]: on the marriages of sons and daughters, on entering a new house, on naming a child, at the time of Cūdākarma, at Sīmantonnayana, on the birth of a son, a householder should honour the group of pitrs called Nāndīmukha. The Mārkandeya-purāna 28. 6 notes that some desire that this śrāddha should not have Vaiśvadeva brāhmanas, but the Padmapurāna (srstikhanda 9.195) says that in this Vrddhiśrāddha the mothers are to be first honoured, then the fathers, then the mātāmahas and then the Viśve-devas Hemādri (śr. p. 107) quotes two verses from the Brahmapurāna to the effect that the father, paternal grandfather and paternal great-grandfather are called aśrumukha pitrs, while the three paternal ancestors beyond the great-grandfather are called Nāndīmukha pitrs.[1183] The Kalpataru (on śrāddha p 270) explains these verses as meaning no more than this that in case the three paternal ancestors of a man are living and there is a lucky event, then the devatās for Nāndīśrāddha in his case would be the three paternal ancestors beyond the great-grandfather. The Bhaviṣya-purāṇa notes that according to family usage some did not offer piṇḍas in Vṛddhiśrāddha [1183a].

The word 'mātaraḥ' has two meanings. Gobhilasmṛti [1184] prescribes that at the beginning of all rites the Mātṛs together with Gaṇeśa have to be worshipped and it names fourteen mātṛs such as Gaurī, Padmā, Śacī (I. 11-12).[1185] In the Mārkaṇḍeya-purāṇa (88.11-20 and 38) they are said to be seven viz Brahmāṇī and others. Vide H. of Dh. vol. II pp. 217-218 for the Mātṛs and their worship.[1186] Aparārka (p. 517) quotes verses to the effect that in Vṛddhiśrāddha one must offer worship to the seven mātṛs (Brahmāṇī and others), then to one's mother, paternal grandmother, and paternal great-grandmother, then to the Nāndīmukha pitṛs and then to the mātāmahas together with their wives The Śrāddhaprakāśa (of Vīramitrodaya) quotes Vṛddha-Vasiṣṭha to the effect that in the Mātṛśrāddha (as part of Vṛddhi-śrāddha) if a sufficient number of brāhmaṇas be not available then for the groups of mātṛs and of mātāmahīs four women (for each group) whose husbands are living and who have a son or sons should be invited to dinner [1186a] and honoured.

The Pratisāṃvatsarika or Pratyābdika śrāddha has already been described above at great length. It is to be performed every year on the day of death (Gobhilasmṛti III. 66). It is laid down that in the case of one's parents this śrāddha partakes of the character of pārvana.[1186b] The Bhaviṣya-purāṇa and Skanda state that the Sāmvatsarika śrāddha is the most eminent among śrāddhas and that if a son does not perform the yearly śrāddha of his parents on the day of death he goes to the horrible Hell called Tāmisra and then is born as a pig in a town.[1187] In connection with this, if the tithi or month of death or both are not known then Bṛhaspati, the Skandapurāṇa, Padma and Bhaviṣyapurāṇa lay down certain rules, viz[1188] (1) if the tithi is known but the month is not known, then the śrāddha should be performed on that tithi in the month of Mārgaśīrṣa or Māgha; (2) if the month is known but the tithi is not known, then the śrāddha should be performed on the amāvāsyā of the month; (3) if both the tithi and the month are not known, then one should take the tithi and the month when the deceased started from home; (4) if even the day and month of starting be not known, then the tithi and month in which a person hears of the death of a relative should be taken. It is to be noted that the month in pitrya rites is lunar and the words 'dina, ahah, vāsara' in connection with pitrya rites mean 'tithi' (Aparārka p. 545). There is no pratyābdika śrāddha in an intercalary month (Skanda VII. 1. 206. 59).

A few words may now be said about some other śrāddhas.

A well-known śrāddha is the Mahālayaśrāddha Some of the Purāṇas deal with this. The Padmapurāṇa (Sṛṣṭi-khaṇḍa) says 'In the fifth fortnight (pakṣa) beginning from the Full Moon day of Āṣāḍha, one should perform a śrāddha, whether the Sun is by that time in the zodiacal sign of Kanyā (Virgo) or not. The sixteen days when the Sun is in Kanyā are equal to the solemn sacrifices which are completed with the gift of the best of dakṣiṇās. If it is not possible to perform the śrāddha in the dark half (when the Sun is in Kanyā), one may perform it when the Sun is in Tulā (Balance). When the Sun enters the sign of Scorpion (without a śrāddha being performed), the Fathers go away losing all hope and after pronouncing a terrible curse (on their descendants) they return to their abode.'[1189] The fifth fortnight from the Full Moon day of Āṣādha is the dark half of Bhādrapada. The dark half is the preserve of pitṛs. In Bhādrapada the Sun is in the middle of its apparent motion in dakṣiṇāyana. Therefore the dark half of Bhādrapada is specially chosen as the best period for śrāddha to the pitṛs i. e. for the Mahālaya The śrāddha performed in Bhādrapada dark half is called Mahālaya-śrāddha, since that fortnight is the abode (ālaya) as it were of the maha (i. e. festival day) for pitṛs. The real idea is that the dark half of Bhādrapada is specially to be welcomed for a śrāddha when the Sun is in Kanyā during that fortnight and that even if the Sun is not in Kanyā the dark half of Bhādrapada is still a good time for a śrāddha to the pitṛs. The Skandapurāṇa [1190] also says 'In the fifth fortnight from the Full Moon of Āṣādha, when the Sun occupies the sign of Kanyā, the pitṛs of him who offers a śrāddha on the tithi of the death (of one's father) certainly derive gratification for one year thereafter.' The Kalpataru quotes the Bhaviṣya-purāṇa to the effect that if a man has not performed śrāddha in

The first verse आषाढी° occurs in अग्निपुराण 175.33 and is ascribed to जातूकर्ण्य by श्रा. क्रि कौ p. 283 and अपरार्क p 423, which reads the third पाद as श्राद्धकालः स विज्ञेयः The verse कन्यागते° is ascribed to the ब्रह्मपुराण by श्रा क्रि कौ p 285 (which reads तुल्यानि देवो नारायणोऽब्रवीत्) and to ब्रह्माण्डपुराण by अपरार्क p. 424 (which reads last पाद as तत्र दत्तं महाफलम्) and to श्लोकगौतम by श्रा क ल p 99. यान्यहानि तु षोडश—These words are explained in two ways. 'कदाचित् पक्षविवृद्धौ षोडशदिनात्मकोऽपि नभस्यस्यापर पक्ष श्राद्धकर्मणि कालो न तु पञ्चदशदिनात्मको वेति दर्शयितुमुक्तम्। यद्वा अमावास्याया अनन्तरभूताया प्रतिपत्तिथ्या अपि संग्रहणार्थं 'तिथिषोडशक.' इत्युक्तम्। प्रतिपदोऽपि क्षीणचन्द्रत्वे सापरपक्षतुल्यत्वात्। स्मृतिच (श्रा p. 365). There is also a third way viz including the preceding full moon day along with the 15 days of the dark half. प्रजापतिस्मृति verse 161 is very similar to the verse कन्यागते° and कल्पतरु (श्रा. p. 16) quotes it from ब्रह्माण्ड

Mahālaya (i. e. in the dark fortnight of Bhādrapada when the Sun is in the sign of Kanyā) he should offer it on the 15th day (of the dark half of Āśvina) on which, it is well-known, lamps are lighted.[1191] The Śrāddha-sāra (p. 113) and the Smṛtimuktāphala (on śrāddha p. 745) quote Vṛddha-manu to the effect that the latter half of Bhādrapada when the Sun is in Kanyā is called Mahālaya and also Gajacchāyā. Various views are held on the question of the exact day on which the Mahālayaśrāddha is to be performed, viz. it may be performed on any day from the first tithi of the dark half of Bhādrapada to the amāvāsyā or from the fifth of the dark half to the amāvāsyā of Bhādrapada or from the 8th or 10th of the dark half to amāvāsyā or from the 5th of the dark half of Bhādrapada to the 5th of the next fortnight or on any day on which the Sun is in Kanyā or on any day till the Sun enters Scorpion.[1192] Prajāpati states that there are numerous śrāddhas described by the Purāṇas, all of them yield rewards but the Mahālaya (śrāddha) is the most eminent among them.[1193]

The Mahālayaśrāddha is to be performed, as stated by the Mārkaṇḍeyapurāṇa, in accordance with the procedure of Pārvaṇaśrāddha.[1194] The Smṛtyarthasāra states that if it is not possible to perform all śrāddhas (except sapiṇḍīkaraṇa) according to the detailed procedure of Pārvaṇaśrāddha they should be performed by the procedure called 'Sankalpavidhi', which consists in performing the details laid down for Pārvaṇa as far as possible except the details of āvāhana, arghya, homa and piṇḍadāna.[1195] The Madanapārijāta (pp 609–610) also states that when a man has to perform a 'sankalpa-śrāddha' he need not go through the details of arghyadāna, vikira and there is no āvāhana, no agnaukaraṇa and no piṇḍadāna even, but he has simply to feed a brāhmaṇa or brāhmaṇas

In the Mahālayaśrāddha the Viśvedevas are Dhuri and Locana. This śrāddha is performed for the benefit not only of the paternal and maternal ancestors with their wives, but also for other relatives and persons that are dead (together with their wives, sons and husbands if these be dead) viz one's step-mother, one's wife, son, daughter, paternal uncle, maternal uncle, brother, paternal aunt and maternal aunt, sister, paternal uncle's son, son-in-law, sister's son, father-in-law, mother-in-law, ācārya, upādhyāya, guru, friend, pupil and any other relative.[1196] Some perform only for the paternal ancestors with their wives and the maternal ancestors with their wives. The day on which the moon is in Bharaṇī nakṣatra in the dark half of Bhādrapada is called Mahābharaṇī and śrāddha performed on that day is said to be equal to Gayāśrāddha (Matsyapurāṇa q. by Śr. K. L p 99) The Mahālaya-śrāddha is to be performed on the 12th tithi of Bhādrapada dark half in the case of a saṃnyāsin and on no other tithi and his yearly śrāddha is to be performed by his son according to pārvaṇa method as in the case of householders. The dvādaśī is sacred to Viṣṇu and yatis always repeat the words 'namo Nārāyaṇāya' and therefore the 12th is the special tithi for the mahālaya-śrāddha of yatis. The Mahālayaśrāddha is not to be performed in an intercalary month (malamāsa).

Two more śrāddhas that are performed even to this day may be mentioned here. One is called 'Mātāmahaśrāddha' or 'Dauhitra-pratipad-śrāddha'. A daughter's son whose parents are alive can alone perform a śrāddha for his maternal grand-father (together with the maternal grand-mother if she also be dead) on the first tithi of the bright half of Āśvina[1197]. A daughter's son can perform it even if his maternal grand-father has a son or sons living It may be performed with or without piṇḍadāna (generally without it) and it may be performed even if the daughter's son has not been invested with the sacred thread. The Śrāddhasāra notes that the mātāmaha-śrāddha is based only on the usage of śiṣṭas (p. 24).

Another is the 'Avidhavānavamīśrāddha', which is performed for one's mother or other women of the family who died while the husbands were alive. It is performed on the 9th of the dark half of Bhādrapada. It ceases to be performed when the husband dies after the woman's death. The Nirnayasindhu notices several views about this and says that one should follow the usage of one's country[1198]. According to the Mārkandeyapurāna in this śrāddha not only a brāhmana but also a woman whose husband is alive is to be fed and presents of a girdle, a garland and bangles are to be made to her.

It will have been seen from the translation of Āśv. gr., Yāj and the Padmapurāna that daksinā, according to one's ability, has to be given in each śrāddha towards the end of the rite. The Skandapurāna (VI. 218. 12-14) provides that whatever is wanting in mantras or the proper time or in procedure becomes perfect by daksinā. Śrāddha without daksinā is like rain on an arid place or like dancing in the dark or like singing before a deaf person, that he who desires the permanent gratification of himself and his Manes should not offer a śrāddha without daksinā. The Rāmāyana shows how on the 12th day after the death of king Daśaratha gifts of jewels, of hundreds of cows, wealth, food in abundance and vehicles, of male and female slaves, of spacious houses were made to the brāhmanas.[1199] The Āśramavāsikaparva (14 3-4) recounts the valuable gifts to brāhmanas in honour of Bhīsma, Drona, Duryodhana and other fallen warriors, adding that persons of all varnas were treated to profuse food and drink The Vāyupurāna (chapter 80) propounds in great detail the rewards of various kinds of gifts made in śrāddhas From considerations of space those descriptions are passed over here and only a brief eulogy of the gift of cooked food is given in the note below.[1200] The Śāntiparva (chap 42. 7) states that while Yudhisthira performed the after-death ceremonies of the fallen heroes he erected sabhās, prapās, water reservoirs and the like intending them for each separately. Devala states. 'when the brāhmaṇas have sipped water after dinner, dakṣiṇā is to be given' and Bṛhaspati prescribes 'Dakṣiṇā should be given to all the brāhmaṇas according to the learning of them by means of (gifts of) cows, land, gold, clothes. He should do this in such a way that they feel satisfied, one who is well-off should do this specially.'[1201] The Āśvamedhika-parva (62. 2-5) states that Vāsudeva offered śrāddha to his sister's son Abhimanyu and donated to sixty thousand brāhmaṇas, gold, cows, bed-steads, clothes and fed them. A special rule was provided by Bṛhaspati that the clothes, ornaments, bed-stead and the like, the horse and the like that were used by the father during his lifetime should be presented to the brāhmaṇa invited for śrāddha after honouring him with sandalwood paste and flowers.[1201a] The Anuśāsana-parva (chapt. 96) states the origin of the practice of giving an umbrella and sandals on the completion of a śrāddha.

Something must be said about the gift of the bed-stead (śayyā) used by the deceased on the 11th or 12th day after death. The Garuḍapurāṇa (Pretakhanda 34. 69-89), Padma (sṛṣṭikhanda 10. 12), the Matsyapurāṇa highly eulogise the gift of śayyā to a brāhmaṇa and his wife. The Matsyapurāṇa states that on the 2nd day after the end of impurity on death the performer (of śrāddha) should donate a bed-stead possessing special characteristics; on it the golden image of the deceased should be placed and also fruits and clothes. After honouring a brāhmaṇa couple with many ornaments this should be done; then a bull should be let loose (for the benefit of the deceased) and the gift of a dark brown cow should also be made.[1202] The Garuḍapurāṇa (Pretakhanda 34. 73-82) gives a more elaborate description which appears to be almost identical with the verses of the Bhavisya quoted by Hemādri. The Bhavisya-purāna quoted by Hemādri (and from Hemādri by the Nirnayasindhu p. 596) states the mantra to be recited viz 'just as the bed-stead of Krsna is never devoid of Laksmī, the daughter of the ocean, similarly my bed may not be empty in each birth that I may have to undergo.'[1203] Acceptance of the gift of a śayyā was looked down upon in former times and even now it is only the poor brāhmanas (that are not generally learned) that accept this gift The Padmapurāna condemns the acceptance of the gift of śayyā in no measured terms. It says 'when a brāhmana accepts the gift of a bed-stead, he should have to undergo the ceremony of upanayana again. In the Veda as well as in the Purāna (the gift of) a bed-stead is everywhere condemned and all those who accept the gift go to hell.'[1204]

Certain other matters connected with śrāddhas may be briefly touched upon. In very ancient times twelve kinds of sons were recognized out of whom the ksetraja,[1205] the putrikāputra and dattaka were most important All these were the sons of two fathers. The question mooted was: to whom were they to offer pindas? The Madanapārijāta (pp 607-608) quotes a passage from the Hārīta-dharmasūtra[1206] and explains it. Hārīta says. 'seed does not grow without a field Since it is seen that both are necessary the child born is the child of both. Out of the two (fathers) the procreator is to be first invoked

1205. The kṣetraja son was procreated on the wife or widow of a sonless man by a sagotra (a brother or other agnate) or even an asagotra according to the rules of niyoga, the procreator being called bījin and the husband on whose wife or widow the son was begotten was called kṣetrin. The putrikāputra is of two kinds, (1) a sonless man gives his daughter in marriage to another with the stipulation that the son born of the marriage will be the son of the girl's father (Vas. 17. 17, Manu IX 127). (2) A daughter herself may be made a son (Vas 17. 16). A dattaka is a son whom his father or mother gives to another as a son confirming the gift with water (Manu IX. 168). Vide H. of Dh vol. III. pp. 647-650 for detailed explanations about these and other secondary sons.

(and then the kṣetrin). He (the son) may offer two piṇḍas to each grade of the ancestors or he may offer a single piṇḍa (to the father and) may repeat the names of both (fathers) as to that single piṇḍa. The son (of the son of two fathers) may repeat two names as to the 2nd piṇḍa (i. e. the piṇḍa for paternal grand-father); the grand-son (of the son of two fathers) may do the same as to the third piṇḍa (viz. the piṇḍa for paternal great-grandfather).' Manu IV. 140 and Gobhila-smṛti II. 105 say about the putrikāputra[1207] that he presents the first piṇḍa to his mother (as she was appointed as a son), the 2nd to her father and the third to his father's father. This appears to be one order in which piṇḍas are to be offered by the putrikāputra, while Manu IX. 132 sets out another method since it says that a putrikāputra inherits the entire wealth of his own father if he is sonless and he gives two piṇḍas (i. e. performs two śrāddhas) for his own father and for his maternal grandfather. The Śān. Śr. S. provides[1208] that if there be two fathers, the son should recite the names of both (bījin and kṣetrin) with reference to the same piṇḍa. Even Yāj. says 'The son procreated according to the rules of niyoga by a sonless man on the wife of another inherits the wealth of both and offers piṇḍa to both.'[1209] The Mit. adds that if a person appointed to procreate a son on another's wife has a son, then the son so begotten becomes the son of the kṣetrin alone and not of the bījin. As the kṣetraja and putrikāputra have become obsolete for several centuries the subject has only an academic interest now. But the dattaka is still in vogue and a few words must be said here about the persons to whom the dattaka offers piṇḍas. The Kalpataru quotes from the Pravarādhyāya a passage on this point which is as follows:[1210] 'If these (i. e. those who are bījin) have no issue born of their own wives, (the sons begotten by niyoga or given in adoption) should inherit their wealth and offer pindas to them up to three ancestors; if both (the bījin and ksetrin or the giver and taker in adoption) have no other son, then they (sons begotten or adopted) should offer pinda to both, in one and the same śrāddha they should repeat (the names of) the two ancestors respectively (of the acceptor and that of the begetter) after having separately intended the same pinda for both up to the third ancestor.' The Baud. Dh. S.[1211] quotes a verse as follows 'The son of two fathers shall give the pinda (to his two fathers and pronounce) two names with each pinda; three pindas will thus serve for six persons (ancestors).' It would be seen from the passage quoted above from Hārīta that some authorities allowed two separate pindas for each degree of ancestors when there were two in the same degree. Manu IX. 142 lays down 'the son given should not take the gotra and wealth of his natural father, the pinda follows the gotra and wealth; the svadhā (obsequies) of him who gives (his son in adoption) cease or fail (so far as that son is concerned).' This verse has been so interpreted by some decisions of the High Courts and of the Privy Council as to mean that the son adopted becomes totally severed from the family of his birth. This subject has been discussed at great length in H. of Dh. vol III pp 690–697 and it is established there that the severance of the son given in adoption is only partial, that the gotra of the natural family persists even after adoption into another family for purposes of marriage and āśauca and that the Nirnayasindhu,[1212] the Dharma-sindhu and the Dattaka-candrikā declare that the son given away in adoption into another family can perform the śrāddha of his natural father,

In विष्णुधर्मोत्तर I. 146 42–55 and मत्स्य 207 the characteristics of auspicious and inauspicious bulls are given The श्रा क ल. p. 214 quotes शौनक as 'लोहितो यस्तु वर्णेन मुखे पुच्छे च पाण्डुर। श्वेत. खुरविषाणाभ्या स नीलो वृष उच्यते॥' This is ascribed to ब्रह्माण्डपुराण (रेवाखण्ड) by श्रा प्र and शु प्र p. 226.

Dr. Jolly is not right when he refers (in SBE vol. 7 p. 262) the words to नारद I. 11 (SBE vol 30 p 7) where व्यवहार is said to have four feet of which धर्म is one. about sportingly with him as your lover. May we not lack progeny, O king Soma, nor physical fitness and may we not succumb to our enemy'. He must drive away the bull together with the young cows in the north-eastern direction and give a pair of garments, gold and a vessel of bell metal to the hotr (officiating priest). The blacksmith should be given wages as desired by him and food seasoned with a good deal of clarified butter should be served to (three) brāhmanas (at least). That[1219] pool at which a bull let loose (in honour of a deceased person by his son or the like) drinks water serves (reaches) the manes. Wherever a bull (let loose) exulting in his strength scratches (or digs up) the earth, that earth becoming abundant food and water waits upon the manes."[1220] In the Anuśāsanaparva the pitrs are represented as saying that by letting loose a dark-coloured bull, by offering water mixed with sesame and by lighting lamps in the rains a man becomes free from the debt he owes to the pitrs (chap. 125. 73–74).

In the Garudapurāna it is stated that the deceased person for whom a bull is not let loose on the 11th day after death permanently remains a preta, even if hundreds of śrāddhas are offered for him. The same Purāna further provides that if a bull be not available on the 11th day, then the effigy of a bull made of darbhas and flour or clay should be symbolically let loose.[1221] In the Bhavisyapurāna the 12th day after death is prescribed for the letting loose of a bull (N. S. III. p. 505). The Nirnayasindhu says that the making of an effigy of a bull with clay, darbhas and flour is without authority. Even at present people let loose a bull but owing to the rise in the prices of bulls this is becoming less frequent. Several medieval digests such as the Pitrdayitā (pp. 84, 94), Śrāddhaviveka of Rudradhara (pp. 69–77), Nirnayasindhu (III. pp. 595–596), Śuddhiprakāśa

pp. 225-230, Antyestipaddhati of Nārāyaṇabhatta present a far more elaborate description, but from considerations of space they are passed over here. It is provided in these and other digests that such a bull should not be seized by anyone nor made to draw a vehicle and the cow or cows let loose along with him should not be milked nor confined in a cow-pen. A bull is not let loose for a deceased woman, but a cow may be donated together with its calf without being branded and after being decked with sandal-wood paste.[1221a]

What is the idea underlying the letting loose of a bull after the death of a person? If a conjecture may be hazarded, it appears to have been thought that if a bull were freed from toil (that is the lot of most bulls) and placed in the midst of pleasant surroundings, that act of the relatives of the deceased may in a vicarious manner conduce to the happiness of the departed spirit in the other world.

One remarkable matter about śrāddhas is yet to be mentioned. The Baud. gṛhyaśesasūtra III. 19, the Lingapurāṇa (II 45. 8-90, some of which are quoted by Śr. Pr. pp 363-364), the Kalpataru (on śrāddha pp. 277-279), Hemādri (Śr. pp. 1704-1717), the Śrāddhaprakāśa (pp. 361-371) and a few other digests describe the procedure of Jīvat-śrāddha or Jīva-śrāddha, which a man was allowed to perform for the benefit of his own soul, while he was himself alive. Baudhāyana's being probably the most ancient extant description it is briefly set out here "A man who desires his own highest happiness should fast on the 13th tithi of the dark half and bring together materials on the same day, which are required in the funeral rites of deceased persons, viz six garments, a golden needle, a goad, a noose made of (cotton) threads, a ragged garment, a stalk of palāśa leaves, a chair of udumbara wood, jars and other materials also On the next day he bathes; after standing in the midst of water he comes out and makes (the brāhmaṇas) pronounce 'this is an auspicious day, may there be happiness and prosperity (for you)'; he makes a gift of garments, a ring and dakṣiṇā and facing the south eats rice boiled in milk and mixed with ghee.

1221 a. वाचस्पतिमिश्र wrote a work called चन्दनधेनुदान in which he quotes two verses of देवल from the रत्नाकर as follows जीवद्भर्त्री तु या नारी म्रियते पुत्रिणी यदि । सवत्सामङ्किता धेनुमाचार्याय प्रदापयेत् ॥ पतिपुत्रवती नारी म्रियते चाग्रतस्तयो । वृषं नैवोत्सृजेत्पुत्र पिता यावत्तु जीवति ॥. Vide Descriptive Cat. of Sanskrit Mss. under the care of the Asiatic Society of Bengal by M. M. Haraprasad Shastri, vol. III (smṛti Mss) pp 405-406 No 2310.

He kindles the fire according to the general[1222] procedure laid down for homa, spreads round it darbhas, cooks food on the fire and offers from the cooked food four oblations of food into the fire; the first is made after first reciting the Puronuvākyā[1222a] (invitatory prayer) 'catvāri śrngā' ('Agni has four horns,' Ṛg. IV. 58. 3, Tai. Ā. X. 10. 2) and offers the oblation with the Yājyā (offering prayer) 'tridhā hitam' (placed in three plates, Ṛg. IV. 58. 4) The Puronuvākyā and Yājyā of the 2nd oblation of rice are 'tatsavitur varenyam' (Ṛg. III. 62. 10, Tai. S. I. 5 6 4) and 'yojayitrī sūnrtānām'. Of the third oblation the Puronuvākyā and Yājyā are respectively 'ye catvārah' (Tai. S V. 7. 2. 3) and 'Dve sruti' (Ṛg. X. 88. 15, Tai Br. I. 4. 2. 3); the Puronuvākyā and Yājyā of the 4th oblation are respectively 'agne naya' (Ṛg I. 189 1, Tai. S. I. 114. 3) and 'yā tiraścī' (Br. Up. VI. 3 1).[1223]. Then he offers oblations of clarified butter with the Purusasūkta of 18 verses (Vāj. S. 31. 1-18, Tai. Ā. III. 12) and 1008, 108 or 28 oblations of clarified butter with the Gāyatrī verse. Then he goes to a spot where four roads meet, makes a gift of the needle, goad, ragged garment, the rope to a short-statured brāhmana who has a dark skin and having made him repeat the words 'May the servants of Yama be gratified' he places the jars on grains of rice. Having wound round the jars that are full of water threads he prepares an effigy of a human being, three threads for the head, three for the mouth, 21 for the neck, 4 for the body, two on each arm, one for the male organ, five for each of the feet with the words 'May the revered Yama be pleased.' Then making ready the chair, washing it with pañcagavya, he makes the effigy of a human being on black antelope skin with palāśa stalks, he establishes the prānas in the effigy made on the jar and placing his body on the body made with stalks he should sleep. When he rises, 1222. For the general procedure of homa, vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp 207-211.

1222 a The पुरोनुवाक्या (or simply अनुवाक्या) is so called because it is recited to make the deity favourable before the sacrifice is offered (पुर पूर्वं यागाद्देवतामनुकूलयितु या ऋगुच्यते इति व्युत्पत्त्या). Yājyā is the offering prayer It is preceded by ये यजामहे and followed by vasat (pronounced as वौ3 षट्). Both these are uttered by the hotr in a high tone. Vide H. of Dh. vol, II. pp. 1058-1060. The yājyā is recited while standing, but the Puronuvākyā is recited sitting. The verse योजयित्री सूनृताना appears to be an adaptation of चोदयित्री सूनृताना (Rg. I. 3.11).

1223. The verse is. या तिरश्ची निपद्यते (से?) अहं विधरणी इति। ता त्वा घृतस्य धारया यजे संराधनीमहम्॥ बृह. उ. VI. 3.1, he should himself bathe his body with (the water in) the jars with verses of Purusasūkta and with pañcagavya and pure water and eat in the evening food mixed with sesamum grains together with clarified butter. He should give dinner to brāhmaṇas for the gratification of the servants of Yama. On the 4th day he burns (the effigy) with mantras. He should offer water and piṇḍa with the words 'piṇḍa to me of such and such a gotra for benefit in the next world, svadhā namah.' With these words he should bring to a close the rite. He should observe impurity for ten days for himself, but his agnates have not to observe impurity for him. On the 11th day he performs ekoddista. They also cite the following verse 'one who is in distress, a woman and a śūdra having burnt one's body (i. e effigy) with mantras should perform all rites on that very day. This is the revelation.' In the case of women the rite is performed silently or with (?) Vedic mantras. In this way he should perform his own śrāddha every month for a year and at the end of each year up to twelve years. And then he should stop. When he is not able to do all these (himself) his son and the like may perform them. They also recite the following verse; 'Although heirs may be alive one may perform one's śrāddha while alive, having quickly set about doing everything according to the rules, except Sapindana. One should not make delay as to the time specified above, since life is evanescent'."

It may be noted that the Baud. gṛhyaśeṣasūtra III. 22 contains a very brief procedure of the same rite, but therein two verses of Kanva and one of Visnu are quoted. It appears that this is a later addition. The text of Baud. gṛhyaśeṣasūtra III. 19 is quoted by Śr. Pr. pp. 361–363. But the Śrāddhaprakāśa also quotes a long passage from the Lingapurāna and explains it (pp. 363–368). The procedure in the Lingapurāna, however, materially differs from that of Baudhāyana. It is passed over here from considerations of space. The Śrāddhamayūkha also gives an elaborate description. Some of its provisions are stated here. In Jīvat-śrāddha the word preta should nowhere be used. An effigy of the person is made with fifty kuśas and is to be burnt by another with the mantra 'kravyādam-agnim' (Ṛg. X. 16. 9). The person has to kindle fire on the banks of a river with his face to the south with his gṛhya fire or ordinary fire and has to dig up a pit and make a prayer to the earth as in the case of an actual death.

In the Bombay University Library there is a Ms. of Jīvat-śrāddha ascribed to Śaunaka in the Bhadkamkar Collection.

It contains a far more elaborate procedure than that of Baudhāyana and is in prose. It contains many of the provisions of Baudhāyana. Further details are passed over here.

The provision of a śrāddha for a living person offered by himself is a perversion of the ancient idea of śrāddha. The basic and fundamental conception of a śrāddha was to gratify the spirits of deceased ancestors. People had gone crazy with the idea of śrāddhas and invented this new mode to satisfy that craze. I have known persons that performed Jīvat-śrāddha, though they had sons, younger brothers and nephews who would have certainly performed śrāddhas for them on their death.

It is customary to make a gift of a cow with a calf to a brāhmana, preferably a kapilā cow, on the 2nd day after the period of āśauca Often times this is the only cow given, and the cow called Vaitaranī referred to above (p. 183, note 427) is rarely donated in the midst of the sorrow and turmoil immediately on the death of a dear and near relative. A declaration is first made that a gift of a cow will be made and then water is poured on the hand of a brāhmana. Then holding kuśas in his hand the donor makes a gift of the cow with a formula noted below[1224]. The donee replies with the words 'om svasti' (Yes, may it be well!). Then daksinā (in gold or silver coins) is given and the brāhmana says 'om svasti', holds the tail of the cow and repeats a Kāmastuti (eulogy of Kāma)[1225] according to the recension of the Veda he has studied. The Anuśāsanaparva (57. 28-29) eulogises the gift of a kapilā cow with the calf, given with a milking pail of bell-metal, whose horn tips are decked with gold, by stating that such a gift not only saves the donor in the other world but also his sons, grandsons and family for seven generations. The Anuśāsanaparva (77.10 ff) sets out a legend why the kapilā cow is the best of all cows.

The Purānas and digests devote a good deal of space to śrāddhas at tīrthas and at Gayā. Vide Atri 55-58, Vāyupurāna 83. 16-42, Hemādri (on Śr.) pp. 1568 ff and 1575 ff. This subject will be briefly dealt with in the section on tīrthas.

Much is said on the question whether śrāddhas should be performed in the intercalary month. The intercalary month is called by various names, viz. Malimluca (Kāthaka Saṁ. 38. 14),[1226] Saṁsarpa or Aṁhasaspati (Vāj S. 7.30 and 22.31), Malamāsa, Adhimāsa. An intercalary month is known even to the Ṛgveda (Ṛg. I. 25.8). The vendor of soma and the thirteenth month are condemned as pāpa (sinful) in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa[1227]. The Purāṇas tried to bolster up the intercalary month by calling it Purusottama-māsa (i. e. the month of Viṣṇu) but the original stigma attaching to the 13th month seems to have persisted. The general rule about an intercalary month is stated by the Gṛhyapariśiṣṭa.[1228] 'the month called Malimluca is polluted and springs from sin; it is condemned for all acts; it should be discarded in all rites in honour of gods and pitṛs.' But exceptions to this sweeping prohibition have been recognized. Hārīta provides[1229] that all śrāddhas that come after Sapiṇḍana are not to be performed in an intercalary month. Vyāsa laid down[1230] that such ceremonies as jātakarma, annaprāśana, the navaśrāddhas, śrāddha on Maghā and the thirteenth tithi, the sixteen śrāddhas, bath, gifts, japa and śrāddha at the time of the eclipse of the sun or moon—these should be performed even in an intercalary month. The Smṛtimuktāphala concludes (p. 728) that there is no blemish in performing a śrāddha in an intercalary month provided it is to be performed before the end of one year from death. It is provided by Bhṛgu[1231] that the sāṁvatsarika śrāddha of those who die in an intercalary month may be performed in the intercalary month, but if there be none such then in the ordinary month of the same name. When the tithi for performing a śrāddha comes and there is then an intercalary month, Vrddha-Vasistha says that śrāddha should be performed in both months.[1232]

Further discussion about what may be done in Malamāsa and what is prohibited therein will be taken up in the section on Kāla. The question as to the day on which a śrāddha is to be performed if the tithi is spread over two days or if there is a kṣaya of the tithi will also be discussed in that section.

Some of the works on śrāddha such as the Pṛthvī-candrodaya deal with what is called 'saṅghāta-śrāddha.'[1232a] When on the same day several persons die, but not at the same time, then the śrāddhas for them should be performed, as said by Ṛsyaśṛnga, in the order in which they died. But if five or six persons die at the same time on the same day (as when a vessel sinks in the sea or a market is burnt down all at once), then the order in which śrāddhas are to be performed is determined by the nearness of relationship to the performer of śrāddha in the case of each. For example, if a person's wife, son, brother and paternal uncle meet death at the same time, then the order should be this that the śrāddha of the wife is performed first, then of the son, then of the brother and then of the uncle. If the parents die at the same time by accident, then the father's cremation or other rites should be first performed and then of the mother.

Provision is made if the performance of a śrāddha is rendered impossible by some obstacle. Ṛsyaśṛnga provides[1233]

'if impurity (on death) intervenes when a śrāddha is to be offered to the pitṛs, śrāddha should be offered at the end of the period of impurity. If an obstacle arises at the time when an ekoddiṣṭa is to be performed, the śrāddha should be performed in another month on the same tithi'. This last refers to a monthly śrāddha. If any of the sixteen śrāddhas fails owing to an obstacle it should be performed on the amāvāsyā or better still on the 11th day of the dark half. If there is an obstacle owing to impurity on death in the performance of a monthly śrāddha or yearly śrāddha it should be performed at the end of the impurity or on amāvāsyā.[1234] The Padmapurāṇa (Pātālakhaṇḍa 101. 68–70) provides similar rules. If the obstacle is the performer's illness or his inability to collect materials or his wife being in her monthly illness, he may offer āmaśrāddha described above.

It may be noted that while great emphasis was laid on inviting a very learned brāhmaṇa at a śrāddha, that object was often frustrated in practice by the provisions made in certain smṛtis that one[1235] should not partake of śrāddha food for three years after sapiṇḍana (which is often one year after death) and that by dining at a śrāddha in the first year one eats the bones and marrow of the deceased, in the second year his flesh, in the third year his blood and śrāddha in the 4th year is (somewhat) pure. Vide Par. M. vol. II part 1 p 423, where smṛti passages prescribing prāyaścittas for partaking of food at various śrāddhas including sāṁvatsarika are set out. Hārīta says: one partaking of food at Navaśrāddha should undergo Cāndrāyaṇa, the Prājāpatya for dining at a monthly śrāddha and fast for one day for dining at a pratyābdika śrāddha. This is on the same lines as acceptance of gifts. A donor collected merit by making gifts, but it was for the acceptor to decide whether he should accept gifts. The ideal placed before brāhmaṇas was that one, though entitled to accept gifts on account of his vedic learning and tapas, should not accept gifts, if he desires to secure the highest world (Yāj. I. 213), while Manu IV. 186 affirms [1236] that though entitled to accept gifts a brāhmaṇa should not again and again resort to that method, since the spiritual power that he acquires by Vedic study is lost by accepting gifts. Manu IV. 85–86 (= Padma V. 19. 236–237) say that acceptance of a gift from the king is terrible (in its consequences) and Padma warns that gift appears sweet like honey but is like poison (i e. deadly in its effects). This reasoning applied with greater force to officiating and dining at a śrāddha, where not only gifts are to be received, but also sumptuous food that will please the palate is served in abundance.

It has been seen above how the most ancient literary monument, viz the Ṛgveda, shows that the funeral rites performed immediately after death were prompted by affectionate concern for the departed spirit mingled with some element of fear, that the object of those rites was to provide sustenance to the departed spirit and to endow it with an intermediate body before it became one of the pitṛs. It has also been found that in the most ancient times of which we have literary evidence, there were rites for the worship of ancestors, being the Piṇḍapitṛyajña performed every month on amāvāsyā, the Mahāpitṛyajña performed in the Śākamedha and the Aṣṭakā śrāddhas. Gradually the rites for deceased ancestors became more and more frequent, all-inclusive and elaborate, so that ultimately an exaggerated importance came to be attached to the cult of śrāddhas over which there was an enormous expenditure of time, effort and wealth. The question now arises what Indians of the 20th century should do about śrāddhas. One finds that in these days when many brāhmaṇas even do not engage in any of the five daily obligatory yajñas (the pañca-yajñas), they are solicitous to offer śrāddha at least once a year to their ancestors. The following may be therefore suggested as a via media for all kinds of people. Those who have faith in the duty of performing śrāddhas and their efficacy for the benefit of the dead may perform them on a small scale, bearing in mind the emphatic admonition of Manu (III. 125-126), the Kūrmapurāna II. 22. 27, Padmapurāna V. 9. 98[1237] that one should desist from extravagance in the matter of śrāddhas, particularly in the number of brāhmanas to be invited. Those whose faith is shaken or shattered by the onrush of modern ideas and English education or firm belief in the doctrines of karma and punarjanma should also remember one thing. The main underlying conception of śrāddha is certainly admirable, viz. a tender and affectionate regard for one's near and dear relatives. It is a good practice to set apart at least one day in a year for the remembrance of one's near and dear relatives that are no more, to invite relatives, friends, and learned people to a dinner in memory of the dead and to bestow monetary gifts on poor but learned persons of character and devoted to the practice of plain living and high thinking. This will be in keeping with our past traditions and will also give a new orientation to and infuse new life into practices and usages that have become lifeless and meaningless to many people. From very ancient times one of the fundamental conceptions of our faith has been the idea of three debts owed to sages, gods and pitrs. The debt owed to the ancestors is paid off by the procreation of a son who would offer pindas to his (and therefore also to his father's) ancestors. This is a grand conception. Nothing can be more sublime than the formula which one has to repeat at the time of offering pindas and water (with sesame) at Gayā 'may those of my ancestors that are in the form of pretas be all satiated by means of the (balls made) of barley flour mixed with sesame and may everything, whether moving or immoveable from Brahmā up to blades of grass derive satisfaction from the water offered by me.' If the implication of this formula be thoroughly understood and

CHAPTER XI

TĪRTHAYĀTRĀ (pilgrimages to holy places)

All religions have laid great emphasis on the sacredness of certain localities and have either enjoined or recommended with great insistence pilgrimages to them. Among the five incumbent practical religious duties[1237] of a Moslem, pilgrimage at least once in his life to Mecca and Medina, the birth place and burial place of the prophet Mohammad, is one. The four places of pilgrimage for Buddhists have been the place of the birth of Buddha (Lumbinī or Rummindei), the place where he attained perfect enlightenment (Bodh Gayā), the place where he set in motion the wheel of dharma by delivering his first sermon (at Sārnāth near Benares) and the place where he passed away into the state of nirvāna (Kusīnārā). Vide Mahāparinibbānasutta (S B. E vol. XI. p 90). For Christians Jerusalem has been the holiest place and no religious community except the Christians undertook in historic times several great military pilgrimages. The crusades were launched to free the Holy Land of Christians from the domination of Moslems. In spite of what Gibbon says [1238] somewhat cynically about those who joined the crusades, it must be admitted that there were thousands among the crusaders who risked their lives and fortunes in the pursuit of an ideal. In India holy places have played a very important part. Large rivers, mountains and forests have always been venerated as sacred[1239]

1237. Vide S B E vol. VI, Introduction LXXI, for the five duties The pilgrimage is called Hāj and the Moslem who performs it is entitled to be called Hājī

1238 Gibbon remarks 'At the voice of their pastor, the robber, the incendiary, the homicide arose by thousands to redeem their souls by repeating on the infidels the same deeds which they had exercised against their christian brethren and the terms of atonement were eagerly embraced by offenders of every rank and denomination' Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire, vol. VII (ed of 1862) p 188.

and as the abodes of gods. In ancient and medieval India pilgrimages brought many advantages to the community as well as to the pilgrims themselves. Though India was divided into many kingdoms and the people of India followed several cults and sub-cults, pilgrimages tended to foster the idea of the essential and fundamental unity of Indian culture and of India also. Benares and Rāmeśvara were held sacred by all Hindus, whether they hailed from the north of India or from the peninsula. Though the Hindu community was broken up into numerous castes and suffered from caste exclusiveness, pilgrimages tended to level up all men by bringing them together to the same holy rivers or shrines. The traditions associated with holy places, the discipline through which the pilgrims passed, association with holy and philosophic men and the whole atmosphere and environment at tīrthas made it easy for pilgrims to remain at a high spiritual level and inculcated in them a mood of reverence that lasted long even after they returned from the pilgrimage. Pilgrimages supplied the much needed stimulus to draw ordinary men away from selfish pursuits and to make them think of the higher and more enduring moral and spiritual values These obvious benefits and the belief that a holy place was the abode of some divinity led ancient dharmaśāstra writers to lay emphasis on visits to tīrthas The Viṣṇu Dh. S. provides [1240] that the dharma common to all men comprises the following: forbearance, truthfulness, restraint of the mind, cleanliness, charity, control of the senses, ahiṃsā, obedience to elders, visiting holy places, compassion, straightforwardness, beauty so that her mind could come out of its world of narrow necessities and realize its place in the Infinite This was the reason why in India a whole people who once were meat-eaters gave up taking animal food to cultivate the sentiment of universal sympathy for life, an event unique in the history of mankind ' There is a fundamental difference in the outlook of modern Westerners and that of ancient and medieval Indians (which persists to a large extent even now) If there is a beauty spot anywhere most men in the West would think of building a hotel there for tourists, while ancient and medieval Indians would have thought of erecting a shrine there freedom from avarice, honouring gods and brāhmaṇas and freedom from jealousy. Modern men whose faith in some of the aspects of the religious beliefs of our forefathers has been weakened or altogether sapped by the sight of the professional ministrants at the tīrthas and their rapacity and ignorance should not judge the ancient attitude towards tīrthas harshly.

The word tīrtha occurs frequently in the Ṛgveda and other Vedic samhıtās. In several passages of the Ṛgveda tīrtha appears to mean a road or a way (e. g. in Ṛg. I. 169 6 'tīrthe nāryah paumsyāni tasthuh', Ṛg I. 173 11 'tīrthe nācchā tātrsānam-oko', Ṛg IV. 29. 3 'karan-na Indrah sutīrthābhayam ca.' In some places tīrtha may be taken to mean a ford in a river, as in Ṛg VIII. 47. 11' 'sutīrtham-arvato yathānu no nesathā sugam &c.', Ṛg. I. 46. 8 'aritram vām divas-pṛthu tīrthe sindhūnām rathah'. In Ṛg. X 31 3 'tīrthe na dasmam-upa yantyūmāh', tīrtha probably means 'a holy place'. On Ṛg VIII. 19. 37 'Suvāstvā adhi tugvanı' the Nırukta IV. 15 explains that Suvāstu is a rıver and tugvan means 'tīrtha' (either a ford or a holy spot) In the Taı. S. VI 1. 1. 1-2[1241] it is said that the sacrificer is to bathe at a tīrtha (probably a holy river). The Rudras are said to prowl about tīrthas (ye tīrthāni pracaranto srkāvanto nisanginah) ın Tai S IV. 5.11.1-2 and Vāj S. 16. 61 (reads 'srkāhastā'). In the Śāṅkhāyana Br.[1242] it is said that Day and Nıght are the sea that absorbs everything and the twilıghts are the unfathomable tīrthas (of the sea)'. Tīrtha also means the way between the 'utkara' and 'cātvāla' pit for going to or coming from the sacrificial ground (the vıhāra).[1242a] Vide H of Dh vol II. p. 984.

It is said that, just as some parts of the human body (e. g. the right hand or ear) are held to be purer (than others), so some localities on the earth are held to be very holy. Tīrthas are held to be holy (on three grounds, viz.) on account of some wonderful natural characterıstic of the locality or on account of the peculiar strikingness (or grandeur) of some watery place or on account of the fact that some (holy) sages resorted to them (for bathing, austerities &c.). Tīrtha, therefore, means a locality or spot or expanse of water which gives rise to the accumulation of righteousness (merit) owing to its own peculiar nature without any adventitious circumstance (such as the presence of Śālagrāma near it).[1243] Or it is better to say that those localities that have been technically spoken of by wise and great sages as tīrthas are tīrthas, just as Pāṇini employs such technical terms as Nadī and Vṛddhi in his grammar. The Skandapurāṇa[1244] says that a spot of the earth resorted to by ancient good men for the collection of merit is called tīrtha and that the main thing is to go to (i. e associate with holy) men and pilgrimage is only a secondary object.

In the Ṛgveda waters, rivers in general and certain named rivers[1245] are referred to with great reverence as holy and are deified. In Ṛg VII. 49 the refrain of all four verses is 'may the divine waters protect me' (tā āpo devīr-iha māmavantu). In Ṛg. VII. 49. 1 waters are spoken of as purifying (punānāḥ). Ṛg. VII. 47, X. 9, X. 30[1246] are hymns addressed to waters as divinities. They are said to purify a man not only physically but are also invoked to rid a man of all sins and lapses from the right path. The Tai S. II. 6. 8. 3 asserts that all deities are centred in waters (āpo vai sarvā devatāḥ). In the Atharvaveda[1247] (I. 33.1) waters are described as holy and purifying and are invoked to confer happiness. About twenty rivers in all flood of the Sarasvatī impinging by its powerful waves against the tops of hills is referred to in Ṛg. VI. 61. 2 and 8 [1250]. In VII. 96. 1, Sarasvatī is spoken of as asuryā (of divine origin) among rivers. Sacrifices are said to have been performed on the Dṛṣadvatī, the Āpayā and Sarasvatī (Ṛg. III. 23. 4). In Ṛg. II. 41. 16 Sarasvatī is called the best of rivers and goddesses (ambitame nadītame devitame Sarasvati). Ṛg. I. 3. 11-12 praise [1251] Sarasvatī as a river and a deity, as a purifier (pāvaka), as the impeller of sweet but truthful words and the inspirer of good thoughts and as bringing to notice its great flood of waters. From Ṛg. VII. 95. 2, VII. 49. 2 and I. 71. 7 it is obvious that the Ṛgvedic sages knew that the seven rivers fell into the sea. It would be proper to hold that the seven rivers are Sindhu (Indus), the five rivers of the Panjab and the Sarasvatī. Though from the Ṛgveda passages cited above it appears that in the times of the hymns of the Ṛgveda Sarasvatī was a big river with abundant waters, that it flowed between the Yamunā and Śutudrī (X. 75. 5), in the times of the Brāhmaṇas it disappeared in the sands It is now generally identified with the modern Sarsuti which is lost in the desert at Bhatnair. The Vāj. S. 34. 11 says that five rivers together with their tributary streams fall into Sarasvatī. [1252] There were three sattras called Sārasvata, viz the first in honour of Mitra and Varuṇa, the 2nd for Indra and Agni and the third for Aryaman The dīkṣā (consecration ceremony) was to be performed on the south bank of the dry bed of the Sarasvatī where it disappeared underground [1253]. The land between Vinaśana and Plakṣa Prāsravaṇa (which was the source of the Sarasvatī) was the proper locality for Sārasvata sattra. At the confluence of Sarasvatī and Dṛṣadvatī an iṣṭi to Apām Napāt was performed wherein boiled rice (caru) was the offering. From the place where the Sarasvatī disappeared up to Plakṣa-Prāsravaṇa the distance was a journey on horse-back for forty days and nights When the sacrificers (in the sattra) reach Plakṣa Prāsravaṇa they should stop the performance of the items of the sattra and undergo the Avabhṛtha bath near the river Yamunā (modern Jumna) which flows through the country called Kārapacava (and not in the Sarasvatī even if it had water) For details, vide Kātyāyana Śrautasūtra (10. 15-19) which mentions (in 10. 19. 1) a spot called Parīṇah in Kurukṣetra where the Vedic fires were to be kindled, the Āśv. Ś. S 12 6 1-28 which adds that at the distance of each throw of the Śamyā from the Vinaśana one day is to be spent by the sacrificers, the Kātyāyana Śrauta-sūtra (24. 5-6) which states that the isti at the confluence of the Dṛṣadvatī and Sarasvatī is to be offered to Agni Kāma, Āp. Ś. S 23. 12-13 (which gives more details than any one of the other three sūtras) In the Ait. Br. a story is narrated that the sages performed a sattra on the Sarasvatī and Kavaṣa who was sitting amongst them was driven out by them as not a brāhmaṇa but the son of a female slave and left in a sandy desert with the idea that he would die of thirst, but he praised the waters or Apām napāt with the hymn, Ṛg. X. 30 ('pra devatrā brahmaṇe') called 'Aponaptrīya' and Sarasvatī came rushing towards the place where Kavaṣa stood and surrounded it, which (spot) thence-ains, which is to the east of विनशन and west of Prayāga For the mention of विनशन in the Baud. Dh. S, Vanaparva and Śalyaparva, vide H of Dh vol. II p. 14 note 35. Dr. D. R. Patil in his thesis 'Cultural History of Vāyupurāṇa' (p. 334) remarks that the institution of pilgrimage was first started by Buddhists and Jains and that later on it became common to all faiths in India. This is quite wrong The Brāhmaṇa and Śrautasūtra passages clearly show that there were holy places in the comparatively small part of India up to the Yamunā where the Sārasvata sattras had to be carried on The importance of holy places, visiting them and performing religious rites there were known in the Brāhmaṇa period at least a thousand years before Buddhism and Jainism began to spread.

forward came to be called [1254] 'Parisaraka'. This shows that in the times of the Ait. Br. and long before it the bed of the Sarasvatī was dry. Devala [1255] mentions several places as Sārasvata tīrthas. The Ṛgveda [1256] VIII. 6.28 appears to hold that the valleys of mountains and the confluences of rivers are sacred. Mountains have been held by most ancient peoples to be the abodes of gods. Mount Parnassus north of Delphi was one of the most holy mountains in classical Greece and Olympus was supposed to be the home of the gods. In the Ṛgveda Parvata is a dual deity with Indra 'O, Indra and Parvata! may you two sharpen (or purify) us (our intellects)' Ṛg I 122 3 [1257]; O, Indra and Parvata! May you two, being in the forefront of battle, kill with the thunderbolt every one who desires to attack us with an army' Ṛg. I. 132. 6. In Ṛg. VI. 49. 14 a prayer is addressed to Parvata separately 'May the god Ahirbudhnya, may Parvata and may Savitṛ bestow on us food together with the waters on account of our prayers'. In Ṛg III. 33 1 the two great rivers Vipāś (modern Beas) and Śutudrī are described as issuing from the lap of mountains. Here the word 'Parvata' is used in its ordinary sense. The Atharvaveda [1258] speaks of a salve (āñjana) from Traikakuda peaks of the Himālaya mountain 'May that salve which comes off the Himālaya from Traikakuda (peaks) destroy all wizards and all witches'. The Hir. Gr. I. 3 11.5 (S. B. E. vol. 30 p. 168) also refers to this salve. Gaut., Baud Dh S. and Vas. Dh. S. have the same sūtra [1259] stating that the 'deśas (localities) that are holy and hence destroyers of sin are all mountains, all rivers, holy lakes, places of pilgrimage, the dwellings of sages (ṛsis), cowpens and temples of the gods' The Vāyupurāṇa [1260] and Kūrma state that all parts of the Himālaya are holy, the Ganges is holy everywhere, all rivers falling into the sea and all seas are holy. The Padmapurāṇa (Bhūmikhaṇda 39. 46–47) says that all rivers, whether flowing through a village or a forest, are holy and that where no name of a tīrtha on rivers is known it should be called Viṣṇutīrtha. Kālidāsa speaks of the Himālaya as devatātmā (as vivified by the presence of gods) in the Kumārasambhava (I. 1). The Bhāgavata V. 19.16 names 27 holy mountains while the Brahmāṇḍa (II. 16. 20–23) names thirty. The grandeur and sublimity of snow-capped mountains, of large life-sustaining rivers and of great forests easily impress the minds of almost all people and induce them to think that there is something divine about them, that the Supreme

The बार्हस्पत्यसूत्र III. 81 says 'तत्रापि रैवतकविन्ध्यसह्यकुमारमलयश्रीपर्वतपारियात्रा सप्त कुलाचला ।' The नीलमतपुराण 57 reads 'महेन्द्रो ।. .ऋक्षवानपि। विन्ध्यश्च पारियात्रश्च न विनश्यन्ति पर्वता ॥ ' The ब्रह्माण्डपुराण (II 16 39) and वायु (45 108) observe about rivers falling into the sea तास्तु नद्यः सरस्वत्य सर्वा गङ्गा समुद्रगा । विश्वस्य मातर सर्वा जगत्पापहरा स्मृता ॥ In some Purāṇas certain great rivers are said to be specially holy at certain times For example, देवीपुराण quoted by कल्प° (on तीर्थ) p 242 states 'कार्तिके ग्रहणं श्रेष्ठं गङ्गायमुनसङ्गमे। मार्गे तु ग्रहण पुण्यं देविकाया महामुने॥ पौषे तु नर्मदा पुण्या माघे सन्निहिता शुभा। फाल्गुने वरणा ख्याता चैत्रे पुण्या सरस्वती॥ वैशाखे तु महापुण्या चन्द्रभागा सरिद्वरा। ज्येष्ठे तु कौशिकी पुण्या आषाढे तापिका नदी। श्रावणे सिन्धुनामा च भाद्रमासे च गण्डकी। आश्विने सरयूश्चैव भूय पुण्या तु नर्मदा॥ गोदावरी महापुण्या चन्द्रे राहुसमन्विते॥, 'एवमादिष्वथान्येषु तीर्थेषु सरिद्वरासु सर्वेष्वपि स्वभावेषु पुलिनेषु प्रस्रवणेषु पर्वतेषु निकुञ्जेषु वनेषूपवनेषु गोमयलिप्तेषु मनोज्ञेषु। विष्णुधर्मसूत्र 85.

Being is partially revealed in such surroundings. In Protestant Europe and the U. S. A. hardly anyone performs a pilgrimage to a holy place in these days. Instead, they tour different countries for rest, health and in search of natural beauty and a respite from humdrum existence But pilgrimage to a place supposed to be holy for the curing of disease is not rare even now. When one reads a work like that of Louis Carell, a great surgeon and a winner of the Nobel prize, on the miracles worked at Lourdes in France (in 'a Journey to Lourdes') one sees that pilgrimage has taken on a new motive in the West. Similarly, pilgrimage to the tombs of unknown warriors has become common owing to the two world wars.

In Rg X. 146 a large forest [1261] (Aranyānī) is invoked as a deity. The Vāmanapurāna mentions [1262] seven forests in Kuruksetra as holy and as removers of sin, viz. Kāmyaka, Aditivana, Vyāsavana, Phalakīvana, Sūryavana, Madhuvana and Punyaśītavana.

In the Sūtras and ancient smrtis like those of Manu and Yājñavalkya tīrthas do not occupy a very prominent position. But in the Mahābhārata and the Purānas they are highly lauded and placed even above sacrifices. In the Vanaparva [1263] a comparison is made between sacrifices to gods and pilgrimages. Sacrifices require numerous implements, collection of materials, the co-operation of priests and the presence of a wife and so they can be performed only by princes or rich men. They cannot be performed by poor men, who are devoid of wealth, who are without a wife and without friends, who are helpless. The reward that a man gets by visiting holy places cannot be secured by performing such sacrifices as Agniṣṭoma in which large fees are paid (to priests); therefore visiting holy places is superior to sacrifices. But the Mahābhārata (Vanaparva 82. 9–12 and Anuśāsana 108. 3–4) lays the greatest emphasis on the cultivation of high moral and spiritual qualities if the full reward of pilgrimages is to be reaped. It says [1264] 'He whose hands, feet and mind are well controlled and who possesses knowledge, austerities and a good reputation derives the (full) reward of pilgrimages. He who turns his face away from receiving gifts and is content with what little he gets and is free from vanity obtains the rewards of pilgrimages. He, who is free from hypocrisy (or deceit), is not engaged in various undertakings (for earning money), is not a heavy eater, has subdued his senses and is (therefore) free from all sins; so also he who does not fly into a rage, who always speaks the truth, who is firm in his observances, and acts towards all beings by treating them like himself, obtains the full reward of pilgrimages'. The idea seems to be that pilgrimages may help to remove the sins of men who are not possessed of the above characteristics, while those who possess these acquire a great store of merit in addition. The Skanda (Kāśīkhaṇḍa 6.3) asserts 'snāna cannot be predicated of a man whose body alone is flooded with water; that man who is plunged in restraint of senses, who is pure, relieved of all taint and is stainless, is alone to be called snāta' (as having had a bath). The Anuśāsana has almost the same words (108 .9).[1264a] The Vāyupurāna states[1265] 'A steadfast (or wise) man visiting tīrthas with faith and controlling his senses would be purified even if he has been guilty of sins; what need is there to say about him whose actions have been pure? One who has no faith, who is full of sins, whose mind is not free from doubts (about the rewards of pilgrimages and the rites there), who is an atheist and who is bent on bad reasoning—these five do not reap the rewards of pilgrimages'. The Skandapurāna (I. 1. 31. 37) remarks that all holy places, sacrifices and various gifts are meant for cleansing the mind (of its sins and sinful proclivities, manaḥ-śuddhi). The Padmapurāna (IV. 80. 9) remarks· sacrifices, vratas, tapas and dāna cannot be carried out fully in the Kali age; but bathing in the Ganges and taking the name of Hari are free from all defects. The Visnudharmottarapurāna[1266] puts the matter very clearly when it says 'When resort is made to a tīrtha, it removes the sins of the sinful and tends to the increase of merit in the case of the good and that a holy place yields fruit to men of all varnas and āśramas.' Some of the Purānas (such as Skandapurāna, Kāśīkhanda 6, Padma, Uttarakhaṇḍa, 237) say that in addition to the holy places on land (bhauma) there are certain virtues that may be called mental tīrthas (in a figurative sense). According to them 'truthfulness, forbearance, restraint of the senses, compassion for all beings, straight-forwardness, charity, self-control, contentment, celibacy (brahmacarya), sweet speech, knowledge, patience, austerity, are tīrthas and the highest tīrtha is purity of mind.' They further state that a man who is avaricious, wicked, cruel, hypocritical and immersed in pleasures of senses is still sinful and impure even if he bathes in all tīrthas and that fish are born and die in holy waters but they do not go to heaven because their minds are not purified and that even charity, sacrifices, austerity, cleanliness, frequenting sacred places, learning—all these are not tīrthas, if the mind is not pure [1267] The Brahmapurāna (25.4–6) states 'a heart that is wicked is not purified by baths at holy places, just as a vessel in which surā (liquor) was carried remains impure even after being washed with water hundreds of times, that tīrthas, gifts, vratas, or (residence in) hermitages do not purify a man whose heart is wicked, who resorts to hypocrisy and whose senses run away (are uncontrolled). Wherever a man who has his senses under control may dwell, there are present Kuruksetra, Prayāga and Puskara'. The Vāmanapurāna has a fine[1267a] Rūpaka about the soul being a river full of the water of control, flowing with truth and having character as the bank and the waves of compassion (for all beings) and states that the soul cannot be purified by water. The Padmapurāna (II. 39. 56–61) extends the meaning and scope of tīrthas by remarking that places where Agnihotra and śrāddha are performed, a temple, a house where Veda is being studied, a cowpen, the place where a soma drinker dwells, parks, a place where the Aśvattha exists, a place where Purāna is being recited or where one's teacher stands or where a chaste housewife dwells, or where a father and a worthy son dwell are all holy.

Numberless tīrthas and holy shrines have been mentioned from ancient times. The Matsyapurāna states [1268] that Vāyu declared that there are 35 millions of tīrthas in the sky, in the aerial regions and on the earth and all of them are centred in the Ganges; while the Vāmanapurāna 46. 53 states that there are 35 millions of Lingas. The Brahmapurāna says that the number of tīrthas and shrines is so large that they cannot be enumerated in detail even in hundreds of years. The Vanaparva [1269] remarks that Naimisa is the (best) tīrtha on the earth and Puskara in the aerial region, while Kuruksetra is the most distinguished in all the three worlds and that all the ten thousand crores of tīrthas are present in Puskara (chap 82.21) New tīrthas were added from time to time and the monetary benefits derived by the permanent residents and particularly by the tīrtha priests led them to prepare numerous māhātmyas of an apocryphal character and father them on Vyāsa, the reputed author of the Mahābhārata and the Purānas. Most of the writers of digests on tīrthas follow a process of selection. The Tīrthakalpataru of Laksmīdhara, one of the earliest digests (about 1110-1120 AD), devotes more than half the work to Vārānasī and Prayāga alone, assigns only two or three pages to such famous tīrthas as Puskara, Pṛthūdaka, Kokāmukha, Badarikāśrama, Kedāra. The Nṛsimhaprasāda (Tīrthasāra) mostly deals with tīrthas in the Deccan and southern India such as Setubandha, Pundarīka (modern Pandharpur), Godāvarī, Krsnā-venyā, Narmadā. The Tristhalīsetu of Nārāyanabhatta devotes two-thirds of it to Benares and its sub-tīrthas and the rest to Prayāga and Gayā. This unequal treatment arose from various causes, such as the localities where the authors lived, their familiarity with the holy places and their predilections. There was also another tendency among the authors of Purānas, Māhātmyas and digests viz. that of great exaggeration and over-statement which is often repellent. If a man reads the description of one tīrtha and does not discount much as sheer hollow laudation, he is likely to feel that a pilgrimage to a certain tīrtha will yield all the desires in this life as well in the next and that after visiting a holy tīrtha like Kāśī or Prayāga he need not go to any other tīrtha, nor need he perform any yajña or act of charity and the like. A few striking passages may be cited here. The Vanaparva remarks that [1270] even gods and sages secured perfection at Puskara and that whoever takes a bath there and devoutly worships gods and his pitrs secures rewards ten times of what the performance of Aśvamedha might give. About this very tīrtha viz. Puskara, the Padmapurāna says that there is no holier tīrtha in this world. The Vanaparva (83. 145) in its eulogy of Prthūdaka asserts that Kuruksetra is holy, that Sarasvatī is holier than Kuruksetra and that Prthūdaka is holier than all other tīrthas The Matsyapurāna puts the [1271] comparative holiness of several tīrthas thus 'the waters of the Sarasvatī purify after (one bathes for) three days, those of Yamunā in seven days, those of the Ganges at once, while the water of the Narmadā purifies a man at sight of it.' In its eulogy of Vārānasī the Kūrma-purāna states 'there is no place higher than Vārānasī nor will there be one' (I. 31 64). The inveterate habit of exaggeration goes so far that it is said that by merely residing in Kāśī till one's death not only does a man become free from the great sin of brāhmana murder but from the never-ending cycle of births and deaths and is not born again.[1272] The Lingapurāna says the same thing. The Vāmana-purāna remarks [1273] that mukti (release from samsāra) can be secured in four ways, viz. by knowledge of Brahman, by śrāddha at Gayā, by loss of life in repelling the carrying away of cows and by residence in Kuruksetra and that those who die in Kuruksetra never come down (to the earth) Mere residence in Kāśī was so much lauded that the Matsya (181 23), the Agni (112. 3) and other Purānas say that after repairing to Kāsī one should smash one's feet with a stone (in order that one may not be induced to visit another tīrtha)[1274] and stay in Kāśī forever.

The Brahmapurāna classifies tīrthas into four divisions[1275] viz. daiva (created by gods), āsura (those associated with such asuras as Gaya), ārsa (those established by sages) such as Prabhāsa, Naranārāyana and mānusa (created by kings like Ambarīsa, Manu, Kuru) and provides that each preceding one is superior to each succeeding one. It enumerates six rivers to the south of the Vindhya and six rivers having their sources in the Himālayas as most holy and as devatīrthas, viz. Godāvarī, Bhīmarathī, Tungabhadrā, Venikā, Tāpī, Payosnī, Bhāgīrathī, Narmadā, Yamunā, Sarasvatī, Visokā, and Vitastā. Similarly, Kāśī, Puskara and Prabhāsa are devatīrthas (Tīrthapr. p 18). The Brahmapurāna (175. 31–32) assigns daiva, āsura, ārsa and mānusa tīrthas respectively to the Krta, Tretā, Dvāpara and Kali yugas.

There is a good deal of discussion in the Purānas and digests about those who are entitled or have the eligibility or capacity (adhikāra) for tīrthayātrā. The Vanaparva[1276] provides that brāhmanas, ksatriyas, vaiśyas and śūdras, when they have bathed in holy places, are not born again. The same work further states that whatever sin a man or a woman may have committed from birth, the moment a person takes a bath in the holy Puskara all that sin vanishes[1277] Therefore not only men but women also had the right to undertake tīrthayātrā. The Matsyapurāna[1278] goes further and asserts that 'Avimukta

(Vārānasī) is the highest cure for men of numerous castes, for men not (recognized as) belonging to any particular varṇa, for cāṇḍālas who are abhorred (by people) and for persons whose bodies are full of diseases and of aggravated sins' It is stated in the Vāmanapurāna:[1279] persons of all the four āśramas (i. e. brahmacārins, householders, forest hermits and sannyāsins) by bathing in the tīrtha (mentioned by it) save seven generations in their families and that persons belonging to the four varnas and women, when they bathe in tīrthas with devotion, see the highest goal. It was provided by the Brahmapurāna that a brahmacārin can undertake a pilgrimage only if ordered or directed by his guru, and that a householder whose wife is alive and is chaste must go on a pilgrimage with her; otherwise he would not reap the fruit of pilgrimage The Padmapurāna (Bhūmikhanda chap. 59–60) narrates the story of a vaiśya called Krkala who went on a pilgrimage without his virtuous wife and did not reap the fruits of a long pilgrimage (bhāryām vinā yo dharmah sa eva viphalo bhavet, 59, 33). The Tīrthacintāmani and Tīrthaprakāśa quote a passage (from the Kūrmapurāna) which glorifies Vārānasī (called Avimukta there) as follows[1280] 'brāhmanas, ksatriyas, vaiśyas, śūdras, persons of mixed castes (varnasankara), women, mlecchas and others who are born in evil forms and are of mixed blood, worms, ants, birds and beasts when they die in Avimukta are born as human beings in Benares and no one guilty of sins dying in Avimukta goes to Hell' As regards[1281] women and śūdras, a smrti verse provided 'Japa, tapas, pilgrimage to holy places, becoming an ascetic (sannyāsin), efforts to attain mastery over mantras and worshipping deities (as a priest)—these six lead to sinfulness in the case of women and śūdras.' This was explained away by stating that this text refers to undertaking pilgrimage without the husband's permission (in the case of a woman) and as to a śūdra in such a way as to be opposed to the primary duty of a śūdra to wait upon learned brāhmanas (as laid down in Manu X. 123). Kātyāyana[1282] as quoted in the Vyavahāramayūkha provides 'whatever a woman does that relates to (benefit in) a future state (i. e. state after death) without the permission of her (husband's) father, husband or son, would become fruitless' It is clear therefore that it was recognized early that tīrthayātrā was a popular way for redemption of sins in the case of all classes of men and women. Though a Hindu woman succeeding as heir to her husband's estate has only a limited and qualified ownership over it, judicial decisions have recognized that she can alienate a small portion of her husband's estate for the expenses of a pilgrimage to Gayā for performing her husband's śrāddha for the latter's spiritual benefit or of a pilgrimage to Pandharpur. Vide Muteeram v. Gopal 11 Beng. L. R. 416; Darbari Lal v. Gobind 46 All. 822; Ganpat v. Tulsiram 36 Bom. 88 (pilgrimage to Pandharpur).[1283] It was also provided that there was no question of untouchability [1284] when bathing in holy waters.

Strangely enough, the Calcutta High court has held that a widow cannot validly alienate a part of her husband's property inherited by her as heir for a pilgrimage to Benares; vide Hari v. Bajrand 13 C. But a gift to the temple of Jagannātha at Purī for bhog (offerings of cooked food) to the deity and for the maintenance of the priests there for the salvation of the husband and the members of his family and for the widow's own salvation was upheld by the Privy Council in Sardar Singh v. Kunj Behari 49 I. A. 383. As seen in note 1294 below, a person on returning from a pilgrimage had to honour and feed brāhmaṇas In Dinanath v. Hrishikesh 18 C. W. N. 1303, 1306, where a widow on returning from a pilgrimage to Gayā for the benefit of her husband's soul incurred a debt for feeding brāhmanas and her husband's relatives and alienated a portion of her husband's property, it was held that the debt was one for a spiritual purpose and was binding on the reversioners after the death of the widow.

1284. तीर्थे विवाहे यात्रायां संग्रामे देशविप्लवे। नगरग्रामदाहे च स्पृष्टास्पृष्टिर्न दुष्यति॥ बृह q by कल्पतरु on शुद्धि p 169, स्मृतिच. I p 122 This is variously explained. The तीर्थप्र. p 41 says 'तीर्थे विवाह इत्यनेनानिवार्य-तीर्थाद्यधिकरणकास्पृश्यस्पर्शो न दोषायेत्यभिधानात्। स्पृष्टास्पृष्टिर्न दुष्यतीति वचनं पक्वान्नशुद्धौ कल्पतरुकृता लिखितं तीर्थे पक्वान्नस्पर्शे न दोष इति। अत एव पुरुषोत्तमक्षेत्रादौ तथैव शिष्टाचार इति।'. Vide above note 750 for the same quotation The शुद्धिप्र. p. 130 explains तीर्थादौ अस्पृश्यस्पर्शने नाचमनस्नानादि

There is a verse of Bṛhaspati: 'At holy places, in marriages, in a religious festival (or procession), in a battle, when there is an invasion of the country and when a town or village is on fire, no blame attaches on the ground of incurring contact with untouchable persons or things.'

In order to guard against the facile assumption that without a change of heart or change in one's sinful mode of life a mere physical act of pilgrimage and bath in holy waters would be enough, some of the texts in the Mahābhārata and Purāṇas adopted two propositions: viz the one noted above that it is the pure mind that is a real tīrtha and further emphasized that it is better to stay at home and perform all the duties of a householder including the performance of vedic sacrifices than to go on a pilgrimage. The Śāntiparva [1285] in the dialogue between Tulādhāra and Jājali (a brāhmaṇa proud of his tapas) asserts that puroḍāśa is the holiest of offerings, that all rivers are (holy like) Sarasvatī and all hillocks (and not merely Himālaya and the like) are holy, that one's soul is a tīrtha and advises Jājali not to be a guest (i. e. to be wandering in quest of tīrthas) to several countries. The Tīrthacintāmaṇi and Tīrthaprakāśa quote passages from the Brahmapurāṇa that a brāhmaṇa should wander about tīrthas after his capacity to perform sacrifices has come to an end, that it is better for a man to stay at home and perform the duties of an householder when he has the capacity and authority to perform iṣṭis and yajñas, and that all the tīrthas do not come up (in their rewards) to the performance of agnihotra.[1286] The Kūrmapurāṇa [1287] has the following remarkable verses on this point. 'That person who abandoning his proper duties[1287] resorts to tīrthas does not reap the fruits of pilgrimage in this world as well as in the next. A person who has to undergo an expiation (for a sin), or who is a widower or who is a householder of the yāyāvara[1288] type or similar persons may resort to pilgrimages. One may go to holy places with his vedic fires or with his wife; he becomes free from all sins and secures the best goal as stated above. One who wants to go on pilgrimages should pay off the three debts, should provide means of maintenance for his sons and should consign his wife to their care.'

Ancient writers on Dharmaśāstra favoured pilgrimages by prescribing, as stated in the Visnu Dh. S, that[1289] no money was to be demanded from a Vedic student, a forest hermit, an ascetic, a pregnant woman and a pilgrim by a ferryman or by a toll officer and that if he took money from such persons he was to be made to return it. But this prescription was not invariably followed even by Hindu Kings The Rājataranginī (VI 254-255 and VII. 1008) notices that a tax was levied on Kashmirians performing śrāddhas at Gayā.[1290] It appears that Siddharāja king of Anahilavād (1095-1143 A. D.) levied a tax on pilgrims going to Somanātha at the frontier town Bāhuloda, that he remitted the tax at the intercession of his mother and that the tax thus remitted amounted to 72 lakhs of rupees every year (this last may be an exaggeration to glorify Siddharāja).[1290a] Moslem kings levied this tax. It appears that a great writer called Kavīndrācārya took up the cause of Hindu pilgrims visiting Prayāga and Kāśī and so eloquently pleaded it before Emperor Shah Jehan that the latter remitted the tax altogether

People throughout India felt such relief at the remission of the tax that congratulatory letters and addresses (several of them couched in very poetic language) poured upon Kavīndrācārya. These have been published in a work styled 'Kavīndra-candrodaya' by Dr. Har Dutta Sharma and Mr. M. M. Patkar (in the Poona Oriental series), a characteristic verse from which is quoted below.[1292] In a remarkable copper-plate Inscription in Sanskrit [1293] and Kannada issued by the Hoysala king Narasimha III in Māgha śake 1200 (1279 A. D) it is said that the king granted the revenues (amounting to 645 niskas a year) of a village called Hebbāle to the pilgrims of Kāśī and to god Śrīviśveśvara for the purpose of enabling the pilgrims to Benares (including those from the whole of Karnātaka, from the countries of Telingana, Tulu, Tirhut, Gauda and others) to pay off the tax levied by the Turuskas (Moslem kings).[1293]

The digests quote certain verses of the Brahmapurāna about the rites to be performed when a person decides to start on a pilgrimage. The Brahmapurāna provides that the intending pilgrim should restrain his senses the previous day, should observe a fast and on the next day he should offer worship to Ganeśa, the gods, the pitrs and honour good brāhmanas according to his ability and when he returns from the pilgrimage he should offer similar worship and honour.[1294] The digests explain that on return there is no fast and no worship of Ganeśa. He should perform śrāddha in which there is plenty of ghee, honour three brāhmanas (at least) with the offer of sandalwood paste &c. and then make a resolve (saṅkalpa) to go on pilgrimage The Vāyupurāna [1295] and the digests lay down that (after the worship of Ganeśa, the planets and the deities) he should put on the dress of a kārpaṭī viz. wear a copper-ring, a copper bracelet and reddish garments. Bhattoji (p 5) states that according to some the apparel of kārpatika is to be put on by a pilgrim going to Gayā. The Padma (IV. 19. 22) prescribes the pilgrim's dress for other tīrthas also. The Tīr. C. adds that this dress is to be worn only on the journey to a tīrtha, when the pilgrim is in a tīrtha, but not at the time of performing his daily duties such as taking meals (p. 9).

There is a difference of opinion among the digests as to whether tonsure of the head is obligatory when starting on a pilgrimage. The Padmapurāna [1296] and Skandapurāna appear to make it obligatory. The Tīrtha-Kalpataru does not [1297] refer to tonsure at all, while a fast at a tīrtha is declared by it to be optional. The tendency of later digest-writers is generally to make every religious act more elaborate and harder. The tonsure of the head and beard was prescribed for a sacrificer when undertaking such solemn Vedio sacrifices as Cāturmāsyas and Agniṣṭoma.[1298] The termination of the stage of Vedic studenthood (samāvartana) was also marked by tonsure.[1299] Further, tonsure was prescribed when undergoing prāyaścitta for sins (vide p. 122 above). The Tīr. C. and Tīr Pr. both quote a verse of Visnu [1300] from the Smrtisamuccaya, viz. 'at Prayāga, on a pilgrimage, on the death of one's father or mother one should cut one's hair; but one should not cut one's hair without cause.' The Mit. on Yāj. III. 17 quotes a verse as follows: 'On the Ganges, in Bhāskaraksetra, on the death of one's father, mother and guru, at the time of consecrating Vedic fires and at a soma sacrifice—tonsure is prescribed in these seven cases. Some read 'satsu' and therefore they take the first two words as meaning 'on the Ganges only at Prayāga.' Both Tīr C. and Tīr. Pr. quote a verse [1301] which says that tonsure and fast are acts that must be done at all tīrthas except at Kuruksetra, Viśālā (Ujjayinī or Badarikā), Virajā (river in Orissa) and Gayā.' acc. to some and कोणार्क acc to others It is not correct to translate 'ādhāne' as 'in the Garbhādhāna ceremony' (as Dr. Chaudhuri does on p 55 of his English Intro. to गङ्गावाक्या०) आधान by itself in धर्मशास्त्र works generally

The first half is अग्नि 115 7 and the whole verse is ascribed to अग्निपुराण by

in the case of women whose husbands are living only two finger-breadths of hair are cut. Vṛddha-Hārīta (IX. 386–387) lays down that in the case of women whose husbands are living tonsure of the head should not be carried out, but that holding up all their hair only three finger-breadths should be cut off. Other smṛtis like Āpastamba in verse (I. 33–34), Aṅgiras verse 163, Yama 54–55, Parāśara q. by the Mitākṣarā on Yāj. III. 263–264 lay down that tonsure is limited to the cutting of two finger-breadths of hair in the case of woman (nārī). Par. M.[1302] II. 1. p. 291 reads 'evam nārīkumārīṇām' and holds that nārī means here 'a woman whose husband is alive'. Although the smṛti passages occur in the section on prāyaścitta still by analogy they are to be applied to the tonsure in holy places. As regards widows, ascetics[1303] and śūdras all hair are to be cut. The Tīrthaprakāśa finds fault with Vācaspatimiśra for saying that there is no tonsure on the Ganges. When there is such a conflict of views, the final decision rests with the usage of each country or the individual's choice. The Tīr. K. (p 10) appears to hold that honouring the pitṛs at the time of starting on a pilgrimage is specially obligatory on a man with means. The texts make a difference between kṣaura and muṇḍana. The latter means 'shaving the hair on the head as well as the moustache and beard,' while kṣaura means only shaving the head. Therefore the Nāradīya says that all sages did not prohibit kṣaura even at Gayā but only muṇḍana is forbidden there[1303a] and there is no muṇḍana on the Ganges anywhere except at Prayāga The Tīrthenduśekhara (p 7) gives it as its opinion that tonsure and fast are not obligatory but are only kāmya (i. e. to be done if certain rewards are desired) and points out that śiṣṭas do not resort to these two at many tīrthas.

The Purāṇas and digests devote some attention to the mode of travel. The Matsya (106. 4–6) states that[1304] if a pilgrim goes to Prayāga in a conveyance drawn by bulls he falls into hell and his pitṛs do not accept the water offered by him at the holy place and if a pilgrim because of riches or avarice or foolishness goes in a conveyance (not drawn by bulls) all his effort (as a pilgrim) becomes fruitless and therefore a pilgrim should avoid journey in a conveyance. According to the Kalpataru (on Tīrtha p. 11) using a conveyance is forbidden only in the case of pilgrimage to Prayāga (and not in the case of other tīrthas), while the Tīr. C. (p. 8) and Tīr. Pr. (p. 45) quote a verse[1305] which provides that if a pilgrim uses a cart drawn by bulls he is guilty of govadha (killing a cow), if he travels on horse-back (or in a horse-drawn carriage) his pilgrimage yields no fruit, if he is carried by men (in a palanquin or the like) he secures only half the merit but if he travels bare-footed then he wins the full merit. The Padma-purāṇa (IV. 19. 27) has a similar verse. The Tīr. Pr. p. 34 quotes a verse from the Kūrmapurāṇa that those who are unable to perform a pilgrimage otherwise do not incur blame (or loss) by making use of a conveyance drawn by men or a chariot which is drawn by mules or horses. Similarly, a verse of the Viṣṇupurāṇa[1306] quoted by both Tīr C and Tīr. Pr. (pp. 34–35) provides that one should always go on a journey wearing shoes and holding an umbrella in the rains or in summer and armed with a staff at night or in a forest. The Visnudharmottara takes a more practical view when it says that to make a pilgrimage on foot is the highest tapas (austerity) and that if a pilgrimage be made in a conveyance the pilgrim will reap only the reward of the bath. The Tīr. Pr. (p. 35) allows the use of a vessel to reach holy places like Gangāsāgara which cannot be reached otherwise.

The Tristhalī-setu (pp. 1–3) has a long discussion about the saṅkalpa[1307] (declaration) to be made at the time of starting on a pilgrimage. The conclusions reached are that the declaration should not include the names of all the holy places intended to be visited, but should expressly state the last one up to which one desires to go, that persons from southern or western India should make a saṅkalpa about Gayā (and pilgrimage to Prayāga and Kāśī will be implied) and that a person from East India should make a saṅkalpa about Prayāga (and pilgrimage to Gayā and Kāśī will be included as a matter of course) and that (as an alternative method) a man from south or west India should at first make a sankalpa about pilgrimage to Prayāga, then while in Prayāga he should make a sankalpa about visiting Kāśī and then in Kāśī he should make a saṅkalpa about visiting Gayā. A pilgrim from Eastern India should first make a sankalpa about Gayā, then, while in Gayā, he should make one about Kāśī and so on. The Tīrthaprakāśa (p. 326) appears to criticize the first method proposed by the Tristhalīsetu and states its own view to be that those who intend to visit many sacred places should make a sankalpa in the form 'I shall perform pilgrimage' (Tīrtha-yātrāmaham karisye). The Tīrthaprakāśa, however, approves of the second method proposed as an alternative.

That the merit of a pilgrimage could be collected in a vicarious manner is laid down by the Smṛtis and Purānas. Atri (50–51) provides [1308] 'He for whom an effigy made with kuśa grass intending it as a representative is dipped in the waters of a holy place secures one-eighth part of the merit (that he would have secured by himself bathing in the waters). If a man takes a bath (in a holy place) having in view (the benefit of his mother, father, brother, friend or guru, these latter receive one-twelfth of the fruit (of the pilgrimage). Another verse of Paithīnasi says that he who visits a holy place for money (wages) from another gets only a 16th part of the merit, but he who goes to a tīrtha while bent on another purpose or errand (such as study, business, waiting on a guru)[1309] reaps only half the merit. The Visnudharmottara has a similar verse. It was owing to this idea of collecting merit and God's Grace that wealthy men built Dharmaśālās, tanks, and annasattras and wells for the conveniences of pilgrims and the planting of trees by the sides of roads had in view the comfort of pilgrims as well as of the general public The Prabhāsa khanda remarks 'A wealthy man who enables another to perform pilgrimage by providing his own money or conveyances gets one-fourth of the merit of the pilgrimage.'[1310]

The Prāyaścittatattva of Raghunandana quotes from the Brahmāndapurāna some verses which enumerate fourteen acts that a pilgrim has to give up after reaching the Ganges viz. śauca (punctilious performance of bodily purification), ācamana (sipping water on various occasions in the day), hair (dressing), wearing nirmālya (flowers taken away after being offered in worship), repeating the Aghamarsana hymn (Ṛg. 190. 1-3), shampooing the body, sports, acceptance of gifts, sexual dalliance, devotion to another tīrtha, praising another tīrtha, the gift to others of clothes (worn by oneself), striking any one and swimming across the water of the tīrtha.

One noticeable rule is that, though Manu III. 149 requires strict examination of the ancestry and learning of brāhmanas to be invited at a śrāddha, some of the Purānas provide[1311] that one should not enter upon an examination of the worth of brāhmanas at holy places and this view is endorsed by several digests such as the Kalpataru on tīrtha (p. 10), the Tīr. C. (p. 10) and the Tīr. Pr. (p 73). The last work remarks that brāhmanas who are known for certain to possess defects deserving condemnation should be avoided. The Varāhapurāna goes[1312] so far as to say that at Mathurā a pilgrim should prefer to honour a brāhmana born and bred up in Mathurā rather than a brāhmana who has studied the four Vedas (but is a stranger to Mathurā). Similar passages from the Vāyu and Skandapurāna have been quoted above in note 910 and there is another similar passage in Skanda. It is provided by the Vāyupurāna[1313] that when a son goes to Gayā, he should invite only those brāhmanas that have been settled in Gayā by Brahmā and that such brāhmanas are above ordinary mortals, that when they are gratified the gods together with one's pitrs become pleased, that one should not enter upon a consideration of their family, their character, their learning or their austerities and that when the Gayā brāhmanas are honoured the man doing so secures release (from samsāra). In Vāyu 106 73-84 and Agni 114. 33-39 and Garuda it is narrated that, after Gayāsura fell down and asked for boons which were granted by Visnu, Brahmā bestowed upon the Gayā brāhmanas 55 villages and Gayātīrtha extending over five krośas, gave them well-appointed houses, desire-yielding cows and trees, but he enjoined on them not to beg or accept a gift from others. The brāhmanas, however, greedy as they were, officiated at a sacrifice performed by Dharma (Yama) and begged him for fees and accepted them. Then Brahmā cursed them that they would always be in debt and took away the Kāmadhenu and Kalpavrksa and other gifts. The Agnipurāna [1314] (114. 37) adds that Brahmā cursed them to be bereft of all learning and to be full of greed. The brāhmanas then begged Brahmā to favour them with some means of livelihood (as they had been deprived by the curse of Brahmā of all that had been bestowed on them). Brahmā pitied them and told them that they would maintain themselves at Gayā-tīrtha till the end of the world and that those who would perform śrāddha at Gayā and worship them (by engaging them as officiating priests and pay them) would secure the merit of having worshipped Brahmā From this it is clear that the Gayā brāhmanas at the time of the composition of the section on Gayā at the end of the Vāyupurāna possessed the same characteristics as the modern Gayā brāhmanas (Gayāls or Gayāwals as they are called) and made the Gayā pilgrimage their business even then (as now). One of the early historic references to Gayāl brāhmanas occurs in the Śaktipur copper-plate of king Laksmanasena of Bengal in his 6th year (i. e. about 1183 A. D.)[1315].

The result of this teaching of the Purānas was that the brāhmanas at Gayā became a guild or a close corporation and the Gayāwals resent the intrusion of an outsider. Disputes between Gayāwals and outside priests and cases of Gayāwals have come before the courts and have gone up even to the Privy Council in England. It has been a usage for orthodox Hindu pilgrims going to Gayā to shave themselves at the river called Punpun,[1315a] then on arrival at Gayā to worship the feet of one of the Gayāwal brāhmanas. The Gayāwal himself or his agent takes the pilgrim to the sacred spots (Vedīs) in and around Gayā. The priest is paid a fat fee near the Aksaya-vata and the Gayāwal puts a garland of flowers on the folded hands of the pilgrim and pronounces the word 'suphala' and utters a blessing that the pilgrim's ancestors would go to heaven on account of the pilgrim's visit to Gayā. In order to keep this business in their own families the Gayāwals have adopted loose and peculiar customs. If a Gayāwal is sonless he makes a gift of his office (called gūdi or gaddi) to another Gayāwal, who describes himself as the adopted son of the Gayāwal making the gift. There is no real adoption in the strict sense. Therefore, the so called adopted son retains his rights in the family of birth, he is not severed from his natural family and it is not rare to find that one Gayāwal claims to have succeeded to four gādis (i. e. claims to be the son adopted by several persons simultaneously). The Gayāwals have got books in which they enter the names and addresses of their clients, who sign such entries and enjoin upon their descendants to make members of that particular Gayāwal family their gurus whenever they might visit Gayā. Thus large incomes and properties come to the hands of the Gayāwals. They send their agents throughout India, who bring as many pilgrims as possible. In Lachman Lal v. Kanhaya Lal the Privy [1316] Council had to deal with the case of a Gayāwal who claimed to be an adopted son without loss of his interest in the property of the natural family on the ground of these peculiar practices of the Gayāwals and that claim was upheld. In Lachman Lal v. Baldeo Lal [1317] the Patna High Court gives a brief summary of the origin, history and customs of the Gayāwals, remarks that though in former times there were several hundred families of Gayāwals their number is now reduced to about 150, that the Gayāwals so-called gaddi is not a hereditary office, but only a business to which a goodwill is attached. The Calcutta High Court decided in Dwarkanath Misser [1318] v. Rampertab Misser that persons who require religious ceremonies to be performed for their benefit are at liberty to choose the priest by whom they shall be performed, that plaintiffs are not entitled to a declaration that they along with defendants are exclusively entitled to officiate as priests when pilgrims, on their way to the holy city of Gayā, perform the śrāddha ceremony of their ancestors on the bank of the sacred river Punpun, and that the plaintiffs could be given a declaration that they are entitled to officiate as priests for such pilgrims as may choose to employ them for the purpose of religious ceremonies and that the defendants are not entitled to prevent the plaintiffs from the exercise of their calling. In Narayan Lal [1319] v. Chulhan Lal the Calcutta High Court decided how the books containing the names and addresses of pilgrims kept by a joint family of Gayāwals were to be divided at the time of the partition of all the properties of the family.

The literature on tīrthas is probably far more extensive than on any other single topic of Dharmaśāstra. Not to mention the Vedic Literature, the Mahābhārata and the Purāṇas contain on a very modest calculation at least 40000 verses on tīrthas, sub-tīrthas and legends connected with them. In the Vanaparva (chap. 82–156) and Śalyaparva (chap. 35–54) alone there are about 3900 verses on tīrthayātrā. To mention only a few of the Purāṇas, the Brahmapurāṇa devotes about 6700 verses (i. e. nearly half of its total extent of 13783 verses) to tīrthas, the Padma about 4000 verses out of the 31000 verses of the first five khandas, the Varāhapurāṇa devotes about 3182 verses to tīrthas (out of which about 1400 refer to Mathurā) out of about 9614 verses, the Matsya about 1200 verses out of 14002. Besides these, the following well-known digests and works on tīrthas deserve mention. The Tīrthavivecana-kāṇḍa of the Kalpataru of Lakṣmīdhara (G. O. S. series); the Caturvarga-[1320] cintāmaṇi of Hemādri (1260–1270 A. D.) contained a section on tīrthas (no Ms. has yet been discovered), the Tīrthacintāmaṇi of Vācaspati (1450–1480 A. D.) published in B. I. series, the Tīrtha-sāra, part of Nṛsiṃhaprasāda about 1500 A. D. (published in the Sarasvatī-bhavana series); the Tristhalīsetu of Nārāyaṇabhaṭṭa (about 1550–1580 A. D.) printed by the Ānandāśrama Press, Poona; Tīrthasaukhya, a part of Todarānanda (1565-1589 A. D.), Tīrthatattva or Tīrthayātrāvidhitattva of Raghunandana whose literary activity lies between 1520–1570 A. D. (printed in Bengali characters and over and above the 28 tattvas of his Smṛtitattva), Tīrthaprakāśa by Mitramiśra about 1610–1640 (published in the Chowkhamba Sanskrit series), the Tristha-līsetusāra-sangraha of Bhaṭṭoji (about 1625); Tristhalīsetusāra-sangraha of Nāgeśa, the Tīrthenduśekhara of Nāgeśa or Nāgoji (published in the Sarasvatībhavana series, Benares, 1936). There are several works on tīrthas (not yet printed) mentioned in H. of Dh. vol 1. p. 554, of which the Tīrtharatnākara of Anantabhaṭṭa composed at the order of Anūpasiṃha is probably the largest work on tīrthas (ms no. 1822 in the Anup Library at Bikaner). Besides these there are special works on individual tīrthas such as the Gangā-vākyāvalī[1321] (on the Ganges) of Vidyāpati (1400-1450 A. D.) published by Dr. J. B. Chaudhuri; Kāśīmrtimoksa-vicāra of Sureśvarācārya (published in the Sarasvatībhavana Texts series, Benares 1936); the Gayāśrāddha-paddhati of Raghunandana, the Purusottama-ksetratattva of Raghunandana (published by Jivananda). Only printed works have been drawn upon in this work (except where expressly stated otherwise).

1320. Vide H of Dh. vol 1 p 354 n. 838 which shows that Hemādri had completed his section on tīrtha when he commenced the Pariśeṣa-khaṇḍa. It may be noted that the त्रिस्थलीसेतु and the तीर्थप्रकाश had the work of Hemādri on tīrtha before them. For examples, the त्रिस्थलीसेतु p 53 'तथा च हेमाद्र्यादिधृतादिपुराणवाक्यानि ब्राह्मणस्यापि मरणविधायकानि, p. 55 'विशेषस्तु हेमाद्रीयशरीरोत्सर्गविधेरवगन्तव्य.'; the तीर्थप्रकाश pp. 122, 123, 136, 377 refer to हेमाद्रि's quotations from the स्कन्दपुराण, भविष्यपुराण, जाबालोपनिषद् and कूर्मपुराण respectively, which unmistakably refer to tīrthas and p 478 speaks of तीर्थहेमाद्रि.

The preliminaries before starting on a pilgrimage to any tīrtha prescribed by the purānas and digests may be brought together. On a certain day (when a person has decided on tīrtha-yātrā) he should take only one meal, then the next day he should shave himself (according to most digests) and observe a fast; then on the day after the fast he should perform his daily duties, should make a sankalpa (declaration of intention) in the form 'I shall perform a pilgrimage to such and such a place and I shall worship Ganeśa and my favourite deities for the accomplishment of the pilgrimage without obstacles'; offer worship to Ganeśa, to the planets (nine) and his favourite deities with five or sixteen upacāras,[1322] then perform a pārvana-śrāddha with plenty of ghee according to his own grhyasūtra, honour three brāhmanas at least and donate some money to them. Then he should put on a pilgrim's dress as described above (p. 573), go round the village in which his house is located (or at least round his own house), reach another village not more distant than one krosa (two or two and half miles) and break his fast by eating the remainder of the food cooked and ghee used for the śrāddha (this applies to pilgrimage to Gayā). He may break his fast 1321. The last verse of the Gangāvākyāvalī is कियन्निबन्धमालोक्य श्रीविद्यापतिसूरिणा । गङ्गावाक्यावली देव्याः प्रमाणैर्विमलीकृता ॥. This verse shows that the famous Maithila scholar Vidyāpati at least provides the authorities on which the work is based Some scholars hold that it is really Vidyāpati who wrote the work for commemorating the queen who had honoured and patronized him. The 2nd Introductory verse claims the work as Viśvāsa-devī's own In the दानवाक्यावली of धीरमति the last verse is निबन्धान् सम्यगालोक्य...सूरिणा । दानवाक्यावली देव्या....कृता ॥ (D. C ms. No 216 of 1881-82.

The ब्रह्मवैवर्तपुराण (Ānandāśrama ed.), ब्रह्मखण्ड, chap. 26 90-92 mention 16, 12 or five upacāras as follows: आसनं वसनं पाद्यमर्घ्यमाचमनीयकम् । पुष्पं चन्दनधूपं च दीपं नैवेद्यमुत्तमम् ॥ गन्धं माल्यं च शय्यां च ललितां सुविलक्षणाम् । जलमन्नं च ताम्बूलं साधारं देयमेव च । गन्धान्नतल्पताम्बूलं विना द्रव्याणि द्वादश । पाद्यार्घ्यजलनैवेद्यपुष्पाण्येतानि पञ्च च ॥.

in his own house (in the case of other tīrthas) and then start. Then the next day he should bathe with pure clothes on and then put on his pilgrim dress and start on his pilgrimage in the forenoon with his face to the east, preferably bare-footed. There are two views here. Some say that on the day on which a man reaches a tīrtha he should observe a fast, while the other view is that the pilgrim should fast on the day previous to his reaching the tīrtha. In the first case he will have to perform a śrāddha on the day of the fast and in that case he cannot actually taste the remnants of śrāddha food but should only smell the cooked food The Kalpataru (on tīrtha p 11) and the Tīrtha-cintāmani (p 14) quote Devala for the proposition that a fast on reaching a tīrtha is not obligatory, but if observed yields special merit.

CHAPTER XII

THE GANGES

Since the Ganges is the holiest of rivers and since such highly esteemed tīrthas as Kanakhala, Haridvāra, Prayāga and Kāśī are situated on it, it would be most proper to begin the treatment of individual tīrthas with the Ganges.

It has been already seen (p. 556) how the Ganges is the first among the many rivers invoked in the famous Nadīstuti hymn (Ṛg X. 75 5–6). In Ṛg [1323] VI 45 31 we have the word 'Gāngyaḥ' which most probably means 'growing on the Ganges'. In the Śatapatha Brāhmana XIII. 5 4 11 and 13 and Ait Br. 39. 9 the victories and sacrifices of Bharata Daussanti on the Gangā and Yamunā are mentioned. In Śat. Br XIII. 5 4 11 and 13 an ancient gāthā is quoted 'At Nādapit the Apsaras Śakuntalā conceived Bharata who after conquering the whole earth brought to Indra more than 1000 horses meet for sacrifice.' The Mahābhārata (Anuśāsana 26. 26–103) and the Purāṇas (such as Nāradīya, Uttarārdha, chap 38–45 and 51. 1–48, Padma V. 60. 1–127, Agni chap 110, Matsya chap. 180–185, Padma, Ādikhanda. chap 33–37) contain hundreds of verses eulogising the greatness and the sanctifying activity of the Ganges. The Skandapurāna, Kāsīkhanda, chap 29 (verses 17–168) contains one thousand names of the Ganges. It is not possible to reproduce here even a small fraction of what is said in these works about the Ganges To most men in India great rivers like the Ganges, great mountains like the Himālaya present a double aspect, viz the physical aspect and the spiritual aspect A great river apart from its volume of water is deemed to have a spiritual or divine life which animates it. Tylor (in 'Primitive Culture', 2nd ed. p 477) observes 'What we call inanimate objects-rivers, stones, trees, weapons and so forth—are treated as living intelligent beings, talked to, propitiated, punished for the harm they do.' There are separate treatises devoted to the glorification of the Ganges and the pilgrimage to it such as the Gaṅgāpattalaka of Ganeśvara (1350 A. D.), Gaṅgāvākyāvalī of Viśvāsadevī, queen of king Padmasiṃha of Mithilā, the Gaṅgābhakti-taraṅginī of Gaṇapati, the Gaṅgākṛtyaviveka of Vardhamāna. Vide H. of Dh. vol. I. p. 538 for the dates of some of these works.

The Vanaparva, chap 85, has a grand eulogy of Gaṅgā in verses 88–97, some of which may be translated here[1324]. "The Ganges is equal to Kurukṣetra wherever one may take a bath in it, but there is a speciality about Kanakhala and in Prayāga there is the greatest and highest (holiness). If a person, after committing a hundred bad deeds, sprinkles himself with Ganges (water), the waters of the Ganges burn all of them as fire burns fuel. In the Kṛta age all (places) were holy, in Tretā age Puṣkara was (the holiest place), in Dvāpara Kurukṣetra and in the Kali age the Ganges. The Ganges, when its name is uttered, purifies a sinner, when seen it yields good fortune, when a bath is taken in it or its water is drunk, it sanctifies the family up to the seventh ancestor. As long as (a particle of) the bones of a man touches Ganges water (i. e lies inside it), so long does the man remain happy (or honoured) in heaven. There is no holy place equal to the Ganges, there is no god higher than Keśava That country and that penance-grove where the Ganges flows should be known as the sacred spot of success (or perfection) since it attaches itself to the Ganges." The Anuśāsana (26.26, 30–31) asserts 'those districts and countries, those hermitages and mountains, in the midst of which the Ganges flows are pre-eminent in puṇya (religious merit) Even those men who, after committing sinful acts in the first part of their lives, resort afterwards to the Ganges reach the highest world (or goal). That increase (in merit) which comes to men that bathe in the holy waters of the Ganges and that then become pure in spirit, cannot be secured even by the performance of hundreds of solemn Vedic sacrifices.'[1325]

In the Bhagavadgītā (X. 31) Lord Krsna says that among streams he is the Ganges (srotasāmasmi Jāhnavī). The Manusmrti setting out an exordium to a witness to tell the truth indicates that the Ganges and Kuruksetra were the most sacred spots in the age of the Manusmrti.[1326] Some of the Purānas describe the Ganges as flowing in Heaven (as Mandākinī), on the earth (as Gangā) and in the nether regions or Pātāla (as Bhogavatī). Vide Padma VI. 267. 47. The Visnupurāna[1327] and other Purānas state that the Ganges springs from the toe-nail of the left foot of Visnu. In some Purānas it is said that Śiva let off from his matted hair the Ganges in seven streams, three flowing towards the east (Nalinī, Hlādinī, Pāvanī), three to the west (Sītā, Caksus and Sindhu) and Bhāgīrathī (vide Matsya 121. 38-41, Brahmānda II. 18 39-41, Padma I 3. 65-66). The Kūrmapurāna (I 46.30-31) and Varāha (chap. 82 in prose) state that the Ganges flows first in four different streams, Sītā, Alakanandā, Sucaksu and Bhadrā and that the Alakanandā flows towards the south, comes to Bhāratavarsa and falls into the sea with seven mouths[1328] In the Brahmapurāna (73. 68-69) the Ganges is described as sprung from the foot of Visnu and as established in the matted hair of Maheśvara (Śiva).

The Visnupurāna eulogises[1329] the Ganges as follows: The Ganges purifies all beings from day to day when its name is

A similar verse occurs in the Nāradīya-purāna 'what is the use of Yoga with its eight angas, of austerities, of solemn (Vedic) sacrifices? Residence on the Ganges alone is superior to all these'[1334]. Two verses of the Matsya-purāna[1335] deserve mention here 'even a man of sinful deeds, on remembering the Ganges even at a distance of thousands of yojanas, attains the highest goal. A person is delivered from sin by uttering the name (of the Ganges), on seeing it a person sees happiness; by bathing in the Ganges and drinking its water he purifies his family up to the seventh ancestor'. It is stated in the Kāśīkhanda that on the banks of the glorious Ganges all times are auspicious as well as all countries, and all men are fit for receiving gifts

In the Varāhapurāna (chap. 82) the name 'Gangā' is derived as 'gām gatā' (that has gone to the earth). The Padmapurāna (Srstikhanda 60. 64–65) specifies the mūlamantra about the Ganges as follows. 'Om namo Gaṅgāyai, viśvarūpinyai nārāyanyai namo namah'.

The Padmapurāna (srsti 60 35) holds that Visnu represents all the gods and the Ganges represents Visnu. It eulogises the Ganges as follows: Sons abandon their fathers, wives their husbands, friends and relatives abandon a friend or a relative if any one of these is adulterous, or patita, or wicked or becomes a cāndāla or kills his guru, or is full of all kinds of sins and hatreds, but the Ganges does not forsake such persons[1336].

The extent of the holy region of the Ganges is laid down in some purānas. The Nāradīya[1337] states. the region within one gavyūti from the banks of the Ganges is called kṣetra; one should reside within the ksetra limits, but not on the bank itself; residence on the bank (of the Ganges) is not desired. The limits of the ksetra are of the extent of one yojana between both the banks' i. e. the ksetra extends for two krośas from each bank. The general rule is stated by Yama that forests, mountains, holy rivers and tīrthas are without an owner, these cannot be possessed (by a person as owner). The Brahmapurāna[1338] says that measuring from the flowing waters for a distance of four hastas, God Nārāyana is the Lord (or owner) and no one should accept a gift in that strip even if he be on the point of death. A difference is made between the garbha (the inner circle) of the Gangāksetra, the tīra and the ksetra. 'Garbha' extends up to that portion of the river stream which is reached on the 14th of the dark half of Bhādrapada; beyond that is the tīra (bank), which extends upto 150 hastas from garbha and ksetra extends up to two krośas from each bank.

Let us suppose that the pilgrim has come to the Ganges. Then the question is, how is he to proceed about a bath in the Ganges. Many of the digests contain several alternate forms of the sankalpa to be made at the time of Gangā-snāna. For example, the Prāyaścittatattva (pp. 497–498) contains a very elaborate sankalpa. A simple one is quoted below from the Gangāvākyāvalī.[1339] The mode of bathing prescribed in the

According to the Amarakośa a gavyūti is equal to two krośas 'गव्यूतिः स्त्री क्रोशयुगम्'. According to the वायु 8 105–107 and 101. 122–126 and ब्रह्माण्ड II 7 96–101 the measures are 24 अङ्गुलs = one हस्त, 96 अङ्गुलs = धनुः (which is same as दण्ड, युग and नाली), 2000 धनुः = गव्यूति and 8000 धनु = योजन, acc. to the मार्कण्डेय 46. 37–40, 4 हस्तs = धनुः or दण्ड, or युग or नालिका), 2000 धनु = क्रोश, 4 क्रोशs = गव्यूति which is the same as योजन. Matsyapurāna 102 is common to people of all varnas and students of all the different recensions of the Veda. The Matsyapurāna, chap. 102, which contains one of the earliest procedure of a religious bath, and which has been taken over by several digests such as the Gangāvākyāvalī (pp. 148–152) is summarised here. Cleanliness (of the body) and clean thoughts do not exist without a bath; therefore bathing is first prescribed for making the mind pure. One may bathe with water drawn (in a vessel from a well or stream) or with water not so drawn. A wise man should fix upon a holy spot after repeating the fundamental mantra 'namo Nārāyanāya' (reverent bow to Nārāyana). A man holding darbha grass in his hand and being clean and pure should perform ācamana (ceremonial sipping of water). He should select a spot four hastas square on all sides and invoke the Ganges (to come or be present there) with the following mantras 'you are sprung from the foot of Visnu, you are a devotee of Visnu, you worship Visnu; therefore save us from sins committed from birth to death. Vāyu declared that there are three and a half crores (35 millions) of holy places in heaven, on the earth and in mid air; all these, O Ganges (daughter of Jahnu), belong to you. Your name among the gods is Nandinī (the joy-giving) and also Nalinī and there are other names of yours viz. Daksā, Prthvī, Vihagā, Viśvakāyā, Amrtā, Śivā, Vidyādharī, Supraśāntā, Viśva-prasādinī, Ksemā, Jāhnavī, Śāntā, Śāntipradāyinī.[1339a] One should utter these holy names at the time of bathing; then the Ganges flowing in the three worlds would be near (even if a man bathed at home). He should, after folding his hands, cast on his head thrice, four times, five times or seven times water on which he has muttered the mantras seven times. After having invoked the clay (in the river bed) with the mantras 'O earth! Oh clay! you are crossed over by horses and chariots, by Visnu, remove my sin which I may have committed by my evil deeds; you were brought up (from the depths of the sea) by the Boar incarnation of Krsna with his hundred hands. O clay! you are given (to the world) by Brahmā and you had mantras repeated over you by Kāśyapa. Occupying my limbs may you drive away all my sin! Oh clay! Give us prosperity; everything is centered in you; a bow to you, that are virtuous and the source of all worlds'. Having thus bathed and having sipped water (ācamana) according to the procedure prescribed, he should get out of the Ganges and should put on two white and pure garments. Then he should perform tarpana[1340] for the satisfaction of the three worlds. (He should say) 'This water is being offered by me for satiating gods, yaksas, nāgas, gandharvas, apsarases, asuras, cruel snakes, eagles, trees, jackals, birds, creatures that sustain themselves on air and water or that move in the sky, all beings that are without support and those that are devoted to the dictates of dharma'. The person (performing tarpana) should wear the sacred thread in the upavīta form (when satiating gods) and then wear it in the 1340 Tarpana (satiating with the offering of water) is of two kinds viz principal (pradhāna) and subsidiary (anga). The first has to be performed every day by a twice-born person (who has finished his studies) for the gods, sages and pitrs in that order The 2nd is performed as an anga of snāna. नित्यं नैमित्तिकं काम्यं त्रिविधं स्नानमुच्यते। तर्पणं तु भवेत्तस्याङ्गत्वेन प्रकीर्तितम्॥ ब्रह्मपुराण q. by गंगाभक्ति० p 162 तर्पण is an anga of bath as well as of brahma yajña Tarpana has been described at great length in H. of Dh. vol II. pp. 668–669 and pp 689–695. Therefore it is not necessary to make any lengthy remarks on tarpana here. A few matters that deserve attention are mentioned One rule is that one has to perform tarpana according to the provisions of his own recension of the Veda The persons to whom water is to be offered and the manner in which it is to be offered are set out on p 692 of vol II of H of Dh Another rule is that tarpana has to be done (even if the day is not auspicious) at a tīrtha, in Gayā, in pitrpaksa (i e the dark half of Bhādrapada) with water mixed with sesame 'तीर्थे तिथिप्रवेशे (तिथिविशेषे?) च गयायां प्रेतपक्षके। निषिद्धेऽपि दिने कुर्यात्तर्पणं तिलमिश्रितम्॥'. A widow also has to perform tarpana for her husband and his relatives at a sacred place. An ascetic (sannyāsin) has not to do it. A person whose father is living has not to perform tarpana, but acc. to Visnupurāna he offers three handfuls to gods, three to the sages and one to Prajāpati (in the form 'devās-trpyantām') Another rule is the one makes an offering in śrāddha or into fire with one hand only (the right hand) but in tarpana water is poured into the stream in which one is bathing or on land with both hands. 'श्राद्धे हवनकाले च पाणिनैकेन दीयते। तर्पणे तूभयं कुर्यादेष एव विधिः स्मृतः॥' नारदीयपुराण (उत्तर) 57. 62–63. If a man is not able to perform the elaborate tarpana described in vol II. he should repeat the mantras from वायुपुराण 110 21–22 set out here and offer three añjalis of water mixed with sesame and kuśas, आब्रह्मस्तम्बपर्यन्तं देवर्षिपितृमानवाः। तृप्यन्तु पितरः सर्वे मातृमातामहादयः॥ अतीतकुलकोटीनां सप्तद्वीपनिवासिनाम्। आ ब्रह्मभुवनाल्लोकादिदमस्तु तिलोदकम्॥.

nivīta[1341] form (when satiating men). He should devotedly satiate men, the sages who were sons of Brahmā; he should say "May Sanaka, Sananda and Sanātana, Kapila, Āsuri, Vodhu, Pañcaśikha—may all these reach satiety by the water offered by me." Then he should satiate with water and akṣata grains (the sages) Marīci, Atri, Angiras, Pulastya, Pulaha, Kratu, Pracetas, Vasistha, Bhrgu, Nārada; he should satiate all these devarṣis, and brahmarsis,[1342] and rṣis with water and akṣatas. Then wearing the sacred thread in the apasavya mode, bending his left knee on the ground, he satiates with water mixed with sesame and sandal-wood paste pitrs called Agniṣvātta[1343], Saumya, Havismat, Ūsmapa, Sukālin, Barhisad and others called Ājyapa. He should make a bow to Yama, Dharmarāja, Mṛtyu, Antaka, Vaivasvata, Kāla, destroyer of all beings, Audumbara, Dadhna, Nīla, Paramesthin, Vrkodara, Citra and Citragupta. With darbhas in his hand a wise man should satiate his pitrs. He should satiate with devotion his father and the rest by uttering their names and gotra and his maternal grandfather and others in the same way and should recite the following mantra 'May those who are my bandhus or not my bandhus or were my bandhus in some previous life reach satisfaction and also whoever desires satisfaction from me.' Then he should sip water (perform ācamana) in the prescribed way and draw the figure of a lotus in front of himself and offer thereon to the Sun arghya (respectful offering of water) with water mixed with red sandal-wood paste, flowers and aksatas (grains of rice) and repeat the names of Sūrya (the Sun) 'Bow to thee! that are Visnu in another form, that art the face of Visnu, that hast thousand rays and that art all refulgence. Bow to thee that art beneficent, the lord of the world. Bow to thee that art adorned with divine sandalwood, that art seated on a lotus, adorned with ear-rings and armlets, the lord of people; that awakenest (or enlightenest) the whole world, that goest everywhere and markest the good and evil deeds; a bow to thee who art a god to all. O Bhāskara (Sun), be well disposed to me A bow to thee, Divākara (maker of day). A bow to thee, Prabhākara (source of refulgence)'. Having thus bowed to the Sun and having circumambulated thrice (the lotus drawn for representing the sun) and touching a brāhmaṇa, gold and a cow, the person (bather) should go to a temple of Viṣṇu (or to his own house, according to another reading).[1344]

It may be noted that the verses of the Matsyapurāṇa (102. 2–31) summarised above occur (with slight variations of a word here and there) in Padma (Pātāla-khaṇḍa 89. 12–42) and Sṛṣṭi-khaṇḍa, chap. 20. 145–176.

The Sm. C. and Raghunandana in his Prāyaścittatattva (p. 502) lay down two mantras to be recited at the time of taking a bath in the Ganges[1345] 'O Ganges, daughter of Jahnu! That flowest in three worlds, that art sprung from the lotus-like feet of Viṣṇu, that are far-famed as devoted to (the spread of) dharma, remove my sin; O divine mother, O Bhāgīrathī! purify with your immortal waters me who am full of faith and devotion'. The mantra to be repeated at the time of the bath at the place where the Ganges falls into the ocean according to the same two works is "O god that art the lord of rivers! O goddess that art the best among rivers! Having bathed at the confluence of both I shall cast off my sins"

On pp. 243–244 above it has been stated that the Viṣṇu Dh. S. and other works recommend the casting of the ashes or charred bones of a cremated body in the Ganges at Prayāga, Kāśī or other holy place and the rites accompanying the casting of ashes have been there set out. A few words are added here. The same verse[1346] (with slight variations) about casting ashes in the Ganges occurs in several works. The Agnipurāṇa observes 'the deceased man benefits if his bones are thrown into the Ganges; a man stays in heaven as long as (even a particle of) his bone remains in the waters of the Ganges. No rites for the dead are performed for those who commit suicide or who are patita; but even in their case the fall of their bones in Ganges water is beneficial to them.' The Tīr. C and Tīr. Pr. quote two verses and a half from the Brahmapurāṇa [1347] which set out a briefer rite of throwing ashes than the one in the Nirṇayasindhu. The verses mean: "The man carrying the ashes should take a bath, sprinkle pañcagavya over the ashes, should place on them a piece of gold, honey, ghee and sesame; then he should deposit them in an earthen vessel; he should then look in the southern direction, say 'salutation to Dharma,' enter the waters (of the Ganges), utter, 'may he (Dharma or Viṣṇu?) be pleased with me' and then cast the ashes in the water; then he should bathe in the river, come out of it, cast a look at the Sun and then give a present (dakṣiṇā) to a brāhmaṇa; if he does so, then the state of the deceased person will be like Indra.' Vide Skanda, Kāśī-khaṇḍa 30. 42–46 where a little more elaborate procedure is prescribed. The importance of casting ashes in the Ganges probably owes its origin to the story of king Sagara's sons who were reduced to ashes by the wrath of the sage Kapila and who were saved by the ashes being washed in the waters of the Ganges brought down from heaven by Bhagīratha. Vide Vanaparva chap. 107–109, Viṣṇupurāṇa II. 8–10 for the story. The Nāradīya makes not only the throwing of calcined bones a source of benefit to the departed but even his nails and hair when cast in the Ganges confer the same benefit. It is stated in the Kāśīkhaṇḍa that those who, while standing on the banks of the Ganges, praise another tīrtha or do not think very highly of the Ganges go to hell.[1347a] The Kāsīkhaṇḍa further provides that there is special and

TRISTHALĪ

The three great tīrthas of Prayāga, Kāśī and Gayā are referred to as Tristhalī and the great scholar, Nārāyaṇabhaṭṭa (born in 1513 A. D.), wrote (about 1580 A. D.) in Benares a famous work called Tristhalīsetu (a bridge to the Tristhalī) wherein he gives a thorough and exhaustive treatment of the pilgrimage to these three holy places [1348a] alone. Prayāga is assigned pp. 1–72, Kāśī pp. 72–316 and Gayā pp. 316–379 (of the Ānandāśrama edition). Following with all humility the footsteps of such an illustrious and venerable scholar I shall deal with the three tīrthas in the same order.

PRAYĀGA

One of the most ancient reference to the greatness of the confluence of the Ganges and the Yamunā occurs in a khila [1349] verse which is usually placed in Ṛg. X. 75 and may be rendered as follows: "Those who take a bath at the place where the text of the Āśvalāyana school, while the Tīr. C p 47 quotes it as a verse of the Ṛgveda. It is quite possible to hold that the verse does not encourage religious suicide but only makes this distinction that by a bath only once a man goes to heaven and that if he dies at Prayāga he attains mokṣa even two rivers, white and dark, meet together, rise up (fly up) to heaven; those determined men who abandon their body there (i. e. commit suicide by drowning themselves) secure immortality (or mokṣa)". This must have been a comparatively early verse. The Skandapurāna referes to it as śruti. The greatness of Prayāga is dwelt upon in the Mahābhārata (Vanaparva 85. 69–97, 87. 18–20, Anuśāsana 25. 36–38)[1350] and in many purānas such as the Matsya (chapters 103–112, in all 260 verses), Kūrma I. 36–39 (verses 121), Padma (I. chap. 40–49), Skanda, Kāśī-Khaṇḍa, chap. 7. 45–65). Only a few out of the hundreds of verses on Prayāga can be cited here by way of sample. One remarkable fact is that the Rāmāyana does not say much about Prayāga. The confluence of the two rivers is no doubt referred to (Rām. II. 54.6) but from the description it appears that there was a forest at what is now Prayāga. Prayāga is called Tīrtharāja (the prince among tīrthas) in the Matsya 109. 15, Skanda (Kāśī 7. 45), Padma VI. 23. 27–35 (where the refrain at the end of each verse is 'sa tīrtharājo jayati prayāgah) and elsewhere. The legend runs that Prajāpati or Pitāmaha (Brahmā) performed a sacrifice here and Prayāga is the middle one of the vedis of Brahmā, the others being Kuruksetra in the north (uttaravedī) and Gayā in the east. It is believed that three rivers meet at Prayāga viz. Gaṅgā, Yamunā and Sarasvatī (underground between the two). It is said in the Matsya[1351], Kūrma and other Purānas that at the very sight of Prayāga, even by taking its name or by applying its clay to one's body a man becomes free from sin. The Kūrmapurāna[1352] proclaims "it is the sacred spot of Prajāpati; those who bathe here go to heaven and those who die here are not born again." That sacred spot is known as tīrtharāja; it is dear to Keśava The same is known as Trivenī.

The word Prayāga is employed in the neuter when connected with such words as tīrtha or kṣetra, as in Matsya (111 14 prajāpater-idam kṣetram prayāgam-iti viśrutam), but when employed along with words (in the masculine gender) such as tīrtharāja, it takes the masculine gender.

The word Prayāga is derived in various ways. The Vanaparva[1353] appears to suggest that the word Prayāga is derived from the root 'yaj' when it says 'Brahmā who is the soul of all beings performed formerly a sacrifice here; therefore it became known as Prayāga'. In the Skanda[1354] purāṇa also it appears to be explained by taking the two parts pra and yāga separately. "It is mentioned as Prayāga because it is superior to all sacrifices; Prayāga was the name given to it by the gods Hari, Hara and others seeing that it is superior to all sacrifices though the latter be enriched with fees and the like." The Matsyapurāṇa[1355] appears to lay emphasis on the part 'pra' when it says 'on account of its efficacy (or power) as compared with all other tīrthas it prevails (or is useful) far more'. The Brahmapurāṇa[1356] affirms "It is called prayāga on account of its eminence and it has the word 'rāja' (in Tīrtharāja) applied to it on account of its being the chief".

We must distinguish between Prayāga-maṇḍala, Prayāga and Veṇī or Triveṇī, each subsequent one being smaller and holier than each preceding one. The Matsya[1357] states that the sphere of Prayāga is five yojanas in circumference and that the moment a man enters inside this strip of land, there is an Aśvamedha at every step. This has been explained by the Tristhalīsetu (p. 15) as follows · Regarding Brahmayūpa (the sacrificial post of Brahmā) as the spike or peg, if one measures with a rope one and one half yojana long all round, that would be the Prayāgamandala of five yojanas in circumference. The boundaries of Prayāga itself are defined by Vanaparva,[1358] the Matsyapurāna (104 5 and 106. 30) and others. 'Prayāga extends from Pratisthāna up to the pool of Vāsuki and upto the two nāgas Kambala and Aśvatara and the nāga Bahumūlaka; this is known in the three worlds as the sacred spot of Prajāpati' (Matsya 104. 5), while Matsya 106. 30 provides that to the east of the Ganges is the Sāmudrakūpa, which is the same as Pratisthāna. This is explained by the Tristhalīsetu as follows. the eastern boundary is the kūpa called Pratisthāna [1359]; the northern one is the Vāsuki pool, the western limit is formed by Kambala and Aśvatara, the southern boundary is Bahumūlaka. This would be a four-cornered space which is included within Prayāga-mandala. According to the Matsyapurāna as quoted by the Kalpataru on tīrtha p. 143 the two Nāgas are on the south bank of Yamunā while the printed text has 'vipule Yamunātate' (106 27) [1360] The printed text of Padma I. 43. 27 supports the Kalpataru reading ('Yamunā-daksine tate) Venī-ksetra is within the limits of Prayāga itself and is twenty bow lengths in extent, as stated in the Padma. There are three kūpas viz. Prayāga, Pratisthāna and Alarkapura. The Matsya and Agni say 'there are three fire kundas and the Ganges flows in their midst' It should be noted that except where special reference is made in the Purānas to the sub-tīrthas, the reference to a bath at Prayāga in general means bath in the Venī i. e the confluence of the two rivers, as e. g in Vanaparva 85 81 and 85 and Matsya 104 16-17. The Vanaparva[1362] and some of the Purāṇas represent that the country between the Ganges and the Yamunā is (like) the hips and loins of the earth (i e. it is the most prosperous and plentiful part of the earth) and that Prayāga is like the inmost part of the hips.

The Narasimha-purāṇa says that Viṣṇu is in the form of Yogamūrti in Prayāga (65 17). It is said in the Matsyapurāṇa[1363] (111. 4-10) that when Rudra dissolves the world at the end of the Kalpa, the holy place of Prayāga is not destroyed, that Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Maheśvara (Śiva) stay in Prayāga, that to the north of Pratiṣṭhāna Brahmā stays in it under guise, that Viṣṇu stays there as Veṇī-Mādhava, that Śiva stays there as the Vaṭa (banyan tree) and that therefore the gods with the Gandharvas, the Siddhas and great sages always protect the sphere (maṇḍala) of Prayāga by guarding it against evil actions. The Matsyapurāṇa, therefore, recommends that a pilgrim should go to Prayāga which is protected by all the gods, stay there for a month, avoid sexual intercourse, worship gods and pitṛs and thereby secure his desired objects (104. 18). The same Purāṇa highly eulogises the gift at Prayāga of a kapilā cow properly decked (105. 16-22) with clothes, ornaments and jewels. The Padmapurāṇa (Ādi 42 17-24) has the same verses as the Matsya on this subject Similarly, the marriage of a daughter in the ārṣa form at Prayāga is highly spoken of in Matsya (106. 8-9). The Matsya (105. 13-14 and 106. 10) says generally that if a man makes a gift of a cow, of gold, of precious stones, of pearls and of other things that he owns his pilgrimage becomes fruitful (saphala) and he collects religious merit (puṇya) and that when a man makes gifts according to his ability and wealth, the fruit of his pilgrimage increases and he remains in heaven till the end of the world. The Brahmāṇḍa[1364] assures pilgrims that whatever gifts are made according to one's ability at Kuruksetra, Prayāga, at the mouth of the Ganges where it falls into the sea, on the Ganges, at Puskara, at Setubandha, at Gangādvāra and in Naimisa tends to confer inexhaustible rewards. In the Vanaparva [1365] it is stated that this sacrificial ground (of Brahmā) is honoured even by the gods, that even a small thing donated here assumes greatness (i. e. produces the rewards of large gifts).

The confluence of the three rivers came to be associated with omkāra, [1366] the mystic syllable that stands for Brahma. It is said in a purāna passage (probably Brahmapurāna) that the three parts of om (a u m) respectively are Sarasvātī, Yamunā and Gangā and that the waters of three rivers represent Pradyumna, Aniruddha and Sankarsana Hari.

It may be noted that, in spite of the fact that the Matsya, Kūrma (I. 36-39), Padma (Ādi chapters 41-49), Agni 111 and other Purānas contain several hundred verses on Prayāga, the Kalpataru (on tīrtha), the earliest extant digest on tīrthas, quotes only the Matsya (104. 1–13 and 16–20, 105. 1–22, 106. 1–48, 107. 2–21, 108. 3–5, 8–17 and 23–34, 109. 10–12, 110. 1–11, 111. 8–11, in all about 151 verses) and Vanaparva chap. 85. 79–87 and 97 and does not add a single word of explanation or discussion. But the other digests profusely quoting mostly from Purānas discuss at some length several topics and a few words must be devoted to some of those topics.

One such topic is tonsure at Prayāga It is stated by the Gangāvākyāvalī (p. 298) and the Tīr Pr. (p. 335) that, though the author of the Kalpataru says nothing about tonsure at Prayāga, yet as śistas (respectable and learned people) and the writers of digests accept it as necessary, certain authorities would be set out. The two verses quoted by most [1366a] writers are 'one should tonsure the head at Prayāga, offer pindas at Gayā, make gifts in Kuruksetra and should commit (religious) suicide at Benares. What is the use (or necessity) of pinda offerings at Gayā or death in Kāśī, or gifts at Kuruksetra, if one has tonsured one's head at Prayāga?". Elaborate discussions are held by all these works about the exact intention of the verses, about the application of the maxim of rātrisattra[1367] to them and about the results derived from tonsure. They have to be passed over here from considerations of space. The Tristhalī-setu (p. 17) holds that the verse only praises the rite of tonsure at Prayāga and the fruit thereof is simply the removal of sin. The Tri. S. refutes (p. 17) the application of rātrisattra-nyāya to these verses, while Tīr. C (p. 32) applies it. Some of the conclusions drawn by the Tri S. are that in one and the same yātrā at Prayāga (even if a man stays there for some days) ceremonial tonsure takes place only once, that widows have to tonsure their heads, that in the case of women whose husbands are living only two or three finger-breadths of tresses are to be cut and offered at the Trivenī, that even[1367a] boys whose upanayana has not been performed have to undergo tonsure provided the cūḍā rite has already been performed. The Tristhalīsetu (p. 22) notes that certain traditionalists,[1368]

1367. रात्रिसत्रन्याय occurs in जै. IV. 3 17-19. There is a passage in the पञ्चविंशब्राह्मण 23. 2. 4 'प्रतितिष्ठन्ति य एता रात्रीरुपयन्ति' Here in the पञ्चविंश रात्रिसत्र is enjoined but no fruit thereof is expressly promised The question arises whether in the absence of an express reward, heaven should be understood as the reward (because as explained in Jai IV 3. 15-16 svarga is the reward of all sacrifices for which no express reward is mentioned) or whether प्रतिष्ठा (stable position) which occurs in the above arthavāda passage should be held to be the reward of रात्रिसत्र. The reply is that here the reward is प्रतिष्ठा and not स्वर्ग i. e. though there is no express mention of the reward in the passage about rātrisattra, the arthavāda passage should be construed as laying down the reward In the two verses, there is a vidhi in the words प्रयागे वपनं कुर्यात् and the second verse is an अर्थवाद. The question is what reward is promised in it If रात्रिसत्रन्याय applies, then मुण्डन secures all the fruits of गयापिण्डदान, कुरुक्षेत्रदान and काशीतनुत्याग If it does not apply then the only fruit is पापाभाव relying on passages that aver that all sins cling to the roots of a person's hair, say that cutting two or three tresses would be merely kartana and not vapana (tonsure), that even women whose husbands are alive must shave themselves at Prayāga, that such women should make a braid of all their hair, should deck the braid with saffron and other auspicious materials, bow to their husbands and with the husband's permission have the head tonsured, that then they should place the cut hair in their joined hands, place thereon a golden or silver venī and pearls and coral and should cast all these into the confluence (Venī) of the Ganges and Jumnā after repeating the mantra 'May all my sins be destroyed by this offering of my braided hair into the Venī! may my blessedness (the auspicious state of wifehood) always increase in the lives to come' The Tri. S. states that women do not tonsure their head at any tīrtha except at Prayāga and the only reason for this is that it is the practice of śistas. Vide above pp 122–124 for tonsure as expiation for sins. The Nāradīya (Uttara) 63. 106 provides the same rule as Parāśara (in note 278 above) for women. The Prāyaścittatattva of Raghunandana prescribes the complete tonsure of the head for women at Prayāga.

It appears probable that the provision for the casting of venī (braided hair) on the part of women whose husbands were alive was suggested by the word Veṇī applied to the confluence of the two rivers, where the river Ganges appears to make a bend or curve for some distance.[1369]

One important question that very much exercised the minds of ancient and medieval Indian writers was whether and when suicide, particularly at sacred spots like the confluence of the Ganges and Jumnā or at the foot of the Aksaya Vata at Prayāga, would involve no sin.[1370] This matter has already been dealt with at length in H. of Dh. vol. II. pp 924–928 and vol. III. pp. 939, 948–949. Only a brief treatment by way of a summary of the pages and a few notes will be added here. The general sentiment of Dharmaśāstra works is to condemn suicide or an attempt to commit suicide as a great sin (vide H of Dh vol II. page 924 for texts). The Āp. Dh. S. (I. 10 28 15–17) mentions the view of Hārita which condemns suicide even as prāyaścitta for committing a mahāpātaka (like incest) and puts killing another or killing oneself on the same footing Manu V. 89 and Yāj. III. 154 condemn suicide by denying after-death rites to those who commit it, but Manu allowed suicide in various ways as prāyaścitta for mahāpātakas (vide Manu XI. 73, 90–91, 103–104). But exceptions to the condemnation of suicide are found in the smrtis, epics and purānas. They may be grouped under several heads. (1) Suicide as an exception in various ways by those guilty of mahāpātakas (viz. brāhmana murder, drinking of surā, theft of brāhmana's gold and incest), vide H. of Dh. vol. II. pp. 924–925 for smrti and other texts. (2) Starting on the Great Journey (mahāprasthāna-gamana or mahāpathayātrā) by a forest hermit (Manu VI. 31, Yāj. III. 55) suffering from incurable diseases and unable to perform the duties of his order (3) An old man or one who cannot observe the rules of bodily purification or who is so ill as to be beyond medical skill may kill himself by throwing himself from a precipice or by fire or by drowning or fasting or start on the Great Journey into the Himālaya or by jumping from the branches of the Vata tree at Prayāga (Aparārka p 877 quoting Ādi-purāna and Atri-smrti verses 218–219 q. by Medhātithi on Manu V. 88 and Mit. on Yāj III. 6) (4) Even a householder, otherwise all right, may resort to suicide by the means stated (in No. 3) if his life's work is done, if he has no desire for the pleasures of the world and does not desire to live, or if he is a Vedāntin[1371] and convinced of the ephemeral nature of life and may kill himself by fast in Himālaya. (5) Religious suicide was allowed at the confluence of the two great rivers Gangā and Yamunā, at the Vata there and at some other tīrthas (6) A wife dying by sahagamana or anumarana. As to Satī, the Nāradīya (pūrvārdha 7. 52–53) provides that a woman should not burn herself on the funeral pyre of her husband if she has a young child or young children, if she is pregnant or if she has not attained puberty, or if she is in her monthly illness at the time. Not only did common men believe in the promise of the Purānas that those who killed themselves at Prayāga (at the saṅgama or near Vata) secured moksa (freedom from the everlasting cycle of births and deaths) which was the highest of the four purusārathas (goals of human existence), but even great poets like Kālidāsa held the view that, though moksa or kaivalya or apavarga requires correct knowledge and realisation of the Supreme Spirit according to the Vedānta, Sānkhya and Nyāya systems, death at the sacred sangama led to moksa even without 'tattvajñāna.' In H. of Dh. vol. II pp. 925–927, historical examples of kings such as Yaśah-karnadeva, Candella Dhangadev and Cālukya Someśvara committing suicide at Prayāga or the Tuṅgabhadrā have been given. The king Kumāragupta of Magadha is said to have entered the fire of dry cow-dung cakes. This is in accordance with the prescriptions in the Matsyapurāna 107. 9–10 (=Padma, Ādi-khanda 44 3) which states [1372] 'the man who, suffering from no diseases, having no deficiency as to his limbs and being in full possession of his five senses, encompasses (his death) in cowdung fire remains honoured in heaven for as many years as there are pores on the whole of his body.' [1373] The Rājataranginī VI. 14 refers to officers entrusted with the duty of supervising suicide by fast (prāyopaveśa).

1372 गङ्गायमुनयोर्मध्ये कर्षाग्निं यस्तु साधयेत्। अहीनाङ्गो ह्यरोगश्च पञ्चेन्द्रियसमन्वित॰। यावन्ति रोमकूपाणि तस्य गात्रेषु देहिन॥ तावद्वर्षसहस्राणि स्वर्गलोके महीयते॥ मत्स्य 107 9, कूर्म I 38. 3–4, नारदीय, उत्तर, 63.154 (reads करीषाग्निं तु धारयेत्), पद्म I 44. 9 (reads पञ्चाग्नि यस्तु) कर्षाग्नि is short for करीषाग्नि for metrical reasons कूर्म I, 38.3 reads 'करीषाग्नि च साधयेत्' Vide Gupta Inscriptions No. 42 p. 200, the Ahsaid Stone Inscription of आदित्यसेन of मगध, which states that his fifth ancestor Kumāragupta plunged himself in the slow-burning fire of dried cowdung cakes as if in water at Prayāga. शौर्यसत्यव्रतधरो यः प्रयागगतो घने। अम्भसीव करीषाग्नौ मग्न स पुष्पपूजितः॥ p 203 (of the text). घने means घने सत्यपि. The learned editor was probably unaware of the provisions about suicide at Prayāga by being burnt with dry cowdung cakes in the Matsya and other purānas.

1373. The Ain-i-Akbari (tr. by Gladwin and published in 1800) speaks of the following as the meritorious kinds of suicide (vol I. p. 531 and p. 802 of the Popular edition, edited by J. Mukhopadhyaya). These are five in number viz. (1) starving; (2) covering himself with cowdung and setting it on fire and consuming himself therein, (3) burying himself in snow; (4) to plunge into water at the Gaṅgāsāgara-saṅgama, enumerate one's sins and pray till alligators come and devour the man, (5) cut his throat at Allahabad at the confluence of the Ganges and the Jumnā.

The important verse on which reliance is placed for sanctioning religious suicide at Prayāga may be translated[1374] as follows. 'You should not set aside (pass over) your wish about dying at Prayāga on account of the words of the Veda or the words of the people.' The words of the Veda[1375] are Vāj. S. 40 3 (=Īśāvāsyopanisad 3) which literally translated means 'there are worlds of Asuras enveloped in blinding darkness, those who have killed themselves repair after death to those worlds' This verse does not in the context appear to refer to a person committing suicide, but rather to a person who kills his soul by remaining in ignorance of the true Self. But even learned writers and poets took it to refer to suicide (vide Uttara-rāmacarita, Act IV after verse 3). Another passage of the Veda on which reliance may be placed is the one in the Śatapatha Brāhmana X. 2. 6. 7 'one ought not to yield to his own desire and pass away before the full extent of life, for it (such shortening of full life) does not make for the (heavenly) world' By 'the words of the people' are meant smrti passages condemning suicide such as Gaut. 14. 12, Vas[1375a] 23. 14-15, Manu V. 88 (which says that no water is to be offered to those who kill themselves), Visnu Dh S 22. 56 (ātmatyāginah patitāś-ca naśaucodakabhājah)

This entirely changes the meaning and avers that if one has a desire to go to Kāśi, one should not heed the words of one's parents or elders or of the people (dissuading him from going).

There is no doubt that some of the smrtis, the Mahābhārata[1376] itself and some purānas do recommend (or at least do not condemn) suicide in certain circumstances. A few purāna passages may be quoted here. Two verses of the Kūrma state 'That goal (or state), which a wise man that is devoted to Yoga and that has become an ascetic (or has forsaken all actions) reaches, is secured by him who gives up life at the confluence of the Gangā and Yamunā. Whoever dies in the Gangā whether wilfully or unintentionally is born after death in heaven and does not see hell'.[1377] The Kūrma is quite clear 'Moksa may be secured or not after a thousand births elsewhere but in Benares moksa can be secured in a single birth' (I. 32. 22) The Padma[1378] is quite emphatic 'a man who, knowingly or unknowingly, wilfully or unintentionally, dies in the Ganges secures on death heaven and 'moksa'. A verse of the Skanda asserts 'He who abandons his life in this sacred place in some way or other does not incur the sin of suicide but secures his desired objects.' The Kūrma (I. 38 3–12) refers to four modes of suicide and promises residence in heaven and various other rewards for thousands of years, viz. by (1) burning oneself in the slow fire of dry cowdung cakes, (2) by entering the water at the confluence of Gaṅgā and Yamunā, (3) by hanging with head down in the stream and feet up and drinking 1376. Vide the references given under No. 2 and 3 of the five classes of excusable or permitted suicides on p. 604 above. The Mahābhārata has a parva called Mahāprāsthānika in which it is narrated (chap 1. 24) that Yudhisthira with his four brothers, queen Draupadī and a faithful dog started on the Great Journey towards the Himālaya and that they fell down dead one after another, Draupadī being the first and Bhīma the last.

The first verse is read in पद्म, सृष्टिखण्ड 60,56 as या गति.. सत्त्वस्थस्य मनीषिण । सा गङ्गायां तु शरीरिण ॥' नारद (उत्तर) 43 97 is the same as पद्म.

the waters of the Ganges, (4) by cutting off his own flesh and giving it as food to birds. The famous Chinese traveller Hiouen Thsang (about 629-645 A. D.) clearly refers to this practice of religious suicide (vide Beal's 'Buddhist Records of the Western world,' vol. I. pp. 232-234). The Kalpataru on Tīrtha (composed about 1110-1120 A. D.) devotes a special section to Mahāpathayātrā (pp. 258-265). Gradually, the idea of securing heaven and mokṣa by committing suicide at Prayāga or Benares appears to have spread to other tīrthas. Vanaparva[1379] speaks of suicide at Pṛthūdaka (Pehova in the Karnal district of Punjab, 14 miles from Thanesar) The Brahmapurāṇa[1380] calls upon dvijas who are intent on securing mokṣa to commit suicide at Puruṣottama-kṣetra. The Liṅgapurāṇa[1381] says 'if a brāhmaṇa kills himself on Śrīśaila he destroys his sins and attains mokṣa as at Avimukta (Benares); there is no doubt about this'. The Padma promises[1382] a similar reward for suicide by fire or by fast at the confluence of Narmadā and Kāverī (a small river, not the great South Indian river).

Gradually there was a revulsion of feeling against suicide at Prayāga or Kāśī or starting on the Great Journey. Among the actions forbidden in the Kali age are included 'starting on the Great Journey' and 'suicide of old people jumping from a precipice or by fire' (vide H. of Dh. vol. III. pp. 939, 958-59). Some of the later medieval writers try very hard to combat the view that religious suicide is permitted[1383]. Nīlakaṇṭha, the commentator of the Mahābhārata, holds that Vanaparva 85. 83 (na vedavacanāt &c) refers to natural death at Prayāga and not to wilful death and that the Khila verse ('Sitāsite' quoted above on p. 596) has the same meaning. Then he propounds two alternative interpretations of Vanaparva 85.

83, viz. that this passage allows those who are suffering from an incurable disease to commit suicide at Prayāga instead of dying by falling from a precipice and the like or that this verse does not apply to brāhmanas but only to the other three varnas.[1384]

Both the Gangāvākyāvalī (pp. 304–310) and the Tīr. C (pp. 47–52) hold that all varnas have the authority to resort to suicide at Prayāga. The Tīr. Pr holds a long, learned and highly polemic discussion on the subject of religious suicide at Prayāga (pp. 346–355). Its own view appears to be that a brāhmana should not commit this suicide at Prayāga on account of the prohibition contained in Kalivarjya verses and that members of the other varnas may do so. The Tristhalīsetu also enters upon a long discussion (pp. 47–55) and its conclusions are that in suicide at Prayāga for the attainment of moksa or other rewards (such as heaven) there is no sin, that this suicide at Prayāga is not forbidden[1384a] to brāhmanas as some think (since Agni 111 8 reads 'na vedavacanād vipra'), that persons whether seriously ill or in good health[1385] may resort to suicide at Prayāga, that no one has authority to commit suicide at Prayāga after abandoning to their fate one's old parents, young wife and children that require support, nor should a woman who is pregnant or who has young children or who has no permission from her husband, commit suicide at Prayāga.[1386] It is refreshing to find Nārāyanabhatta, perhaps the most learned and renowned Pandit of his age steeped in all the lore of ancient India, make, in spite of the overwhelming weight of śāstric authority in favour of suicide at Prayāga, exceptions that surely appeal to reason, sentiment and common sense.[1387] Nārāyanabhatta probably followed traditions several hundred years older than his times. Alberuni in his work on India composed about 1030 A. D. says about religious suicide that 'it was resorted to by those who are tired of life, who are distressed over some incurable disease, some irremovable bodily defect or old age or infirmity. This however no man of distinction does, but only vaiśyas and śūdras. Burning oneself is forbidden to brāhmaṇas and kṣatriyas by a special law. Therefore these if they want to kill themselves do so at the time of an eclipse in some other manner or they hire somebody to drown them in the Ganges.' (tr. by Sachau, vol. II. p 170). The Tri. S. S. provides that a man desirous of committing religious suicide at Prayāga should first perform a prāyaścitta, 1387. काम्यमप्यत्र मरणम्। अत्र तु सर्ववर्णानामधिकारः। गङ्गावा. p 305 and तीर्थचि. p. 47. It is a most remarkable thing that the treatment of प्रयागमरण in both these works is word for word the same, except that the तीर्थचि. quotes the verses न वेदवचना० from the पद्मपुराण while the गङ्गावा quotes them from the मत्स्य. It appears probable that the तीर्थचि० borrows from the गङ्गावा. since वाचस्पति appears to have been a younger contemporary of Vidyāpati who helped विश्वासदेवी in composing गङ्गावा. Both were closely connected with the several kings and queens of the कामेश्वर dynasty of Mithilā and it is difficult to assert with confidence who borrows from whom. In New I A. vol VII. at p. 53 Prof. G. C Basu while describing a newly found ms of a work called व्याडिभक्तितरङ्गिणी ascribed in the colophon to विद्यापति states that that work mentions the द्वैतनिर्णय of वाचस्पति. So it is not unlikely that विद्यापति helped विश्वासदेवी by taking a part from the तीर्थचिन्तामणि of वाचस्पति Vide H. of Dh. vol. I pp. 739-740, Journal of Dept. of Letters, Calcutta University, vol. XVI, New I. A. vol. VII pp. 49 ff, I. H. Q vol. XX (1944) pp. 211 ff for the date and works of विद्यापति and H. of Dh vol. I. pp. 404-405 for the date of वाचस्पति should perform his own śrāddha upto the offering of piṇḍa if he has no relative entitled to perform it, should fast that day, should make a saṅkalpa next day preceded by a writing (to inform people of his desire to die in that way) and enter the holy waters contemplating on Viṣṇu. On his death, his relatives have to observe āśauca only for three days (and not for ten) and on the 4th day the śrāddhas of the 11th day are to be performed for him.[1388]

The psychological background behind the religious suicide at Prayāga and other places is not difficult to realise. Centuries of philosophical thought had made a very deep impression on the minds of all people that the soul has to submit to a never-ending cycle of births and deaths. Ancient scriptures had offered a release in two ways viz. by tattvajñāna and by suicide at a tīrtha. Death had no great terror for the pilgrim who submitted to various inconveniences and privations ungrudgingly. If one is determined to put an end to saṁsāra by taking one's life, what nobler environment could have been imagined or indicated than at Prayāga, where two mighty rivers flowing from the sacred Himālaya unite and carry on unceasingly their work of fertilizing the land and bringing prosperity and solace to millions of needy and anxious people?

While on this topic of religious suicide, it would not be out of place to briefly refer to the discussion in the digests about the meaning of the statement in the purāṇas that those who die at Prayāga are not born again (e. g. Matsya 180. 71 and 74). The answer is foreshadowed in the Matsyapurāṇa itself (182. 22–25) which[1389] says: At the time of death, when the vital 1389 The स्कन्दपुराण, काशी° has the following verses which repeat what the Matsya (182 22–25) says viz Śiva whispers into the right ear of a man dying at Kāśī the knowledge of brahma that will save his soul ब्रह्मज्ञानेन मुच्यन्ते नान्यथा जन्तवः क्वचित्। ब्रह्मज्ञानमये क्षेत्रे प्रयागे वा तनुत्यजः॥ ब्रह्मज्ञानं तदेवाहं काशीसंस्थितिभागिनाम्। दिशामि तारकं प्रान्ते मुच्यन्ते ते तु तत्क्षणात्॥ chap. 32, verses 115–116. साक्षान्मोक्षो न चतासु पुरीषु म्रियमाणिनि। स्कन्द, काशी° 8 3 (अगस्त्य tells लोपामुद्रा). parts of the human body are being shattered, memory must fail a human being that is about to be pushed on (to another body) by the vital breath (when it leaves the mortal coil). But at the time of death in Avimukta (Vārānasī) Lord (Śiva) himself whispers (higher knowledge) in the ears of his devotees that are about to be pushed (into new bodies) by (accumulations of their actions). A man dying near Manikarnikā pool reaches the desired goal; he being guided by the Lord reaches the goal which is difficult of attainment by those whose minds are not pure.' In the Kāśīkhanda it is expressly stated that moksa does not directly result in these cities (viz. Kāśī &c). But in spite of these warnings the popular belief fostered by the literal meaning of hundreds of Purāna passages is that moksa results from dying at Prayāga or in Kāśīksetra.

The practice of religious suicide has a very respectable antiquity. In the 4th century B. C. Kalanos, the Indian Gymnosophist from Taxila who had accompanied Alexander from India, burnt himself alive on a funeral pyre at Sousa, when being over 70 years old, he was afflicted with a malady that made life more and more burdensome. Vide J W McCrindle's 'Invasion of India by Alexander the Great' (New Edition 1896) pp. 46, 301, 386-392. Strabo informs us of a gymnosophist from India named Zarmanochegas of Broach who accompanied an embassy to Augustus Caesar at Athens and consigned himself to flames (vide 'Invasion of India by Alexander' p. 389). Hiouen Thsang (Beal's 'Buddhist Records of the Western World' vol. I. pp. 232-234) refers to suicide at Prayāga. The Jains, while on the one hand they laid the greatest emphasis on 'ahiṁsā' (non-injury), encouraged religious suicide (called 'Sallekhanā') in certain cases[1390].

Some of the works, viz. the Kāśīmrti-moksa-vicāra of Sureśvara (pp. 2-9), the Tristhalīsetu (pp. 50-55) and the Tīrthaprakāsa (pp. 313-318) discuss at some length how mere death (either involuntary or voluntary) in Vārānasī or Prayāga would lead to mokṣa. Considerations of space prevent a complete statement of their views. Their arguments are briefly as follows:—Karma is of three kinds, viz. sañcita (collected in former births), prārabdha (that has begun to operate by giving the soul the present body) and kriyamāna (to be done in this body and in future). The Upaniṣads and the Gītā[1391] declare that, just as waters do not stick to a lotus leaf, so evil deeds do not cling to a man who knows this (knowledge of brahma), that the fire of knowledge reduces to ashes all karma and that moksa results from the realization of the Supreme Spirit (Vedānta-sūtra IV. 1. 13). From this it follows that a man who has realized the Highest Reality will not be affected by the acts done by him after realization and his accumulated actions (sañcita) will be destroyed by that realization. The present body in which the soul realizes brahma was due to that part of his karma which had begun to operate. When the present body perishes in the case of a man who has realized brahma he attains final release, since no actions remain for producing effects. To the man who dies a natural death in Benares is given at the time of death the Tāraka (saving) mantra The Matsyapurāna says:[1392] those who enter fire according to the rules in Avimukta (i. e. Benares) enter the mouth of Śiva and so also those determined devotees of Śiva who die by fast in Benares do not return (to this world) even after millions of kalpas. Therefore all those who die in any way at[1393] Benares receive Grace from Śiva after their death That leads to tattvajñāna (correct spiritual knowledge) which leads to moksa In rare passages it is expressly stated that mokṣa cannot[1394] be immediately secured

(by dying) in these cities. The Tāraka-mantra is variously explained. According to Sureśvara, Tāraka-mantra is the mystic syllable om which is a symbol of brahma as stated in the Tai. Up. (I. 1.8 Om-iti brahma) and the Gītā (8. 13 Om-ityekākṣaram brahma). The Tri. S. gives another explanation besides this. According to Rāmatāpanīya Upaniṣad and[1395] the Padmapurāṇa the mantra is 'śrī–Rāma–Rāma–Rāmeti.'

There are several sub-tīrthas that fall under Prayāga The most important of them is the famous Vata (banyan tree) called Akṣaya-Vata (the imperishable Vata). The Agni (111. 13) states 'if a man dies at the foot of the Vata and in the Sangama he goes to the city of Viṣṇu'. Special reference is made to abandoning one's life at the foot of the Vata. The Kūrma[1396] says 'He, who abandons life at the foot of the Vata, passes beyond heavenly worlds and goes to the world of Rudra'. The following are the sub-tīrthas of Prayāga and only references are given to the works in which they are described: (1) the two Nāgas called Kambala and Aśvatara which according to some are on the spacious (vipula) bank of the Jumnā and according to others on the southern bank of the Jumnā (Vanaparva 85 77, Matsya 106. 27, Padma, Ādi 39 69, Agni 111. 5, Kūrma I. 37. 19), (2) Pratiṣṭhāna on the eastern side of the Ganges, being the same as the Sāmudra-kūpa (Vanaparva 85. 77, Matsya 106. 30, Kūrma I. 37. 22, Padma, Ādi. 43, 30; Vanaparva 85. 114 appears to suggest that Pratiṣṭhāna is another name of Prayāga; (3) Sandhyāvata (Matsya 106. 43, Kūrma I. 37. 28, Agni 111. 13); (4) Hamsaprapatana to the north of Pratiṣṭhāna and to the east of the Ganges (Matsya 106. 32, Kūrma I. 37, 24, Agni 111. 10, Padma, Ādi 39. 80 and 43. 32, (5) Koṭitīrtha (Matsya 106. 44, Kūrma I. 37. 29, Agni 111. 14, Padma, Ādi 43. 44; (6) Bhogavatī, the Vedī of Prajāpati to the north of Vāsuki (Vanaparva 85. 77, Matsya 106.46, Agni 111. 5, Padma, Ādi 39. 79 and 43. 46; (7) Daśāśvamedhaka (Matsya 106. 46, Padma, Ādi 39. 80); (8) Urvaśīpulina, suicide at which

The Purāṇas lay down that if a man starts on a pilgrimage, but dies on the way to Prayāga he reaps great benefits even without reaching it, provided he dies remembering Prayāga. The Matsyapurāṇa (105. 8-12) asserts:-[1400] A man whether in his own country or house or after leaving his country dies in a forest, while remembering Prayāga, he still secures the world of Brahma; he reaches a world where the

At most famous tīrthas the pilgrim has to perform śrāddha. The Visnu Dh. S. (chap 85) mentions about fifty-five sacred places which are fittest for śrāddha The Kalpataru (on tīrtha), the Gangāvākyāvalī, Tīr. C. and other digests quote several verses from the Devīpurāna, the gist of which is as follows Śrāddha should be performed at tīrthas, but there is no offering of arghya and no āvāhana (since pitrs are deemed to be always present at tīrthas, as the Kāśīkhanda says) nor is the entering of the thumb of the invited brāhmana into the food served done, nor is there the question about the brāhmanas being satiated, nor vikira[1401] If one is unable to follow the complete procedure of śrāddha one should merely offer pindas made from barley meal or may offer samyāva (cake of wheat flour fried with ghee and milk), rice boiled in milk, the cake of sesame (after the oil is extracted) or jaggery[1402] It should not be allowed to be seen by dogs, crows and vultures, it may be offered at any time after the pilgrim reaches the holy place A śrāddha performed at a holy place gives great satisfaction to pitrs. Some of the works such as the Tristhalīsetusārasangraha of Bhattoji provide that after performing a pārvanaśrāddha at a tīrtha and after making offerings of pindas to one's ancestors one should offer a single pinda to one's other relatives with the following mantra 'Here I offer pinda to deceased persons of my father's family, and of my mother's family and to the deceased relatives of my guru and of my father-in-law, to those men of my family who were devoid of sons or wives and so who would lose the benefit of the pinda (to be offered by the son or wife) and in the case of whom all rites after death have ceased, those who were blind from birth or were cripples, those who were malformed or died in the womb; to all these, whether known or unknown to me, may this (pinda) reach inexhaustively'! (Vāyu 110. 51-52). After this he should offer another pinda for his servants, slaves, friends, dependents, pupils, persons who conferred obligations on him, cattle, trees and those with whom he came in contact in other lives (Vāyu 110. 54-55). If a person is ill or has not the time to go through this elaborate procedure, then he should make a sankalpa that he would perform śrāddha and should offer a single pinda with the mantra (in Vāyu 110 23-24) 'I offer this pinda to my father, grand-father, great-grand-father, to my mother, father's mother, grandfather's mother, to my maternal grandfather and to the latter's father and grandfather. May it reach them inexhaustively'!

The Anuśāsana-parva, the Kūrmapurāna, Nāradīya (uttara) 63. 19-20 and 36-38 and others highly praise bathing at the sangama in the month of Māgha[1403]. Men of all castes, women and those born of mixed unions can take this bath; śūdras, women and men of mixed castes should not repeat any mantra but should bathe silently or with the word 'namah' (Tri. S. p 39). Similarly, the Padma, Kūrma, Agni and other Purānas wax eloquent over a bath for three days in Māgha saying that it is equal to the gift of three crores of cows.[1404] There is great divergence as to exactly what three days are meant, as pointed out by the Tri. S. p 33. The various views are the three days are the passage of the sun into Capricornus, Rathasaptamī and the full moon day of Māgha; the three consecutive days including the 10th of the bright half of Māgha, the first three days of Māgha, the three consecutive days from the 13th day of the bright half of Māgha; any three days in Māgha.

There is hardly any city in the world that can claim greater antiquity, greater continuity and greater popular veneration than Banaras. Banaras has been a holy city for at least thirty centuries. No city in India arouses the religious emotions of Hindus as much as Kāśī does. To the Hindu mind it represents great and unbroken traditions of religious sanctity and learning. It is a miniature of Hindu life through the ages in all its great complexities and contradictions. Not only Hinduism with its numerous sects has flourished here for numberless centuries, but the principles of Buddhism, one of the great religions of the world, were first proclaimed here by Śākyamuni after he received Enlightenment at Bodh-Gayā under the Bodhi tree. Thousands of verses are found in the epics and purāṇas about Banaras. Several volumes have been written about Banares during the last hundred years.[1405] It would be impossible to do justice here to this vast mass of literature on Banaras I shall briefly deal with the important topics relating to Banaras. In olden times the name was spelt as Benares, but recently as Banaras, which will be retained here (except in quotations).

Before proceeding further, it is necessary to dwell, however briefly, on the ancient history of Banaras The Śatapatha Br. quotes [1406] a Gāthā which states that Satānika, son of Satrājit, carried away the sacred sacrificial horse of the Kāśis, as Bharata did in the case of the Satvats. In Śat. Br. XIV. 3. 1. 22 king Dhṛtarāṣṭra Vicitravīrya is called Kāśya. In the Gopatha Br. we have [1407] the combination Kāśī-Kośalāḥ. The

Cambridge History of India (vol. I. p. 117) remarks that in the Brāhmana period Kāśī, the capital of the Kāśis, was situated on the Varanāvatī. In the Br. Up. (II. 1. 1) and the Kausītaki[1408] Up. (IV. 1) there is the story of the proud Bālāki Gārgya going to Ajātaśatru, king of Kāśī, with the assurance that the former would expound brahma to the latter. In Pānini IV. 2. 116 Kāśī heads a gana (Kāśyādibhyas-than-ithau'). Under Pānini IV. 2. 113 we get the form 'Kāśīyah.' It is remarkable that in the Sarvānukrama the rsi of Rg. X. 179. 2 is stated to be Pratardana Kāśirāja. In tarpana, the Hir. Gr. (II. 8. 19. 6) mentions Kāśīśvara along with Visnu and Rudraskanda (S. B. E. vol 30 p. 244). Divodāsa figures frequently in the Rgveda. In Rg I. 130 7 Indra is said to have conquered ninety cities for Divodāsa, while in Rg. IV. 30. 20 it is stated that Indra gave 100 cities of stone to Divodāsa. From these Vedic references it may be surmised that in later works like the Epics and the Purānas Divodāsa was naturally credited with the founding of the most sacred city in India. In the Mahābhāsya on Vārtika 4 on Pān. IV. 1. 54 (vol II. p 223) we find the illustration 'Kāśi-Kosalīyāh.' The Mahābhāsya (vol. II. p 413) furnishes the interesting information that there is a difference in the price of cloth manufactured at Kāśī and that manufactured at Mathurā, though the length and breadth of the piece of cloth be the same. This shows that even so early as the 2nd century B. C. Kāśī was famous for the fine qualities of its cloth, as now.[1409] From the above passages it is clear that Kāśī was the name of a country long before the Śatapatha Br. was composed and it remained so till the 2nd century B. C. (the date of Patañjali). We have a parallel example. Avanti is the name of a country as shown by Pān IV. 1. 176 (striyām-avanti-kunti-kurubhyaś-ca) and by the Meghadūta (Prāpyāvantīn-udayana—), but Avantī or Avantikā is also the name of Ujjayinī (as in the well-known verse 'Ayodhyā...Avantikā'). Fa Hien (399 to 413 A. D.) is said to have arrived at the city of Vārānasī in the kingdom of Kāśi (Legge's tr. p 94). This shows that about 400 A. D. Kāśī was still the name of the district and Vārānasī was its capital. But from the reference in the Mahābhāsya it appears that Kāśī had then become the name of the city (and was also the name of the country) In the Anusāśana-parva (chap 30) it is said that Haryaśva, the grand-father of Divodāsa, was king of the Kāśis [1409a] and was harassed and killed by the Vītahavyas in the Doab between the Ganges and Jumna. Haryaśva's son was Sudeva who was crowned king of Kāśi (verse 13, Kāśirājos bhyasicyata) and he also met the same fate as his father did. Then Divodāsa, son of Sudeva, became king of the Kāśis and founded Vārānasī thickly populated with men of all varnas on the northern bank of the Gomatī. This legend shows that Kāśī was the ancient name of a kingdom and the ancient belief was that Vārānasī was founded as the capital of the Kāśis by Divodāsa. In the Udyogaparva also Divodāsa is said to be the ruler of Kāsis.[1410]

The Harivamśa (I. chap. 29) has a long but rather confused story about Divodāsa and Vārānasī[1411] It deals with the dynasty of Āyus, one of the sons of Aila. One of the descendants of Āyus was Śunahotra who had three sons, Kāśa, Śala and Grtsamada From Kāśa arose a branch called Kāsayah. Dhanvantari, a descendant of Kāsa, was king of the Kāśis (verse 22). Divodāsa was great-grandson of Dhanvantari. He killed 100 sons of Bhadraśrenya, who first was Lord of Vārānasī. Then Śiva sent his gana Nikumbha to destroy Vārānasī which had been occupied by Divodāsa. Nikumbha cursed it to be devastated for a thousand years When it became devastated it came to be called Avimukta and Siva resided there It was again re-established (verse 68) by Durdama, a son of Bhadrasrenya, whom, because he was a child, Divodāsa had not killed Then Pratardana, son of Divodāsa, took it from Durdama Alarka, grandson of Divodāsa and king of Kāśis, again established Vārānasī This legend may contain some germs of truth, viz. that Vārānasī had become devastated several times and had often changed hands. The Vāyupurāna (chap. 92) and the Brahmapurāna (chap. 11) also contain the same legends of Dhanvantari, Divodāsa, and Alarka and the vicissitudes of Vārānasī

In the Mahābhāsya Patañjali states (vol. I. p. 380,) that Vārānasī is alongside of Gangā and on Pān. IV. 3. 84 (vol. II. p. 313) he informs us that traders call Vārānasī Jitvarī.

Ancient Buddhist works show that Banaras was, in the times of Buddha (5th Century B C. at the latest), a great and famous city like Campā, Rājagrha, Śrāvastī, Sāketa and Kauśāmbī (vide Mahāparinibbānasutta, S. B. E. vol. XI p 99 and Mahāsudassanasutta, ibid. p. 247). The very fact that Buddha attained Enlightenment at Gayā (which was an out of the way place and on the borders, if at all, of Āryāvarta), thought it necessary to travel hundreds of miles from Gayā and preach his doctrines at Banaras in the Deer-park and set rolling the wheel of the kingdom of Dharma at that place, clearly indicates that Banaras had then become a very holy place and was in the centre of all Aryan activities and culture (vide S. B. E. vol. XI. p. 153 and vol. XIII p 90, Mahāvagga, S. B. E. vol. 17 p. 21). King Brahmadatta of Banaras figures in many jātaka stories. Hardly any part of the jātaka tales can be placed earlier than the 3rd century B. C. But it may be admitted that Banaras was well-known as the capital of Brahmadatta kings several centuries before Christ. The Matsyapurāna 273, while enumerating hundreds of kings bearing the same surnames, states that there were 100 Brahmadattas and 100 Kāśis and Kuśas[1412] But the very fact that Brahmadattas are separately mentioned from the Kāśis largely reduces the value of this piece of information. The ancient Jain works also speak of Banaras and Kāśī. In the Kalpasūtra it is said that Arhat Pārśva was born in Banaras in the month of Caitra on the 4th day of the dark fortnight (S B. E. vol. XXII p. 271) and that when Mahāvīra died the 18 confederate kings of Kāśi and Kosala along with other kings of the Licchavis and Mallakis instituted an illumination on the day of the New Moon (ibid, p. 266). Aśvaghosa appears to identify Vārānasī with Kāśī when he says in his Buddhacarita 'Having entered Vārāṇasī, the Jina (Buddha) illumining the city with his light filled the minds of all the inhabitants of Kāśī with excessive interest.'[1413] The Buddhacarita further speaks of Buddha as having gone under the shadow of a tree near Vanārā (S. B. E. vol. 49 part 1 p.

169), which is probably the Varanā. It is thus clear that Vārānasī and Kāśī had become synonyms at least sometime about the first century A. D. In the Vāyupurāna 45. 110 Kāśi-kośalāh figure among the countries of Madhyadeśa.

In the Visnupurāna we have the story of Paundraka Vāsudeva who challenged Krsna and asked the latter to surrender his Cakra and other symbols He was helped by the king of Kāśī. The combined armies of Paundraka and Kāśīrāja attacked Krsna who killed Paundraka and cut off Kāśīrāja's head (with his discus) which fell in the city of Kāśī. His son performed austerities, propitiated Śankara and secured from him a Krtyā (ogress) which entered Vārānasī. Krsna's discus in pursuit of her burnt the whole of Vārānasī together with its king, his servants and citizens In this account from the Visnupurāna (V 34) the names Kāśī, Vārānasī and Avimukta are employed as synonyms (verses 14, 21, 25, 30, 39). The same legend occurs in the same words in Brahmapurāna, chap 207 and is briefly referred to in Sabhāparva, chap. 14 18-20 and chap. 34. 11.

From the above-mentioned accounts in the Epic and Purānas about Kāśī and Mahādeva, various conclusions[1414] have been drawn by writers, viz. that Mahādeva was a god of the non-Aryans, that Banaras was a centre of non-Aryan worship for a long time after the advent of the Aryans and that the people of Banaras, though they ultimately turned to the Aryan religion, were more interested in the philosophic speculations of the Upanisadic age. I dissent from most of these conclusions. We are on most unsafe ground as regards these conclusions. None of the extant Purānas can claim to be older than the 3rd or 4th century A. D Most people in India lived and even now live a humdrum, placid and unattractive life in which there is nothing to satisfy the ordinary man's appetite for the mysterious, the unusual and the horrible. The purānas contain stories that may be divided into several classes and that satisfied the above-mentioned cravings of the common man. Many of the 1414. Vide, for example, Prof. A S Altekar's 'History of Benares,' pp 2-7. The Nāradīya (uttara, chap. 29) states that Banaras was at first the city of Mādhava, but later on became a Saiva-ksetra, is there any real historical basis here? If any historical conclusion is to be drawn from this statement of the Nāradīyapurāna it would be exactly the opposite of what Prof. Altekar has drawn, viz, that the non-Aryans scored a cultural victory over the Aryans at Banaras.

legends contained in the purāṇas were meant for the entertainment of common people, just as even in these days millions in Western countries read with relish detective stories and crime club fiction. Some paurāṇic legends had a serious purpose in view viz emphasizing religious or philosophical dogma or moral values and standards and were clothed in a supernatural garb to make them striking and effective. Only a few legends have some historical basis, but the latter is evidently smothered in a mass of exaggerations and prejudices for or against a hero, or a caste, class, tribe or family. It is hardly fair to draw far-reaching historical conclusions from heterogeneous materials in the purāṇas about the conditions of things that prevailed several hundreds or thousands of years before they were compiled. The purāṇas often speak of the quarrels and bickerings among high gods and sages For example, the Viṣṇupurāṇa V. 30. 65 speaks of a fight between Indra and Kṛṣṇa. Was Kṛṣṇa a non-Aryan god originally? Gaṇeśa's left tooth was shattered by the missile of Paraśurāma who comes to fight with Rāma, both being supposed to be avatāras of Viṣṇu. The sage Bhṛgu curses Viṣṇu, Gautama curses Indra, Māṇḍavya curses Dharma (vide for all these, Brahmāṇḍa II. 27. 21-25).

In several purāṇas Kāśī or Vārāṇasī has been lauded and described at great length. Vide Matsya 180-185 (411 verses), Kūrma I.31-35 (verses 226), Lingapurāṇa (pūrvabhāga, chap. 92, verses 190), Padma (Ādikhaṇḍa 33-37, verses 170), Agni 112, Skanda, Kāśīkhaṇḍa, chap 6 ff, Nāradīya (uttara, chap. 48-51). The Kāśīkhaṇḍa alone has about 15000 verses[1415] on Banaras and its sub-tīrthas. In the Padmapurāṇa the sages are said to have asked Bhṛgu five questions, viz what is the greatness of Kāśī, how it is to be understood, who should resort to it, what is its extent (or boundaries) and by what means it (Kāśī) can be secured. In the Skandapurāṇa, XXXII n. 3) criticizes Dr Wilson for holding that the greater part of the Kāśīkhaṇḍa is anterior to the first attack on Banaras by Mahmud of Gazni and holds that it is later than the Gaznivide invader Dr. Hall advances hardly any convincing reasons The work of Alberuni is definite that Sultan Mahmud of Gazni had not spread his depredations as far as Banaras (vide Sachau, vol. 1 p. 22) 'This is the reason why Hindu Sciences ..have fled to places which our hand cannot yet reach, to Kashmir, Benares and other places ' The Kalpataru on Tīrtha quotes about one hundred verses on Vārāṇasī

Kāśīkhanda[1416] (chap. 26.2-5) the following questions are asked, viz. from what time this holy place Avimukta became highly famous, how it received the name Avimukta, how it became the way to mokṣa, how the pool of Maṇikarṇikā became an object of worship to the three worlds, what was there formerly (when) the Ganges was not there, how it came to be called Vārāṇasī, Kāśī, Rudrāvāsa, how it came to be Ānandakānana (the forest of bliss) and then Avimukta and Mahāśmaśāna (the great cemetery).

Banaras has been known for centuries under five different names viz. Vārāṇasī, Kāśī, Avimukta, Ānandakānana and Śmaśāna or Mahāśmaśāna. The Kāśīkhanda states that Śankara first called it Ānandakānana and then Avimukta.[1417] from the Skandapurāṇa and holds the latter work to be as authoritative as the Matsyapurāṇa, Lingapurāṇa and other Purāṇas The Kalpataru of Lakshmīdhara was composed about 1110 A D. (vide Prof Aiyangar's Introduction to Tīrthakāṇda pp XVIII-XIX). Therefore a century or two at least before 1100 A D. there existed a Skandapurāṇa, part of which contained a eulogium of Banaras. Unfortunately the present printed Kāśīkhanda of the Skanda does not agree with the quotations from the Skanda given by the Kalpataru. A curious state of things is divulged as regards the quotations from Skanda in the Kalpataru. For example, on pp 36-37 of the Kalpataru on Tīrtha, about 19 verses are quoted from Skanda which occur verbatim in the Lingapurāṇa, chap. 92. 120-142 (with the addition of some half verses) Similarly, on p 44 of the Kalpataru three verses are quoted from Skanda, which are the same as Linga. 92 87-89 On p 42 Kalpataru quotes one verse about Goprekseśvara from Skanda which is quoted from the Lingapurāṇa by Tri S. Some of the Purāṇas say that the Skanda has 81101 verses (Matsya p 171. 53. 42-43) But the Skanda printed at the Venkateśvara press contains several thousand verses more It appears that there were different recensions of the Skanda. The Tri S. quotes verses from specific chapters of the Kāśīkhanda which are generally found in the printed work. Vide p 193 (for chap. 30), 190 (for chap. 32), p. 144 (for chap. 34), p 160 for chap 45, p. 154 for chap. 49, pp 157 and 200 for chap 61 etc

A few words must be said about the derivation and significance of these words as gathered from the Purānas and other works. And first comes Kāśī. It is derived from the root kāś 'to shine.' The Skandapurāna [1418] says that the city of Kāśī became famous by that name because it sheds light on (the way to) nirvāna (final release) or because that indescribable refulgence, viz. God Śiva shines forth there. The name Vārānasī is derived in several Purānas from the names of two streams Varanā [1419] (modern Bārnā) and Asi, which are respectively the northern and southern boundaries of the modern city. From the passages quoted below from the Skandapurāna (Kāśī-khanda) it appears that Asi is the correct form of the name of the river. The names most frequently used in the Purānas are Vārānasī and Avimukta. In the Jābālopanisad [1420] the words Avimukta, Varanā and Nāsī are brought together in an esoteric sense. "Atri asked Yājñavalkya: how is one to know the unmanifested Self? Yājñavalkya explained that he was to be worshipped in Avimukta, since the self is centered in Avimukta. Then a question was asked: in what is Avimukta centered or established? The reply is that Avimukta is established in the midst of Varanā and Nāsī. Varanā is so called because it wards off all faults due to the senses and Nāsī destroys all sins due to the senses. Then a question is asked. what is its location (sthāna)? The reply is that it is the conjunction of the eyebrows and the nose i. e. the upāsanā (contemplation) of Avimukta is to be made as located in the span between the eyebrows and the root of the nose." Here it will be seen that Varaṇā and Nāsī are the names (and not Varaṇā and Asi). The Vāmanapurāṇa employs the form Asī (15.50-53). The same is the case with the Padma.

The name Avimukta has generally been explained as derived from the negative particle 'na' (for which 'a' is substituted) and vimukta (forsaken). Many Purāṇas say that the holy place is so called because it was never forsaken by Śiva (sometimes both Śiva and his consort)[1421] In the Liṅgapurāṇa another derivation is suggested[1422] "avi means 'sin'; that holy place is devoid of sin". The Kāśīkhaṇḍa (39.74) states that originally the kṣetra was called Anandakānana and then Avimukta because though Śiva went to stay on Mandara mountain he did not leave it entirely but left his liṅga there Vārāṇasī is very dear to Śiva, it gives him joy and therefore it is called Ānandavana or Ānandakānana.[1423] It is also styled Śmaśāna or Mahāśmaśāna for various reasons As a belief was entertained by all people that death in Banaras freed a man from saṃsāra, and as the thoughts and aspirations of pious Hindus ran in the direction of dying on the sacred soil of Banaras, the old and decrepit crowded therein and persons seriously ill got themselves removed or were removed to the banks of the Ganges when about to die and were cremated there Cremation of corpses is always seen on the Maṇikarṇikā ghāt near the Ganges. A śmaśāna (cemetery) is considered impure but Banaras with the sacred Ganges was purest in spite of being always the cremation ground for thousands in a year.

The Skanda says.[1424] 'śma' means a corpse and 'śāna' means 'lying down'; when the end of the world comes, the great elements lie here as corpses and therefore this place is called Mahāśmaśāna." The Padmapurāṇa[1425] makes Śiva say: 'Avimukta is a famous cemetery becoming the Destroyer (or the Time Spirit) I being here destroy the world'. Matsya very frequently speaks of Vārāṇasī as Śmaśāna. The Kāśīkhaṇḍa states: if a man after reaching the great cemetery dies there by fate he has never again to lie in the cemetery (i. e. he is not born again).

Although generally Kāśī, Vārāṇasī and Avimukta are used as synonyms in the Purāṇas, in some passages a distinction is made between these as to extent. The passages quoted above (in note 1419) show that Vārāṇasī is bounded by the Varaṇā and Asi on the north and south,[1426] the Ganges on the east and the shrine of Vināyaka in the west. Ain. A. (vol II p. 158) remarks that Benares is a large city situated between the rivers Barnā and Asi and that it is built in the form of a bow of which the Ganges forms the string. The Matsyapurāṇa[1427] states: 'that kṣetra is two yojanas and a half east and west and half a yojana broad north and south; out of this Vārāṇasī extends up to the dry river (viz. Asi)'. The first part appears to deal with the entire Kāśīkṣetra which according to the Padmapurāṇa[1428] comprised the tract covered by a circle the radius of which was the line joining Madhyameśvara-liṅga with the shrine of Dehali-Ganeśa. The Matsyapurāna (in chap. 183.61–62) makes it two yojanas in extent Agni 112 6 also does the same But that is only approximate The actual distance covered by a yojana varied Vide H. of Dh vol III pp. 145–146 n. 185 Rhys Davids in 'Numismata Orientalia' (London, 1877) after examining 30 passages from Pāli texts comes to the conclusion that a yojana was equal to about 7 or 8 miles Avimukta is said to be that part of the holy place which is represented by a radius of 200 dhanus (i e. 800 hastas or about 1200 feet) in all four directions from the shrine of Visveśvara.[1429] There was no unanimity on the extent of Avimukta. In Kāśikhanda Avimukta[1429a] is said to be five krośas in extent But there Avimukta appears to stand for Kāśī. The innermost[1430] circle in the holy Kāśīksetra is defined as that between Gokarnesvara to the west, the mid stream of the Ganges to the east, Bhārabhūta to the north and Brahmeśvara to the south. A few more passages on the extent of the sacred place of Banaras may be cited here in one place. The Lingapurāna[1431] says 'this ksetra is declared to be four krośas (in extent) in the four directions and also one yojana'. The Nāradīyapurāna[1432] puts the extent thus '(The ksetra) extends over two yojanas and a half from east to west and is half a yojana wide from north to south, god Sambhu declared the extent of the ksetra between the rivers Varunā and Asi (which latter is) a dried-up stream' In the Padmapurāna[1433]

Brahmā is supposed to have said to Rudra 'I have given you a ksetra of the extent of five krośas; when the best of rivers, Gangā, will flow through this ksetra, the city will be great and holy, the Ganges, as it flows northwards (in Banaras) for two yojanas, will be holy'. If in any texts there be any differences between the extents of Avimukta, it must be supposed that there is an option,[1434] (or, as the Tīr. C. suggests, the differences refer to different kalpas i. e. ages). It is clear that Vārānasī was that strip of land, the four boundaries of which were the Ganges to the east, Asi to the south, the shrine of Dehali-Vināyaka to the west and the river Varanā to the north. In the 7th century Hiouen Thsang, the Chinese pilgrim, notes that Banaras was 18 lis (about 3⅓ miles) in length and about 5 or 6 lis (a little more than a mile) in breadth. This makes it clear that the city was then bounded as now by the Varanā and Asi. Vide Beal's B R. W. W (vol II p. 44).

Verses laudatory of the greatness and uniqueness of Vārānasī literally run into thousands. All that can be done here is to set out a few characteristic verses. The Vanaparva observes.[1435] a person coming to Avimukta and resorting to the sacred place becomes free from the sin of brāhmana-murder by merely seeing the (image of the) Lord of gods (i e. Viśveśvara) and if he dies there he secures moksa. The Matsyapurāna [1436] contains many striking passages about the unique greatness of Banaras "Vārānasī is always my most secret place; it is always the cause of moksa for all beings. Moksa may be effected in Prayāga or in this city because I have taken it under my protection, this place is greater than even Prayāga, the foremost among tīrthas. A person,[1438] even though his mind may be addicted to pleasures of sense and though he may have given up devotion to dharma, if he dies in this place (Banaras) he does not again enter upon the path of samsāra (the cycle of births and deaths); a man concentrating his mind for thousands of past lives may secure Yoga; but by dying (in Banaras) he secures the highest moksa in this very life. Even if a man be a sinner [1439] or a rogue or irreligious he becomes free from all sins if he goes to Avimukta Other women,[1440] that act as they like and are intently devoted to enjoyments, when they die here by lapse of time secure the highest worlds. In this world moksa [1441] cannot be secured by men without the (practice of) Yoga; but in the case of those who reside in Avimukta Yoga and moksa are both secured. For planets,[1442] lunar mansions and stars there is the danger of falling (from the sky) in course of time but there is no fall for those who die in Avimukta. Whatever [1443] evil actions may have been committed by an evil-minded man or woman, knowingly or unknowingly—all those are reduced to ashes when he enters Avimukta. Even a mleccha resident in Kāśī is better, since his future will be blissful, but not one residing elsewhere, though he may be a dīkṣita, because he will not be a recipient of mukti."

In some passages a mystic flavour is imparted to Vārānasī and the rivers. For example, the Kāśīkhanda says that Asi is the Iḍā nādī, Varaṇā is the Pingalā nādī, Avimukta is susumnā and Vārānasī is all the three.[1444] The Lingapurāna, however, puts the matter somewhat differently. It holds that Asi (the dried-up river), Varanā and Matsyodarī (i. e. Ganges) are respectively the Pingalā, Idā and Susumnā.

It is time now to turn to the individual sacred spots in Banaras. It is stated in some of the Purānas[1445] that at every step in the Kāśīksetra there is a holy place and that there is not even as much space as a sesamum seed in Kāśī which has not a liṅga (emblem of Śiva). As a matter of fact the Kāśīkhaṇḍa names 64 lingas in chap. 10 alone. But one must look to the tīrthas that are specifically named. Hiouen Thsang says that there were one hundred temples at Banaras in his day and he speaks of a temple where the copper image of Deva Maheśvara was a little less than 100 feet high (vide Beal's B R. W. W. vol. II. pp. 44–45). Unfortunately, the fanatical zeal and ruthlessness of Moslem rulers demolished almost all Hindu temples at different times from 1194 to about 1670 A. D. Mosques and mausoleums were erected on their sites, and the materials of the temples thus razed were used in constructing mosques and for serving as breakwaters &c. Kutubdin Aibak destroyed about 1000 temples in 1194 A. D (vide Elliot and Dowson's 'History of India', vol. II p. 222) Alauddin Khilzi boasted that he had destroyed one thousand temples in Banaras alone (vide Sherring p. 31, Havell p. 76). About 1585 A. D. Nārāyanabhaṭṭa re-established the temple of Viśvanātha with the help of Rājā Todarmal[1446]. Even this temple was desecrated. The following passage from the Ma-A'sir-i-A'lamgiri quoted by Elliot and Dowson ('History of India,' vol. VII, p 184) is instructive: "It reached the ears of his Majesty, the protector of the faith, that in the provinces of Thatta, Multan and Benares, but especially in the latter foolish brāhmanas were in the habit of expounding frivolous books in their schools and that students and learners, Musalmans as well as Hindus, went there even from long distances, led by a desire to become acquainted with the wicked sciences they taught. 'The Director of the Faith' consequently issued orders to all the governors of provinces to destroy with a willing hand the schools and temples of the infidels, and they were strictly enjoined to put an entire stop to the teaching and practising of idolatrous forms of worship On the 15th Rabiu-lākhir (i. e. December 1669) it was reported to his religious Majesty, leader of the Unitarians, that in obedience to order, the Government officers had destroyed the temple of Bishnath at Benares."

A mosque, which still exists, was built on the site of the Viśveśvara temple by Aurangzeb, who even changed the name of Banaras to Muhammadabad. The result is that, as stated by Sherring (p. 32), it would be difficult to find twenty temples in the whole of Banaras of the age of Aurangzeb (1658-1707 A. D.). Many of the temples were built by the Maratha Chiefs and Sardars and during the British occupation many more were built. Prinsep calculated in about 1828 that there were in the Banaras city proper 1000 Hindu temples and 333 mosques; a more recent estimate puts the figures at 1454 temples and 272 mosques (Sherring[1447] pp 41-42).

Visveśvara or Viśvanātha is the tutelary deity of Banaras and the principal and most holy temple in it (vide n 1429 a) It is prescribed that every resident of Kāśī must every day bathe in the Ganges and visit the temple of Viśveśvara (vide Tri S p. 214). After Aurangzeb pulled down the temple of Viśvanātha, there was no shrine of Viśvanātha in Benares for over a hundred years The linga was probably removed from place to place as the vicissitudes of the times required and the pilgrims performed parts of the worship (such as namaskāra and circumambulation) at the site of the image, but they could not perform other portions of the worship such as bathing the image with Ganges water [1448]. The present temple of Viśvanātha was built in the last quarter of the 18th century by Devī Ahalyābāi Holkar (Altekar, p. 57). The Tri. S. p. 183, while on the question of the appearance (prādurbhāva) of Viśveśvara, observes that there is no blemish in the case of the Viśveśvara-linga due to the touch of the untouchable, that every day Viśveśvara removes it by a bath in Manikarnikā at dawn and the worship offered by Himself and quotes a verse of the Sanatkumāra-samhitā in support [1449] What the Tri. S. means is: Generally great care is taken about lingas. All and sundry are not allowed to touch them but in the case of the Viśveśvara-linga any one, even a great sinner, may worship it and pour Ganges water over it. Whether Nārāyanabhatta meant that even the so-called untouchables might touch it is not clear.

1446. Vide Altekar pp. 47-48 and Introduction to my edition of the Vyavahāramayūkha p. VIII (Poona, 1926), where I cite a verse from the Dānahīrāvali-prakāśa of Divākarabhatta, a daughter's son of Nīlakantha, who was the grandson of Nārāyanabhatta

It appears that Vācaspati [1449a] holds that Avimukteśvara linga is the same as Viśvanātha, but both the Tristhalī-setu (p 296) and Tīr. Pr. (p. 187) reject this idea. The Skanda-purāna (Kāsī. 10. 93) mentions Viśveśvara and Avimukteśvara as separate lingas. Besides worshipping Viśvanātha, every pilgrim to Benares has to visit the five tīrthas [1450] (Pañcatīrthī). According to the Matsyapurāna the five essential tīrthas in the Ānandakānana of Viśveśvara are Daśāśvamedha, Lolārka,[1450a]

1450 The Pañcatīrthī has received the highest judicial notice in Maharani Hemanta Kumari v. Gauri Shankar 68 I A 53 at p 57.

Keśava, Bindumādhava and Maṇikarṇikā.[1451] In modern times the five essential tīrthas called Pañcatīrthī are the confluence of the Asi with the Ganges, the Daśāśvamedha ghāt, Maṇikarṇikā, the Pañcagaṅgā ghāt and the confluence of the river Varaṇā (called Bārnā by the common people) with the Ganges. This is based on the Kāśīkhaṇḍa.[1452] The shrine of Lolārka is situated at the confluence of the Asi (the southern boundary of Banaras) with the Ganges. The Kāśīkhaṇḍa [1453] furnishes a popular etymology for the name Lolārka, viz. that the mind of the Sun on seeing Kāśī became agitated. The Asi is a tolerably wide stream (about 40 feet) in the rainy season, but is dry at other times. The several gigantic ghats with their flights of stone steps are a grand sight at Banaras. The Ganges while passing by Banaras takes a great sweep so that its mighty current flows in a northerly direction (that is towards the Himālaya) and is therefore held to be peculiarly holy here. The Daśāśvamedha-ghāt has been famed for centuries. Jayaswal's interpretation of the epithets applied to the Bhāraśivas in Vākāṭaka grants should be accepted viz. the Bhāraśivas were an imperial dynasty, were crowned with the holy waters of the Ganges and took their ceremonial baths on the Ganges at the end of ten Aśvamedha sacrifices, on account of which the Daśāśvamedha-ghāt [1454] at Banaras was so named (Jayaswal's 'History of India' 150 A. D.–350 A. D p. 5). In order to realize the grandeur of Banaras on the side of the river one must be at the Daśāśvamedhaghāt at dawn. For the eulogy of Daśāśvamedha, vide Kāśīkhanda 52. 83 ff and Tri. S. p. 159. The Kāśīkhanda says that formerly the tīrtha was called Rudrasaras, but as Brahmā performed ten Aśvamedhas there it came to be called Daśāśvamedha (chap 52. 66-68). The Manikarnikā (also called Mukti-ksetra) pool is the very centre of the religious life of Banaras and [1455] is the most holy among all the Banaras tīrthas. The Kāśīkhanda gives a phantastic story of its origin (in chapter 26 verses 51-63 quoted in Tri. S. pp. 145-146): Visnu dug with his discus a puskarinī, filled it with the perspiration from his own body and performed severe austerities on its bank for 1050 (or 50000) years. Śiva came there and being pleased shook his head and an ear-ornament studded with jewels fell into the pool, which thenceforward came to be called Manikarnikā. The word is [1456] derived in two ways in the Kāśīkhanda. Śiva who is like the wish-yielding jewel whispers in the ear (karnikā) of good men the Tāraka mantra at the time of death. The extent of Manikarnikā north to south is said to be 105 hastas i e. about 160 feet (Kāśīkhanda 99. 54). In modern times the waters of the Manikarnikā pool become foul and fetid because it is shallow (two or three feet deep), because hundreds of pilgrims cast into it flowers and money by way of worship and because the priests stir the waters with their hands and feet to find the coins dropped by pilgrims. Our methods of worship must be changed The flowers and gifts should be placed on the banks of the pool and then taken away by the priests. The Tri S. p. 147 mentions several mantras (two of which are set out below) to be recited when contemplating on Manikarnikā [1457]. Near the Manikarnikā pool is the temple of Tārakeśvara so named from the belief that Śiva will whisper the mantra called tāraka in the ear of the dying man brought to the sacred pool[1457a] (vide Kāśīkhanda 7.78, 25. 72–73 and 32. 115–116). The Pañcagangā ghāt is so called because it is supposed that five rivers, viz the Kiranā,[1458] Dhūtapāpā, Gangā, Yamunā and Sarasvatī, meet here (though four of them are invisible) This is very highly eulogised and it is said in the Nāradīyapurāna and the Kāśīkhanda (59. 118–133) that when a man takes a bath in the Pañcanada he is not born again in a body made up of the five elements. It is said that this confluence of five rivers had different names viz. Dharmanada, Dhūtapātaka, Bindutīrtha and Pañcanada in Krta and the following Yugas respectively The Kāśīkhanda in chap. 59 deals with the confluence of five rivers and gives phantastic legends as to why the rivers were called Kiranā (59. 108–113) and Dhūtapāpā (59 101–106). The river Varanā is the northern boundary of Vārānasī and the end of the ghāts on the northern side is reached at the confluence of the Varanā with the Ganges. That the ghāts have been there for at least a thousand years can be proved from copperplates and inscriptions. The Gāhadvāla rulers of Kanoj (of whose times at least 55 copperplates and 3 inscriptions on stone were issued during the period 1097 to 1187 A. D), being devotees of Visnu, several times made grants at the Ādi-Keśava ghāt. Vide J. The Kāśī-khanda promises Varuna-loka to those charitable people that build stone ghāts on the sacred rivers[1460].

One of the most meritorious of all pilgrimages is the Pañcakrośī by road. Laksmīdhara in his section on Tīrthas in the Krtyakalpataru apparently takes no notice of it. The length of the Pañcakrośī road is about 50 miles and there are hundreds of shrines on the road Taking Manikarnikā as the centre the whole road describes an irregular semicircle round the city of Banaras with a radius of five krośas (about ten miles) and hence it is called pañcakrośī. The word 'pañcakrośī' occurs very often in the Kāśīkhanda (as in chap 26, verses 80 and 114, chap 55 44). This pilgrimage may be very briefly described as follows:—The pilgrim starts from the Manikarnikā-ghāt and going along the bank of the Ganges arrives at the confluence of the river Asi with the Ganges and halts for the day at a village called Khāndava about six miles from Manikarnikā. The 2nd day's march (for eight or ten miles) ends at the village called Dhūpacandī where he offers worship to the goddess of that name. On the 3rd day the pilgrim walks 14 miles to the village Rāmeśvara. On the 4th day he walks eight miles and reaches the village Śivapura. On the 5th day he walks 6 miles and reaches the village Kapiladhārā, where the pilgrim offers oblations to his pitrs On the 6th day he walks from Kapiladhārā to Varanāsangama and thence to Manikarnikā, a distance of six miles It is the practice for pilgrims to scatter grains of barley from Kapiladhārā to Manikarnikā. The pilgrim bathes, pays dakṣiṇā to the priest and then goes to the temple of Sāksi-Vināyaka who is supposed to bear witness to the pilgrim's having performed the Pañcakrosī-yātrā.

There are numerous other sub-tīrthas in Banaras, some of which may be briefly noticed here. The Jñānavāpī may be mentioned first. The story of its origin is narrated in the Kāśīkhaṇḍa, chap. 33. The Tri. S (pp. 148–150) refers to it. It is said that when Śiva (Īśāna) saw the Viśveśvara-linga a desire arose in him to bathe with its cool water. He dug a kuṇḍa with his trident to the south of the temple of Viśveśvara and with the water therefrom he bathed Viśveśvara-linga and Viśveśvara granted the boon that the tīrtha would be superior to all tīrthas and that, as Śiva is knowledge (verse 32), the tīrtha would be called Jñānoda or Jñānavāpī. One of the most popular and the most frequented temple is that of Durgā. In chap. 72 (verses 37–65) of the Kāśīkhaṇḍa there is a Durgāstotra called Vajra-pañjara which is referred to in Tri. S. p. 161. There is a temple of Bhairavanātha about a mile to the north of the temple of Viśveśvara. He is the Kotwal or police Magistrate of Kāśī and wields a stone cudgel (of enormous thickness). His vāhana is a dog. Vide Kāśīkhaṇḍa, chap. 30, for Bhairava. There are many temples of Gaṇeśa The Tri. S. (pp. 198–199) names 56 Gaṇeśas and indicates their locations, following Kāśīkhaṇḍa, chap 57 59–115 (ṣaṭ-pañcāśad-Gajamukhān-etān-yaḥ samsmariṣyati). In Kāśīkhaṇḍa (57. 33) the name Dhuṇḍhi applied to Gaṇeśa is derived from the root 'dhuḍhi' in the sense of 'searching' (anveṣaṇe dhuḍhir-ayam prathitoṣti dhātuḥ). Compare the Marathi verb dhuṇḍaṇe.

The Tri S. discusses at some length (pp. 98–100) the question whether sins committed in all past lives are destroyed by entering Kāśī or whether it is only the sins committed during the present life that are destroyed. Some hold the view that sins committed in this life only are destroyed by visiting Kāśī and by bath in the various sacred spots the sins of previous lives are destroyed. Others hold that by entering Kāśī the sins of all past lives are destroyed, but bath at various sacred spots brings about only the cessation of the tendency to sin in different lives. Nārāyaṇabhaṭṭa puts forward several other views and says that wise men should hold the view that appears proper.

Many of the purāṇas lay down rules about how one dwelling in Kāśī should act. The injunction is that in Kāśī one should not commit the slightest sin, since the punishment is far more heavy. The Matsya (chap. 185. 17–45) and Kāśīkhaṇḍa, chap. 96, narrate the story of Vyāsa, who while wandering about for alms in Kāśī, did not secure alms and being hungry and angry was on the point of cursing Kāśī in the words quoted below [1461] when Śiva coming to know his mind assumed the form of a householder, gave him the best of food and ordered Vyāsa not to enter Kāśīkṣetra as he was an irritable man, but allowed him to do so on the 8th and 14th tithis only. The Kāśīkhanda 96. 12-80 and 119-180 speak at great length about how one residing in Kāsī should conduct himself.

Some miscellaneous matters in connection with Banaras may be set out here. Vārāṇasī being a great tīrtha, śrāddha for the benefit of ancestors should be performed there and if it is not possible to perform a śrāddha with all details, at least offerings of pindas should be made.[1462] The construction of mathas for those who practise penance there and endowing them with means for their maintenance are highly eulogized.[1463]

In the 12th century A. D. there was a Kapālamocanaghāt [1464] situated on the Ganges. In a grant published in E. I. vol. IV p. 110 dated samvat 1178 (1122 A. D.) the Emperor Govindacandra bestowed a village on a brāhmana named Vyāsa after bathing at the Kapāla-mocanaghatta in Banaras where the Ganges flows to the north. The story of Kapālamocana-tīrtha is narrated in the Matsya-purāna, chap. 183. 84-103 and a reference is made to it in Kāśīkhanda 33. 116.

It may be noted that in the Lingapurāna, pūrvārdha, chap. 92 verses 67-100, in Padma,[1464a] Ādikhanda, chap. 34-37,

1464. Dr Altekar (pp 28-29) notes that at present a ghāt and a tank near the Rajaghat station is known by the name Kapālamocanaghāt, that there exists a temple near this tank dedicated to Kapālamocaneśvara and that the god must have been removed from the original place to the present habitation at some time during the last 700 years.

1464 a. Kūrma I. 32 3-29 about Omkāra and other Lingas are the same as Padma I 34 1-25 (with some half verses omitted) and Kūrma I. 33 is taken over bodily in Padma I. 35 and Kūrma I 34. 2-16 are the same as Padma I 37. 1-19 (with a few additions)

Kūrma I. 32. 1-12 and I. 35. 1-15 (tīrthas) and in the Kāśīkhanda, chap. 10. 86-97, chap. 33, chap. 53. 27 ff., chapters 55, 58 and 61 numerous lingas and tīrthas of Banaras are named. The Kāśīkhanda, chap 73. 32-36 (quoted by Tri. S. pp. 264-265) mentions 14 of these as Mahālingas, viz. Omkāra, Trilocana, Mahādeva, Krttivāsas, Ratneśa, Candreśvara, Kedāra, Dharmeśa, Vīreśvara, Kāmeśa, Viśvakarmeśvara, Manikarnīśa, Avimukta, Viśveśvara. It is provided in Kāśīkhanda 73 39 that yātrās of these main lingas should be celebrated every month from the 1st tithi onwards In Kāśīkhanda 73. 45-48 there is another series of fourteen great lingas different from those in chap 73. 32-36. Fourteen āyatanas are named in Kāśīkhanda 73. 60-62.[1464b] Twelve out of these are specified as lingas in Lingapurāna I. 92.67-107. In Kāśīkhanda chapters 83 and 84 are enumerated about 125 tīrthas of Banaras In chap. 94. 36 of the Kāśīkhanda 36 principal lingas are referred to (14 Omkārādi, 8 Daksesvarādi and 14 Śaileśādi). From considerations of space the other lingas and tīrthas are not mentioned here. But out of all these Viśveśvara is said to give quick results.

It is laid down that every one residing in Kāśī must repair every day to the Ganges, take a bath in the Manikarnikā and visit Viśveśvara.[1465]

What happens if a person commits sins outside Kāśī, comes to Kāśī and then dies, or if a resident of Kāśī commits sins in Kāśī but dies either at Kāśī or outside it? The Tri. S. after quoting several verses from the Kāśīkhanda, Padmapurāna and Brahmavaivarta states the following conclusions (p. 268). Sins committed elsewhere are destroyed by coming to Kāśī.[1466] He who residing in Kāśī is always addicted to sins becomes a piśāca (goblin) for thirty thousand years, again dwells in Kāśī, secures highest knowledge and then obtains moksa. Those who being residents of Kāśī commit sins have not to undergo the tortures of Yama whether they die in Kāśī or elsewhere. Those who after committing sins in Kāśī die there will be punished by Kālabhairava Those who die elsewhere (after committing sins in Kāśī) first undergo torments inflicted by the ganas of Śiva called Yāma, then undergo torments inflicted by Kālabhairava for thirty thousand years, are then born as mortal men, then die in Kāśī and secure release (from samsāra) at the end.

It is remarkable that the Kāśīkhanda[1467] states that a little to the north of Kāśī, Visnu assigned a place for his residence called Dharmaksetra and that there Visnu assumed the form of Buddha. This is a clear reference to Sārnath about five miles by road to the north of Banaras, where Buddha delivered his first sermon The general rule for ascetics is that for eight months they must move from place to place and may spend the four months of the rainy season or two months in one place; but this rule is abrogated where ascetics enter Banaras and it is laid down that they should not leave Kāśī at all.[1467a]

The Kāśīkhanda remarks 'For devotees of Śiva who are full of faith there is, even in great calamities, no other remedy except the water of the feet of the image of God Incurable diseases even, whether affecting the body outside or inside, are got rid of by the touch with faith of the water of (washing the image of) the deity.' This reminds one of the miraculous cures believed to have been effected by the water of a pool at Lourdes in the first years of this century [1467b].

It would be far beyond the scope of this section to dilate upon the great traditions of learning associated with the name of Banaras. It is sufficient to refer to Alberuni (vol. I. p. 173) who observed that Banaras and Kashmir were the

Gayā occupies a unique place in the hearts of all pious Hindus even in these days. Hundreds of pages have been written about the history, the antiquities, the architectural remains of Gayā, the sacred places in and round about Gayā, the śrāddha rites performed in Gayā and about Gayāwals (the priests of Gayā). It is not possible to deal with this vast mass in this work. But it is impossible not to say a few words about the many conflicting views on certain important matters put forward by scholars for about three quarters of a century. Those who are deeply interested in the history and antiquities of Gayā should carefully read the following books and papers; Dr. Rajendralal Mitra's 'Buddha-Gayā' with 51 plates (1878); General Cunningham's 'Mahābodhi' with 31 plates at the end (1892); L. S. S. O'Malley's District Gazetteer of Gayā, vol. XII and J. A. S. B for 1903 LXXII, No. 3, pp 1–11 on 'Gayāśrāddha and Gayāvals;' Indian Antiquary, vol X pp. 339–340 for a Chinese Inscription at Buddha Gayā dated in a Chinese date corresponding to 1033 A. D. and pp. 341–347 for Inscriptions at Gayā, one of which is engraved in a temple of the Sun near a tank 'Dakṣinamānasa' near the Viṣṇupada, dated 1813 years after Buddha's Parinirvāṇa; Indian Antiquary, vol. 16 pp 63 ff Inscription of Yakṣapāla, son of Viśvāditya, which records the building of a temple for certain images in the 15th regnal year of the Pāla king Nayapāladeva who died in 1045 A. D., edited by Kielhorn; Dr. Benimadhav Barua's 'Gayā and Buddha-Gayā' in two volumes (1934) with plates; Journal of Bihar and Orissa R. Society, vol. 24 (for 1938) pp. 89–111 where Dr. J. C. Ghose deals with 'the antiquity of Gayā.' Some of the remarks of Dr Ghose are most unwarranted and cannot be accepted, such as holding 'maganda' in 'Pramagandasya' in Ṛg. III. 53. 14 as identical with Magadha and the explanation of 'udantyāh' in the Ait. Br. as 'people of sunrise' Among medieval digests Gayā is dealt with in Kalpataru on Tīrthas pp 163–174, Tīrtha-cintāmaṇi of Vācaspati pp. 268–328, Tristhalīsetu of Nārāyaṇa-bhaṭṭa pp. 316–379, Tīrthaprakāsa pp. 384–452, Tīrthendu-śekhara pp. 54–59, Tristhalīsetu-sāra-sangraha of Bhaṭṭoji pp. 36–38.

The most important work on Gayā relied upon in such works as the Tristhalī-setu and in modern times is the Gayā-māhātmya that occurs at the end of the Vāyupurāṇa (chapters 105–112 of the Ānandāśrama ed.). Scholars differ about the antiquity of these chapters. Rājendralal Mitra assigned the Gayā-māhātmya to the 3rd or 4th century A. D. O'Malley was inclined to hold that the legend of Gayāsura was invented in the 14th or 15th century, principally on the ground that the Gayāwals profess the Vaisnava faith established by Madhvācārya [1468] and acknowledge as their spiritual head the mahant of Hari Narasimhapura; vide J. A. S. B. vol. LXXII (1903) p. 4. To my mind there is hardly anything in this. The Gayāwals are notorious for their indolence, dissoluteness and ignorance and they are a dying race. O'Malley himself notes in the paper mentioned above (at p. 8) that originally the families of Gayāwals were 1484, that in Buchanan Hamilton's time they numbered about 1000, that in 1893 a Gayāwal counted 128 families, that in the census of 1901 there existed only 168 males (as pure Gayāwals) and 153 females. Gayā is a place sacred to Visnu and if the Gayāwals had to turn in medieval times for support to some great ācārya they would naturally choose to align themselves with the Vaisnava ācārya Madhva rather than with Śankara. Dr. Barua, after an elaborate examination of the several items of evidence, holds that the Gayāmāhātmya is not earlier than the 13th or 14th century A. D. (vol. I. p. 64 of 'Gayā and Buddha Gayā'). From considerations of the space at my disposal I cannot examine in detail his arguments. His conclusion is vitiated mainly for two reasons. He relies too much on the dubious and unconvincing argument from silence. He examines the account of Gayā that appears in the Vanaparva and compares it with the fuller account in the Gayāmāhātmya and arrives at the rather startling conclusion 'The Gayā proper as known to the Epic (the Mahābhārata) is essentially a place sacred to Yama Dharmarāja, Brahmā and Śivaśūlin, and Visnu and Vaisnavism has no place in it either as a name or as an idea. Except 1468 There is conflict about the dates of Madhvācārya's birth and death. The Uttarādi-matha records give śake 1040 (1118 A. D.) and śake 1120 (1198 A. D.) as the dates of his birth and death respectively. This is said to conflict with the date given in Madhva's महाभारततात्पर्यनिर्णय viz. that he was born in गतकलि 4300. In a paper published in the Journal of the Annamalai University, vol III for 1934 pp. 245 ff. the correct dates are said to be 1238 A. D.–1317 A. D.

-Brahmayūpa, Śivaliṅga and Vṛṣabha there is no reference to any structural erection nor any iconic suggestion'. In order to show how this conclusion is not at all justified the references to Gayā in the Epic and other Sanskrit works will have to be set out and compared with each other and with the Gayāmāhātmya. The second reason that vitiates Dr. Barua's conclusion is the wrong interpretation that he puts on verse 12 of the Inscription edited by Kielhorn in I. A. vol 16.

I shall now turn to the name Gayā and references to it or similar names from the Ṛgveda downwards. A Gaya, son of Plati, is the reputed author of two hymns of the Ṛgveda (X. 63 and X. 64). In Ṛg X. 63. 17 and X. 64. 17 we have the words 'astāvi jano divyo Gayena' (the divine host was praised by Gaya). So Gaya was a proper name applied to a composer of Ṛgvedic hymns. In the Ṛg. the word Gaya has several other senses, which are not material here. In the Atharvaveda (I. 14.4) Gaya appears to be a wonder-worker or a sorcerer along with Asita and Kaśyapa. Even in the Vedic Saṁhitās Asuras, Dāsas and Rākṣasas are credited with tricks and magic. Vide Ṛg VII 99.4, VII. 104.24–25 and Atharva IV. 23. 5. It is not difficult to imagine how a sorcerer Gaya could have been transformed into Gayāsura later on. Proceeding further, the Nirukta[1469] while explaining 'idam Visnur-vi cakrame tredhā nidadhe padam' (Ṛg. I 22. 17) gives two very interesting interpretations, one explaining the verse as a natural phenomenon and the other explaining it from geographical or legendary points of view 'He (Visnu) puts down his foot in three ways. According to Śākapūni, Visnu plants his foot on the earth, in mid air (sky) and heaven; according to Aurnavābha, on Samārohana, on Visnupada and on Gayaśiras.' Whatever the Vedic verse may mean, it is clear that two interpretations had arisen several centuries before Christ and if the usual dates about Buddha's nirvāna are accepted Aurnavābha and Yāska both flourished before Buddha. Vide S. B. E. vol. XIII pp. XXII–XXIII for Buddha's nirvāna being placed at 483 B. C. according to Ceylonese chronicle, while some western scholars would place it between 429–400 B. C[1470] Gayaśiras is named in the Vanaparva (87.

11, 95. 9), in the Visnudharma-sūtra 85.4 (in the form Gayāśirsa), Vāmanapurāna (22,20 as the eastern vedi of Brahmā), Skanda I. 2. 13.21 and even in the Buddhist books such as the Mahāvagga (I. 21. 1, S. B. E. vol. XIII p. 134) in which last it is said that after having dwelt at Uruvelā, Buddha accompanied by a thousand bhikkhus went to Gayāsīsa (which is the Pali equivalent of Gayāśirsa). Traditions of Gaya as a king of the territories round about Gayā are mentioned in Jaina and Buddhist works. The Uttarādhyayanasūtra (S B E. vol. 45 p. 86 and note 3 there) states that he was son of king Samudravijaya of Rājagrha and became the 11th Cakravartin. The Buddhacarita of Aśvaghosa states that Buddha visited the hermitage called a city of the royal sage Gaya, that the saint (future Buddha) fixed his dwelling on the pure bank of the Nairanjanā river (S. B. E vol. 49 part 1 p. 132, Canto XII. 87–88) and p. 193 (chap XVII. 8 of the same work) and that Buddha went to the hermitage of Kāśyapa at Gayā called Uruvilvā. The same work (S. B E vol. 49 part 1 p 192) speaks of Dharmātavī where dwelt 700 ascetics whom Buddha helped to enter nirvāna Visnupada occurs in the Visnudharmasūtra 85 40 as a holy place very fit for śrāddha. In my opinion at least Aurnavābha held that in a particular region there were three places on which according to the legends current in his day the foot-prints of Visnu's foot could be seen [1471]. Two of Sanskrit literature by Winternitz, vol I p. 69(English tr). Scholars are not agreed about the exact location and extent of Gayāśiras. Rajendralal in 'Buddha-gayā' p 19 says 'Gayāśiras is not the Brahmayoni hill but a low spur of it to the north-east about a mile in area forming the site of the old town of Gayā. This Gayāśiras is the most sacred spot in Gayā.' Dr. Barua (vol. I p. 246) 'Gayā proper is still sandwiched between the Phalgu and a small set of hills containing some 25 hill-tops with Gayaśira or Gayāśira (Brahmayoni) in the south-west &c '. Both are, however, agreed that Gayaśiras is part of the ancient Gayā region. Vide S. B E vol. XIII p. 134 n. 1 about Cunnigham's view that गयासीस is the ब्रह्मयोनि hill near Gayā.

these, Visnupada and Gayaśiras are well-known; hence it would not be unreasonable to hold that 'Samārohana' is a place and has to be located somewhere near the other two. Samārohana means 'mounting up' or 'ascending'. This word probably refers to the ascent of the hill that rises up from the river Phalgu. It is also possible that it is the same as the Udyanta hill echoing with the warbling (of birds)[1472] I therefore hold that at least 600 years before Christ (and hence even before Buddha) there was a tradition about Visnu's footprints in at least two well-known places viz. Visnupada and Gaya-śiras (both in Gayā). Even if some other work does not mention any one of these it does not follow from mere non-mention that that spot was not so named or did not exist.

Let us now turn to the Vanaparva. Dr. Barua mainly relies on Vanaparva 84. 82–103 and 95. 9–29. But some preliminary remarks must be made before the two passages are examined.

The Nāradīyapurāna (uttara, 46. 16) states that Gayaśiras extends from Krauñcapada to Phalgutīrtha.

Vanaparva chapter 82 sets out Pulastya's replies to Bhīsma's question about tīrthas. First comes Puskara (verses 20–40), then Jambumārga, Tandulikāśrama, Agastyasarah, Mahākāla, Kotitīrtha, Bhadravata (Sthānutīrtha), Narmadā, Prabhāsa and several other tīrthas (not in any particular order but selected at random). In chap. 83 Kuruksetra is described at some length.

Before discussing the most important passage of the Vanaparva (viz. 84. 82–103) we must see what precedes the description of Gayā. Dr. Barua and many of those that have written on this passage have not carefully considered the implications of verses 1–81 of chapter 84 and also of the following chapters. In Vanaparva 84. 1–81 the author makes Dhaumya name gupta. Therefore Visnu's footprint existed on a hill near Delhi in the 4th century A. D. There is no sound reason advanced why it could not have existed at Gayā about the same time or even earlier. Besides in the Rām. II 68 19 a विष्णुपद south of the river विपाशा is mentioned.

1472. Dr Barua regards गीतनादित in Vanaparva 84. 93 as the name of a peak (vol I p. 246). But this appears to be wrong It is an adjective of उद्यन्त (पर्वत) that immediately precedes. I have not come across any peak called गीतनादित in any other work and Dr. Barua does not cite any other text in support of his view. उद्यन्त would mean 'the hill of sunrise,' not necessarily for the whole of Āryāvarta but in the place where both विष्णुपद and गयाशिरस् were situated about 57 holy places (including such famous ones as Naimisa, Sākambharī, Gangādvāra. Kanakhala, the confluence of Gangā and Yamunā, Kubjāmraka) and then comes to speak of the sacred spots in Gayā[1473] It is therefore clear that the intention of the author is not to speak exhaustively about any tīrtha. For this reason some tīrthas are described twice in the Vanaparva. For example Naimisa is very highly praised in chap. 84. 59–64 and again in chap. 87. 6–7. The same happens with regard to Gayā in 85.82–103 and 87.8–12. We cannot at all presume

These verses are q. in the तीर्थचि. pp. 275–277 (except three), त्रिस्थलीसेतु pp 321–323. It may be noted that the Padmapurāna, Ādikhanda, chap 38 (verses 2–19) contains verbatim and in the same order the verses about Gayā in the Vanaparva 84. 82–99 except that a word is changed here and there. There is hardly any doubt that one borrows from the other Good grounds have been advanced by Mr M. V. Vaidya in his paper 'Tīrthayātrā in the Āranyakaparvan and the Padmapurāna' in the Kane Festschrift pp 530–537 Dr. S. K. Belvalkar in the volume of Indian and Eastern studies presented to Prof F. W Thomas pp. 19–28 in his paper on 'Cosmographical episode in the Mahābhārata and the Padmapurāna' has shown that chapters 80–83 of the Vanaparva are taken over by the author of the Padmapurāna in chapters 10. 5 to chapter 39,120.

from the manner in which tīrthas in Gayā are named and described that the writer of Vanaparva (chap. 84. 82–103) meant to be exhaustive as regards the holy spots in Gayā or the legends about Gayā. This conclusion is very much strengthened by the fact that in the Anuśāsanaparva three sacred spots in Gayā are mentioned which do not occur in Vanaparva 84. 82–103 viz. 'In Gayā a man becomes purified in Aśmapṛṣtha (the same as Pretaśilā), on the hill Niravinda and of even a third brāhmana murder in Krauñcapadī'.[1474] These three, Aśmaprstha, Niravinda and Krauñcapadī, are in addition to those sacred spots that are mentioned in Vanaparva 84. In Vāyu 109. 15 a hill Aravindaka is said to be a peak of the Śilāparvata and Nāradīya (uttara 47. 83), Vāyu 108. 75 and Nāradīya (uttara 46. 16) mention the hill Krauñcapada (Munda-prstha was so called) Therefore it is clear that three important sites in the Gayāmāhātmya are mentioned by the Anuśāsanaparva.

It was unfortunate that Dr. Barua confined his attention on the question of the antiquity of Gayā to merely three works viz. the Vanaparva chapters 84 and 95, the Agnipurāṇa chap. 114–116 and the Vāyupurāna chapters 105–112. He did not care to investigate all the other Purānas nor did it strike him that the explanation of three padas of Visnu furnished by Aurnavābha probably referred to spots around Gayā alone. Other Purānas such as Padma (Ādikhanda 38. 2–21), Garuda I chapters 82–86, and the Nāradīya (uttara chap. 44–47) contain much that concerns Gayā and all of them have many verses in common. The critical edition of the Mahābhārata (published by the B O. R. I., Poona) reads 'sāvitram padam' (chap. 82.81) for 'sāvitryāstu padam' of the Bombay edition. The reading of the critical edition is supported by numerous and ancient Mss. Further, the printed Padmapurāna (in Ādikhaṇḍa 38. 13) reads 'Sāvitram padam' and thus lends support to the reading adopted in the critical edition. The words 'sāvitram padam' may be taken to mean the foot-print of Visnu (Savitṛ). Dr. Barua goes very much further than the facts warrant when he says that there is no reference in the Vanaparva to any structural erection or iconic suggestion. It is clear that there must have been an image of Dharma, since the Vanaparva speaks of the pilgrim to Gayā having to touch Dharma (Dharmam tatrā-bhi-samspṛśya). Besides, there is a reference to the footprints of a cow with a calf and to 'Sāvitra pada'. All these would surely be things that have an 'iconic suggestion'. Moreover, Dr. Barua forgets for the moment that, according to the Chinese traveller Fa Hien who visited India between 399–413 A. D., the Gayā of the Hindu faith was 'all emptiness and desolation' (vide Legge's translation p. 87) It is possible that Gayā might have suffered from earthquakes before 400 A. D. (as it is a region that is liable to severe earthquakes even in modern times) and therefore no structural erection of the ancient city of Gayā (to which ancient Pāli works and the Lalitavistara p 311 refer) might have been left in Fa Hien's day. Gayā appears to have passed through several vicissitudes. Some centuries before the Christian era it was in existence and was a flourishing town. By 400 A. D. it had been reduced to desolation. But in the 7th century the Chinese traveller Hiouen Thsang notes that the Hindu Gayā was a town with 1000 brāhmana families (vide Beal's B R. W. W. vol. II p. 113). Later on when Buddhism waned and vanished, Gayā came to comprehend even Buddhist remnants, since the Vāyupurāṇa speaks of Gayā as extending from Pretasilā to Mahābodhi tree (a distance of about 13 miles, according to Mitra p 19).

Dr. Barua has also misunderstood verse 12 of the inscription at Gayā edited by Dr. Kielhorn in I. A. vol 16 p. 63 ff. The verse[1475] set out below may be translated as follows That wise (prince Yaksapāla) caused to be constructed a temple for the images of Maunāditya and the other gods (mentioned in it), he dug up the famous Uttaramānasa lake and established a sattra (charity house for food) near the Akṣaya (vaṭa)'. This inscription of the reign of Nayapāla was engraved about 1040 A.D. Dr. Barua thought that Uttaramānasa was dug up at that time and therefore Uttaramānasa tank is taken to be not older than 1040 A. D. and that it and many of the sacred spots must have been later and the Gayāmāhātmya which speaks of Uttarmānasa must be much later than the 11th century A. D. But Dr Barua is entirely mistaken in this. If a tank was dug up for the first time at the time of the inscription, it is impossible that it should have been called 'khyāta' (famous). The tank can become famous some centuries after it was dug. Uttarmānasa tank is mentioned as a sacred spot in Vāyupurāna 77. 108 (which verse is quoted about 1110 A. D. in the Kalpataru on tīrtha at p. 168), Vāyu 82. 21, Agni 115. 10. Therefore Uttaramānasa tank was well known at least in the 8th or 9th century A. D. What the inscription means is either that the famous tank had silted up and so it was dug up or that it was made longer, broader and deeper in about 1040. That is all.

In my opinion the Gayāmāhātmya (Vāyu, chap. 105–112), though possibly later than the main text of the Vāyupurāna, cannot be placed so late as the 13th or 14th century A. D. It is really a patch-work from many sources of earlier times such as the Vanaparva, Anusāsanaparva, Padma I 38, the Nāradīya (uttara) chap. 44–47 Several verses and half verses of it are repetitions (such as the half verse 'Gayāyām aksayam śrāddham japahomatapāmsi ca' Vāyu 108 35 and Vāyu 82.43 quoted as from Vāyu in Kalpataru on tīrtha p. 167, and Vāyu 110. 29–30 are the same as Vāyu 105.37–38. So also Vāyu 82. 31–33 are the same as Vāyu 110. 51–53. Dr. Barua does not notice that in chap. 82 of the Vāyu (20–24) several sub-tīrthas of Gayā are expressly mentioned viz. Brahmakunda, Prabhāsa, Pretaparvata, Uttaramānasa, Udīcī, Kanakhala, Daksinamānasa, Dharmāranya, Gadādhara, Matanga; so also chap 77. 97–108 mention Grdhrakūta, hermitage of Bharata, Matangapada, Mundaprstha and Uttaramānasa. Many of the verses occurring in the Gayāmāhātmya are found quoted in the Smrticandrikā [1476]

1476 Vide H. of Dh vol. 1. p, 346 for the date of the Smrticandrikā.

The verses ब्रह्मज्ञान ..चतुर्विधा (vide note 1484) and ब्रह्महत्या...द्विनश्यति (वायु. 105.13) are नारदीय (उत्तर) chap. 44. 20 and 22; Vāyu 110 63–64 are equal to नारदीय, उत्तर, 45 64–66, Vāyu 110. 63–64 are the same as Nāradīya (uttara) 45.64–66, Vāyu 108.13–16 are the same as नारदीय (उत्तर; 45. 2–4. (about 1150-1225 A. D.) on Srāddha and Āsauca (without name) as briefly exemplified below. I think that the Gayāmāhātmya is to be assigned to some date between the 7th and 10th centuries A. D.

Having disposed of the question of the date of the Gayāmāhātmya and the references to the sacred spots in Gayā in Vanaparva chap. 84, it is necessary to see how Gayā is spoken of in the other parts of the Mahābhārata and the smrtis. In the Vanaparva itself references to Gayā occur in chap. 87 and chap. 95. Vanaparva, chap. 87, starts by saying that going towards the east (from Kāmyaka-vana where the Pāndavas dwelt for some time) the pilgrim would come to the Naimisa forest and the Gomatī river. Thus it is said that in the east there is a holy hill called after Gaya and a holy pool called Brahmasaras; then comes a famous verse[1477] 'one should desire to have many sons if even

85. 2-22) contains most of the verses of Vāyu 110. 34-60. The notes below in this Gayā section will show that the Nāradīya and the Gayāmāhātmya contain scores of verses in common

The स्मृतिचन्द्रिका (University of Mysore edition) on आशौच has towards the end a section on गयाश्राद्धविधि, several verses of which occur in वायु A few verses are cited by way of illustration. The first two verses (स्मृतिच. p 194) though ascribed to आदिपुराण are almost the same as वायु 110 2-3; the verses गोमचार ..बभूव (in स्मृतिच on आशौच p. 199) are almost the same as वायु 111. 35 and 37, स्मृतिच० p 197 the verse मकरे वर्तमाने तु is the same as वायु 105.48 and स्मृतिच. p 199 the verse या सा वैतरणी नाम is वायु 105 44

The Tīrtha-cintāmani of Vācaspati quotes many verses from the Gayāmāhātmya of the Vāyupurāna. Vācaspati's literary activity lies between 1450 to 1480 (or 1500 AD at the latest) He treats the Gayāmāhātmya as on the same level as the other purānas. This position could not have been attained by the Gayāmāhātmya in a century or two Therefore it must be much earlier than 1300 AD. A few examples of the citations of the Gayāmāhātmya by Vacaspati may be indicated here On pp. 285-286 the तीर्थचि. expressly quotes from the वायव्य verses 18, 19, 26 of वायु. 105. वायु 110. 2-3 are quoted as from वायु० in तीर्थचि p. 7, on pp. 280-283 numerous verses are quoted from वायुपुराण which are (with slight variations) the same as वायुपुराण 108. 13-23, 28-30; on pp 284-285 from वायुपुराण are cited वायु० 110 9-15 and 19-20, 56-59, तीर्थचि. pp. 288-293 quote from the वायुपुराण 110. 17, 21-24, 30-32, 34-55, तीर्थचि pp. 298-301 quote वायु. 111. 1-22 (with additions and variant readings); similarly the कृत्यचिन्तामणि on श्राद्ध and त्रिस्थलीसेतु quote about 300 verses from गयामाहात्म्य and the त्रिस्थली (pp. 356-359 &c) several times refers to the explanations of verses from गयामाहात्म्य given by his predecessors But space does not allow me to go into this subject at greater length one (of whom) goes to Gayā, or performs the Aśvamedha sacrifice or lets loose a nīla bull' (the pitrs may be gratified). Then Vanaparva chap. 87 goes on to refer to the holy river (mahānadī) Phalgu, the hill Gayaśiras, the Aksayya Vata, where food offered to pitrs becomes inexhaustible. In Vanaparva 95 mention is made of Brahmasaras (where Agastya went to Dharmarāja i. e. Yama, verse 12), of Aksayavata (v. 14) which is an imperishable place of worship and where the fruit (of offerings made) is inexhaustible; it further states that king Gaya, son of Amūrtarayas,[1477a] performed a sacrifice in which food and fees in plenty were distributed (verses 18–19). Vas. (XI. 42) states: when a man goes to Gayā and offers food his ancestors become delighted like agriculturists that rejoice when there is good rain and pitrs become (really) putrin (having a son) on account of such a son The Visnudharmasūtra, chapter 85,[1478] mentions by name about 55 holy places that are most proper for śrāddha among which those connected with Gayā are Gayāśīrsa, Aksayavata, Phalgu, Uttaramānasa, Matangavāpī, Visnupada, and winds up by quoting three verses as gāthās sung by pitrs. Yāj. I. 261 states that whatever a man gives while in Gayā leads to inexhaustible rewards. Atri-smrti (55–58) refers to a son's going to Gayā for the benefit of the pitrs, to a bath in Phalgu and tarpana of pitrs in the river, to seeing Gadādhara (Visnu) at Gayā and to Gayāśīrsā. Śankha (14 27–28) refers[1479] to several tīrthas (one being Gayā) the offerings made at which 1477 a. It is to be noted that the Rāmāyana I. 32 7 states that Dharmāranya was founded by Asūrtarayas (probably a variant of Amūrtarayas), a son of Kuśa, son of Brahmā.

become inexhaustible. The Likhita-Smrti speaks[1480] of the importance of Gayā as follows: In whosesoever name a pinda is offered at Gayāśiras, whether for oneslf or for another, that person, if in hell, goes to heaven and if in heaven that man secures release (from samsāra). The Kūrmapurāna remarks that one should desire to have many sons so that if one out of them goes to Gayā on some other business and offers śrāddha, he thereby saves his pitrs and himself reaches the highest goal. The Matsyapurāna (22. 4-6) quoted by the Kalpataru (on tīrtha p. 163) speaks of Gayā as pitrtīrtha and as the best among tīrthas where Brahmā himself dwells and also has the verse 'estavyā bahavah putrāh'.

In the Gayāmāhātmya (Vāyupurāna, chapters 105-112) there are about 560 verses. An attempt will be made here to give a brief summary of it and some of the important verses will be quoted. Chapter 105 is general and briefly indicates some of the main topics dealt with in the following chapters. It states that in Śvetavārāhakalpa Gaya performed a sacrifice and Gayā was named after him[1481], that pitrs hanker after sons because the son that goes to Gayā saves the pitrs from hell[1482]. At Gayā a man should offer pindas to his father and others and even to himself but without sesame; all the five mortal sins like brāhmana-murder are removed by the performance of śrāddha at Gayā. A pinda offered after uttering the name and gotra of the recipient by the son or any other person in Gayā leads that person to the imperishable brahma[1483]. Moksa is fourfold (i. e. results in four ways) viz. by knowledge of brahma, śrāddha at Gayā, death in (a fight for preventing) the seizure of cows and residence in Kuruksetra and śrāddha at Gayā renders the others unnecessary[1484]. Śrāddha may be performed at Gayā at all times, even in an intercalary month, on the anniversary of one's birthday, or even when Jupiter and Venus are invisible or when Jupiter is in Leo. One should honour the brāhmanas (of Gayā) that were established there by Brahmā; when they are gratified all deities together with the pitrs are gratified. Tonsure[1485] and fast are to be observed at all tīrthas except in Kuruksetra, Viśālā, Virajā and Gayā. An ascetic[1486] (sannyāsin) should not offer pindas (at Gayā) but should merely exhibit (hold up) his staff and should put it down on Visnupada The (whole) Gayāksetra is five krośas in extent and Gayāśiras is one krośa and all the tīrthas of the three worlds are centered in these two[1487]. At Gayā one may offer (to pitrs) pindas by means of pāyasa (rice cooked in milk), boiled rice, barley flour, fruits and roots, the cake of sesame (after oil is extracted), sweetmeats or jaggery with ghee or with curds alone or with invigorating honey. In a śrāddha at Gayā, the procedure consists in preparing[1488] a seat for the pindas, the offering of pindas, the sprinkling of water again (on the kuśa grass), giving fees and declaration of dinner (to brāhmanas); but there is no invocation of pitrs, no curtains for privacy and no blemish due to śrāddha being seen (by undesirable persons or animals) Those who desire to reap the full fruit of śrāddha performed at a tīrtha (like Gayā) must give up passionate longings, anger and avarice, observe celibacy, eat only one meal a day, should sleep on the ground (and not on a cot), should speak the truth, should be pure and intent on the good of all beings. The famous river Vaitaranī has come down to Gayā; one taking a bath in it and donating a cow saves 21 generations in his family. One should go to the Akṣayavaṭa and gratify the (Gayā) brāhmaṇas. There is no spot in Gayā which is not a sacred place.[1459]

Chap. 106 narrates the story of Gayāsura. Gayāsura, a very powerful asura 125 yojanas in height and 60 yojanas in girth, performed severe austerities for thousands of years on the mountain called Kolāhala. The gods, anxious and tormented by his austerities, went to Brahmā for protection. Brahmā took them to Śiva who proposed to go to Viṣṇu. Brahmā, Śiva and the gods praised Viṣṇu, who appeared to them and said that they should, riding their respective conveyances, go to Gayāsura. Viṣṇu asked him why he practised severe austerities and said that the boon he would ask would be granted. He asked the boon that he should be purer than all the gods, sages, mantras, ascetics &c The gods said 'let it be so' and left for heaven. All people who saw or touched Gayāsura's holy body went to heaven. The capital of Yama became deserted and so he went to Brahmā who took him to Viṣṇu who asked Brahmā to request Gayāsura to give his pure body for the purpose of a sacrifice. Gayāsura agreed and fell down on the earth towards the southwest with his head on the north on Kolāhala mountain and feet to the south. Brahmā collected materials and mind-born ṛtviks (about 40 are named) and performed a sacrifice on the body of Gayāsura. That body, however, was not stable but moved and hence Brahmā asked Yama to place on Gayāsura's head a śilā (stone slab) that was in Yama's house. Yama did so; yet Gayāsura's body together with the śilā still moved. Brahmā asked Śiva and other gods to stand immoveable on the śilā. They did so and yet the body moved. Hence Brahmā went to Viṣṇu and requested him to make the body and śilā stable. Viṣṇu gave his own mūrti and though it was placed on the śilā it still moved. Then Viṣṇu sat on the śilā in three forms viz Janārdana, Puṇḍarīka and Ādi-Gadādhara, Brahmā in five forms (Prapitāmaha, Pitāmaha, Phalgvīśa, Kedāra and Kanakeśvara), Vināyaka in the form of an elephant, the Sun in three forms, the Goddesses Lakṣmī (as Sītā), Gaurī (as Maṅgalā), Gāyatrī and Sarasvatī. As Gayāsura was made stable by the first Gadā (mace) wielded by Hari, therefore Hari was called Ādigadādhara.[1490] Gayāsura complained 'why am I deceived? I have given my pure body to Brahmā for the latter's sacrifice. Would I not have become stable at the mere word of Visnu (why torment me with the mace?).' Then the gods asked him to choose a boon. He chose 'As long as the earth, mountains, the Sun, Moon and stars last, may Brahmā, Visnu and Śiva and the other gods remain on the śilā! Let this sacred spot be known by my name. Let all tīrthas be centered in the midst of Gayā which is five krośas in extent and in Gayāśiras which is one krośa and do good to people. May all the gods remain here in manifest forms (images &c) and unmanifest forms (such as footprints &c)! Those to whom śrāddha with pindas is offered may go to the world of Brahmā and all grave sins like brāhmana-murder be destroyed at once.' The gods said 'Let it be so.' Then Brahmā gave to the brāhmanas Gayā (with its extent of five krośas), 55 villages, well-furnished houses, desire-yielding cow and trees, a river flowing with milk, golden wells, heaps of food, but enjoined on them not to beg from any one else. But the brāhmanas, greedy as they were, performed a sacrifice for Dharma in Dharmāranya and begged him for fees. Then Brahmā came, cursed them and took away everything from them. When the brāhmanas bewailed that they had been deprived of everything and their livelihood should be provided for, Brahmā said that they would live on the charity of pilgrims to Gayā and those who would honour them would be honouring Brahmā.

Chap. 107 deals with the story of the śilā[1491] that was placed on the head of Gayāsura for making it stable. Dharma had a daughter called Dharmavratā Dharma could not find a bridegroom worthy of her virtues and accomplishments and asked her to perform tapas for the purpose. She performed severe austerities (subsisting only on air) for ten thousand years. Marīci, one of the mind-born sons of Brahmā, once saw her and asked her to become his wife. Dharmavratā asked him to request her father Dharma. Marīci approached Dharma who 1490. वायु 105 60 mentions why Viṣṇu is called आदिगदाधर 'आद्यया गदया भीतो यस्माद्दैत्यः स्थिरीकृतः। स्थित इत्येव हरिणा तस्मादादिगदाधरः ॥' q. by त्रिस्थली° p. 338 In वायु 109. 13 also a similar derivation is given.

gave her in marriage to Marīci, who took her to his hermitage and had one hundred sons from her. Once Marīci being tired lay down for sleep and asked Dharmavratā to shampoo his feet. While she shampooed his feet Brahmā (her father-in-law) came there. She left off shampooing her husband's feet and got up to receive with honour her husband's father. In the meanwhile Marīci awoke and not seeing his wife cursed her to be a śilā (stone slab) as she disobeyed his order by giving up the shampooing of his feet. She being innocent of any fault got angry and was about to curse Marīci but said 'Mahādeva will curse you'. She, standing in the midst of Gārhapatya fire, performed tapas and Marīci also did the same. The gods led by Indra got anxious as usual and went to Viṣṇu who asked her to choose a boon. She prayed that the curse pronounced by her husband be annulled. The gods said that Marīci being a great sage the curse could not be annulled and asked her to choose some other boon. She said that she should be a śilā more holy than all rivers, sages and gods and that all tīrthas should stand in the slab of stone, that those who would bathe in the tīrthas on the śilā and offer piṇḍas and śrāddha should be able to go to brahmaloka, that all holy rivers like the Ganges should always remain in her. The gods conceded what she prayed for and said that when she would become stable on the head of Gayāsura, they would all stand on the śilā.

Chap. 108 presents numerous divergences in the Mss In the Ānandāśrama edition its contents briefly are: The śilā was placed on the head of Gayāsura and therefore there was union of two very holy objects, on which Brahmā performed Aśvamedha and when the gods came to receive their share of the sacrificial offerings the śilā said to Viṣṇu and others 'promise that you would remain on the śilā and would bring about the release of pitṛs'. The gods agreed and they stayed on the śilā in the form of images and foot-prints. As the śilā was placed on the back of the head of the asura the hill was called Muṇḍapṛṣṭha (lit. the back of the head) which gave Brahmaloka to pitṛs. Then the chapter speaks of a hill called Prabhāsa, of Rāmatīrtha near the place where the great river (Phalgu) and Prabhāsa hill meet, the hermitage of Bharata, of Mataṅgapada, of the bali to be offered to Yamarāja and Dharmarāja and to the dogs of Yama, viz. Śyāma and Śabala, of the Udyantaka hill near the left of Śilā, of Agastya-kuṇḍa, and numerous other holy places such as Gṛdhrakūṭa hill, the hermitage of Cyavana, the river Punahpunā, Krauñca-pada, Janārdana on Bhasmakūta.

The story of Gayāsura has puzzled Mitra and subsequent writers. Mitra holds that nothing appears more absurd or stupid than the story of Gayāsura who, he emphasizes, is not a demon or a vicious monster, but a devout Vaisnava ('Bodh-Gaya' pp. 15-16). The story of Gayāsura is not unique. The Purānas abound in stories that appear to modern minds absurd and puerile. Besides, there were several asuras like Prahlāda, Bāna (devotee of Śiva) and Bali (who was an exemplary and pious king and a worshipper of Visnu) that were not monsters but good and devout persons, and yet fought with gods. For example, Kūrmapurāna (I. 16. 59-60 and 91-92) narrates that Prahlāda fought with Nrsimha; the Padma (Bhūmikhanda 1.8) calls him a Mahābhāgavata but states that he first fought with Visnu and entered Vaisnavītanu; while Vāmanapurāna (chap. 7-8) speaks of his fight with Naranārāyana In Pali works (e. g. Anguttara-nikāya, part IV pp. 197-204) he is called Pahārāda and asurinda (asurendra). Vide Anguttara-nikāya (text) vol. IV p. 197. For Bali who was grandson of Prahlāda, a good king and a devotee of Visnu, vide Brahmapurāna, chap. 73, Kūrma I. 17, Vāmana (chapters 77 and 92). For Bāna, son of Bali and the fight of Bāna helped by Śiva with Krsna, vide Brahma chap. 205-206 and Visnupurāna V. 33. 37-38.

According to Dr. Rajendralal Mitra (in 'Bodh-Gayā' pp. 14-18) the story of Gayāsura is an allegory of the vanquishing of Buddhism by Brahmanism. O' Malley thought (J. A S. B. vol. LXXII part 3 p. 7 for 1904) that the Gayāsura legend represents an amalgamation or compromise of Brahmanism with the popular demonolatry which preceded Brahmanism. Dr. Barua critisizes both theories and appears to hold (vol. I. pp. 40-41) that the idea underlying the legend is to impress on people's minds the high sanctity of the Gayā range of hills along the western bank of the river Phalgu, that Gayā figures nowhere in Buddhism, that Gaya[1492] or Namuci or Vrtra is represented as a demon of darkness and as an enemy of Indra and that the Vedic word Trivikrama and the interpretation of Aurnavābha are the nucleus of the legend of Gayāsura. From considerations of space it is not possible to discuss these theories here. To my mind it appears that Gayā had become a famous pitṛtīrtha centuries before Christ and that the legend of Gayāsura is a post facto attempt to account for the sanctity of the place and the numerous shrines and holy places that had sprung up round Gayā.

Chap. 109 deals with the questions how Ādi-Gadādhara abided in manifest and unmanifest forms, how his gadā (mace) was produced and how the tīrtha called Gadālola became a destroyer of all sins. There was a powerful Asura called Gada, who, when Brahmā requested, gave up his bones to Brahmā. Viśvakarmā, at the desire of Brahmā, fashioned a wonderful mace out of the bones. In the times of Svāyambhuva Manu an Asura named Heti, son of Brahmā, performed severe austerities for thousands of divine years. He secured from Brahmā and other gods the boon that he could not be killed by gods, daityas, men or with such weapons as the discus of Kṛṣṇa and others. Heti conquered the gods and became Indra. The gods went to Hari and requested him to kill Heti. He asked for a powerful weapon and the gods gave him the mace manufactured from the bones of Gada and Viṣṇu killed Heti with the Gadā. This story about demon Heti is mentioned in Agni 114 26-27 and Nāradīya (uttara) 47. 9-11. Hari is called Ādi-Gadādhara because[1492a] he was the first to wield that mace and stood on the śilā on the head of Gayāsura, supported by the Gadā, in order to make (the head of Gayāsura) stable. He shows himself in the form of hills viz. the Muṇḍapṛṣṭha hill, the Prabhāsa and other hills. These and Akṣayavaṭa, Phalgu and other rivers are the non-manifest forms of Ādigadādhara. The Viṣṇupada, Rudrapada, Brahmapada and other padas are the non-manifest and manifest forms of Gadādhara.[1493] The image of Gadādhara is purely a mani-

1493. The principal rivers, hills, padas are enumerated here in one place. Unless otherwise expressly mentioned the chapters and verses in this note refer to the वायुपुराण. The holy rivers are: फल्गु often called महानदी (अग्नि. 115, 25), घृतकुल्या, मधुकुल्या (these two, वायु 109. 17), कपिला (108. 58), मधुस्रवा (106. 75), अग्निधारा (from उद्यन्त hill, 108. 59), देविका (112. 30), आकाशगङ्गा (अग्नि. 116 5). वैतरणी (105. 44 and 109. 17). Some of these are mere streams. The sacred hills and peaks are: गयाशिरः (109, 36, अग्नि. 115 26 and 44), मुण्डपृष्ठ (108. 12, 109. 14), प्रभास (108. 13 and 16, 109. 14), उद्यन्त (वनपर्व 84.93, वायु 108. 59, 109. 15), भस्मकूट (109. 15), अरविन्दक (109. 15), गृध्रकूट (109. 15), धेनुकूट (109. 15), नागकूट (111 22, अग्नि 115. 25), fest form. Asura Heti was killed by Visnu and went to Visnu-loka. When the body of Gayāsura was made stable Brahmā sang a hymn of praise to Visnu who asked Brahmā to choose a boon Brahmā said 'we (gods) shall not abide in the śilā without you, but shall remain therein together with you if you have a manifest form.'[1494] Visnu said 'be it so' and Visnu stood on Gayāśiras in the Ādigadādhara form and as Janārdana and Pundarīkāksa. Śiva also praised Visnu (Vāyu 109. 43–50). The Vāyu speaks at several places of 'vyaktāvyakta' symbols of the deity (chap. 109. 20 and 43–45) What is meant is Visnu is non-manifest in Phalgu, vyaktāvyakta in Visnupada and manifest in images and statues (vide Tristhalīsetu p. 365, pratimāsvarūpī vyaktah).

Chap. 110 deals with Gayāyātrā. To the east of Gayā is a great river (Phalgu). (If it is dry) one should dig a pit for water and take a bath, should perform tarpana and śrāddha according to one's own recension of the Veda, but without arghya (water for showing respect) and āvāhana (invoking) In the afternoon the pilgrim should go to the Pretaśilā, take a bath in the Brahmakunda, offer tarpana to the gods and perform śrāddha of his sapindas on the Pretaśilā with the mantras set out in Vāyu (110. 10–12) and offer pindas to his ancestors. In Astakās, in Vrddhiśrāddha, at Gayā and on the anniversary of death, one may offer a śrāddha separately to one's mother but on all other occasions with her husband.[1495] To the sapindas other than one's paternal ancestors he should offer śrāddha to the south (of the place where he offers to his father &c.) viz. should spread kuśas and once offer water mixed with sesame and should offer them a pinda made of barley flour and repeat the mantras (Vāyu 110. 21–22). The pindas to be offered at Gayāśiras may be in size as[1496] big as one's closed hand, or an undried āmalaka (myrobalan) fruit or of the size of śamī leaves. By means of these he saves seven gotras viz. that of his father, of his mother, of his wife, sister, daughter, paternal aunt and maternal aunt. Water mixed with sesame and pindas are offered to all persons on the maternal grandfather's side, to all bandhus, to all infants, to persons cremated or not cremated, to persons that were killed by lightning or robbers or that committed suicide in various ways and,to those who may be undergoing torments of Hells of various kinds and those who have become beasts or birds or insects or trees owing to evil deeds (Vāyu 110, verses 30–55). The verses of most comprehensive character about offering water have been cited in n. 1237 p. 550 and on pp. 616–617 above.

आदिपाल (109 15), क्रौञ्चपाद (109 16), रामशिला, प्रेतशिला (110 15, 108 67), नग (108 28), ब्रह्मयोनि (नारदीय II 47 54) The principal bathing places are. फल्गुतीर्थ (111. 13, अग्नि 115 25–26 and 44), रामतीर्थ (108 16–18), शिलातीर्थ (108 2), गदालोल (111 75–76, अग्नि 115. 69), वैतरणी (105 44), ब्रह्मसरः (वनपर्व 84 85, वायु 111. 30), ब्रह्मकुण्ड, (110 8), उत्तरमानस (111 2 and 22), दक्षिणमानस (111 6 and 8), रुक्मिणीकुण्ड, प्रेतकुण्ड, नि क्षारा (नि.क्षीरा) पुष्करिणी (108.84), मतङ्गवापी (111. 24). The sacred sites are पञ्चलोक, सप्तलोक, वैकुण्ठ, लोहदण्डक (all four, in 109 16), गोप्रचार (111. 35–37 where there were mango trees established by ब्रह्मा), धर्मारण्य (111. 23), ब्रह्मयूप (अग्नि 115. 39 and वनपर्व 84. 86). The sacred trees are, अक्षयवट (वनपर्व 84. 83, 95. 14, वायु 105 45, 111 79–81, अग्नि 115. 70–73), आम्र near गोप्रचार (111 35–37), गृध्रकूटवट (108. 63), महाबोधितरु (111 26–27, अग्नि 115 37). The verse about the mango tree is famous 'एको मुनि· कुम्भकुशाग्रहस्त आम्रस्य मूले सलिलं ददानः। आम्रश्च सिक्त· पितरश्च तृप्ता एका क्रिया द्व्यर्थकरी प्रसिद्धा ॥' वायु. 111 37, अग्नि. 115 40, नारदीय (उत्तर) 46. 7, पद्म, सृष्टिखण्ड 11 77 There are several other तीर्थs, such as फल्ग्वीश, फल्गुचण्डी, अङ्गारकेश्वर (all in अग्नि 116. 29) which are not mentioned here.

The पद (stone slabs with foot prints thereon) are. वायु. 111. 46–58 mention 16 by name and refer to others generally अग्नि. 115. 48–53 mentions at least 13. The पदs mentioned by वायु. are विष्णु, रुद्र, ब्रह्मा, कश्यप, दक्षिणाग्नि, गार्हपत्य, आहवनीय, सभ्य, आवसथ्य, शक्र, अगस्त्य, क्रौञ्च, मातङ्ग, सूर्य, कार्तिकेय and गणेश. वायु. 111. 56 states that four out of these are most eminent viz. of काश्यप, विष्णु, रुद्र and ब्रह्मा नारदीय (उत्तर) 46. 27 states that विष्णुपद and रुद्रपद are superior, but ब्रह्मपद is superior to all.

Chap. 111 deals with the order in which the several tīrthas are to be visited. The full pilgrimage lasts for seven days. In chap. 110 it has been stated as shown above that on entering Gayā, a pilgrim takes a bath in the Phalgu water, performs tarpana and śrāddha, then on the same day he goes to the Pretaśilā (which is a part of the Śilā as stated in Vāyu 108 15) and performs a śrāddha there and offers pindas with boiled rice and ghee (Vāyu 110.15). On doing this the persons for whom this is done become free from the position of preta. It is stated (in Vāyu 108. 17–22) that one should bathe in the Rāmatīrtha which is near the place where Phalgu meets the Prabhāsa hill. By bath in Rāmatīrtha and offering of śrāddha and pinda there the persons for whom this is done become pitṛs (being already free from pretatva by the śrāddha on pretaśilā). On a hill on the south of Pretaśilā one should offer a bali (food offered with kuśa, sesame and water) to Yamarāja and Dharmarāja and to the two dogs Śyāma and Śabala. On the next day after entering Gayā (i. e. the 2nd day), the pilgrim should proceed to the Pretaparvata[1497] (Vāyu 110.8) and take a bath in the Brahmakunda and perform tarpana, śrāddha and giving of pindas mixed with sesame, ghee, curds and honey to his ancestors (father, grandfather &c.) with the mantras 'pitā pitāmahaścaiva' (Vāyu 110. 23–24). Then the pilgrim should offer on kuśas, water, sesame and pindas to persons related in various ways with the mantras 'asmat-kule mṛtā ye ca &c., (Vāyu 110. 34–55). He should then invoke the gods to be witnesses to the fact of his having come to Gayā and become free from the debt to the ancestors (Vāyu 110. 59–60). It is stated in Vāyu 110.61 that at all sacred spots in Gayā the offering of pindas should be done in the same way as at Pretaparvata[1498].

On the third day of entering Gaya one has to perform Pañcatīrthī rites[1499] (Vāyu 111. 1 ff.). The pilgrim first bathes in Uttaramānasa, offers tarpana to gods, gives water and śrāddha and pindas to his ancestors with the mantras (Vāyu 110. 21–24). The fruit of this rite is the inexhaustible gratification of the pitṛs. Then the pilgrim goes to the three tīrthas which constitute Daksinamānasa, viz. Udīcītīrtha (on the north), Kanakhala (in the middle) and Daksinamānasa

1497. On प्रेतपर्वत and ब्रह्मकुण्ड, the त्रिस्थली° p. 355 remarks 'प्रेतपर्वतो गयावायव्यादिशि गयातो गव्यूत्यधिकदूरस्थ.। ब्रह्मकुण्डे प्रेतपर्वतमूल ईशानभागे।'.

1499. The five तीर्थs are उत्तरमानस, उदीचीतीर्थ, कनखल, दक्षिणमानस and फल्गु. The त्रिस्थली° says (p. 360) that one has not to take a bath in each of these i. e there are not five baths on this day. Phalgutīrtha is the same as Gayāśiras and is defined in वायु 111. 22 'नागकूटाद्गृध्रकूटाद्यूपादुत्तरमानसात्। एतद्गयाशिरः प्रोक्तं फल्गुतीर्थं तदुच्यते॥. The अग्निपु. (115. 25–26) differs 'नागाज्जनार्दनात्कूपाद्वटाच्चोत्तरमानसात्। एत... च्यते॥. गरुड. I. 83 4 is 'नागाज्जना° ... तदुच्यते॥ The त्रिस्थली° p. 359 reads मुण्डपृष्ठान्नगाधस्तात्फल्गुतीर्थमनुत्तमम्।

(on the south). At each of these three there is a śrāddha. Then the pilgrim goes to the Phalgutīrtha, which is the best of all (Gayā) tīrthas. The pilgrim performs tarpaṇa and śrāddha with piṇḍas on Phalgu. This śrāddha at Phalgu results in mukti for the performer and also for those for whose benefit it is performed (muktir-bhavati kartṝṇām pitṝṇām śrāddhataḥ sadā, Vāyu 110. 13). It is stated that Phalgu is Ādi-Gadādhara himself in a fluid form.[1500] By bath in Phalgu and seeing Gadādhara a man saves himself, ten ancestors and ten descendants. Then he worships Gadādhara by a bath with pañcāmṛta after bowing[1500a] to Vāsudeva, Saṅkarṣaṇa, Pradyumna, Aniruddha, Viṣṇu, Śrīdhara. On the 2nd day of the Pañcatīrthī rites (i. e. 4th day from entering Gayā) the pilgrim should repair to Dharmāraṇya which is so-called because Dharma performed a sacrifice there. Then the pilgrim should bathe in the Mataṅgavāpī (which is situated in Dharmāraṇya), then he should perform tarpaṇa, śrāddha and piṇḍadāna at the well called Brahmatīrtha and also in the space between Brahmatīrtha and Brahmayūpa; then bow to Brahmā and Dharmeśvara.[1501] He should bow to the Mahābodhi tree (i. e. the sacred pippala) and perform śrāddha also underneath it. Agni 115. 34–37 and Nāradīya (uttara) 45. 104 refer to these tīrthas. On the third day of the Pañcatīrthī rites (i. e. on 5th day from entering Gayā) the pilgrim should bathe in Brahmasaras and perform śrāddha with piṇḍas between the Brahmakūpa and the Yūpa (sacrificial post) raised by Brahmā when he performed a sacrifice. By this śrāddha the pilgrim saves his pitṛs.[1502] He should go round the Brahma-yūpa and bow

1501. Dr. Barua (in 'Gayā and Buddha-Gayā' vol I p 22 note) holds that Dharma and Dharmeśvara refer to Buddha, while O'Malley (in J. A. S B. vol. LXXII for 1904 part 3, p. 5) takes Dharma to mean Yama. I am inclined to agree with O'Malley. Padma, Sṛṣṭikhaṇḍa 11. 73, states that there are three araṇyas for piṇḍadāna viz Puṣkarāraṇya, Naimiṣāraṇya and Dharmāraṇya.

1502. It may be noted that the three verses (Vāyu 111. 27–29) addressed to महाबोधितरु do not occur in त्रिस्थली° p 361, which gives two other verses instead viz चलद्दलाय वृक्षाय सर्वदा चलविष्णवे। बोधितत्त्वाय यज्ञाय अश्वत्थाय नमो नमः॥ एकादशोऽसि रुद्राणां वसूनामष्टमस्तथा। नारायणोऽसि देवानां वृक्षराजोऽसि पिप्पल॥. The त्रिस्थली° remarks that in some mss. even these two are not to be found.

to Brahmā. There are mango trees near Gopracāra established by Brahmā. By watering a mango with water from the Brahmasaras the pitṛs attain mokṣa. Here follows the verse ('eko muniḥ' &c.) quoted above (n 1493). Then a bali should be offered to Yama and Dharmarāja, then to the two dogs of Yama, then he should offer a bali to crows and then bathe (in Brahmasaras). This is briefly a summary of Vāyu 111 30–40. Some of these details are mentioned by Agni 115. 34–40 and Nāradīya (uttara) 46. Then on the 4th day of the Pañcatīrthī rites (i. e. 6th day from entrance into Gayā) the pilgrim should take an ordinary bath in the Phalgu and should then perform śrāddhas at the several padas on Gayāśiras which is near Phalgutīrtha. Gayāśiras extends from Krauñcapāda up to Phalgutīrtha. Śrāddha offered here (on Gayāsiras) becomes inexhaustible.[1503] Here Ādi-Gadādhara abides in the form of Viṣnupada. By performing a śrāddha with piṇḍas on Viṣṇupada (which is a footprint on a slab deemed to be of Viṣṇu) the pilgrim saves one thousand families and takes them and himself to the blissful, inexhaustible and never-ending world of Viṣṇu. Then Vāyu 111. 47–56 deal with the rewards of śrāddhas performed at Rudrapada, Brahmapada and 14 other padas expressly named by it.[1504] 'For whomsoever by name a pilgrim offers a piṇḍa on Gayāśiras, that man, if in hell, goes to heaven and if in heaven he secures mokṣa.'

On the 5th day of the Pañcatīrthī rites (i. e. the 7th day from entering Gayā), the pilgrim should bathe in the sacred place called Gadālola.[1505] By performing śrāddha with pindas at Gadālola he takes his pitrs and himself to the world of Brahmā. Then at the Aksayavata he should perform a śrāddha and honour the (Gayā) brāhmaṇas established by Brahmā with offerings and food When they are gratified gods together with pitṛs become gratified.[1506] Then the pilgrim should bow to the Akṣayavaṭa and worship it with a mantra and also bow to worship Prapitāmaha. Agni 115. 69-73 and Nāradīya (uttara) chap. 47 also refer to these.

The Tristhalīsetu (p 368) remarks that the above are the fixed rites for seven days in Gayā, that other tīrthas may be visited according to one's convenience if one stays in Gayā for half a month or a month; that the śrāddha at the Pretaśilā is to be the first and that at the Akṣayavaṭa is to be performed at the end,[1507] and that although there is variation between the order in which tīrthas are to be visited on the several days according to the Vāyupurāṇa, the Agnipurāṇa and other purāṇas, yet as the Vāyupurāṇa is most detailed as regards Gayā rites, the order therein should be followed and that one not knowing the order may visit the tīrthas in any order[1508] except Pretaśilā and Akṣayavaṭa. Gayāyātrā, chapter 112 of the Vāyupurāṇa, refers to king Gaya who performed a yajña and who got two boons, one about the restoration of the Gayā brāhmaṇas to favour and the other that Gayāpurī be named after him and who then went to Viṣṇuloka. Then it narrates the story of king Viśāla (verses 7-15) who being sonless performed piṇḍadāna on Gayāśirṣa and thereby saved his three ancestors, got a son and also himself went to heaven. Then another story is told (verses 16-20) of a deceased person, who was in the condition of a preta, offering one-sixth of his property to a trader and asking him to perform Gayāśrāddha with the rest of his wealth and who on account of śrāddha at Gayā became free from the condition of preta.[1509] Then verses 20-60 mention several other tīrthas of Gayā such as Gāyatrītīrtha, Prācī-sarasvatītīrtha, Viśālā, Lelihāna, the hermitage of Bharata, Mundaprstha, Ākāśagangā, Vaitaranī and other rivers and sacred places. It winds up by saying that six Gayās confer mukti (by worship and piṇḍadāna at them), viz. Gayāgaja, Gayāditya, Gāyatrī (tīrtha), Gadādhara, Gayā and Gayāśiras.[1509a]

The Agnipurāna (chap 116. 1-34) has a long list of tīrthas at Gayā that is quoted by the Tristhalīsetu pp. 376-378, which are passed over here.

Though the number of tīrthas at Gayā is very large, the majority of pilgrims do not visit them all. Visits to three places are absolutely necessary for every pilgrim to Gayā, viz. Phalgu river, Visnupada and Aksayavata, at all of which worship has to be done with milk, water, flowers, sandalwood paste, tāmbūla, lighted lamp and pindas to ancestors have to be offered. The Visnupada temple is built over the footprint of Visnu on the rock to the west of the river Phalgu The old town of Gayā was built round Visnupada and it is the largest and most important temple in Gayā. The footprint (about 16 inches in length) deemed to be God Visnu's is inside an octagonal basin plated with silver. Pilgrims of all castes (except untouchables) surround the basin and cast their offerings inside the basin, though for a substantial payment the priests clear out all people, shut the door for a minute or two and allow a very orthodox or a rich person to make his offerings without being disturbed by anyone else There are 45 vedis (or sacred places) at which the leisured pilgrim may offer pindas in the Gayāksetra which extends from about five miles to the north-west of Old Gayā town to about 7 miles south of it. Though the ancient Buddhist works and Fa Hien and Hiouen Thsang make a distinction between Gayā and Uruvilvā or Uruvelā where Buddha attained Enlightenment after six years of severe tapas, the Bodhi tree (Mahābodhitaru) was recognized by the Gayāmāhātmya as one of the sacred places which Hindu pilgrims should visit and is so regarded even now. When the Hindus appropriated Buddhist sacred places to themselves it is difficult to say. The Bodhi tree is the oldest historical tree in the world A branch of it is said to have been transplanted to Ceylon in the times of the great Emperor Aśoka (about 250 B.C) and at Kandy in Ceylon a pippala tree is even now shown as that transplanted tree or the successor of that branch. The Gayāśirsa[1510] is a set of rocky hills such as Gayāśirsa, Mundaprstha, Prabhāsa, Grdhrakūta, Nāgakūta, ranging over one krośa (about two miles).

It has been already stated above (p 666) that the rites at the Aksayavata are the last in the pilgrimage to Gayā. The Gayāwal priest binds the thumbs or hands of the pilgrim with a garland of flowers and receives his fees He gives sweetmeats to the pilgrim as prasāda, applies tilaka to the pilgrim's forehead, touches the pilgrim on his back, pronounces the word 'suphala' (the pilgrimage has been fruitful or successful), declares that the pilgrim's ancestors have gone to heaven and blesses the pilgrim. It must be noted that there is a special class of priests called Dhāmin who alone (and not the ordinary Gayāwals) have the right of officiating at five vedis viz. at Pretaśilā, Rāmaśilā, Rāmakunda, Brahmakunda and Kākabali, that are situated on or about the two hills Rāmaśilā and Pretaśilā (vide Bengal District Gazetteers, vol 12 for Gayā p. 66) They are regarded as inferior in status to the regular Gayāwals.

One important question on which there is great divergence of views among the medieval digests is about the ancestors to whom śrāddha is to be offered at Gayā. In the Vāyu and other Purānas it is frequently said that he who performs śrāddha at Gayā becomes free from the debt due to the pitrs[1511] or that what is offered to the pitrs at Gayā, Dharmaprstha, Brahmasaras, or on the Gayāśirsa and under the imperishable Vata tree becomes inexhaustible. In most of these passages the plural of the word 'pitr' is used. Therefore it follows that śrāddha is to be offered in Gayā to three paternal ancestors. And on account of a verse attributed to Gautama,[1512] the three male maternal ancestors also are to be offered śrāddha. The difference arises with reference to the wives of these six male paternal and maternal ancestors. The Agnipurāna proposes an option (115 10) that the devatās in Gayāsrāddha are nine or twelve. When they are to be nine, the śrāddha is for three paternal ancestors, three male ancestors of the mother and the wives of the latter three male ancestors, while there is a separate śrāddha for the mother, paternal grand-mother and paternal great-grandmother. If there are to be twelve devatās in Gayāśrāddha, then all the wives of the paternal ancestors and of maternal ancestors would be included in one śrāddha. Aparārka allowed an option (as in Agni) in Gayā-śrāddha.[1513] According to the Smrtyarthasāra[1514] and Hemādri the Anvastakā-śrāddha and Gayāsrāddha for the paternal ancestors and that for the wives of these (i. e. mother, paternal grandmother &c.) must always be separate, but the śrāddha for the mother's paternal ancestors and their wives should be one (and therefore the devatās will be nine). Yama (verse 80) appears to hold that the mother, paternal grandmother and paternal great-grandmother are always to be associated with their respective husbands in śrāddha. Some held that the devatās of Gayāśrāddha were only six viz the three male paternal ancestors and three male maternal ancestors.[1515] The Tri. S ultimately remarks that the usage of the country should be the deciding principle The Prajāpati-smrti (183-184) has some rather contradictory views as to when there would be 12 or 9 or 6 devatās in a srāddha. When there are twelve devatās, the saṅkalpa at the Pretaśilā-śrāddha which is the model of all the śrāddhas at the other sacred spots in Gayā (with suitable modifications) will be as noted below.[1516]

It should be noted that there are certain special characteristics of Gayāśrāddha. There is no tonsure (Vāyu 83. 18 and note 1485 above). One must honour the Gayāwals alone, and not other brāhmanas, however learned they may be; one should not consider the family or character or learning of Gayā brāhmanas (vide p. 579 above and note 1313). But it has to be remembered that Nārāyanabhatta[1517] did not accept this for all śrāddhas t Gayā, but only as to the śrāddha under the Aksaya-vata, since the Vāyu (111. 79-80) again refers under Aksaya-vata to the worship of Gayā brāhmanas and since following the maxim of 'caturdhākarana' laid down in Jai. III. 1 26-27 the later specific provision narrows down the wide words used in the earlier passage. At Gayā one could offer pinda to oneself but without sesame.[1518] The Tri S. (p 350) observes (relying on Vāyu) that when a man offers a pinda to himself, it should be in the hands of the image of Janārdana on Bhasmakūta[1519] and that the pilgrim to Gayā can offer a pinda to himself only when it is certain that he has no son or other adhikārin for offering śrāddha. Further, any one related or unrelated, could offer a pinda [1520] to anybody, as laid down in Vāyu 'Whether it is one's own son or the son of another (who offers), in whosesoever name a pinda is let fall at Gayā, that man attains everlasting Brahma It is desired that anyone may offer a pinda to anybody after uttering that person's name and gotra and the latter reaches the highest goal'

There are several works, printed and in mss, that deal with the procedure of Gayāśrāddha. There is the Gayāśrāddha-paddhati of Vācaspati printed at the Chandraprabha press, Benares city, the Tīrtha-yātrā-tattva of Raghunandana (which contains a Gayā-

No. 93 of 1891–95) and the Gayāśrāddha-vidhi of Vācaspati (D. C No 245 of 1887–91). The procedure in the Tīrthayātrā-tattva of Raghunandana is set out here briefly without actually citing in full the Vāyupurāṇa passages which it quotes profusely. Raghunandana appears to follow the Tīrtha-cintāmaṇi closely as some of the notes will show. After the pilgrim enters Gayā he should first make an appropriate saṅkalpa[1521] for a bath in Phalgu, take the clay from the river, apply it to his body and bathe Then he should perform tarpana[1522] to the twelve male and female ancestors (specified in note 1516 above) Then he should declare a sankalpa that he would perform Gayāśrāddha with the words 'Om! adyetyādi Gayātīrtha-prāpti-nimittaka-śrāddhamaham karisye'. Then he should perform a pūrvana-śrāddha (described above pp. 485–505) excepting the āvāhana and arghya rites If the pilgrim be unable to perform all the details of śrāddha, he may offer only pindas. Then on the same day he should go to the Pretaśilā which adjoins the west bank of the river Phalgu and is to the north of Gayā and perform srāddha there as follows: he should perform the purification of the ground, sit down on it, perform ācamana, face the south, wear the sacred thread in the apasavya form, recite the verses (Vāyu 110 10–12 'Kavyavālo...śrāddhenānena śāśvatīm), contemplate on his pitrs, perform prāṇāyāma, sprinkle water on the materials for srāddha after remembering Pundarīkāksa (Visnu), make the sankalpa (set out in note 1516). He should go through the whole procedure of srāddha up to the payment of daksinā to brāhmanas. After this he should sit to the south of the altar (where he performed the śrāddha), should wear the sacred thread in the apasavya form, face the south, place on the ground three kuśas and after reciting the mantra (Vāyu 110. 10–12) should make an invocation once in the form of offering an añjali of water mixed with sesame, then honour the father with pādya (water for washing the feet), recite the two verses

1522 रघुनन्दन sets out the formulas of tarpaṇa for Sāmavedins and Yajurvedins 'तत्रामुकगोत्रोऽस्मत्पिता अमुकदेवशर्मा तृप्यतामिदं तीर्थोदकं तस्मै स्वधा पितरं प्रीणयानीति सामग. । यजुर्वेदोक्तम् । ओं अमुकगोत्रपितरमुकदेवशर्मंस्तृप्यस्वैतत्ते तीर्थोदकं स्वधा पितरं प्रीणयानि । तीर्थयात्रातत्त्व p 3. (Vāyu 110. 20–21 'ā brahma.. tilodakam' with om prefixed), perform invocation as before of the father and others with water in folded hands and should offer a piṇḍa to his father of pāyasa or other material mixed with sesame, water and honey with the words 'Om, adya amuka-gotra pitar-amukadevaśarman, eṣa te piṇḍaḥ svadhā'. In this way he should offer piṇḍa to the remaining eleven devatās, viz. paternal grandfather and others (or eight or five according to usage). He should donate a fee according to his means. Then he should sit to the south of the place he so far occupied, spread on the ground kuśas having roots but with tips turned to the south, should repeat the mantras (Vāyu 110 10–12), perform on those kuśas once an invocation in the form of an añjali of water mixed with sesame, repeat the two verses (Vāyu 110. 22–23 'Pitā pitāmaha...mupatiṣṭhatām' with om prefixed [1522a]) and should offer one piṇḍa made of one handful of barley flour mixed with sesame, kuśas, ghee, curds, water and honey to all the twelve devatās (ancestors) together. Then follows what is called Ṣoḍaśīkarma, which is as follows. Nineteen spots for piṇḍas should be made (each to the south of the preceding) and should be smeared with pañcagavya one after another; then he should spread over each kuśas with their tips to the south, should invoke on the kuśas the persons intended with the mantras (Vāyu 110. 30–32 'asmat-kule mṛtā... tilodakaiḥ'), should worship them by offering sandalwood paste and the rest, (and if he is performing the rite of soḍaśī on a spot sacred to a specific deity then worship that deity also with an appropriate mantra), should then offer once as before an añjali of water mixed with sesame and offer piṇḍas beginning from the first spot, each piṇḍa being offered after reciting each of the 19 mantras (Vāyu 110. 34–55, omitting 110.44 'asipatra o', 110. 46 'anekayātanā-saṃsthāḥ ye nītā o', and treating 52–53 as one mantra and 54–55 as one mantra)[1522b]. He should offer 19 piṇḍas

1522 b. The Tīr C. (pp 290–292) slightly differs. It does include Vāyu 110. 46 and treats the three verses (Vāyu 110 51–53) as one mantra It is difficult to understand why the writers of digests did not say that the śrāddhaṣoḍaśī should be performed with only 18 mantras from out of the 21 or 22 verses with option to the reciter. Where the mantras exceed the number required, Jaimini X. 5 14 states 'अपूर्वासु तु सख्यासु विकल्प स्यात्सर्वासामर्थवत्त्वात्.' Raghunandana reads the five verses (51–55) somewhat differently from the printed Vāyupurāṇa, though the sense is not much affected.

of the size already stated and made of the material already mentioned with the sacred thread in the apasavya form. Raghunandana explains that although there are nineteen pindas still this is called śrāddhasodaśī as a technical term.[1523] It would be noticed that all the mantras refer to males in the words 'ye', 'te', 'tebhyaḥ'. So this is 'Puṁ-sodaśī.' There is a 'strī-sodaśī' also which only involves changing the words of the mantras in the masculine to words in the feminine gender as indicated in the Vāyupurāna itself.[1524] Otherwise there is no difference between the two (pumsodaśī and strīsodaśī). The note below states the mode in which both males and females are to be invoked and gratified.

Water should be sprinkled over all pindas three times with a vessel full of water mixed with sesame. The mantras repeated at the time are quoted below in the note.[1525] Then he prostrates himself on the ground and should dismiss (send away) them (the persons invoked) with the words 'O father and others! forgive me.' Then wearing the sacred thread in the savya form, he should sip water (perform ācamana) and recite with his face to the east the two mantras (Vāyu 110. 59–60 'sākṣinaḥ santu,' and 'āgatosmi Gayām'). If a pilgrim is unable to carry out all this lengthy procedure, he should at least offer pindas on Pretaśilā, by making a saṅkalpa (like the one in note 1516 saying 'pindadānam' for śrāddham'). He should wear the sacred thread in the apasavya mode and repeat the verses in Vāyu (110. 10–12 and 110. 59–60) and should perform according to his sūtra the various items such as drawing lines on the altar meant for placing pindas, spreading kuśas, sprinkling down water on the pindas, the offering of pindas, re-sprinkling

Then the pilgrim should descend from the hill (Pretaśilā) to the ground below and should bathe in the deep pool well-known as Rāmatīrtha [1526] (which is in the form of Prabhāsa-hrada) at the meeting place of the great river (Phalgu) with the Prabhāsa hill after making a saṅkalpa (as given in the foot-note) and after repeating the mantra 'janmāntaraśatam' (Vāyu 108 18). He should then perform tarpana and perform śrāddha or (if unable to offer śrāddha) offer only pindas according to the procedure of his own gṛhyasūtra. He should offer as done in the Pretaśilā śrāddha twelve pindas to the father and the others, the single inexhaustible pinda and the sodaśi-pindas If he cannot go through all these, he may perform any one of them. Then he should make a sankalpa and should offer obeisance to Rāma with the mantra 'Rāma Rāma' (Vāyu 108.20). When a pilgrim performs this bath, śrāddha and pindadāna his pitṛs become free from the condition of being preta (Vāyu 108. 21). Then he should perform obeisance to the refulgent Prabhāseśa (Śiva). He should offer obeisance to both Rāma and Prabhāseśa with the mantra 'āpastvamasi' (Vāyu 108. 22) Then he should offer a bali of boiled rice to Yama with the words 'this is a bali, om! bow to Yama.' Then on a hill called Naga situated to the south of Prabhāsa hill and on the middle of Pretaśilā he should recite the verse 'dvau śvānau' (Vāyu 108. 30) and offer a bali made up of some kind of cooked food with the words 'this is a bali to Yamarāja and Bhramarāja (Dharma-rāja?); salutation' This offering of bali is obligatory (on every pilgrim); the rest may be done according to one's ability. This finishes the rites on the first day (i. e. the day of entering Gayā).

On the 2nd day of entering Gayā the pilgrim should bathe in Phalgu, perform his daily duty of tarpana and worship of gods and then in the afternoon bathe in Brahmakunda [1527] situated in the north-east corner which touches the root of Pretaparvata, that is at the distance of a gavyūti from Gayā and that (Brahmakunda) is situated to the north-west of Gayā.

The śrāddha performed here is believed to be performed on the altar of Brahmā (i. e. where Brahmā performed his Asvamedha). Then he should with the face to the south throw on Pretaparvata barley grains mixed with sesame with the mantra 'ye kecit' (Vāyu 110 63 q both by Tīr. C. p. 297 and by Raghunandana) and offer an añjali of water mixed with sesame with the mantra 'ā-brahma' (Vāyu 110. 64).[1528]

On the third day after entering Gayā come the rites of Pañcatīrthī described above (pp. 663–666). The pilgrim bathes[1529] in the Uttaramānasa with the mantra 'uttare mānase snānam' (Vāyu 111. 2–3). He should offer one añjali with the verses (Vāyu 110. 20–21) and perform śrāddha. After this śrāddha he sits to the south of Uttara-mānasa, spreads kusas with tips towards the south, offers water with sesame and offers to all together one pinda of one handful of barley flour mixed with sesame, kuśas, honey, curds and water Then he bows to and worships the Sun's image on Uttaramānasa with the mantra 'namostu bhānave' (Vāyu 111 5). Then he repairs to Daksinamānasa in silence and there takes a bath in Udīcī tīrtha, in Kanakhala and then in Daksinamānasa with the mantra (Vāyu 111 9–10) and then performs salutation and worship to Daksinārka, then makes a bow to Maunārka, then goes to Phalgu tīrtha situated to the east of Gadādhara and takes a bath and performs tarpana and śrāddha there; then he worships Pitāmaha (with Vāyu 111. 19), visits Gadādhara and worships (with Vāyu 111.21), then again goes to the five tīrthas, at each of which he bathes and performs tarpana Then he bathes the image of Gadādhara with pañcāmrta. Raghunandana notes that the bathing of Gadādhara with pañcāmrta is obligatory, while the rest may be done according to one's ability. This finishes the rites of pañcatīrthī.

The various tīrthas to be visited after Pañcatīrthī have been mentioned above It is not necessary to repeat them here. The special mantras from the Vāyupurāna cited by Raghu-

1528 It may be stated once for all that there is a saṅkalpa appropriate to each bath, that a bath in a sacred place is followed by tarpana, that śrāddha is performed as on Pretaśilā with all details beginning from invocation and ending with making the gods bear witness Therefore these items will not be repeated hereafter and only the special provisions in each case will be pointed out nandana will alone be specified here. After bath and śrāddha at Matangavāpī, the pilgrim should go to Matangeśa to the north of Matangavāpī and recite Vāyu 111. 25 (pramāṇam devatāh santu &c). When pouring water at the root of the mango tree established by Brahmā the pilgrim repeats Vāyu 111. 36 (āmram brahma-sarodbhūtam &c.). When bowing to Brahmā, the mantra is Vāyu 111. 34 (namo brahmane &c.). The bali to Yama is offered with Vāyu 111. 38 (Yamarāja-dharmarājau &c.). The bali to the two dogs is to be given with the mantra (Vāyu 111. 39) and that to the crows with Vāyu 111. 40 (Aindra-vāruna-vāyavya &c). As regards the padas the pilgrim should begin with Rudrapada and perform śrāddha there and then proceed to Visnupada and worship Visnu with five upacāras[1530] with the mantra 'Idam Visnur-vi cakrame' (Ṛg. I. 22. 17). To the south of the vedī of Visnupada he should perform the śrāddhasodaśī (described above pp 672–673) up to Vāyu 110. 60 (anrnosham-rnatrayāt). About an ascetic, vide above p. 655.

Then Raghunandana briefly touches upon the śrāddhas to be performed at the several padas and remarks that the last śrāddha at the padas is that at Kāśyapapada. He prescribes Vāyu 111. 76 as the mantra for bath in Gadālola-tīrtha. Then he states that the śrāddha at the Aksayavata is to be performed on the north side of the Vata near its bottom. He prescribes Vāyu 111. 82–83 (ekārnave &c) as the mantras for bowing to the Aksayavata. Further, he speaks of śrāddhas to be performed at several sub-tīrthas, such as Gāyatrī, Sarasvatī, Viśālā, the hermitage of Bharata, Mundaprstha. Then he prescribes that the pilgrim should cross the Vaitaranī (situated to the east of the Devanadī which is near Bhasmakūta) with the mantra (Vāyu 105. 44, yāsau Vaitaranī nāma &c). After referring to several other tīrthas such as Gopracāra, Ghrtakulyā, Madhukulyā, Raghunandana recommends that the pilgrim should visit Pāndusilā (which is in Campakavana near Pitāmaha) and perform śrāddha there He notes that the four rivers and streams called Ghrtakulyā, Madhukulyā, Devikā and Mahānadī[1531] (Phalgu) are called Madhusravā when they meet the Śilā (Vāyu 112.30) and a bath, tarpana and śrāddha thereon yield immense results. Then are mentioned several other tīrthas such as Daśāśvamedha, Matangapada, Makha-kunda (near Udyanta parvata), Gayākūta. Raghunandana winds up by providing that on Bhasmakūta the pilgrim should place with his right hand in the hand of Janārdana a pinda mixed with curds (but without sesame) and on doing so recite five verses (Vāyu 108. 86–90,[1532] 'eṣa pindo mayā' &c.). Then Raghunandana quotes sixteen verses about Mātrsodaśī (which do not occur in Vāyu-purāna and are passed over here).

We have to distinguish between Gayāksetra, Gayā and Gayāśiras or Gayāśīrsa. The Vāyu, Agni and Nāradīya all assert that Gayāksetra is five krośas[1533] (in extent) and Gayā-śiras is one krośa. It had become the fashion to speak of famous tīrthas like Kāśī and Prayāga as pañcakrośa. But so far as the Vāyupurāna is concerned the Gayāksetra is about 13 miles in length from Pretaśilā to Mahābodhi tree as shown above Gayā is said to be two krośas and a half in extent in all directions from Mundaprstha[1534]. Gayāśiras is smaller than Gayā and is identified with Phalgutīrtha (vide note 1499). Gayā and Gayasīsa (Pāli for Gayāśīrsa) are well known to ancient Buddhist texts (Mahāvagga I. 21. 1 in S. B. E. XIII p. 136, Anguttaranikāya, text vol IV. p. 302). Vide n. 1510

Four of the most important and holy tīrthas have been dealt with at some length so far. It is not possible in the space allotted to the section on tīrthas to pursue the same procedure as regards other famous tīrthas. It is proposed to devote a few pages to each of half a dozen or more tīrthas and then to give a somewhat comprehensive list of tīrthas with a few references in the case of each. But before proceeding further reference must be made to certain popular groupings of tīrthas. There is a group of seven cities that are deemed to be very holy and

KURUKṢETRA AND SOME OTHER FAMOUS TĪRTHAS

KURUKṢETRA (25 miles east of Ambala) is a very sacred tract, the history of which is lost in the mists of antiquity. In the Ṛgveda X. 33. 4 there is a reference to a king Kuruśravaṇa, son of Trasadasyu.[1538] The Atharva-veda mentions a Kauravya husband (probably a king) who had a talk with his wife [1539] In the times of the Brāhmaṇas Kurukṣetra had become a very holy land. The Śat. Br. (IV. 1. 5. 13) narrates the legend that the gods performed a sacrifice in Kurukṣetra and at first excluded the two Aśvins from any share in it (S. B. E vol. 26 p. 275). The Maitrāyaṇī Saṃhitā (II. 1. 4., devā vai sattramāsata Kurukṣetre) and the Tai. Br. (V. 1. 1., devā vai sattram-āsata teṣām Kurukṣetram vedir-āsīt) also say that the Gods performed a sattra in Kurukṣetra. The idea underlying these passages appears to be this. The Vedic people of the Brāhmaṇa period held yajñas to be the dharma par excellence, as stated in Ṛg. X. 90. 16 (yajñena yajñam-ayajanta devāstāni dharmāṇi prathamānyāsan). Kurukṣetra was the centre of Vedic culture in the Brāhmaṇa period and sacrifices must have been performed there on a large scale. Hence it was called dharmakṣetra and as gods were supposed to have attained their position by what men believed to be dharma (yajña, tapas &c.) it is stated that gods performed sattras in Kurukṣetra. The same Brāhmaṇa mentions a Kauravya king Bahlika Prātipīya (XII. 9. 3. 3, S. B. E. vol. 44 p. 269). The Tai. Br. (I. 8. 4. 1) informs us that the Kuru-Pañcālas went towards the east in winter (śiśira) and to the west in summer which was the worst season. The references in the Ait. Br. are far more instructive. The legend about Kavaṣa in which Sarasvatī helps the sage has already been referred to above (p. 559 n. 1254). The Ait. Br. (8. 1 or II 19) calls that place, where Sarasvatī came rushing, 'Parisaraka'. In another place the Ait. Br. tells us that in its time Nyagrodha (Ficus India) was called Nyubja in Kuru-ksetra.[1540] Elsewhere the Ait. Br. speaks of the countries of the Kurus and Pañcālas together with the Vaśa-Uśīnaras (38. 3 = VIII. 14). The Tai Ā. narrates [1541] that the gods performed a sattra and Kuruksetra was their altar (for the sattra). The southern side of that Vedi (i. e. Kuruksetra) was Khāṇḍava, the northern side was Tūrghna, the hinder part was Parīṇah, and the country of Maru (desert) was the rubbish pit. This shows that Khāṇḍava, Tūrghna and Parīṇah were border parts of Kuruksetra and the Maru district was somewhat away from Kuruksetra. The Śrautasūtras of Āśv. XII 6, Lātyāyana X. 15 ff and Kātyāyana [1542] 24 6 5 ff closely follow Tāṇḍya and other Brāhmaṇas and mention several holy places at which parts of the Sārasvata sattras were performed such as Plakṣa Prasravaṇa where Sarasvatī starts, the Vaitandhava-hrada of Sarasvatī, the tract called Parīṇah in Kuruksetra, Yamunā flowing through the country of Kārapacava and the country of Triplakṣāvaharaṇa.

In the Chāndogya Upaniṣad (I. 10. 1 ff) occurs the story of Uṣasti Cākrāyaṇa who, when the Kuru country was struck by hailstorms, lived with his very young wife in Ibhyagrāma and went begging for food.

The Nirukta (II. 10) explains that [1543] Devāpi and Śantanu mentioned in Ṛgveda X. 98. 5 and 7 were historical persons and were brothers, sons of Ṛṣṭiṣeṇa, a king of Kuru. Pāṇini (IV. 1. 151 and IV. 1 172) explains the formation of the word Kauravya from 'Kuru', the first in the sense of 'apatya', the second in the sense of 'king.'[1544]

The Mahābhārata frequently speaks of the high sanctifying virtues of Kurukṣetra. It appears that the territory to the south of Sarasvatī and to the north of Dṛṣadvatī was included in Kurukṣetra and [1545] that those who resided therein were as if residents of paradise. Kurukṣetra appears to be called Brahmāvarta in Vanaparva 86.6. According to the Vāmanapurāṇa, Kurujāṅgala is [1546] the country between the Sarasvatī and Dṛṣadvatī, while Manu (II. 17, 18) defines Brahmāvarta as the country created by God between the two divine rivers Sarasvatī and Dṛṣadvatī, states that Brahmarṣideśa which is slightly less (in holiness) than Brahmāvarta comprises Kurukṣetra, the countries of Matsya, Pañcāla and Śūrasena. From these passages it is clear that Brahmāvarta is the holiest country in Āryāvarta and that Kurukṣetra was almost like it; we have seen that in the times of the Brāhmaṇas the most sacred Sarasvatī flowed through Kurukṣetra and that the place where Sarasvatī disappeared in the desert was called Vinaśana and was itself a very holy place. Originally the land called Kurukṣetra is said to have been the Vedi (sacrificial altar)[1547] of Brahmā, then it came to be called Samantapañcaka (or syamanta-in some passages) when Paraśurāma made five pools of the blood of kṣatriyas in revenge for his father's murder, which were subsequently turned into holy pools of water by the blessings of his pitṛs and lastly it came to be called Kurukṣetra when king Kuru, son of Saṃvaraṇa[1548], ploughed the land with a golden plough for seven krośas all round. Kurukṣetra is so called after king Kuru. Kuru is said

The extent of countries varied from age to age. पञ्चाल was divided into North and South. At the time of Buddha the capital of Pañcāla was Kanoj. Śūrasena is the country of which Mathurā was the capital. अनन्तर may mean 'slightly less than' or 'not inferior to or not different from.' The verse सरस्वतीदृषद्वत्योः occurs in नारदीय (उत्तर) chap. 64 6.

1547. आद्यैषा ब्रह्मणो वेदिस्ततो रामह्रदः स्मृता । कुरुणा च यतः कृष्टं कुरुक्षेत्रं ततः स्मृतम् ॥ वामन 22 59-60. According to वामन 22. 18-20 there are five vedis of Brahmā viz. समन्तपञ्चक (उत्तरा), प्रयाग (मध्यमा), गयाशिरः (पूर्वा), विरजा (दक्षिणा), पुष्कर (प्रतीची). Vide वामन 22.20 and पद्म IV. 17.7 for the form स्यमन्तपञ्चक

to have asked of Indra the boon that the territory he ploughed might be 'Dharmaksetra' (domain of righteousness) and that those who may bathe or die there may reap a rich harvest of merit[1549]. The war between Kurus and Pāṇḍavas was fought there. It is spoken of as 'Dharmaksetra' in the opening verse of the Bhagavad-gītā. Kurujāngala is said to be a very fit country for śrāddha in Vāyu (77. 93) and Kūrma II. 20. 33 and 37. 36-37. In the 7th century the Chinese traveller Hiouen Thsang speaks of the country, the capital of which was Sthānvīsvara (modern Thanesar which is the heart of Kuruksetra) as the 'land of religious merit' (Beal's B. R. W. W. vol. I p. 184).

The extent of Kuruksetra is said to be five yojanas in radius (in Vanaparva and the Vāmana Purāna)[1550]. A somewhat corrupt verse occurs in the Mahābhārata and some purānas[1551] about the limits of Kuruksetra viz. the territory between Tarantu and Kārantuka and between Macakruka (image of a yaksa) and the Rāma-hradas (pools made by Paraśurāma)—this is Kuruksetra, Samantapañcaka and the northern vedi of Brahmā. The result is that Kuruksetra is referred to under various names viz. Brahmasaras, Rāmahrada, Samantapañcaka, Vinaśana, Sannihatī (vide T. Pr. p. 463). For the boundaries of Kuruksetra, vide Cunningham's A. S. R. of India, vol. XIV pp 86-106 where he notes that Kuruksetra was 30 miles to the south of Ambala and 40 miles to the north of Panipat. In the remote past Kuruksetra was the centre of

I, 27 92 (reads तरण्डकारण्डकयोः), q. by कल्पतरु (on तीर्थ) p. 179 (from the महाभारत). वनपर्व 83 9-15 and 200 show that मचक्रुक was a यक्ष appointed as one of the द्वारपालs of कुरुक्षेत्र by God Visnu Should we not separate the first word as तरन्तुक and अरन्तुक? In the नारदीय (उत्तर chap 65. 24) we have रन्तुक as a subtīrtha under कुरुक्षेत्र. Vide तीर्थप्रकाश pp 464-465 for explanation of this verse. A G p 334 quotes this verse. In Archaeological Survey Reports for India vol. II p. 215 Cunningham quotes the verse as तद्रन्तुकारन्तुकयोर्यदन्तरं० and remarks that Ratnuka is the Ratan Jaksha (यक्ष) at the north-east corner of the circuit of Kuruksetra, four miles to the east of Thanesar all the activities and the culture of the Vedic people. Gradually the Vedic people spread towards the east and south and the country between the Ganges and Jumnā and later on Videha (or Mithilā) became the centres of Indian culture.

For reasons of space it is not possible to dwell at length on the greatness and sanctity of Kuruksetra as described in the Mahābhārata and the Purānas Vanaparva 83 starts by saying that all beings that are in Kuruksetra are freed from all sins and that he also who always says 'I shall go to Kuruksetra, and I shall reside in Kuruksetra' is freed from sins[1552]. 'In this world there is no place holier than this. Even the particles of dust driven from Kuruksetra by the wind take a great sinner to the highest goal'[1553] Even the Ganges is compared to Kuruksetra (vide note 1324 'Kurukṣetrasamā Gangā'). The Nāradiya avers[1554] that planets, constellations and stars are subject to the danger of falling down (from the sky) in course of time, but in the case of those that die in Kuruksetra there is no falling on the earth again (i e. they would not be born again).

It is a remarkable fact that though the Vanaparva in chap. 83 enumerates several tīrthas on the Sarasvatī and in Kuruksetra, they do not at all tally with the tīrthas mentioned in the Brāhmanas and the Śrautasūtras (except Vinaśana which is mentioned in Vanaparva 83.11 and probably Saraka which may be identified with Parisaraka of the Ait. Br.). This means that the Vanaparva account of Sarasvatī and Kuruksetra is later by some centuries than that in the Śrautasūtras. The Nāradiya (uttara, chap. 65) names about one hundred tīrthas in Kurukse-tra. It is not possible to set out all of them. But a few words may be said about some of them. First comes the lake called Brahmasaras or Pavana-hrada (Vanaparva 83. 85, Vāmana 49. 38-41, Nāradiya, uttara 65 95) on which Kuru stayed as an ascetic. A. G (pp. 334–335) remarks that the lake is 3546 feet long east to west and 1900 feet wide north to south. The Vāmanapurāna (22. 50–55) describes it at some length and says that it was half a yojana in extent. Cakratīrtha (mentioned by Vāmanapurāna 42. 5, 57. 89 and 81. 3) is popularly supposed to be the place where Krsna took up the discus for attacking Bhīsma. Vyāsasthalī[1555] (named in Vanaparva 84 96, Nāradīya, uttarārdha 65. 83 and Padma I. 26. 90–91) is the same as modern Basthali, 17 miles to the south-west of Thanesar where Vyāsa resolved to die on the loss of his son. Asthipura (Padma, Ādi 27. 62) is on the west of Thanesar and south of Aujasaghāt where the bodies of the warriors killed in the Great Bhārata war were cremated. Cunningham in Archaeological Survey Reports of India vol. II. p. 219 states that Cakratīrtha is the same as Asthipura and that in Alberuni's time it was the most famous shrine in Kuruksetra. Prthūdaka on the Sarasvatī is very highly spoken of in Vanaparva 83. 142–149. 'They say[1556] that Kuruksetra is holy, that Sarasvatī is holier than Kuruksetra, that the sacred spots (on Sarasvatī) are holier than the river Sarasvatī and that Prthūdaka is holier than all the other tīrthas on Sarasvatī. There is no tīrtha that is better than Prthūdaka'. The Śalyaparva[1557] remarks that whoever, while intently engaged in repeating holy texts, abandons his life at Prthūdaka on the northern bank of the Sarasvatī would not be troubled by death next day (i. e. he would be free from birth and death) The Vāmanapurāna (39. 20 and 23) calls it Brahmayonitīrtha. Prthūdaka is modern Pehova in the Karnal District in Panjab, 14 miles to the west of Thanesar. Vide E. I. vol. I. p. 184 for the Pehova inscription from the temple of Garibnath dated in samvat 276 (of the Harsa Era) i e. 882–883 A. D., which records the agreement of certain pious horse-dealers to impose on themselves and their customers certain taxes and tithes for the benefit of some priests and temples, one of which was the temple of Visnu in his Yajñavarāha avatāra built at Prthūdaka.

The Vāmanapurāna (34. 3 ff) and Nāradīya (uttarārdha 65. 4–7) enumerate seven forests existing in Kuruksetra as very holy and as destroyers of all sins, viz. Kāmyaka, Aditivana, Vyāsavana, Phalakīvana, Sūryavana, Madhuvana and Sītāvana. Vide A. S. R. for India, vol. 14 pp. 90–91 for the vanas. In the Śalyaparva (chap. 38) it is said that the world is encompassed by seven Sarasvatīs, then they are enumerated and their locations are specified viz. Suprabhā (in Puskara, where Brahmā engaged in a great sacrifice remembered her, verse 13), Kāñcanāksī (in the Naimisa forest, v. 19), Viśālā (invoked by Gaya in the Gayā country, verses 20–21), Manoramā (in Auddālaka's yajña in Uttarakosala, verses 22–25), Surenu (in Rsabhadvīpa in Kuru's yajña, verses 26–27), Oghavatī (called by Vasistha in Kuruksetra, verses 27–28), Vimalodā (when Brahmā again performed a yajña in the Himālaya). In the Vāmanapurāna 34. 6–8 seven rivers in connection with Sarasvatī are said to be very holy (but nine are actually enumerated) viz. Sarasvatī, Vaitaranī, Āpagā, Gangā-Mandākinī, Madhusravā, Ambunadī, Kauśikī, Drsadvatī and Hiranvatī.

Kuruksetra was also called Sannihatī or Sannihatyā. Vide those words in the list of tīrthas. The Vāmanapurāna (32. 3–4) says that Sarasvatī springs from a plaksa tree, that after piercing many hills it enters Dvaitavana. Vāmana (32. 6–22) contains a eulogy of Sarasvatī by Mārkandeya. Alberuni (Sachau, vol. I. p. 261) states that the river Sarasvatī falls into the sea at the distance of a bowshot east of Somnāth. There is a small but holy stream called Sarasvatī, that rises in the Mahikantha hills and after crossing the south-east corner of Palanpur Agency passes by Siddhapura and Patan, flows underground for some miles and then enters the Runn of Cutch (Bom. G. vol. V. p., 283).[1557a]

Till now it has not been possible to trace an express Vedic reference to Mathurā, the chief city of the country of Śūrasena. But its existence from at least the 5th century B C. appears to rest on firm ground. It is stated in the Anguttaranikāya (I. 167, ekam samayam āyasmā Mahākaccāno Madhurāyam viharati Gundāvane) and Majjhima (II. 84 same words) that Mahākaccāyana, a famous disciple of Buddha, assiduously preached in Mathurā the principles of his Master. Megasthenes appears to have known Mathurā and its connection with Heracles[1558] (Hari-Krsna?). The word 'Māthura' (meaning a resident of Mathurā, or born in or coming from Mathurā) occurs in Jaimini's Pūrva-mīmānsā-sūtra.[1559] Though Pānini's sūtras do not expressly mention Mathurā, the latter is included in the Varanādi-gana (Pān. IV. 2. 82). Pānini is, however, aware of Vāsudeva and Arjuna (IV. 3. 98), the Andhaka and Vrsni clans of Yādavas to which Krsna belonged (IV. 1. 114) and probably knew the name Govinda (III. 1. 138 and vārtika 'gavi ca vindeh sañjñāyām'). Mathurā is several times mentioned by the Mahābhāsya of Patañjali who[1560] in a famous passage refers to dramatic representations, paintings and stories which depict the destruction of Kamsa by Vāsudeva. He also cites a quarter of a verse about the killing of Kamsa by Vāsudeva as a well-known past event. Whether the town Śaurya mentioned in the Mahābhāsya on Vārtika 2 on Pānini II. 4.7 (Śauryam ca Ketavatā ca Śaurya-Ketavate) is the same as Mathurā is doubtful, even though the Uttarādhyayanasūtra speaks of Mathurā as Śauryapura (S. B. E. vol. 45 p. 112). The Ādiparva (221. 46) indicates that Mathurā was famed for excellent cows in those days. When Haṁsa and Dimbhaka, brave commanders of Jarāsandha, drowned themselves in the Jumnā and when Jarāsandha sorrowfully went to Magadha Kṛṣṇa says 'we shall again joyfully reside in Mathurā' (Sabhāparva 14. 41-45). Ultimately Kṛṣṇa is said to have left Mathurā owing to the constant attacks of Jarāsandha and established the Yādavas in Dvārakā[1561] (Sabhāparva, 14. 49-50 and 67). The Brahmapurāṇa, on the other hand, states that the Vṛṣṇis and Andhakas on the advice of Kṛṣṇa left Mathurā through the fear of Kālayavana. Vide also Vi. V. 23. 8-15. The Vāyu (88. 185) states that Śatrughna, the brother of Rāma, killed the demon Lavaṇa, son of Madhu and established Mathurā in Madhuvana while the Rāmāyaṇa (Uttara-kāṇḍa 70. 6-9) informs us that Śatrughna took twelve years to make Mathurā a fine and prosperous city. In the Ghaṭa-jātaka (Fausböll, vol. IV. pp. 79-89 No. 454) Mathurā is called Uttara Madhurā (to distinguish it from Madhurā of the Pāṇḍyas in the south) and the story of Kaṁsa and Vāsudeva is narrated, which differs in some material points from the Mahābhārata and the Purāṇas. In the Raghuvaṁśa XV.28 it is mentioned as Madhurā and as founded by Śatrughna. Hiouen Thsang states that in Mathurā there existed in his day three stūpas built by Aśokarāja, that there were in Mathurā five Deva temples, 20 saṅghārāmas (Buddhist convents) with 2000 Buddhist priests (Beal's B. R. W. W. vol. I p 179). James Allan (in 'Catalogue of the coins of Ancient India' 1936, p. CXVI) states that the coins of the Hindu kings of Mathurā cover the period from the beginning of the 2nd century B. C to the middle of the first century B. C. For some ancient coins from Mathurā, the Cambridge History of India, vol. I, p. 538 and plate V (No. 5-10) may be referred to. An interesting and informative work is 'Mathurā' by F S. Growse (2nd ed. 1880). Inscriptions contribute important evidence about the history and antiquity of Mathurā.[1562] The famous inscription of Khāravela (E. I. vol. XX at p. 79) includes among the exploits of that king of Kalinga the retreat of the Yavana king Dimita to Madhurā (i. e. Mathurā). Several Inscriptions of such Kuṣāna rulers as Kaniska, Huviska and others relating to Mathurā have been published of which the following may be mentioned: Inscription on a Nāga image at Mathurā of 'Mahārāja-rājātirāja Kanikkha' in samvat 8 (E I. vol. 17. p. 10) [1563]; the Mathurā pedestal Inscription of Kaniska in the 14th year (E. I. vol. 19 p. 96); inscription on the pedestal of the image of a seated Bodhisattva at Mathurā in the reign of Huviska in saṁvat 33 (E I. vol. 8 pp. 181–182); Inscription of a king Vāsu (rest of the name lost) of the year 74 (E. I. vol. 9 p. 241) and of the time of Śondāsa (E. I. vol. 9 p. 246); seven Brāhmī inscriptions from Mathurā and its vicinity (E. I. vol. 24 pp. 194–210) There is further an interesting inscription recording the dedication of a stone slab in the temple of Nāgendra Dadhikarna by Nandibala and other sons of some actor (Śailālaka) brothers of Mathurā (E. I. vol. I. at p. 390). From the Visnu-purāna VI. 8. 31 it follows that an image of Hari had been installed in Mathurā before that purāna was composed. The Vāyupurāna [1564] informs us in a prophetic vein that seven Nāga kings will rule over Mathurā, Prayāga, Sāketa and Magadha before the Guptas. Alberuni's India (vol. II. p. 147) states that Māhurā (Mathurā) is crowded with brāhmanas.

1557a. Vide A. S. R of India, vol 14 pp 97–106 for an exhaustive list of tīrthas in Kuruksetra.

From the above brief historical sketch it would appear that Mathurā was, five or six centuries before Christ, a flourishing city where the epic Hinduism prevailed, that later on Buddhism and Jainism dominated it, that there must have been a revival of Hinduism under the Nāga and Gupta emperors, that in the 7th century A. D., when Hiouen Thsang wrote, Hinduism and Buddhism were equally prominent and that in the 11th century A. D. it was completely dominated by the Brahmanic faith.

The Agnipurāna furnishes the strange information that Bharata at the command of Rāma killed three crores of the sons of Śailūsa in the city of Mathurā [1565]. Mathurā has been the centre of Krsna worship and of Bhāgavatism for over two thousand years. The Varāha-purāna devotes about one thousand verses to the greatness of Mathurā and its sub-tīrthas (chap. 152–178). The Brhan-nāradīya, chapters 79–80, Bhāgavata X and Visnu-purāna V–VI devote much space to Krsna, Rādhā, Mathurā, Vrndāvana, Govardhana and Krsna's exploits there.

For want of space only a few verses about Mathurā will be set out here. The Padma (Ādikhanda 29. 46–47) says 'Yamunā gives moksa when united with Mathurā; Yamunā gives rise to great merit in Mathurā and when united to Mathurā it bestows devotion to Visnu'. In the Varāhapurāna (152. 8, 11) Visnu says 'There is no place either in the nether regions or on the earth or in mid air as dear to me as Mathurā. Mathurā is a famous ksetra of mine that confers mukti; no place is to me higher than it. It is my birth-place and it is lovely, commendable and dear to me'. The Padma says 'Māthuraka is a name extremely dear to Visnu'. The Harivamśa contains a fine description of Mathurā, one verse from which may be quoted here 'Mathurā is the hump (i. e. the most eminent spot) of Madhyadeśa, it is simply the abode of the goddess of wealth, it is the horn (i. e. the most prominent part) of the earth, there is nothing like it and it is endowed with abundant wealth and agricultural produce'.[1566]

The tract round about Mathurā is said to be 20 yojanas in extent and the city of Mathurā was in its midst[1567]. The Varāhapurāna and the Nāradīya (uttarārdha) chapters 79–80 mention numerous tīrthas in and about Mathurā. It is not possible to enumerate them here. A few important ones will be noticed briefly. Both Varāha (chap. 153 and 161 6–10) and Nāradīya (uttarārdha 79. 10–18) mention twelve forests near Mathurā viz. Madhu, Tāla, Kumuda, Kāmya, Bahula, Bhadra, actor Has this anything to do with a dispute between the followers of Bharata, the reputed author of the Nātyaśāstra, and other actors? The Nātyaśāstra chap. 17. 47 (G.O.S) prefers the dialect of Sūrasena for dramas. Vide my 'History of of Sanskrit Poetics' p 40 (1951).

Khādira, Mahāvana, Lohajangha, Bilva, Bhāndīra and Vrndāvana. There are also 24 upavanas enumerated by Growse on 'Mathurā' (p. 76) which are not mentioned by the Purānas but only by later works. Vrndāvana [1568] was to the north-west of Mathurā on the Yamunā and was five yojanas in extent (Visnupurāna V. 6. 28–40, Nāradīya, uttarārdha 80. 6, 8 and 77). It was the scene of Krsna's adventures and love-making The Padma IV. 69 9 speaks of it as a portion of Vaikuntha on the earth. The Matsya (13. 38) identifies Rādhā in Vrndāvana as Devī Dāksāyanī.[1569] In Kālidāsa's day it had great fame. In Raghuvamśa VI, while describing Susena of the Nīpa family, king of Śūrasena, Vrndāvana is said to be no less charming than Caitraratha, the park of Kubera (verse 50). Then there is the Govardhana [1570] hill, which Krsna lifted up on his little finger to afford shelter for seven days to the cowherds and their cattle against the heavy rains sent down by Indra (Visnupurāna V. 11. 15–25). It is stated in the Varāhapurāna (164 1) that Govardhana is about two yojanas from Mathurā to its west. This appears to be tolerably correct as at present it is 18 miles from Vrndāvana. The Kūrma (I. 14 18) says that the very ancient king Prthu performed austerities here. The details given in the Hari-vamśa and the Purānas are sometimes confused and misleading. For example, in the Harivamśa (Visnuparva 13. 3) it is stated that Tālavana is to the north of Govardhana on the Yamunā, while it is south-east of Govardhana Kālidāsa refers to the caverns of Govardhana (Raghuvamsa 6. 51). Gokula is the same as Vraja or Mahāvana, where 1568 The पद्म (पाताल 75 8–14) puts an esoteric interpretation on कृष्ण, गोपीs and कालिन्दी. The गोपपत्न्य. are योगिनीs, कालिन्दी is सुषुम्ना, कृष्ण is सर्वव्यापक and so on

1569. Dey (p. 42) regards the identity of the modern Vrndāvana which is only 6 miles from Mathurā (in the opposite direction to Gokula) with the ancient Vrndāvana described in the Purānas as extremely doubtful on several grounds, the most cogent being that ancient Vrndāvana and Mathurā appear to have been situated on opposite sides of the Yamunā, while modern Vrndāvana and Mathurā are on the same side of the river But the references he gives for this last statement viz Visnupurāna 5 18 33 and Bhāgavatapurāna X. 39. 34 do not in my opinion bear out what he says. The Nāradīya (II. 80 6–7) appears to say that Vrndāvana is near Govardhana and along the Yamunā and Nandigrāma

1570. यमी पुण्या नदी यत्र पुण्यो गोवर्धनो गिरिः। तत्किं वृन्दावनात्पुण्यमरण्यं भुवि विद्यते॥ कलिकल्मषभीतानां विषयासक्तचेतसाम्। नान्यद् वृन्दावनात्क्षेत्रमस्ति लोकेष्वपि त्रिषु॥ नारदीय (उत्तर) 80. 104–105.

Kṛṣṇa was brought up in his early childhood by Nand-gopa who removed his habitation from Gokula to Vṛndāvana out of fear of what Kaṃsa might do. The great Vaiṣṇavite saint Caitanya visited Vṛndāvana (Caitanya-caritāmṛta canto 19 and 9th Act of the drama Caitanyacandrodaya, both by Kavikarṇapūra or Paramānandadāsa). In the 16th century Vṛndāvana became a centre of Caitanya's bhakti movement owing to the strenuous efforts and learned writings of the Gosvāmins of Vṛndāvana, particularly Sanātana, Rūpa and Jīva. Vide Prof. S. K. De's 'Vaiṣṇava faith and movement in Bengal' (1942) pp. 83–122. Vallabhācārya, who was a contemporary of Caitanya founded new Gokula, one mile to the south of Mahāvana in imitation of the ancient Gokula. Caitanya and Vallabhācārya met at Vṛndāvana (vide Manilal C. Parekh's work on Vallabhācārya p. 161). The old temples of Mathurā met the same fate at the orders of Aurangzeb as the temples of Banaras.[1571]

The Sabhāparva (319. 23–25) narrates that Jarāsandha threw his mace from Girivraja (Rājgir in Bihar, the ancient capital of Magadha) and it fell in Mathurā at the distance of 99 yojanas before Kṛṣṇa and the place where it fell was thence called Gadāvasāna. I have not come across this name anywhere else.

Growse describes in chap. IX pp. 222 ff. the temples of Vṛndāvana and in chap. XI Govardhana, Barsān, the birth-place of Rādhā, and Nandgaon. Vide also 'Picturesque India' by W. S Caine pp. 253 ff. for Mathurā and neighbouring holy places.

PURUṢOTTAMATĪRTHA (JAGANNĀTHA)

Much has been written about Puruṣottamatīrtha or Jagannātha, both in Sanskrit and in English. The following works in English may be consulted by those who desire to make a thorough study of the sacred place; W. W. Hunter's 'Orissa'

1571. Vide Elliott and Dowson's 'History of India as told by its own historians' vol. VII p. 184, where a passage from the 'Ma-Asir i-Ālamgiri' is translated to the effect that "Aurangzeb commanded the destruction of the Hindu temple at Mathurā known by the name of 'Dehra Kesu Rai' (which according to that work had been built at a cost of 33 lakhs of rupees) and soon that stronghold of falsehood was levelled with the ground and on the same spot was laid the foundation of a vast mosque."

vol. I pp. 81–167, Rajendralal Mitra's 'Antiquities of Orissa' vol II. pp. 99–144, R. D Banerji's 'History of Orissa' (in two volumes, 1930), Gazetteer on Purī, vol. XX pp. 409–412.

There are four most important tīrthas in Orissa, viz. Bhuvaneśvara (or Cakratīrtha), Jagannātha (or Śankha-ksetra), Konārka (or Padma-ksetra), Yajpura or Jajpur (Gadāksetra). The first two are still held in high esteem, while the last two are altogether neglected.

Among the Purānas, Purushottama-tīrtha is extensively dealt with in the Brahma (chap. 41–70, about 1600 verses), in the Brhannāradīya (uttarārdha chap. 52–61, 825 verses). Among digests, the Tīrtha-cintāmani of Vācaspati that devotes nearly one-third of the work to Purusottama-tīrtha (pp. 53–175) and that quotes about 800 verses from the Brahmapurāṇa on Purusottama, Raghunandana's Purusottama-tattva (which is brief and mostly based on the Brahmapurāna) and the Tīrthaprakāśa (pp. 561–594) may be mentioned. It is worthy of note that the Kalpataru (composed about 1110–1120 A. D.) does not describe Purusottama-tīrtha in its Tīrthakānda, though it speaks of a few little known tīrthas like Lohārgala, Stutasvāmin and Kokāmukha.

Raghunandana in his Purusottama-tattva quotes a verse[1572] (which as printed is corrupt) from the Ṛgveda that from the context appears to be addressed to some evil spirit (alaksmī) and means 'O evil spirit with a wicked looking chin (or that art difficult to be killed)! Have recourse to that far-off wood in the sea, that has no connection with human beings and go to distant lands with it'. Then he states that the Atharva-veda has a similar verse. Probably following Sāyana's interpretation, Raghunandana connects this Ṛgveda verse with Purusottama, the image of which is made of wood.

X 155 3 अदो . अपूरुषम्। तदा रभस्व दुर्हणो तेन गच्छ पर-स्तरम्॥' सायण takes this vedic verse as referring to पुरुषोत्तम in the words यद्दारु दारुमय पुरुषोत्तमाख्यं देवताशरीरं . हे दुर्हणो दु खेन हननीय केनापि हन्तुमशक्य हे स्तोतः आरभस्व अवलम्बस्व उपास्स्वेत्यर्थ '. सायण mentions a predecessor's interpretation of this verse viz. that it is addressed to an evil spirit (alaksmī) and asks it to resort to a boat or a log of wood (as a scapegoat) and to go to a far-off region where there are no human beings. This interpretation is natural and suits the context very well I could not trace the verse in the Atharvaveda

It would be proper to set out as briefly as possible the story of Jagannātha contained in the Brahmapurāṇa. In Bharatavarsa there is a country called Ondra situated on the shores of the southern ocean, which extends northwards from the sea up to Viraja-mandala[1573] (chap. 28. 1-2). In that country there is a holy place, destroyer of sins and bestower of mukti, surrounded on all sides by sand and ten yojanas in extent (chap. 42. 13-14). There is the famous shrine of Purusottama in the country of Utkala the whole of which is very holy owing to the favour of the all-pervading Jagannātha (chap. 42. 35-37). Men who reside in Utkala are blessed like gods since Purusottama resides there. Chapters 43 and 44 narrate the story of Indradyumna who ruled at Avantī (Ujjayinī) in Mālava (modern Mālvā). He was a very pious, learned and good king who after reading all Vedas, śāstras, epics, purāṇas and Dharmaśāstras came to the conclusion that Vāsudeva was the highest Deity, started from his capital Ujjayinī with a vast army, servants, priests and artisans and came to the shores of the southern sea, saw the ksetra of Vāsudeva, ten yojanas in breadth and five yojanas in length and encamped there. Formerly there was a Vata tree on the shores of the southern sea near which there was an image of Purusottama or[1574] Jagannātha made of sapphire, which became embedded in sand and was concealed by creepers and plants. King Indradyumna performed Aśvamedha there, erected a great temple (prāsāda) and was anxious to establish a suitable image of Vāsudeva in the temple. In a dream the king saw Vāsudeva who told him to go alone to the shore in the morning and cut the Vata tree growing just on the water line with an axe. The king did so in the morning and then two brāhmaṇas (who were really Visnu and Viśvakarmā) appeared. Visnu told the king that his associate (Viśvakarmā) will manufacture the image. Three images of Krsna, Balarāma and Subhadrā were made and given to the king and Visnu further conferred the boon that the pool called 1573. Virajākṣetra extends a little beyond Jājpur on the river Vaitaraṇī in Orissa. On 'Kaliṅga, Odra and Utkala' vide R. D. Banerji's 'History of Orissa' vol. I, pp. 42-58.

1574 उत्तमः पुरुषो यस्मात्तस्मात्स पुरुषोत्तमः॥ ब्रह्म 45.52; अस्मिन्नायतने पुण्ये विख्याते पुरुषोत्तमे। इन्द्रनीलमयी श्रेष्ठा प्रतिमा सार्वकामिकी॥ 45.71; इन्द्रनीलमयो विष्णुर्यत्रास्ते वालुकावृतः। अन्तर्धानगतं नत्वा ततो विष्णुपुरं व्रजेत्॥ ब्रह्म 58.3.

Indradyumna (where the king bathed at the end of his Aśvamedha) will be known by the king's name, that whoever took a bath once in it would go to Indraloka, and that whoever offered piṇḍas on the bank of the pool would save 21 ancestors of his family. Then the king established the three images in the temple built by him.[1575] The Skandapurāṇa contains a Puruṣottamamāhātmya in a sub-section called Utkala-khaṇḍa in its section Vaisnava-khanda, where the story of Indradyumna is given with some variations.

Stripping this story of the supernatural, it appears probable that the holy place Purusottama was called Nīlācala in very ancient times, that Kṛṣna worship was introduced from Northern India at that place, and that three images of wood were established in comparatively early times. It may be stated here that in the Maitrāyanī Upanisad[1576] an Indradyumna is named among a host of cakravartins. The Kūrmapurāṇa (II. 35. 27) makes a brief and colourless reference to Purusottama (tīrthaṁ Nārāyanasyānyat-nāmnā tu Purusottamam). Rajendralal Mitra ('Antiquities of Orissa') surmises that there were three periods in the history of the Purusottama-ksetra, viz. early Hindu period, the Buddhist period and the Vaisnava period (after the 5th century A. D. when Buddhism began to wane). He notices that from about the 7th century A. D. considerable temple records on palm leaves exist, but that the temple records for the Buddhist period are untrustworthy (p. 104) and that there are indications that Purī was probably a place of Buddhist sanctuary (p. 107). The indications of the existence of Buddhism in Orissa are the existence of Aśoka's rock edicts on the Dhauli Hill (C. I. I. vol. I. pp. 84–100), the existence of many caves of the Buddhist period on the Khandagiri range about five miles to the west of Bhuvaneśvara, the procession of the car of Jagannātha which resembles the procession of Buddha's Tooth relic as described by Fa Hien (Hunter's Orissa, vol. I, p. 131–132) and the three crude wooden images of Krsna, Subhadrā and Balarāma which are hardly found anywhere else and which correspond to the three peculiarities of Buddhism viz. Buddha, Dharma and Sangha. Vide Mitra's 'Antiquities of Orissa,' vol. II. pp. 122–126 (where he gives wood-cuts showing the figures of the images and comparing them with Buddhist symbols and Cunningham's 'Ancient Goegraphy of India' pp. 510–511 (the remarks in which appear to me far-fetched). In J. R. A. S. vol. 18 at p. 402 (new series) Sewell thinks that the celebrated image of Jagannātha was originally one of the Triśūlas or developed Taurus symbols.

At present the sacred enclosure of Jagannātha is a square surrounded by a massive stone wall 20 feet high, 652 feet long and 630 feet broad with 120 temples containing various forms of God, 13 being temples of Śiva, some more of Pārvatī and a temple of the Sun. This clearly shows the catholicity of Jagannātha. Almost every form of Hindu faith is represented here. Even the Brahmapurāna gives expression to this tolerant view when it says that the holy Purusottama-ksetra forbids all the wranglings between Śaivas and the devotees of Visnu.[1576a] The great Pagoda of Jagannātha has four chambers, the first being the Hall of Offerings (bhoga-mandira), the 2nd the pillared hall for music and dance (the nata mandira), the third the audience hall where pilgrims assemble (the Jaganmohana mandira) and the 4th the inner sanctuary. The great Pagoda of Jagannātha has a conical tower 192 feet high surmounted by a cakra[1577] and a flag. The temple is situated at the distance of about seven furlongs from the sea shore and stands on a mound about 20 feet above the level of the surrounding ground, the mound being dignified by being called Nīlagiri (the blue hill). There is a large gate-way on each side of the enclosure, that on the east being the most magnificent On each side of the entrance there is a colossal crouching lion and hence the door-way is called simha-dvāra (lion gate).

There are certain peculiar features of the great shrine of Jagannātha. In the first place, in the court of Jagannātha and outside the Lion Gate no distinction of caste[1578] is observed Jagannātha is the god of all people. The second special feature is that the holy rice cooked as offering to Jagannātha is regarded as so sanctified that all barriers of caste are transcended, so much so that a Purī priest will receive the holy food even from a low caste Hindu. The feeling is that cooked rice when once placed before Jagannātha never ceases to be pure. Hence the Mahāprasāda is dried, is taken to all parts of India and at the periodical śrāddhas among Vaisnavas a grain of this holy rice is invariably put on the cake as the most sacred article that can be offered to the Manes (vide Mitra's 'Antiquities of Orissa', vol. II p 199). The third special feature of Jagannātha is the car festival (rathayātrā) which is the most important of the 24 high[1578a] festivals at Purī. The festival is described at length by Hunter in his 'Orissa', vol I. pp. 131–134. The car festival starts on the 2nd day of the bright half of Āsādha. The car of Jagannātha is about 45 feet in height, 35 feet square and is supported on 16 wheels of 7 feet diameter with 16 spokes and has Garuda as a crest; the 2nd car is that of Subhadrā, which is a little smaller than Jagannātha's car, resting on 12 wheels with 12 spokes in each and having a padma (lotus) as a crest, the 3rd car is that of Balarāma resting on 14 wheels with 14 spokes in each wheel and has Hanūmān for crest. The cars are drawn by pilgrims and hired labourers from the temple to 1578 Hunter in 'Orissa' (vol. I. pp 135–136) notes that only 21 classes and castes (including Christians and Mahomedans) are excluded, they being mostly flesh-eating and animal-life destroying castes Even the washerman and the potter whom Hunter includes in the list are allowed to enter the outer court.

1578a विद्यानिवास (in the middle of 15th century A.D. in Bengal) wrote a work called द्वादशयात्राप्रयोगप्रमाण on 12 festivals in 12 months connected with जगन्नाथ (vide No. 2429 in MM Haraprasad Sastri's Cat. of mss. vol. III.)

the country-house of Jagannātha (which is about two miles away) amidst the shouts and emotional songs of thousands of pilgrims. Owing to the references in English literature to the car of Jagannātha it is supposed by many that pilgrims used to throw themselves before the car in a religious frenzy and were killed. But there is hardly any truth in these suppositions. There might have been a few accidental deaths. Hunter in 'Orissa' (vol. I. pp. 133-34) scouts this idea of suicide under the car and Rajendralal observes (in 'Antiquities of Orissa', vol. II. p 99) 'No Indian divinity has a more unenviable notoriety in English Literature than Jagannātha. It is certain, nevertheless, that human conception has never realized a more innocent and gentle divinity than Jagannātha and the tenets of his votaries are the very reverse of sanguinary or revolting. Never was opprobrium more unjustly cast on an inoffensive object than in this instance and none merited it less'. On the 10th day of the bright half begins the return of the car from the country house.

According to Rajendralal Mitra the oldest temple in Purī is that of Alābukeśvara built by Lalātendu Kesarī (623-677 A. D.), the builder of the tower of Bhuvaneśvara; the next oldest is Mārkandeśvara and next comes the great temple of Jagannātha (vol. II. p. 112). Manmohan Chakravarti in his paper on the 'date of Jagannātha temple in Purī' (J. A. S B., vol. 67 for 1898, part 1 pp. 328-331) quotes two verses from the Gangavaṁśa copper plates of Orissa which state that Gangeśvara alias Codaganga built the great temple of Purusottama[1579]. As Codaganga's coronation took place in śake 999 (i e. 1078 A. D.) according to M. M. Chakravarti, he put forward the view that the prāsāda of Jagannātha was built about 1085-1090 A. D. Dr. D. C. Sirkar (in 'God Purusottama at Purī' J. O. R., Madras vol. 17 pp. 209-215) points out that the celebrated Oriya Chronicle Mādalā-pāñji attributes the construction of Purusottama Jagannātha not to Codaganga but to his great-grandson -Ananga-bhīma III, who also installed an image of Purusottama in a temple at Vārānasī-Kataka (modern Cuttack)

1579. प्रासादं पुरुषोत्तमस्य नृपतिः को नाम कर्तुं क्षमस्तस्येत्याद्यनृपैरुपेक्षितमयं चक्रेऽथ गङ्गेश्वरः ॥. These verses establish that the shrine of Purusottama existed long before the date of the inscription and that the kings who preceded Codaganga did not care to build a befitting temple. It appears that Codagaṅga built only the minor sanctum and the Jaganmohana i. e. the first maṇḍapa (vide R. D. Banerji's 'History of Orissa' vol. I. p. 251).

which was desecrated by Sultan Firuz Shah (vide Elliot and Dowson's 'History of India', vol III pp 312–315). These Ganga kings built magnificent temples at Bhuvaneśvara (ancient Ekāmra), Konārka and Purī, which are the finest surviving specimens of North Indian Hindu Architecture. Mitra ('Antiquities of Orissa' vol. II, pp. 109–110) and Hunter ('Orissa' vol. I pp. 100–102) note that Ananga-bhīma wanted to eclipse the grand tower of Bhuvaneśvara and renovated the temple of Jagannātha in śake 1119 (i. e. 1198 A. D).[1580]

The temple of Jagannātha has an army of attendants They are divided into 36 orders and 97 classes. At the head was the Raja of Khurdha who called himself the 'sweeper of Jagannātha' (vide Hunter's 'Orissa', vol I p 128).

As in Banaras, so here also there are five important tīrthas,[1581] viz. the pool of Mārkandeya, the Vata tree (identified with Krsna), Balarāma, the sea and Indradyumna pool A few words may be said here about each. The story of Mārkandeya is narrated in Brahmapurāna, chapters 52–56 and in Nrsimha-purāna 10.21 ff (briefly). In chap. 56. 72–73 Visnu asks Mārkandeya to build a temple of Śiva to the north of Jagannātha and to construct a sacred pool which thenceforward was to become known as 'Mārkandeya's pool'. The Brahmapurāna provides that the pilgrim should bathe in Mārkandeya's pool, dip his head thrice, utter a mantra (chap. 57. 3–4), then he should perform tarpana, go to the temple of Śiva (called Mārkandeyeśvara) and worship him with the Mūlamantra[1582] viz. 'Om namah Śivāya', then with another mantra called Aghora and a Paurānic mantra. The pilgrim should, after a bath in Mārkandeya's pool and visit to the temple of Siva, repair to the sacred Vata, circum-ambulate it thrice, worship it with the mantra [1583] noted below. It may be noted that the Brahmapurāna 157 17 expressly states that the Vata is Visnu Himself in that form (nygrodhākrtikam Visnum pranipatya). The Vata is also styled Kalpavrksa (Brahma 57. 12, 60. 18). The pilgrim should bow to Garuda standing in front of Krsna and then worship Krsna, Sankarsana and Subhadrā with mantras. The mantras for Sankarsana are verses 22–23 of Brahmapurāna chap. 57 and that for Subhadrā is chap. 57. 58 [1584] The mantra to be used in the worship of Krsna is either of 12 syllables (om namo bhagavate Vāsudevāya) or of eight syllables (om namo Nārāyanāya). Brahmapurāna chap. 57 verses 42–51 specify the various rewards of seeing Krsna with devotion and wind up by promising moksa [1585] A bath in the sea at Purī is always commendable, but particularly on the Full Moon day (Brahma 60. 10). Brahma chap. 62 deals at length with the bath in the sea (the whole of it except one verse being quoted by Tīr. C. pp. 126–128). The Indradyumna pool has been mentioned above (pp. 694–95). The pilgrim has to bathe in the Indradyumna pool, perform tarpana for gods, sages and pitrs and offer pindas to his ancestors (chap 63. 2–5).

In the Govindapur stone Inscription of the poet Gangādhara (E. I. vol. II. p. 330) of śake 1059 i e. (1137–38 A. D.) there is a clear reference to Purusottama [1586]

The Brahmapurāna chap 66 speaks of the Gundicāyātrā for seven days on the bank of the Indradyumna pool in a mandapa where reside (temporarily) Krsna, Sankarsana and Subhadrā. The Tīr. C. which quotes the whole of that chapter (pp. 157–159), calls it Gundikā, while in the drama Caitanyacandrodaya[1587] it is styled Gundicā at the very beginning. It appears that Gundicā is the summer house of Jagannātha about two miles from the great Temple. The word is probably derived from gundı, which means a thick log of wood in Bengali and Uriya (vide Mitra's 'Antiquities of Orissa', vol. II. pp. 138–139) and has reference to the legend of a log of wood that Indradyumna found floating in the sea.

It may be noted that religious suicide at Purusottama is referred to in Brahmapurāna·[1588] 'those who give up their body (life) in Purusottama-ksetra after mounting up the Vata tree or do so between the Vata and the ocean reach without doubt moksa. A man abandoning life, either intentionally or unintentionally, either on his way to Purusottama or in the cemetery or in the country house (of Jagannātha) or in the streets (of Jagannātha) or even anywhere else there secures moksa. Therefore men desiring moksa should by all means give up life at that holy place'.

The Brahmapurāna winds up by saying 'it is thrice[1589] true that that ksetra (Purusottama) is the greatest and highest tīrtha. A person has not to lie again in the womb after once visiting Purusottama which is laved by the waters of the sea or by once attaining the knowledge of brahma.

The great Vaisnava saint, Caitanya, settled permanently at Purī in 1515 A. D. at the age of thirty and spent eighteen years there till 1533 (when he died). He appears to have made a great impression on the Gajapati king Pratāparudradeva, ruler of Orissa (1497–1540 A. D.). In the drama Caitanyacandrodaya of Kavikarnapūra the king is shown to be so anxious for meeting the saint that he declares that he would die if the gracious glance of the saint did not fall on him.[1990] This should be attributed to the inveterate habit of gross exaggeration rampant in most Sanskrit writers, particularly amongst devotees and followers of great saints. Caitanya came to be worshipped along with Visnu as a deity in Purī and Orissa (vide Hunter's 'Orissa' vol. I. p. 109). Kavikarnapūra in his drama (8th Act) makes Sārvabhauma say that there is no distinction between God Jagannātha and Caitanya, the only difference being that Jagannātha is 'dārubrahma' (Godhead manifested in a wooden image) and Caitanya is 'narabrahma' (Godhead in human form).[1591] The Caitanyacaritāmrta (a poem) of Kavikarnapūra in cantos 14–18 deals with the devotional and ecstatic life of Caitanya at Purī and presents a vivid picture of Ratha and other festivals of Jagannātha in which Caitanya took a prominent part. I agree with Dr. S. K. De that there is no satisfactory evidence to show that Pratāparudra was actually converted into the new faith ('Vaisnava faith and movement in Bengal' p. 67).

One regrettable feature of the great temple of Jagannātha is the existence of some obscene and lascivious sculptures that disfigure the walls of the temple and the presence of dancing girls with rolling eyes, to which pointed reference is made by all writers, particularly European ones (vide, for example, Indian Antiquary vol. I. p. 322, Hunter's 'Orissa', vol. I pp. 111, 135). The presence of dancing girls is a legacy from the past. The Brahmapurāna (chap. 65) in describing the special snāna (bath) festival of Jagannātha on the full moon day of

Next to the Ganges the most sacred rivers of India are the Narmadā and the Godāvarī. A few words about each of these may be said here.

An express reference to the Narmadā has not so far been traced in the Vedic Literature. The Śatapatha Br. (XII 9 3. 1) refers to one Revottaras who was a Pātava Cākra and sthapati (a chief) and whom the Srñjayas expelled (SBE vol. 44 p. 269)[1593]. Revā is another name for Narmadā[1594] and it is possible to say that Revottaras was named after Revā A vārtika on Pān. IV. 2. 87 derives the word Mahismat (as the name of a country) from 'Mahisa'. This is generally identified with Māhismatī (on the Narmadā). So the name Narmadā was probably known to the author of the Vārtikas (about the middle of the 4th century B. C) The Raghuvaṁśa VI. 43 speaks of Māhismatī as the capital of Anūpa on the bank of the Revā (i e. Narmadā).

The Narmadā is frequently mentioned in the Mahābhārata and some of the Purāṇas. The Matsya (chapters 186-194, 554 verses), Kūrma (Uttarārdha, chapters 40-42 verses 189), Padma Ādikhanda (chap 13-23, 739 verses, most of which are the same as in the Matsya) deal with greatness of Narmadā and the tīrthas thereon[1594a]. The Matsya (194. 45) and Padma (Ādi-khaṇḍa 21. 44) state that from the place where the Narmadā falls into the sea up to the Amara-kaṇṭaka mountain (where it rises) there are ten crores of sacred places, while the Agni-purāna (113. 2) and Kūrma II. 40. 13 raise the number to 60 crores and 60 thousand The Nāradīya (uttarārdha chap 77)

1594 a It may be noted that the earliest extant digest, viz Kalpataru on tīrthas (pp. 198-205) quotes verses only from the Matsyapurāṇa, chapter 186-189 (in all about 70 verses on Narmadā) and from no other source.

says (verse 1) that there are 400 principal tīrthas on both banks of the Narmadā, but from Amara-kantaka three crores and a half (verses 4 and 27–28).[1595] The Vanaparva (in chap 188 103 and chap. 222.24) mentions the Narmadā along with the Godāvarī and other rivers of the south. In the same parva (chap. 89. 1–3) it is stated that the holy Narmadā is in the Ānarta country[1596], that it is endowed with priyaṅgu creepers and mango groves, that it has strings of Vānīra fruit, that it flows to the west and that all the holy places in the three worlds come for a bath to the Narmadā. The Matsya and Padma declare[1597] that the Ganges is holy in Kanakhala, the Sarasvatī in Kurukṣetra, but the Narmadā is holy everywhere whether in a village or in a forest and that the Narmadā purifies the sinner by its very sight while the waters of the Sarasvatī do so by three baths (on three days), of the Yamunā (by baths) in seven days and of the Ganges by a single bath. The Viṣṇudharmasūtra (85.8) in enumerating a list of tīrthas that are eminently fit for śrāddha includes the banks of the Narmadā throughout the whole length among them. The Narmadā is said[1598] to have started from the body of Rudra which is a poetic way of saying that it rises from Amarakantaka that is said to be the abode of God Maheśvara and his spouse (Matsya 188 91). The Vāyupurāṇa declares that the holy Narmadā, the best of rivers, is the daughter of the pitṛs and the śrāddhas offered on it become inexhaustible[1599]. The Matsya and Kūrma both say that the river Narmadā has a course of complete 100 yojanas and its breadth is two yojanas[1600]. Prof. K. V. Rangaswami Aiyangar seizes upon the length of 100 yojanas and says (on p. 199 note 4 of his edition of Kalpataru on Tīrtha in G. O. S.) that the Matsya is very accurate, since the length of the Narmadā is now found to be about 800 miles. But he forgets that the breadth is said to be two yojanas (i. e. 16 miles on the scale for a yojana adopted by him). It is not shown how and where (except at the mouth if at all) the Narmadā is 16 miles in breadth in its long course. Both Matsya and Kūrma state that the Narmadā is (rises) from Amarakantaka which is to the western side of the country of Kalinga.[1601]

1595. Though रेवा and नर्मदा are generally used as synonyms it is found that the भागवतपुराण in V 19 18 enumerates them separately (तापी रेवा सुरसा नर्मदा) and the वामनपुराण (13. 25 and 29–30) states that the Revā springs from विन्ध्य and नर्मदा from ऋक्षपाद सार्धत्रिकोटितीर्थानि गदितानीह वायुना। दिवि भुव्यन्तरिक्षे च रेवायां तानि सन्ति च। नारदीय (उ) 77, 27–28, vide note 1268 above for similar eulogy of the Ganges.

1596 Ānarta appears to be the ancient name of Gujarat and Kathiawar together. In the Udyogaparva Dvārakā is called Ānarta-nagarī (7. 6) As Narmadā is said to flow through Ānarta it must be supposed that in the times of the Great Epic Ānarta included both southern Gujarat and Kathiawar.

The Visnupurāna provides that if a man repeats day and night and whenever he has to go inside a dark place the mantra 'Salutation to Narmadā in the morning! salutation to Narmadā at night! O Narmadā! salutation to you; save me from poisonous serpents' [1602] he has no danger from serpents.

It is stated in the Kūrma and the Matsya that a man who commits suicide by entering fire or water or by fasting (on some of the tīrthas on the Narmadā or on Amarakantaka) does not return (to this samsāra).[1603]

The Narmadā is mentioned as Namados by Ptolemy (p. 102). One of the earliest inscriptional references to it occurs in the Eran stone pillar Inscription of Budhagupta in 165 of Gupta era i. e. 484–85 A. D. Vide C. I. I. vol. III. at p. 89.

Several rivers are mentioned as falling into the Narmadā such as Kapilā (on the south bank, Matsya 186. 40, Padma I. 13. 35), Viśalyā (Matsya 186. 46 = Padma II. 13. 35–39), Erandī (Matsya 191. 42–43, Padma I. 18. 44), Iksu-nādī (Matsya 191. 49, Padma I. 18. 47), Kāverī (Matsya 189. 12–13,[1604] Padma I. 16. 6).

1604. The northern branch of the Narmadā where the island Omkāra is situated is called Kāverī (Bom G vol. 9 p. 295). Vide in the list under Omkāra

Many sub-tīrthas are enumerated, out of which two or three may be mentioned here. One is Maheśvara-tīrtha (i. e. Omkāra) from where Rudra is said to have burnt down with an arrow the three cities of Bāṇāsura (Matsya 188. 2 ff, Padma I. 15 2 ff), Śukla-tīrtha (highly praised in Matsya 192. 3 ff about which it is said that the rājarṣi Cāṇakya [1605] attained perfection there), Bhṛgutīrtha (at the very [1606] sight of which a man becomes free from sin, a bath in which leads to heaven and death at which ensures non-return to saṁsāra), the Jāmadagnya-tīrtha (where the Narmadā [1607] falls into the sea and where Lord Janārdana secured perfection). The mountain Amarakantaka is a tīrtha that dispels all sins including brāhmana-murder and it is one yojana all round in extent (Matsya 189. 89, 98). The most important place on the Narmadā is, however, Māhiṣmatī, about the exact location of which scholars have differed. The general consensus of opinion is that Māhiṣmatī is to be identified with Omkāra Māndhātā, an island in the Narmadā about 40 miles south of Indore. It has a long history. Moggaliputta Tissa is said in Buddhist works to have sent missionaries to several countries in the reign of Aśoka (about 247 B C.), one of which was sent to Mahisamandala. Dr. Fleet in his paper 'Mahisamandala and Māhismatī' (in J. R. A. S. for 1910 pp. 425–447) assigns cogent reasons for identifying Mahisamandala and Māhismatī. Māhismatī was well-known to the Mahābhasya, [1608] from a passage in which it follows that by a forced march a person starting from Ujjayinī could reach Māhismatī the next morning. Kālidāsa describes it as surrounded by Revā (Raghuvaṁśa VI 43). Māhismatī is mentioned as being on

III. 1 26. चित्रीकरणे means when surprise or wonder is to be conveyed. It is surprising if a man were to say that starting from Ujjayinī on foot he would reach Māhismatī the next day at sunrise. The distance between the two would be more than 60 miles

Another ancient city is Bharukaccha or Bhṛgukaccha (modern Broach) for which the entry in the list may be consulted.

GODĀVARĪ

No mention of Godāvarī has so far been found in the Vedic Literature. In Buddhist works there are traditions about Bāvarī, who was a purohita of Mahākosala and then of Pasenadi, who resided in Assaka's territory in the vicinity of Alaka on the Godāvarī and who is said to have sent several disciples to Buddha at Śrāvastī (vide Suttanipāta, S. B. E. vol. X part 2 pp. 184 and 187). The Vārtika 'Sankhyāyā nadī-godāvarībhyām ca' on Pān. V. 4 75, expressly mentions Godāvarī and has in view 'Saptagodāvara'. The two Epics and Purānas contain numerous references to it. The Vanaparva[1609] mentions it as a holy river in the south, abounding in gardens and full of water and resorted to by hermits performing austerities. The Aranyakānda of the Rāmāyana (13.13 and 21) speaks of the country well-known as 'Pañcavatī' frequented by herds of deer which is near the Godāvarī and about two yojanas from Agastya's hermitage. It is in the Brahmapurāna that the Godāvarī and the subsidiary tīrthas on it have been lauded at great length in chapters 70-175. The Tīrthasāra (a part of Nrsimhaprasāda) quotes about 60 verses from chapters 89, 91, 106, 107, 116-118, 121, 122, 128, 131, 144, 154, 159, 172 of the Brahmapurāna, which fact shows that the chapters on Gautamī in the present Brahmapurāna were part of the Brahmapurāna at least some centuries before 1500 A. D. Vide my paper in J.B.B.R.A.S for 1917 p 27-28. The Brahmapurāna generally refers to the Godāvarī as Gautamī.[1610] It is stated by the Brahmapurāna that the Ganges to the south of the Vindhya mountain is called Gautamī and to its north Bhāgīrathī. The Godāvarī is said to be 200 yojanas long and there are three crores and a half of tīrthas on it.[1611] Dandakāranya is said to be the seed (source or cause) of dharma and mukti and the country embraced by the Gautamī is specially the holiest[1612] A verse occurring in several purānas states 'These countries (of Madhyadeśa) are immediately next to the mountain Sahya: thereon is Godāvarī and that country is the most charming in the whole world. There is Govardhana there which is (like) Mandara and Gandhamādana'.[1613] Brahmapurāna (chapters 74-76) narrates how Gautama brought the Ganges from the matted hair of Siva to Brahmagiri where he had his hermitage and how Ganeśa helped in the task by means of a ruse. The Nāradapurāna (uttarārdha 72) narrates that no rain fell for 12 years while Gautama practised tapas, that owing to famine all sages came to Gautama's hermitage, that he brought Gangā to his hermitage, that he sowed śāli grains in the morning and reaped the crop by midday, that this went on till there was plenty of rain and crops, that Śiva appeared to him, that Gautama prayed that Śiva should stay near his hermitage and that hence the hill on which Gautama had his hermitage came to be called Tryambaka (verse 24). Varāha (71. 37-44) also says that Gautama brought Jāhnavī to Dandaka and the river became Godāvarī. The Kūrma (II. 20. 29-35) mentions a long list of rivers and other sacred places and winds up by saying that the Godāvarī is pre-eminently a place for performing śrāddha. It is stated in the Brahmapurāna that for the removal of all kinds of distress two alone are declared (as the means) viz. the holy river Gautamī or Śiva who is full of compassion.[1614] The Brahmapurāna describes about a hundred tīrthas on the Godāvarī, such as Tryambaka (79.6), Kuśāvarta (80, 1-3), Janasthāna (88.1), Govardhana (chap. 91), Pravarāsangama

(106) and Nivāsapura[1615] (106. 55), Vañjarāsangama (159) but they have to be passed over from considerations of space. A few words must, however, be said about Nasik, Govardhana, Pañcavaṭī and Janasthāna. Nasik must have existed at least 200 years before Christ. An Inscription on one pillar of the railing at Bharhut stūpa (about 200 B. C.) records the gift of Goraksitā of Nasik, the wife of Vasuka.[1616] This is the earliest certain historical reference to Nasik discovered so far. The Mahābhāsya[1617] speaks of Nāsikya as a city. The Vāyu-purāna (45.130) mentions Nāsikya as a country. The Nasik Inscriptions in the Panḍulenā caves (Bombay Gazetteer vol. 16 pp. 544-639 and E. I. vol. VIII pp. 59-96 edited by Senart) establish that Nasik was a prosperous place in the centuries before and after Christ. Ptolemy (about 150 A. D.) mentions Nasika (Ptolemy p. 156). It is not possible for reasons of space to go into the detailed history of Nasik, its bathing places and pools, its temples, pilgrimages and rites of worship. For these one may consult the Bombay Gazetteer, vol. 16 (for Nasik District). That volume states that there are about 60 temples in Nasik (pp. 503-512) and 16 in Pañcavatī and one the left bank of the Godāvarī (pp. 512 ff). But hardly any really old temple has survived. In 1680 A. D. twenty-five temples at Nasik were destroyed by the Deccan Viceroy of Aurangzeb Almost all the large temples that adorn Nasik were built during the times of the Peshwas of Poona (1750-1818). Three temples are specially worthy of mention, viz. the the Rāmji temple in Pañcavatī and Nāro Shankar's temple (or Bell temple) on the left bank of the Godāvarī near the first crossing and that of Sundara-nārāyana in Āditwar Peth at Nasik (p. 503). The Sītā-gumphā (Sītā cave) in Pañcavatī close to some very old and tall Banyan trees that are believed to have sprung from the five trees that gave the name to the place is a much frequented place. Not far from the Sitā-gumphā is the temple of Kālā Rāma, one of the finest modern temples in Western India. There are numerous bathing places and sacred pools (kuṇḍas) between Govardhana (6 miles to the west of Nasik) and Tapovana (1½ miles to south-east of Nasik). Vide Bombay Gazetteer vol. 16 pp. 522-526 The holiest spot in Nasik is the Rāmakuṇḍa near the left bank of the Godāvarī where it takes its first bend to the south For the Kālārāma daily services and the rites pilgrims have to perform at Nasik, vide Bombay Gazetteer vol 16 pp 517-518 and 529-531 respectively. Rāmanavamī is one of the great religious festivals at Nasik.

Govardhana town occurs several times in the long and famous Nasik Inscription of Usavadāta (No. 10 in Bombay Gazetteer vol. 16 p. 569-70).[1618] As regards Pañcavatī the place still goes by the same name. It is to be noted that in the Rāmāyaṇa III. 13. 13 Pañcavatī is styled a desa (country). Janasthāna was in Dandakāranya according to the Śalyaparva 39. 9-10, Rām. III. 21. 19-20, Nāradiya-purāna II. 75. 30 and Agni 7. 2-3[1619] and Pañcavatī was part of Janasthāna. Janasthāna is said to be four yojanas in extent, and it is further stated that it was so called because kings of the Janaka line secured mukti there through the favour of the Godāvarī.[1620] meritorious.[1621] The Brahmapurāṇa says that three crores and a half of tīrthas that exist in the three worlds come for a bath in the Gaṅgā when Jupiter is in Leo and that bathing in the Bhāgīrathī (every day) for sixty thousand years (is equal) to bathing only once in the Godāvarī when Jupiter is in the Zodical sign Leo.[1622] It is stated in the Varāhapurāṇa that when a man repairs to the sacred Godāvarī in siṃhastha year, takes a bath and offers tarpana (and śrāddha) to his pitṛs the latter go to heaven if they are in hell and they attain final release if they are already denizens of heaven. Jupiter is in Leo for one year once in twelve years. Crowds of pilgrims throng at Nasik in their thousands from all parts of India in the siṃhastha year.

KĀÑCĪ (modern Conjeeveram).

Kāñcī is one of the seven holy cities of India (vide p. 678 n. 1535 above) and one of the most ancient towns in southern India If we rely on the tradition recorded by Hiouen Thsang who stayed in Kāñcī about 640 A. D. it would follow that Buddha frequented the region around Kāñcīpura and that Kāñcī had a stūpa about 100 feet high built by Aśokarāja (Beal's B. R. W. W. vol. II. p. 230). Hiouen Thsang informs us that Kāñcī was 30 li (or about 5½ miles) in circuit, that in his day there were eighty Deva temples and that there were many heretics called Nirgranthas (Beal's B. R. W. W. vol. II. pp. 228–229). The next important datum is the mention of Kāñcī-puraka (resident of Kāñcīpura) in the Mahābhāsya on Vārtika 26 to Pāṇ. IV. 2 104 (Kielhorn, vol II. p. 298). Several early records relating to the ancient history of the Pallavas of Kāñcī (of about 250 to 350 A. D.) have been published, such as the Mayidavolu plates of Yuvamahārāja Śiva-skandavarman (E. I. vol. VI p. 84), the Hirahadagalli Inscription of the 8th year (E. I. vol. 1. p. 2), and the Talgunda Pillar Inscription of Kadamba Kākusthavarman (E. I. vol. VIII p. 24). The Allahabad Praśasti of Samudragupta (Gupta Inscriptions ed. by Fleet p. 7) states that Samudragupta vanquished Visnugopa, king of Kāñcī (Kāñceyaka), in the first half of the 4th century A. D. In the 'Maṇimekhalai' there is an elaborate description of the town of Kāñcī where Manimekhalai ultimately attained to enlightenment (vide S. Krishnaswami Aiyangar's 'Manimekhalai in its historical setting' p. 20). It is not necessary for the present purpose to refer to the numerous inscriptions about the Pallavas and Kāñcī and the large number of papers contributed to learned Journals. Reference may, however, be made to the careful and scholarly work 'History of the Pallavas of Kāñcī' by R. Gopalan (1928), which brings together all relevant data published up to the date of its composition.

Let us now turn to some passages from the Purānas about Kāñcī. The Brahmānda asserts.[1623] 'The two cities of Kāśī and Kāñcī are the two eyes of Lord Śiva; Kāñcī is a famous Vaisnava ksetra but it also brings about the presence of Śiva'. It is stated in the Bārhaspatya-sūtra (III. 124) that Kāñcī is a Sākta-ksetra and in the Devībhāgavata (VII. 38. 8) it is said to be a Devīsthāna called Annapūrnā. The Vāmana-purāna[1624] observes: the Jāti is the best among flowers, Kāñcī the best among towns, Rambhā among women, the householder among persons of (the four) āśramas, Kuśasthalī is the best among cities and Madhyadeśa among all countries.

Kāñcī is full of temples and shrines. The most famous are the Vaikuntha Perumal temple of Visnu and the Śaiva temple of Kailāsanātha built by Pallava Rājasimha. This latter has a large hall supposed to contain 1000 columns.[1625] There is an old Jaina temple also.

PANDHARPUR

This is one of the most popular places of pilgrimage in the Bombay State. Hundreds of thousands of pilgrims visit it every year. The Bombay Gazetteer vol. 20 (for Sholapur District) devotes pp. 415–482 to Pandharpur. This sacred place cannot claim very great antiquity. On the materials so far available it is difficult to decide when the shrine of Vithobā was established, but there is sufficient evidence to enable one to say that it was certainly in existence in the middle of the thirteenth century A. D.[1626] The Padmapurāna (Uttara-khaṇḍa 176. 56–58) mentions the image of Vitthala Viṣṇu on the bank of the Bhīmarathī which has only two arms and is called Bindu-mādhava. The difficulty is about the date of this part of the Padmapurāṇa. In my opinion it is a late addition and cannot be placed earlier than about 1000 A. D. The modern town of Pandharpur lies along the right bank of the Bhīmā river. The chief temple in Pandharpur is that of Vithobā in the centre of that part of the town which is considered holy. The Bombay Gazetteer vol. 20 describes at some length (pp. 417–424) the main temple of Vithobā and its adjoining parts. Behind the temple of Vithobā is the temple of Rakhumāī, the consort of Vithobā. There is a large staff of priests and attendants in the temple of Viṭhobā, the chief of whom are those called Badves (who are the most numerous body of the staff and who once claimed to be owners of the temple, but who are now held to be the trustees and guardians of the temple property and of the god's jewels under a scheme of management framed by the High Court of Bombay).[1627] Except the Badves all other attendants are called sevādhārīs and they are of various grades, viz. the pujārīs (who take the principal part in the worship of the God), Benarīs[1628] (who repeat mantras and hymns at different services), paricārakas (who bring in a large silver dish the water with which the pujārī washes the image of the God and brings the lamp for waving it before the image at the evening and night services), haridās (who sings generally five verses in honour of the god at the morning, evening and night services), the dingres (who hold a mirror before the God at the early morning service after the god has been dressed and before the lights are waved), the divtes (the torch-bearers) who hold a lighted torch when the last night ceremonies are over and carry the slippers of the god in torch-light processions three times a year on the Full Moon days of Āsāḍha and Kārtika and on the Dasarā night), the dange (who stands with a silver or gold-plated mace outside the ante-chamber at the morning, evening and night services). The goddess Rakhumāī has only one set of priests known as Utpāts, of whom there are over a hundred families.

1627. In Gangaram Babaji Badve v. Baji Shankar and others, Printed Judgments of the Bombay High Court for 1891 p 182 at p. 186 the High Court declared that the Badves are not owners of the temple, idol and property and that they are the chief priests, managers, overseers and guardians of the idol, the temple and the property belonging thereto and that they are bound to keep order and to bid the Sevādhāris perform the duties which belong hereditarily to those priests. In Sakharam Bhimaji Benare and others versus Gangaram Babaji Badve and others, Printed Judgments of the Bombay High Court for 1896 p. 644, the position set out above was accepted by both sides and a scheme of management was framed by the High Court (pp. 649–651) which provided for the creation of a Vithobā Fund, for the appointment of a committee of management consisting of five Badves to be elected every year, for the keeping of accounts by the Badves, and for the auditing of these accounts by a Devasthan committee and declared that any cash offering exceeding Rs. 500 was not to be appropriated by the Badves for their own use, but was to be expended for ornaments for the image and to be added to the Vithobā fund, if not so required.

The Bombay Gazetteer describes at length (pp. 427-430) the ordinary and special services in the temple of Vithobā which are passed over here. Their essence is that the god is treated as if he were some high human person requiring bath, dress, songs, sleep against fatigue and so on. One thing, however, may be noticed that no women singers or dancers are connected with this temple of Vithobā in contradistinction to many temples in the Deccan and South India.

The image of Vitthal or Vithobā in the temple is about three feet and nine inches high and together with its base seems to be cut out of one block of trap. Its rough appearance is probably due to the effect of time. The image is standing with its arms akimbo and hands resting on the hips; the left hand holds a conch and the right a cakra (discus). On the image are carved but so slightly as to be hardly noticeable except on close examination a waist cloth and round the waist a waist-band the end of which hangs on the right thigh. The ornaments consist of a necklace and in the long ears are ear-rings which touch the shoulders. On the head is a long round-topped cap. Mr.

1628. In Gangaram Babaji and others v Narayan Annaji, Printed Judgments of the Bombay High Court for 1891 p. 148 the High Court laid down with minuteness the rights, privileges and duties of the Benaris (the hymnists).

Kantak, the writer of the note on Pandharpur in the Bombay Gazetteer vol. 20, remarks (p. 424): "The dress and ornament of the image belong to a (time) little later than the Guptas, probably not later than the 5th or 6th century after Christ. As far as is known no other existing Vaisnava temple in India has an image of Visnu like the Pandharpur image, but there are two similar images of the third century after Christ in the Udayagiri brahmanical caves near Bhilsā..... Like the Pandharpur image these are both standing figures with arms akimbo and hands resting on the hips and a conch and discus in the hands". Formerly pilgrims used to embrace the image and also touched the feet of the image. But since about 1873 the feet alone are allowed to be touched.

The Bombay Gazetteer (vol. 20 p. 431, note 2) states that the image of Vithobā was removed to various places at different times to save it from sacrilege by fanatic Moslem invaders and rulers. About 500 yards east of Vithobā's temple in the bed of the Bhīmā river is the temple of Puṇḍlik, one of the most favourite places of worship in Pandharpur. This last temple is not that of a god. It only marks the spot where Pundlik, a great devotee of Vitthal, spent his last days and died. Pundlik was probably a brāhmaṇa from Pandharpur, originally an undutiful son who ill-treated his parents, but who later repented on seeing the dutiful cobbler Rohidās, changed his ways and became a very dutiful son, so much so that tradition says that god Viṭhobā came to visit him. Vithobā and Puṇḍlik have become so much coupled together that all pilgrims before beginning to dine and on other occasions shout the cry 'Pundalīka varade Hari Vitthal'[1629]. The Bom. G. vol 20 (pp. 432-434) describes the temple of Puṇḍlik and narrates the traditional story about him

1629. The writer in Bom G. vol 20 translates the words पुण्डलीकवरदे हरि विठ्ठल as 'O' Pundalīka, grant us a boon, Hari Vithal!'. This translation does not appear to me to be correct. The cry is also in the form 'पुण्डलीकवरदा हरि विठ्ठल' (which is the correct one) In my opinion हरि विठ्ठल is only a vocative and the correct form is पुण्डलीकवरदा (for °वरद) and the whole cry means 'O Hari Vithal' that didst grant a boon to Pundalīka'. Mr A. K. Priyolkar kindly pointed out to me an abhanga from श्री ज्ञानेश्वरमहाराजांची गाथा (ed by Śrī Vināyakbuwā Sākhare, 1927) which runs as follows 'रखुमादेवीवरु तो। पुण्डलीकवरद तो गे बाई॥' (p 48) and another of Kānhopātrā (from 'Śrī-santa-gāthā' edited by Śrī Nānāmahārāja Sākhare, śake 1831) 'अगा पुण्डलीकवरदा। अगा विष्णु तूं गोविंदा॥' (p. 142)

Pages 434-468 of Bom. G. vol. 20 describe the several temples and shrines at Pandharpur such as those of Visnupada, Trimbakeśvara, Candrabhāgā, Janābai's cell, which are all passed over here. The river Bhīmā is styled Candrabhāgā within Pandharpur limits and its water is believed to possess sin-purifying power.

Several important and controversial questions arise in relation to Vithobā's temple at Pandharpur; viz. the date when the image of Vithobā was installed in the temple at Pandharpur, whether the present image is an old one or a substitute, what the ancient name of Pandharpur was, the derivation of the word 'Viṭṭhal'. As regards the first question it may be stated that there is not enough evidence to establish with certainty the time when the image was established[1630] But some of the items of evidence may be briefly set out here. In I A. vol. 14 pp. 68-75 Prof. K. B. Pathak published an inscription on a copper-plate found at Bendigere (about eleven miles south-east from Belgaum), the inscription being dated in śake 1171 (1249 A. D), in which Pandharpur is called Paundarīkakṣetra on the Bhīmarathī (at p. 74) and Vithobā is called Visnu and which records the grant of a village in Venugrāma district (Belgaum) to a number of brāhmanas by a minister of Yādava king Krsna (or Kanhara in the inscription) in the presence of god Visnu (p. 74) i. e. before the image of Visnu or Vitthala. Dr. R. G Bhandarkar in 'Vaisnavism, Śaivism &c', (p. 88) and in 'History of the Deccan' (2nd ed. p. 115-6) refers to an inscription on stone dated śake 1192 (1270 A. D.) in Pandharpur itself, in which Bhānu, son of Keśava, is represented as having performed the Aptoryāma sacrifice in Pāndurangapura 'on account of which crowds and Vitthala were greatly pleased'. There is another earlier inscription in the temple of Vithobā on three sides of a stone beam in a sopā beyond the mandapa (porch) of 16 pillars, the script being Devanāgarī and the language being partly Sanskrit and partly Canarese. It was issued in śake 1159 (1237 A. D) by Hoysala king Someśvara and records the grant of an agrahāra to God Vitthaladeva who resides in a great village called Pandarage situated on the Bhīmarathī river and who made the heart of sage (muni) Pundarika expand (with devotion). Vide Bom. G. vol. 20 pp. 419–420 and pp. 4–6 of Mr Khare's monograph (on medieval references). The Mysore Archaeological Survey Report for 1929 (pp. 197–210) publishes a copper-plate inscription issued by the Rāstrakūta king Avidheya which records a grant of Pāndaranga-palli and four other villages situated to the east of Mahādeva hill to a brāhmana named Jayad-viṭṭha. This grant was confirmed about 820 A. D. by Rāstrakūta king Śarvarasa (i. e. Amoghavarsa I). The editor Dr. Krishna is of opinion that the date of the inscription must be 516 A D. (ibid. p 203). Therefore the important conclusion follows that Pandharpur was known to Canarese people as Pandarage and was also called Pāndarangapallī. This inscription does not expressly refer to god Vitthala, but the donee's name Jayad-vittha contains the part Vittha which is most probably an early form of Vitthala.

1630. Besides the Sholapur Gazetteer (Bom. G vol. 20) the following may be consulted. I. H. Q. vol. 11 pp. 771-776 (paper by Prof. B. A. Saletore on 'the Antiquity of Pandharpur'), Mr. G. H. Khare's monograph in Marāthi on 'श्रीविठ्ठल आणि पंढरपूर'), and Dr. Krishna's Archaeological Survey Reports of Mysore for 1929 pp. 197-210

In a work called 'Vitthalabhūsana'[1631] by one Gopālācārya about eleven verses are quoted from Hemādri on Tīrtha which are quoted below[1632]. Briefly they state: an excellent tīrtha ex-

I am highly obliged to Pandit Balacharya Khuperkar of Kolhapur for sending to me these verses from the copy in his possession In the T S p 7 the verse पुण्डरीके महातीर्थं is quoted from the Kūrmapurāna, on p 9 of T S. verses भैम्याश्चैव ..तत्फलम् are quoted from the Skandapurāna, as also verses अष्टा- विंशतिमे ...संयुत occur on pp 12–13 of the Tīrthasāra with a few variant readings such as वेत्रोद्वेल्लितकङ्कण (which is a very good variant, for छत्रो.. कङ्कणम् and शक्तिमौलिविराजित for शिक्य॰ and दिव्यसग्वीति सौम्येन for दिग्वासाश्चातिसौम्येन. ists on the southern bank of the river Bhaimī and there is also a rare but fine image there; it is called Paundarīka-ksetra and the greatest of gods viz. Pānduranga worshipped by the whole ksetra resides there. It is three times holier than Puskara, six and ten times holier than Kedāra and Vārānasī respectively. Pundarīka practised severe austerities at the end of Dvāparayuga in the 28th Kalpa and always devotedly attended upon his parents. God Krsna who was making a herd of cows graze on Govardhana hill became pleased with him for his devotion to his parents, Krsna who wields a stick for driving cows, who has bracelets rendered bright by (the colour) of the umbrella [1633] (shade), who is adorned with a head-gear (mukuta) and a śikya (a loop) scintilating with the lustre of many jewels, who was very charming and had armlets studded with jewels, who does not (appear to) wear any dhoti, but has his loins covered with nickers, who is set off by a girdle of three strings tied on his waist and who stands with arms akimbo and appears possessed of three lines on his belly. Though a ms. of the Tīrtha portion of Hemādri's work has not yet been recovered, there is no reason to doubt that the verses were taken by Gopālācārya from Hemādri's work, particularly when almost all those verses are quoted by the T. S. (about 1500 A. D.) from the Skandapurāna and Kūrmapurāna. As Hemādri composed his work about 1260 to 1270 A. D. and as the verses quoted by him are cited from the Skandapurāna, it follows that several centuries before 1260 A. D. Pandharpur was known as a tīrtha, that the devotee and saint Pundarīka (Marāthi ' Pundlik ') also was so known then and that the image of Vithobā was essentially the same in appearance as it is now. That Pandharpur had risen in sanctity and importance in the 15th century follows from the fact that both the great Vaisnava saints, Caitanya and Vallabha, visited it Vide Prof. S. K. De's ' Vaisnava faith and movement in Bengal ' p. 71 for मद्धाम्यामूरुम्या च्चातिशोभितः. त्रिवृतेनाङ्कालेन—makes no sense. It has to be noted that गुह्यसूत्रेण or अन्तःसूत्रेण is mentioned separately from कटिबन्धेन and therefore गुह्यसूत्र or अन्तःसूत्र was something different from कटिबन्ध (waist-band).

Probably the original reading was दिग्वासाश्चातिसूक्ष्मेण गुह्यसूत्रेण for दिग्वासा- श्चातिसौम्येन, where सौम्य conveys very little sense.

1633. This probably is a reference to the silver shade under which the image of Vithobā stood (Bom. G vol. 20 p 423).

Caitanya's visit and 'Śrī Vallabhāchārya' by Manilal C. Parekh (pp. 56–59) for Vallabhācārya's visit.

It has been already shown from the Bombay Gazetteer that there is a tradition about the image having been removed several times and brought back. On pp. 16–25 of his work Mr. Khare cites various passages from medieval writers in Sanskrit, Marathi and Canarese and comes to the conclusion that the present image is not only not the ancient one but that it was not there in the 17th century, since the characteristics of the present image do not tally with the description contained in the poems of saint Tukārām. I do not agree with his conclusions. He has overlooked several weighty considerations. He has relied upon inferences drawn from the presence of Afzulkhan and the bigoted emperor Aurangzeb in the Deccan. I have cited above (pp. 632, 692) references to the demolition of North Indian temples and images on the orders of Aurangzeb, but Mr. Khare has been unable to show any direct reference to the demolition of the temple or the image of Vithobā on the orders of any Moslem king or officer.[1634] We cannot rely on mere inferences or not properly authenticated letters or verses. Besides, the present image is so much worn that unless one very carefully 1634. It may, however, be stated that there is some evidence that efforts were made to demolish the temple of Vithobā by some Moslem king of Bidar and that the Badves (the guardians of the Pandhari temple) fearing destruction of the image removed it and concealed it somewhere else. In a Marāthi work called 'महाराष्ट्रमहोदयाचा पूर्वरङ्ग' by Mr. Narayan Krishna Gadre (1905) p 168 verses are cited from a life (completed in śake 1667 i e 1745 A D) of one Chāngā Mudheśa (who died in śake 1427 i e 1505 A.D.) written by his descendant Shamji Gosāvi Vañjarkhede (who was 11th in descent from Chānga Mudheśa) The Marāthi verses are: बेदरीचा राजा यामणी पातशहा। ब्राह्मणासी बहु छळियेलें॥ हिंदुधर्म जितुके तितके वर्जियेले॥ राउळ विध्वंसिलें पंढरीचे॥ केलीसे मशीद महाद्वार मोडून। सातमास पूर्ण झाले यासी॥ मूर्ती सिंहासनाहूनि आच्छादिली। गुप्त हो ठेविली बडव्यानी॥ verses 52–55 of the 7th chapter of the life. This was written two hundred and forty years after the alleged vandalism. Besides the same work mentions in verse 94 (chap 7) that Chāngadeva thought that the mosque should be demolished and a new temple (a complete replica of the old one) should be built Similarly, in शिवचरित्रसाहित्य part 1 p 68 (published by the Bhārata-itihāsa-samśodhaka-maṇḍala of Poona) there is a letter dated in 1581 śake (i e 1659–60 A D.) in Marāthi which states that Shivaji killed Afjalakhan who had removed the image of Vitthal at Pandharpur and that at Tuljāpur. The letter is not properly authenticated and is not a reliable piece of evidence. I am obliged to Mr G H Khare of Poona for drawing my attention to these two pieces of evidence.

scrutinizes, it would be difficult to pronounce what articles it holds or what dress it wears. Therefore, there is great scope for differences of opinion on the characteristic features of the present image. Conceding for argument that the tradition about the removal of the idol is true, that does not establish that the present image is different from the one that existed in the 13th century or before. The present image has an elongated head dress which some may construe as a simple mukuṭa (crown) with a rim: but the pujāris and common people regard it as a Śivaliṅga and the rim as the rope of the śilya that is carried on the back (by cowherds) The present image has ear-rings (as Mr. Khare admits) but they are so long that they rest on the shoulders The present image has aṅgadas (armlets) on the upper arms (and that is the description in the Skanda-purāṇa quoted by Hemādri) The present image has ornaments on the wrists (which the passage from the Skandapurāṇa also mentions). There is a girdle with three strings on the waist of the present image (in Sk. also we have 'trivṛtenānukālena kaṭibaddhena or kaṭibandhena rājitaḥ'). The present image [1633] does not clearly show that a dhoti was worn (and therefore one reading of the Skanda says that it is 'digvāsāḥ') but the Skanda adds that the image has arms akimbo. In my opinion the description in the Skanda-purāṇa (which must be held to be at least not later than about 1000 A. D.) tallies in essential particulars with the present image; therefore it follows that sufficient evidence has not been adduced to show that it is comparatively a new image and the proposition of Mr. Khare that it is a different one from the original should be held not proved. In the descriptions given by Tukārām and others (p 22 of Mr. Khare's book) actual, legendary and ideal elements are mixed up For example, Tukārām states that the god has 16000 wives (Mr. Khare's book

1633. Persons not familiar with ancient images or statues in stone might think that an image or statue is naked (digvāsāḥ) when as a matter of fact the sculpture itself shows that the image wears a dhoti and waist band and yet its private parts are shown as visible, probably because it was the intention of the sculptor to indicate that the garment was made of the finest texture and was transparent. For example, in 'History of Fine Art in India and Ceylon' by Vincent Smith, there is a figure of a Bodhisattva (on p. 143 No. 94) which is clearly draped in a dhoti and waistband and the private parts of which are yet visible. The Viṣṇu image from Mathurā (Plate VI) in a paper on Gupta Art in Journal of U. P Historical Society, vol. 18 pp 101–134 shows similar characteristics

p. 22 'Bailā soḷā hajāra' &c.). But Tukārām does mention the facts that the arms are akimbo, that there is no dhoti (digambara), and mentions the existence of a śikya, a stick, also a girdle and ornaments. Lastly, Mr. Khare does not attach sufficient importance to two facts, one being that about 1873 two Gosavis damaged the image which was later re-installed and pilgrims were forbidden from embracing it. It is quite possible that some of the features already indistinct were lost in these happenings (vide Bom. G. vol. 20 p. 430). Besides, for hundreds of years the image has been washed with pañcāmṛta (milk, curds, ghee, honey and sugar) and water at least once every day and sometimes several times a day. It is not difficult to imagine that the characteristic marks became blurred by these continual baths.

Some other matters require to be dealt with. The image is variously called viz. Pāṇḍuranga, Paṇḍhari, Viṭṭhal, Viṭṭhalanātha and Viṭhobā.

Visnu assumes in Prakrit the forms Vinhu, Vinnu, Venhu, Vetha and others. In Canarese Visnu becomes Bitti, Bittiga, Vitta &c. The changes in names do not necessarily follow the rules laid down in Prakrit or Canarese grammars, which rules themselves are often based on meagre data and Mr. A. K. Priyolkar in his learned paper on 'Bhagat Namdeo of the Sikhs' in the Journal of the University of Bombay vol. VII part 2 (1938) points out (p. 24) that in the Ādi Granth of the Sikhs, in the hymns of Namdeo, God is addressed as 'Bīthal' or 'Biṭhalu' (p. 24), that, in the Gujarati poems of Narsinh Mehta and Mirabai, God is addressed as Vitthala (p 35) and Viṭṭhala is employed by these saints meaning only Visnu and not the deity at Pandharpur. The learned Kāśīnātha Upādhyāya, author of Vitthala-ṛn-mantrasāra-bhāsya, derives the word Vitthala as (Vit+tha+la) 1636.

As regards the name of the ksetra it appears that originally it was called in Canarese Pandarage, of which Pāndu-ranga is a sanskritized form. When Puṇḍlik, the devotee of Vitthal, became famous the sacred place came to be called Pundarīkapura (as in Kūrma) and Pāundarīkapura (as in Skanda). Vide note 1632 above 1636 'विद् वेदनं ज्ञानं तेन ठाः शून्याः तान् लाति स्वीकरोति'. Vide विठ्ठलऋङ्मन्त्रसारभाष्य, D. C. ms. No 100 of 1869-70 dated śake 1731 (1809 A. D.) quoted in H. of Dh. vol. I p. 464 n. 1161.

The pilgrims to Pandharpur may be divided into two classes, regular visitors and occasional visitors. The first class comprise those called Vārkarīs (lit those who keep the fixed times). The Vārkarīs are of two sorts viz those who attend every month and those who attend twice a year (on the 11th of Āsādha-śukla and Kārtika-śukla). This cult of vārkarīs has been a great leveller. In theory and to a large extent in practice it ignores caste exclusiveness A brāhmana vārkarī falls at the feet of a śūdra vārkarī. There are certain observances binding on all vārkarīs (for which, vide Bom. G. vol. 20 p. 471). The vārkarī carries a rosary of Tulasī (basil) beads, foregoes flesh-eating, observes a fast on ekādaśī, carries an ochre-coloured patākā (swallow-tailed banner) and is to speak the truth (and not to cheat) when engaged in his daily occupations.

Some people think that the image of Vithobā is really Buddhist or Jain. There is hardly any evidence for this. When such Marāthi poets and saints as Ekanātha, and Tukārām speak of Vithobā as Bauddhāvatāra they have Visnu in mind,[1637] whose 9th avatāra was Buddha according to the Purānas and medieval writers.

The question of the attitude that modern Hindus should adopt towards holy places and pilgrimages will be briefly dealt with at the end of the next chapter on the list of tīrthas.

CHAPTER XVI

LIST OF TĪRTHAS

This is merely a list of tīrthas from the point of view of Dharmaśāstra and not a treatise on the Ancient Geography of India. The result is that many countries and towns that have no importance or claims as tīrthas have been altogether omitted. Bauddha and Jain works on tīrthas have only rarely been referred to Many of the Purāṇas enumerate the mountains and rivers of dvīpas and varsas other than those of Jambudvīpa and Bhārata-varsa such as Harivarsa, Ramyaka-varsa, Krauñcadvīpa, Śālmalidvīpa, but they have been excluded from this list. The Brahmapurāṇa (chap. 26 verses 8-83) contains a string of over 520 tīrthas without hardly any certain indication of their location and the Bhīsmaparva in chap. 9 mentions about 160 rivers with practically no indication about their location in most cases Similarly, the Garuda (I. 81. 1-31) enumerates about 200 and Padma (VI. 129) contains 108 tīrtha names. In Banaras alone I have listed about 350 sub-tīrthas. But there are about 1500 shrines and temples in Banaras alone. These have not been included. Each great tīrtha has numerous sub-tīrthas as in the Varāha-purāṇa under Mathurā, in Brahma-purāṇa under Gautamī, in Vāyu-purāṇa under Gayā. Through sheer weariness or inadvertence some of these must have been left out by me and some were left out purposely on account of the absence of any importance Besides, several tīrthas that are regarded as sacred by modern people are not so treated in the Epics or purāṇas and are not even mentioned in them; many of these have been omitted in this list Our authorities are often very vague about the location or extent of tīrthas Moreover, a number of tīrthas scattered in different parts of India bear the same name (e. g. vide under Agnitīrtha, Koṭitīrtha, Cakratīrtha, Varāhatīrtha, Somatīrtha) I am under great obligations to Cunningham's 'Ancient Geography of India' (ed. of 1872) and to Nundo Lal Dey's 'The Geographical Dictionary of Ancient and Medieval India' (1927). I have had occasions to differ from both, particularly from the latter. But, the space at my disposal being very limited, I could not enter into even brief discussions in support of my views. It would look ungrateful to find fault with the work of Dey; but it must be said that he relies too much on rather old and antiquated authorities and has not cast his net over a wide area. Often times he mentions no original authorities (vide, for example, Cakratīrtha on p. 43). He is very vague in his references. He hardly ever cites the number of the verse on which he relies and often omits to specify even the part or section of the work relied upon. For example, at p. 13 as regards Avanti he mentions Pāṇini IV. 176, which should be IV. 1. 176. Further, he has omitted several well-known tīrthas (e. g. Daśāśvamedhika). He is sometimes wrong in what he says. On p. 54 he states that Kiṣkindhā-kāṇḍa 43 refers to Devadāruvana as a proper name, but there the context ('lodhrapadmaka-ṣaṇḍesu devadāruvanesu ca' in verse 15) shows that what is meant is 'forests of Deodar trees'). On p. 73 he says Bharatavarsa was first called Haimavata-varsa, but the passage of the Liṅgapurāṇa (I. 49. 7) on which he relies (idam haimavatam varsam Bhāratam nāma viśrutam) does not bear that out. There is no reference to a prior account here and all that is meant is that Bhāratavarsa is connected with Himavat, as a previous passage (I. 47. 23 Himādrer-dakṣiṇam varsam Bharatāya nyavedayat) expressly states that Bhāratāvarsa is to the south of Himālaya. In Śalya 44. 52 Sarasvatī is called Haimavatī, but that does not mean that Haimavatī was the name of Sarasvatī in far-off ages It simply means that it 'rises in Himavat range.' Only a comparison of the list prepared by me with Dey's work will show the difference in details between the two. I should not undertake that task and leave it to scholarly readers.

I have carefully read the two Epics and most of the Purāṇas. But I do not cite exhaustive references to all the texts where a particular tīrtha is mentioned. I feel satisfied with mentioning two or three. Owing to the several restrictions imposed upon myself this list cannot claim to be thoroughly exhaustive. But I hope that it is comprehensive enough and far larger and more informative than any list of tīrthas presented by any scholar so far. There is ample scope for industrious scholars to improve upon and to add to this list. I have included important tīrthas from Kashmir and given copious references to the Nīlamata-purāṇa, the Rāja-taraṅgiṇī and the Hara-carita-cintāmaṇi. I am highly obliged to the Kashmir Report of Dr. Buhler (published as a special number for 1877 by the B B R A S), to Stein's notes in his translation of the Rāja-taranginī and his memoir on the Ancient Geography of Kashmir published separately (and also embodied in the 2nd volume of the translation of Kalhaṇa's work). All the names of tīrthas are transliterated into the English alphabet and arranged according to the English mode of spelling. For the Mahābhārata references are given to the oblong Bombay edition and by citing names of parvans, but in the case of the Rāmāyana Roman figures I to VII are employed for the Bāla, Ayodhyā, Aranya, Kiskindhā, Sundara, Yuddha and Uttara kāṇḍas respectively. For the Rāmāyana I have used the edition brought out by the Madras Law Journal Press in 1933. Among Purānas the Ānandāśrama editions of the Agni, Brahma, Brahmavaivarta, Matsya, Vāyu and Padma have been relied upon and as to the rest of the Mahāpurānas the Venkateśvara Press editions have been used (except in the case of the Nrasimhapurāna of which the edition of Messrs. Gopal Narayan & Co. and the Bhāgavatapurāna, of which the Nirnayasāgara edition of the bare text have been referred to). The Skandapurāna has been a source of great trouble and labour. Owing to the limited time at my disposal I have not been able to digest thoroughly the ninety thousand and odd verses of that purāna, though I have very carefully gone into the Kāśikhanda and some other khandas. Besides, there are two separate recensions of the Skanda and large portions of it appear to be apocryphal and later additions. The seven big sections of the Skanda viz Maheśvarakhanda, Vaisnava, Brāhma, Kāśī, Āvantya, Nāgara, Prabhāsa are indicated by Roman figures from I to VII and the sub-sections by Arabic figures. Some of these sub-sections have further sub-divisions into Pūrvārdha and Uttarārdha.

I have made endeavours to locate the tīrthas as far as possible. Inscriptions have been drawn upon in several cases for locating the tīrthas and for their antiquities and history. The principal Sanskrit authorities (except Kalhana) are often very vague as compared with even foreign writers like Hiouen Thsang, Alberuni and Abul Fazal. Where I was not myself sure I have given references to the texts alone, and in some cases to the views of Cunningham, Dey, Pargiter and others If the same name happens to be given to different tīrthas located at different places, I have indicated the several different places bearing the same name by employing the capital letters

A, B, C and so on. I may state that I have hardly ever remained content by borrowing references to Sanskrit authorities given by my predecessors, but have seen personally each reference to Sanskrit works except where I expressly state from whom I borrow a particular reference Sorensen's Index of the Mahābhārata and the Vedic Index of Macdonell and Keith have been used in several places I have also derived material help from the volumes of the Imperial Gazetteer and from the several volumes of the Bombay Gazetteer. The same may be said about Wilson's translation of Visnupurāna (ed. by Hall, 1864-1877), Pargiter's notes to his translation of the Mārkandeyapurāṇa, Dr. B. C. Law's paper on the 'mountains and rivers of India' in the Journal of the Department of Letters, Calcutta University, vol. 28 and Dr. Hemchandra Raychaudhuri's 'Studies in Indian Antiquities' (1932), and the paper on 'Ancient towns and cities in Gujarat and Kathiawad' in I.A. vol. 54. I have consulted only a few Māhātmyas of tīrthas. Recently, Prof. V. R. Ramchandra Dikshitar of Madras has published a useful work 'The Purāna Index' (volumes I and II covering over 1400 pages) which collects material from five Purānas only viz. the Bhāgavata, Brahmānda, Matsya, Vāyu and Visnu. The two volumes reach up to the Sanskrit letter 'ma' only. I, for my part, do not agree with much that he says about the age of the Purānas in general and of the five Purānas (which he has digested) in particular, but this is not the place to go into that question Besides, his work has to be used with some caution. In several places the work is misleading. To take only a few examples. On p. 547 he lists 'Godhūma', makes the remark 'fit for śrāddha' and cites four references from the Visnupurāna alone. One may prima facie think that Godhūma is here some place fit for śrāddha. As a matter of fact in all the references from the Visnupurāna 'Godhūma' means 'wheat' and nothing more, which no doubt is fit food for śrāddha But other fit things such as 'iksu' (declared to be fit for śrāddha by Vāyu 78. 7-8) are not included at all. On p 123 Aśokavana is not a proper name, but only a forest of Asoka trees, as the preceding word 'drāksāvana' (in Vāyu 38 68) indicates So also Kamalaprabhava (not 'prabhavā' as printed on p. 316 of vol. I) is not a river (in Matsya 163. 62, Ānandāśrama ed) but is only an adjective of the word Śona that follows. On p. 316 of vol. II he states that the river Pārā rises from Ṛsyavān, but the Matsya 114. 24 on which he relies says it springs from Pāriyātra. On the same page he gives the entry 'Pārāvāratata sacred to Matā'. This makes no sense. Pārāvāratata would mean 'the shore of the sea'. What is really meant is that Devī is styled or worshipped as Pārā on the bank of the Pārā river (Pārā Pārātate matā). He does not compare the readings of the several printed editions of the five purānas. Besides, the information furnished is very meagre. If the whole had been printed in a compact form far more information could have been given in the same number of pages.

In some places I have indicated the rewards promised for bathing in the tīrthas; but I have not done so in every case. The purānas promise one or more of the following rewards viz. the same merit as the performance of Aśvamedha or Vājapeya or other solemn Vedic sacrifices or reaching the highest worlds such as those of Brahmā, Visnu or Śiva, the destruction of the gravest sins such as brāhmana murder, the same merit as arises from gifts of a thousand cows &c.

Many of the doubts and difficulties about the identification of several tīrthas can, if at all, be solved only by means of actual journeys to various places and investigations on the spot. That is a task which would require for its proper accomplishment a team of workers. A single individual can hardly attempt such a task with his own resources.

This list will, it is hoped, be of some use in elucidating several problems such as the questions about the relative antiquity of the purānas, the dates of several Sanskrit works which mention the tīrthas and the questions about borrowing on the part of purānas among themselves and from the Mahābhārata.

Daśārṇa is a word meaning a country having ten forts or 'a river (Daśārṇā) having ten waters' The Vārtikas are 'pra-vat-satara-kambalavasanānām carne' and 'ṛnadaśābhyām ca'. Meghadūta I. 23-24 show that the capital of the Daśārṇa country was Vidiśā (modern Bhilsā) and the Vetravatī (Betwa river) was near it It is the Dosaron of Ptolemy (p. 71) Br. NM 152-153 say that it is holy like Irāvatī, is identified with Umā and located in Madra i e. between Rāvī and Chenab Pān (VII.3 1) expressly mentions the river Devikā and the Mbh thereon gives the illustration, 'Dāvikākūlāh śālayaḥ' (paddy grown on the banks of the Devikā is so called). Pāṇini probably mentions some river in the Panjab. Dey p 55 says that the southern portion of Sarayū is called Devikā or Devā. Vām 84. 12 refers to Devikātīrtha brāhmaṇas. SK VII Prabhāsa-māhātmya, chap. 278 66-67 speak of Mūlasthāna (modern Multan) as situated on the Devikā, P I. 25 9-14 (5 yojanas long and ½ yojana wide). In Vi. II 15 6 the city called Vīranagara is said to be situated on the bank of the Devikā and as founded by Pulastya Devikā is not Sarayū, as in the Anu 165. 19 and 21 they two are separately named. Br. S. 11 35 says that a certain malignant Ketu would strike down even Devikā in the north. Pargiter (tr of Mār, p. 292) identified it with the river Deeg or Degh in the Punjab, Dr. V. S. Agrawala with the Vular lake in Kashmir (J. U P. H. S. vol. 16 pp 21-22) and Mr. Jagannātha (in J. U. P H.S vol 17 part 2 p. 78 supports Pargiter With respect I agree with Mr. Jagannātha

Dvārakā—A—the name of this holy city does not occur in the Vedic Literature but the references to it in the Mahābhārata and the Purāṇas are plentiful. It is one of the seven holy cities Vide p 678 It appears that there were two Dvārakās, one more ancient than the other The ancient Dvārakā was situated near Kodinar. A little mound which rises on the sea-shore between the mouths of the rivers Somat and Singāvra three miles from Kodinar is surrounded by the ruins of a temple which popular Hindu belief declares to be the original Dvārakā, where Kṛṣṇa resided and whence transferred himself to Dvārakā in Okhamandala. Vide Bombay Gazetteer, vol. VIII. (on Kathiawar) pp. 518–520 for Kodinar and p 552 for Mūla Dvārakā. It was founded by Kṛṣṇa (with Raivataka as a park and Gomanta as a hill) owing to constant invasions and harassment by Jarāsandha; it was two yojanas long and one yojana broad. Vide Sabhāparva 14. 49–55. The Var. (149. 7–8) makes it 10 yojanas long and 5 broad Vide p 688 above under Mathurā. B (14. 54–56) says that the Vṛṣṇis and Andhakas left Mathurā through fear of Kālayavana, took counsel with Kṛṣṇa, ran to Kuśasthalī and built up Dvārakā: Vi V. 23. 13–15. B 196 13–15 say that Kṛṣṇa begged of the ocean a strip of twelve yojanas, built Dvārakā with large parks, mansions and strong walls and established the people of Mathurā there. When Kṛṣṇa passed away, the city was flooded by the sea and swept away, as stated in a prophetic vein by Mausala-parva 6.23–24 and 7. 41–42. B 210. 55 and 212. 9. Vide also Vi. V. 38 9 (the whole of Dvārakā except Kṛṣṇa's palace was swept by the sea) and BV IV. 129. 44 (except Rukmiṇī's palace). It is called the capital of Ānarta (Udyoga 7. 6) and was first called Kuśasthalī (Sabhā 14. 50) Vide M 69. 9 = P. V. 23. 10, B. 7.29–32 and Ag 273. 12 (Kuśasthalī being the earlier name of the capital). The present Dvārakā is near Okhā in Kathiawar. The Harivaṃśa II (Viṣṇuparva) chapters 58 and 98 deal with the founding of Dvārakā Some ancient Jain works like the Uttarādhyayanasūtra (SBE. vol. 45 p.115) mention Dvārakā and Raivataka park (Girnar). The Jātakas also refer to Dvārakā. Vide Dr. B C. Law's work on 'India as described in early texts of Buddhism and Jainism' pp. 102, 239. The Prabhāsakhaṇḍa of the SK has a sub-section on Dvārakā in 44 chapters and over 2000 verses for the glorification of Dvārakā. It says 'the reward that is secured by (pilgrimage to) Vārāṇasī, Kurukṣetra and Narmadā can be secured at Dvārakā in half a twinkle (4. 52)'; "Pilgrimage to Dvārakā is the 4th means of mukti. Man secures mukti by acquiring correct knowledge about Brahman or by dying at Prayāga or by mere bath in Gomatī near Kṛṣṇa" (SK. VII. 4. 4. 97–98). The BV. (Kṛṣṇajanmakhaṇḍa, Uttarārdha chap. 103) has a hyperbolical description of the creation of Dvārakā, which is said to have been one hundred yojanas in extent. There is a work called Dvārakā-pattalaka compiled by Bīnābāyī (the only Ms. of which is the one at B O. R I. in Poona) which has been published by Dr. J B. Chaudhuri (1940). The Ms is dated saṁvat 1574 (1518 A. D). It summarises the Dvārakā-māhātmya in SK. A pilgrim on reaching Dvārakā first worships Gaṇeśa, then Balarāma and then Kṛṣṇa; he visits Rukmiṇī's temple on the 8th, 9th or 14th tithi, then visits Cakratīrtha, then Dvārakā Gaṅgā, then Śaṅkhoddhāra, then bathes in the Gomatī. The temple of Dvārakānātha is on the north bank of the Gomatī creek. The main temple has five stories, is about 100 feet high from the ground and is surmounted by a conical spire rising to about 150 feet. Vide Dr. A. D. Pusalkar's paper in the Dr. B. C. Law presentation volume I pp. 218 ff. for further information on Dvārakā;

Dvāravatī—Same as Dvārakā It contained the temple of Nāgeśa, one of the twelve Jyotirliṅgas The Kāśikhaṇḍa (7. 104–105) states: 'since in this city there are entrance gates for all the four varṇas it was named Dvāravatī by the learned Where even the bones of beings are marked with the sign of the wheel (discus), what wonder is there if the hands (of men) are marked with the figures of a conch or wheel?' In a Dvārakā-māhātmya stated to be taken from the Skanda-purāṇa (D C. Ms. No. 49 of 82–83, copied in saṁvat 1529 i. e. 1472–73 A. D.) it is stated that Mathurā, Kāśī and Avantī are easy of access (sulabha), but Ayodhyā, Māyā and Dvārakā are difficult of approach in the Kali age and in Ms D. C. No. 63 of 1875–76 it is said at the end that the city is called Dvāravatī because it is the way to mokṣa. It is identified by Yule and others with Barake of the Periplus (Ptolemy pp. 187–188.)

Ekāmraka—(in Utkala, Orissa, about 20 miles from Cuttack) This is Rudra-tīrtha Ekāmraka is the ancient name, the modern one being Bhuwaneśvara. It was also called Kṛttivāsa B (chap 41. 10–93) describes and glorifies this tīrtha, all those verses being quoted in T C pp 176–180 It is said to be the destroyer of sin, equal to Benares, and as having eight sub-tīrthas and it was so called because in former ages there was one mango tree (B. 34 6 and 41 10–93) Vide Hunter's 'Orissa' vol. I p 231–241 and Mitra's 'Antiquities of Orissa' vol. II pp. 56–98 for history, description, daily services and festivals &c. The chief temple is 160 feet high from the base to the top of the kalaśa. In the Bhuvaneśvara Inscription (edited by Dr L. D Barnett) in E I. XIII p 150 it is stated that Candrikā, daughter of the Gaṅga king Anaṅga-Bhīma and widow of Haihaya prince Paramardin, built a temple of Viṣṇu at Ekāmra In that inscription among other matters there is a laudation of Utkala, of the sanctuary of Ekāmra and of the lake Bindusaras (mentioned in B 41. 53–54). The date of the inscription is doubtful. But it is between śake 1101–1200. There is a vast number of temples and shrines here. I do not agree with Cunningham (A G. p. 353) that Haridvāra is a comparatively modern name, since Alberuni mentions only Gangādvāra Both SK IV and P IV mention Haridvāra and it cannot be said that they both are later than Alberuni (i. e 1030 A D.). Himavat—In Rg. X. 121 4 and A V. IV. 2. 5 the plural is used (Viśve himavantah) But in A. V V, 4 2 and 8, VI. 24.1 the singular is employed. In Kenopanisad III. 25 Umā Haimavatī is mentioned. In V. 158.19, Udyoga 11.12 and Pān. IV. 4 112 Himavat is mentioned and in K. II, 37 46–49 its length is given as 1080 yojanas. It is the Varsaparvata of Bharatavarsa and the other seven chief mountains mentioned in note 1260 are 'Kulaparvatas'. M 117–118 contain fine descriptions of trees, flowers, birds and beasts on it Himālaya occurs in non-vedic works, e. g. Gītā X. 25 Himavat meant the whole mountain range stretching from Assam in the east to the mountains west of Panjab. Mār 51.24 states that Kailāsa and Himavat stretch from east to west and are situated between two seas and that Himavat is to the north of Bharatavarsa (which has seas on south, west, and east) like the string of a bow (Mār 54.59)

Kāśmīra-maṇḍala—The ancient name seems to have been Kaśmīra. The Mbh (vol II p. 119) on Pān III. 2 114 employs this form (ābhijānāsi Devadatta Kaśmīrān gamiṣyāmah) Kaśmīra as the name of a country occurs in the Sindhvādigaṇa (Pān. IV. 3. 93). In NM the country is called Kaśmīra in many verses such as 5, 11, 43, 50, but sometimes Kāśmīra also Later works also like H. C 14 45 employ the form Kaśmīra, the Vik (18 1 and 18) uses the form Kāśmīra. NM (292–93) derives the name from ka meaning water (kam vāri Hariṇā yasmād-deśād-asmād-apākṛtam | Kaśmīrākhyam tato hyasya nāma loke bhaviṣyati ||) Ptolemy speaks of it as Kaspeiria and states that the country was situated below the sources of Bidaspes (Vitastā), Sandabal (Candrabhāgā) and Adris (Irāvatī) Vide Ptolemy pp 108–109 and NM 43. The Vanaparva speaks of the whole country of Kāśmīra as holy (130 10) Ain. A. (vol II p. 354 notes that the whole of Kāśmīra is regarded as holy ground Vide also V 82. 90, S 27 17, Anu 25. 8 According to a treaty in 1846 with the Maharaja of Kashmir and Jammu the territories of the Maharaja are 'situated to the eastward of the river Indus and westward of the river Rāvi' I G I vol. XV p 72. The Kashmir valley is approximately 84 miles in length and 20 to 25 miles in breadth (I. G I vol XV p 74) Stein (SM p 63) says that its extent is confined to the great valley drained by the head waters of the Vitastā and to the minor slopes of mountains that surround it. Hiouen Thsang (Beal's B R W W vol 1. p 148) states that 'Kāśmīra kingdom is about 7000 li (one li being equal to about 5⅙ miles), that as the country is protected by a dragon it has always assumed superiority among neighbouring people, that they love learning and are well instructed and that (p. 149) the country was once a dragon lake and that afterwards it became dry' The words of Hiouen Thsang refer to an ancient legend according to which Kashmīr was originally a lake (called Satīsaras) 6 yojanas long and 3 yojanas wide and later became Satīdeśa (NM 64-66), that Umā herself is the country of Kāśmīra (NM 31), that the divine Vitastā rising in the Himālayas is like the sīmanta (line parting the hair) of this holy land (NM 45) The legend runs that Visnu conferred a boon on Vāsuki-nāga who prayed to Visnu when Garuda began to devour all nāgas that he should stay in the Satīdeśa along with the other nāgas, that no enemy would kill any nāga (NM 105-107) and that Nīla was made king of nāgas in the Satīdeśa (NM 110). The residence of Nīla is the famous fountain near the village of Vērnāg in the Shahabad pargana. A certain demon called Jalodbhava grew in the Satī lake and killed men (NM 111-123 and Vām. 81 30-33) Nīla approached the sage Kaśyapa the father of all Nāgas, at whose intercession Visnu asked Anantanāga to pierce the hills and make the lake dry and then killed the demon Jalodbhava (R I 25) Then Visnu asked the Nāgas to live in peace and harmony with men Sati became the river Vitastā Vide Kūrma II. 43 4 Nāga in Kashmīr means the tutelary deity presiding over the several holy springs, pools and lakes in which Kāśmīra abounds. Both NM (1130-31) and R (I 38) state that there is not a spot in Kāśmīra even as small as a grain of sesamum which is not a tīrtha and has not a nāga as its presiding deity In Ain A (vol II p 354) Abul Fazl notes that there were in his day 45 shrines of Mahādeva, 64 of Visnu, 3 of Brahmā and 22 of Durgā and that in 700 places there were graven images of snakes which were worshipped and about which wonderful stories were told. R (I 72) and NM (313-314) say that the country of Kāśmīra is Pārvatī, that the king thereof should be deemed to be a part of Śiva and that none who desires prosperity should disobey (or disrespect) the king R (I. 42) summarises in one verse the peculiar features of Kāśmīra viz 'learning, lofty dwellings, saffron, water containing ice and grapes, these are common here, although rare in the three worlds'

Kolla—a Śāktakṣetra acc. to Bār. S. III. 124

Kollagiri—Ag. 110 21, Bh. V. 19. 16

Konārka or Konāditya—(in Oḍra i. e. Orissa, about 24 miles north-west of Jagannātha Purī). It means 'the sun of Kona'. Konākona appears to have been the ancient name. It is a most exquisite memorial of sun-worship. It contains magnificent ruins of a temple of the Sun, which was built by the Gaṅga king Narasimhadeva (1238–1264 A.D.). It is a glorious and most beautiful example of north Indian Hindu architecture ever erected. It had a tower over 180 feet in height and a porch (mandapa) in front of 140 feet high. See Mitra's 'Antiquities of Orissa' vol II pp. 145-156 and Hunter's 'Orissa' vol I p. 288 and 'Sungod of Konārka unearthed' (with illustrations) in Modern Review for 1945 pp 67–72 The Sun temple shows some of the finest animal sculptures executed in India. Vide B. 28, verses 2, 9. 11, 47, 65 and 29.1 and T. C. pp. 180 ff. It is probably the Kannagara of Ptolemy (vide Ptolemy p 70)

Kośalā—(r. near Ayodhyā) P. I. 39. 11, VI 206 13, 207. 35–36, 208. 27. In a grant of Vākātaka king Narendrasena he is praised as honoured by the kings of Kosalā (Kosala), Mekala and Mālava. Vide E. I vol. IX p. 271.

Kotarā-tīrtha—(under Sābhramatī) P. VI. 152.2 and 13 (associated with Aniruddha for whom Kṛṣṇa fought with Bāṇāsura)

Kotarā-vana—named by Pāṇ. VI. 3 117 and VIII 4 4 Vide under Kimśuluka and Pāṇ VIII. 4. 4 for the names of five vanas.

Krauñcapadī—Anu. 25. 42

Krauñcaparvata—(part of Kailāsa on which Mānasa lake is situated) Tai. Ā. I. 31. 2 mentions this m. (Sudarśane ca Krauñce ca Maināge ca mahāgirau), Rām IV 43. 26–31, Bhī. 111. 47 (pierced by the missile of Skanda), Śal 17 51 and 46 83-84.

Krauñcāranya—(three krośas from Janasthāna) Rām III 69. 5–8

Kriyā (r rising from Ṛksavat) Br. II. 16. 29

Kṛkalāsatīrtha—(also called Nṛgatīrtha) T. P. p. 543. Anu. 6. 38 and chap. 70. Rām (VII. 53) narrates how king Nṛga became a chameleon.

Krmicandeśvara—(one of the eight Śivasthānas in Banaras) M. 181. 29

Krośodaka—Var. 215. 87–88

Kṛpā—(r. rising in m. Suktimat) M. 114. 32, Br. II. 16. 38

Kṛpāṇītīrtha—(on hill Muṇḍapṛstha in Kāśmīra) NM. 1253, 1460

Kṛṣṇā—A (r. rising in Sahya at Mahābaleśvara) B 77 5, P. VI. 113 25, Vām. 13 30, B Vām 78. 7, 90. 2 (Viṣṇu as Hayaśirsa on the river); compared to its length and modern importance the river Kṛṣṇā is rarely mentioned as Kṛṣṇā, but generally as Kṛṣṇa-Venyā or–Venā It is the third largest river of the Deccan and southern India, the other two being the Godāvarī and the Kāverī In the Mahābaleśvara mahātmya (JBBRAS vol. X. at p. 16 five rivers called Gaṅgā are said to rise from the top of Sahya near Mahābaleśvara viz. Kṛṣṇā, Venī, Kakudmatī (Koynā), Sāvitrī (that falls into the Arabian sea near Bānkot) and Gāyatrī (supposed to combine with Sāvitrī).

Kṛṣṇa gaṅgā—(under Mathurā) Var. 175. 3

Kṛṣṇagiri—(m.) Vā 45 91, Br II. 16, 22

Kṛṣṇatīrtha—(near Kurukṣetra) Vām. 81. 9

Kṛṣṇa-Venā—Bhī. 9. 16, M 22, 45, Ag. 118. 7, B 27. 35, Vā 45. 104, occurs in Emperor Khāravela's inscription in E. I. vol XX at p. 77 as Kanhabemnā) The Anu 166. 22 mentions Venyā and Kṛṣṇa-Venā separately. In the Alas plate of Rāṣṭrakūṭa Govind II dated śake 692 (769 A D.) the confluence of Kṛṣṇaverṇā and Musī is referred to (E I vol. VI. 208).

Kṛṣṇā-Venyā—(as one river and same as above) P. VI. 108, 27 (confluence of Kṛṣṇā and Venyā), VI. 113 3 and 25 (Kṛṣṇā is the body of Kṛṣṇa), Sm. C I p 132 gives a mantra for the bath in Kṛṣṇā-Venyā Vide. TS pp. 67–83, of which p. 70 states that all rivers rising from Sahya destroy sins the moment they are remembered and that Kṛṣṇa-Veṇyā is the best of all such rivers. Māhuli about four miles from Satara is at the confluence of Kṛṣṇā and Yennā (which stands for Veṇyā).

Kṛṣṇa-Veṇī—(same as above two) M. 114. 29, Rām V 41. 9 In T S. pp. 67–83 there is a māhātmya of Kṛṣṇaveṇī from SK.

Kṛtamāla—(r. rising in Malaya) Vā 45 105, B 27 36, M 114 30, Br. III. 35 17, Bh VIII 24 12, X 79. 16, XI 5. 39, Vi II 3. 13. Dey p. 104 says that it is the river Vaiga on which Madurā is situated. See under Payasvinī. The Bhāgavata says Manu practised penance on this river and helped the fish (avatāra) to grow

Kṛtaśauca—M. 13.45, 179.87, Vām. 90. 5 (has an image of Nṛsiṃha), P VI. 280 18

Krumu—(r.) Rg. V 53 9 and X. 75 6. It is generally held to be modern Kurram that falls into the Indus on its western side near Isakhel. Vide Dey p 105 for other views

Kṣamā—(r. rising from Ṛṣyavat) M. 114. 25

Kṣemeśvara—(under VS) L. q by T. K 117

Kṣiprā—(r. rising in Vindhya m.) M. 114 27, Vām. 83 18–19 Some printed works write it as Śiprā (Vāyu 45. 98) or Sipra The printed Matsya says that Kṣiprā rises from Vindhya, while in 114.24 it mentions Śiprā as rising from Pāriyātra m. The printed Brahma (chap. 27) mentions Siprā twice, one rising from Pāriyātra (verse 29) and the other rising from Vindhya (verse 33). It is doubtful whether there were two rivers of the same name The Brahmāṇḍa II 16 29 and 32 (Kṣiprā in both places) is just like the Brahma

Kṣīravatī—(r) V 84 68 (reached after Sarasvatī and Bāhudā)

Kubhā—(probably modern Kabul river) Rg. V. 53. 9 and X. 75. 6. It is the Kophes of Ptolemy and Kophen of Arrian (A I. p 179) The Kabul river joins the Indus at Ohind, a few miles north of Attock. Pāṇ. V 1. 77 (Uttarapathenāhṛtam ca) mentions Uttarapatha (the road in the north that crossed the Sindhu near Attock)

Kubjaka—N. II. 60 25, G. I 81. 10 (Kubjake Śrīdharo Hariḥ)

Kubjāmraka—(it had a hermitage of Raibhya near Gaṅgādvāra) V 84. 40, M. 22. 66, P I. 32 5. VDh. S 85.15, K. II. 20 33, G. I. 81. 10 hold it a very eminent place for śrāddha Var 125. 101 and 132 and 126. 33 appear to identify it with Māyātīrtha (i. e Haridvāra) Var. 126 contains a māhātmya of this place and 23 verses of it are quoted in T.K pp. 206–208 without a single word by way of comment Chap. 126. 10–12 explain why it is so called (a mango tree was seen by sage Raibhya as informed by God and he became bent in reverence). There is doubt about its exact location. Var. 179. 26-31 aver that Mathurā is superior to Saukara-tīrtha, which again is superior to Kubjāmraka. Var 140.60-64 explain how the holy place Hrsīkeśa came to be so called. On the whole it is better to take Kubjāmraka as a sacred spot in Haridvāra itself or very near it.

Kubjāsaṅgama—(with Narmadā) P. II. 92 32

Kumārī—(Cape Comorin, where there is a temple of Kumārī Devī in which there is a fine image of the goddess as a maiden). Ptolemy mentions it as Koumaria while the Periplus refers to it as Komar or Komarei, V. 88 14 (in the plural as 'Kumāryah' in the Pāndya country), Vā. 77. 28, Br. III 13. 28. Br. II 16 11 and M 114. 10 state that the 9th dvīpa of Bhāratavarsa extends from Kumārī to the source of the Ganges. Śabara on Jaimini, X. 1. 35 asserts that the word 'Caru' is used in the sense of sthālī from the Himālaya to the Kumārī country.

Naimisa or Naimiśa—(a forest) A country round Nimsār on the Gomatī, 45 miles from Lucknow In Kāthaka Samhitā X. 6 we have 'Naimisyā vai sattram-āsata'; while in Pañcavimśa Br 25. 6, 4 occurs Naimiśīya and Kausītaki Br 26 5 has Naimisiyānām' and 28 4 also In the great Epic and Purānas it is mentioned very often, vide V 84 59–64 (all tīrthas on the earth are centred in Naimisa), V 87. 5–7 (on Gomatī in east), M 109 3 (most holy on the earth), K. II 20 34, K II. 43 1–16 (very dear to Mahādeva), Vā 2 8, Br. I 2 8 (both derive it as 'bhramato dharmacakrasya yatra nemir-aśīryata' from 'nemi' rim of a wheel and śr 'to be shattered'), B 1. 3–10 (fine description), Vāyu (I 14–15) makes it clear that the great sattra of the sages of Naimisāranya was in Kuruksetra on the Drsadvatī But Vā 2,9 and Br I. 2 9 say that it was on the Gomatī. It is possible that Gomatī is only an adjective. It was here that enmity between Vasistha and Viśvāmitra flourished, Kalmāsapāda was cursed by Śakti and Parāśara was born. Vi. III. 14 18 states that by a bath in Gaṅgā, Yamunā, Naimiśa-gomatī and other rivers and by honouring pitrs one destroys all sins B—Br S XI. 60 says that a malignant Ketu in Uttarā-Bhādrapadā destroys king of Naimisa, Sārasvatatīrtha — Śal 50 (story of Asita Devala and Jaigīṣavya), 51 (birth of Sārasvata from Sarasvatī, who taught the Vedas to sages in a drought for twelve years)

Sarasvatī—(modern Sarsuti) A—The river starts from Brahmasaras, acc to Śalya 51 19, from Badarikāśrama acc. to Vām. 2 42–43 and from Plakṣa tree acc. to Vām 32 3–4, P. V 18 159–160 (say that Sarasvatī was asked to cast the Vāḍava fire into the sea in the west) This is probably an allusion to volcanic action whereby Sarasvatī disappeared Vām. 3 8 says that as Śaṅkara guilty of Brahmahatyā plunged into it, it disappeared, while elsewhere (e g in V. 130 3–4) it is said that it disappeared through fear of the touch of śūdras, Niṣādas and Ābhīras and Anu. (155 25–27) states that Sarasvatī went to Marudeśa owing to curse by Utathya and became dry and unholy. After disappearing it becomes visible at Camasodbheda, Śivodbheda and Nāgodbheda The Sarasvatī in Kurukṣetra, was called prācī Sarasvatī (P V 18. 181–182). See Dey pp. 180–181 for several Sarasvatīs V 130 1–2 state that those who die on the Sarasvatī go to heaven and this was the blessing conferred by Dakṣa when he performed a sacrifice there Vide Oldham's paper in JRAS for 1893 pp 49–76, B—There is another holy river of the same name rising in the south-west end of Aravali hills and flowing south-west through the districts of Palanpur, Mahikantha and Baroda and past the ancient cities of Anhilvād and Siddhapur and falling into the lesser Runn of Cutch Vide under Prabhāsa

Śarāvatī—(Probably Rāpti in Oudh) Bhī 9 20, Pāṇ VI 3 120 (Śarādīnām ca) knew the river Śarāvatī, Kṣīrasvāmin (in com. on Amara 'Śarāvatyāstu yoṣvadheḥ') quotes a verse 'prāgudañcau vibhajate haṁsaḥ kṣīrodake yathā I viduṣām śabdasiddhyartham sā naḥ pātu Śarāvatī II.' Dr. Agrawala in (J.U.P H.R S. vol. 16 p 15 surmises that it is the Ghaggar flowing through Ambala District I have grave doubts about this. It is possible that when the Sarasvatī became dried and only a marshy bed was left it was called Śarāvatī, but that in the times of the Amarakośa, Śarāvatī is probably the river Śarāvatī which falls into the sea near Honavar (North Kanara District) on which are the famous Gersappa falls. In the Raghuvaṃśa (XV. 97) Śarāvatī is said to have been the capital of Lava, son of Rāma

Sarayū—(r) Ṛg IV. 30 18, V. 33. 9, X 64 9 (Sarasvatī, Sarayu and Sindhu are mentioned together). In all these places the word is Sarayu, while in classical Sanskrit it is Sarayū or Sarayū (M 22. 19, Vā 45 94, N II. 75. 71, Raghuvaṃśa 15 95 and 100). M. 121 16-17 and Br II. 18 70 show that Sarayū springs from the Mānasa lake situated at the foot of the Vaidyutagiri Ayodhyā was situated on the Sarayū (Rām II. 49. 15) Sarayū rises from Himālaya (Vā 45 94, M 114. 21) According to Pāṇ VI. 4 174 (Dāṇḍināyana—) the water of Sarayū was called Sārava (Kāśikā says 'Sarayvām bhavam sāravam udakam') In the Cullavagga (SBE vol XX p 302) it is one of the five great rivers of India and in 'Questions of Milinda' (SBE vol 35 p 171) it is one of ten great rivers, but in both places it is written as Sarabhū. Vide T P pp 500, 501 where it is stated that it rises from the left toe of Viṣṇu and is joined by Ghargara It is the Sarabos of Ptolemy (p 99). It is also called the Ghogra or Gharghara

CONCLUDING REMARKS ON TĪRTHAS

At the end of this long list of tīrthas a few words, as promised on p. 722 above, must be said about the attitude that we Indians of the 20th century should adopt towards the mountains, rivers and other holy places in Bhārata. Modern secular education and the prevailing economic conditions, stresses and trends leave hardly any room for moral and spiritual uplift. We are surrounded on all sides by anxiety, want, misery, hardness of heart and crime. Therefore, the endeavour of all those who have the good of our country at heart must be to cherish all such institutions as tend to lift the mind out of narrowness and to make it concentrate for some time at least on noble thoughts and aspirations and on detachment from the all-engrossing pursuit of money. Pilgrimage is one of such institutions. Those who have faith in pilgrimages as enabling a pilgrim to attain heaven, to collect merit and reach release from samsāra should give pilgrimages a new orientation, should see that their charity is not wasted on indolent, ignorant and vicious priests, should improve the methods of worship at holy places in such a way as will satisfy all hygienic requirements. The priestly class at holy places should remember that in the coming generations they are likely to find their occupation gone, unless they improve themselves, unless they try to be less ignorant and indolent than they are at present and really serve as honest business agents or Travellers' Guides The number of people visiting holy places in the belief of accumulating merit is sure to become less and less, as modern secular education spreads. But it would be a calamity for the moral and spiritual greatness of India if pilgrimages to holy mountains and rivers came to be stopped altogether. I would very strongly recommend to all men, however highly educated, the undertaking of pilgrimages to certain hallowed spots. Our country has recently secured independence and it now rests entirely with us to make or mar the character of the teeming millions of this our land. All things that tend to create in Indians the deep feeling that amidst diversities of physical features, food, dress and habits, all of them are one people, that there is no part or district of this vast land which cannot claim to have made some substantial contribution in religious and philosophical thought, in abiding literature, in works of art and in holy places, that the destinies of the Indians of one part of Bhārata are bound up with the destinies of all others. Frequent visits to distant places in Bhārata, mixing up among people of other parts and understanding their peculiar good points, needs and failings is absolutely necessary if we are to keep our freedom. India is thrice blest in the mountain ranges of the Himālaya, which contains the highest peaks in the world and is full of large and life-giving rivers and of numerous shrines associated with the names of the greatest sages and heroes of antiquity. Every Indian who is proud of the great religious and spiritual heritage of our country must make it a point to devote some part of his time to frequenting holy mountains, rivers and other places of pilgrimage. When we see even from a distance the purity, the whiteness and the serenity of the snow-capped peaks of the Himālaya, the play of delicate and exquisite hues and tints of blue, mauve, and pink when the sun begins to shine on them, a sense of wonder, joy and elevation comes upon us. The glorious view of a peak like Kinchinjunga, which is an unforgettable experience, lifts up the whole life of the onlooker to a higher plane for long. Similarly, the sight of the holy Ganges at night or at sunrise in Haridvāra or on the majestic Ghats in Banaras surely empties our minds of meanness and for the moment at least fills our hearts with a sense of nature's beauty and with purity, and brings us in tune with the Infinite. I may state here that the talk of the conquest of Everest in which some members of European expeditions indulge jars on my ears. This great peak has so far vanquished (physically) all those who attempted the conquest § But in a figurative sense Everest and other high peaks have been for ages conquering the hearts of men. Even the members of these expeditions will admit that Everest and its brethren have drawn men to themselves from all parts of the world, made them give up their usual uneventful and placid activities, have evoked in those who attempt the climbing of these giants unbelievable courage, endurance, resourcefulness and self-abnegation and have been instrumental in exhibiting to the world what unknown powers the human spirit possesses. Therefore, these silent but awe-inspiring peaks should be looked upon as teachers of mankind and not as material things to be conquered and dealt with by human beings as they please § While these pages were passing through the Press, news was broadcast on the very morning of the coronation of Queen Elizabeth II that Sherpa Tensing Norkay and Mr Edmund Hillary, two members of Col. Hunt's British Expedition, had successfully climbed to the top of Mount Everest.

APPENDIX—of long Sanskrit Passages

Page 118 Note 267. On pp. 117-118 above reference has been made to the re-admission into the Hindu fold of those that had been converted to Christianity or Islam by force or fraud or even voluntarily. Not only was there re-admission of those that were converted, but non-Hindus, such as Yavanas, Kirātas, Śakas, were absorbed into the Hindu fold and were induced to adopt the practices of Hindus (such as śrāddhas and gifts to brāhmanas) Vide Śāntiparva chap. 65. 13-21 quoted above in note 830 (p. 364). A Greek ambassador of king Antalikita (Antialkidas) named Heliodora, son of Diya (Dion), was accredited to the court of king Bhāgabhadra, called himself Bhāgavata and raised a column in honour of Vāsudeva in the 2nd century B. C. (JRAS 1909, pp. 1053 and 1087 and JBBRAS vol. 23 p 104). Usavadāta, son of Dinīka and son-in-law of Ksatrapa Nahapāna, is described in one of the Nasik inscriptions (No. 14a in E. I vol. VIII at p. 85) as a śaka, but made very extensive donations to brāhmanas at Broach, Prabhāsa and other places. Part of one of his inscriptions is cited on p. 710 note 1618 above. Though the name Usavadāta (Ṛsabhadatta) is a Sanskritized one the two names Dinīka and Nahapāna of the Ksaharāta race appear to be non-Indian. Abhīras, Hūnas and Gurjaras became absorbed into the Hindu community. People, after being made Moslems, returned to their original communities and gods. Moslem writers make this clear. Vide Elliot and Dowsons' 'History of India' vol. I. p. 126 ('the people of India had returned to idolatry, excepting those of Kasa') and Alberuni's India (tr. by Sachau) vol. II. pp. 162-163 where he refers to the return of Hindu slaves in Moslem countries to their country and religion. Prof. D. R. Bhandarkar in 'Some aspects of Ancient Indian Culture' (1940) pp. 59-65 presents a very lucid and informing summary of the evidence on this point of the re-admission of those that were converted and of the absorption of non-Hindus. But it is not known what procedure was followed for this purpose. Therefore, a model rite for the return of a convert is set out here.

The text of the आशौचदशक here printed is based on three mss. from the Deccan College collection (now at the Bhandarkar Oriental Institute, Poona), viz. No. 216 of 1879-80 copied in samvat 1539 (1482 A D.), No. 196 of 1884-1887 copied in samvat 1578 (1521 A D.) and No 85 of 1895-1902 copied in samvat 1780. All these mss. contain the bhāsya of Harihara, which ascribes the work to विज्ञानेश्वर In the first ms the commentary on the first three verses is wanting. I intended at first to give explanations in Sanskrit of these verses (as p 308 will indicate) but owing to considerations of space I omitted the Sanskrit explanations.

Vol. IV (of the History of Dharmaśāstra)

(N. B. This Index deals with pages 1–727 only. As the list of tīrthas from p 730 onwards is arranged alphabetically, no entries from these pages are included in this Index, except in very rare cases for special reasons. When the name of a person or work occurs both in the body of the book as well as in the foot-notes on the same page, only the page is entered and nothing else).

hastas) in all directions from the shrine of Viśveśvara 628, āyatanas, fourteen named 640, belief that dying in Banaras freed one from samsāra, led the old and decrepit to crowd in K. and persons about to die were removed to the banks of the Ganges 626, called Jitvarī by traders 621, construction and endowment of mathas at K. highly eulogised 639, conclusions drawn from the stories in the Epic and Purānas that Banaras was once a centre of non-Aryan worship criticized 622–623; Daśāśvamedha-ghāt famed for centuries 634–635, derivation and significance of the name Kāśī 625; eulogies of greatness and uniqueness of K cover thousands of verses 629, famed for the qualities of its cloth in the second century B. C. 619, first called Ānandakānana and then Avimukta 624; five questions about K. asked by sages to Bhrgu in the Padmapurāna 623; for devotees of Śiva there is no other remedy even in great calamities or incurable diseases than touching the water of the feet of the image of God 641, Ganeśas are 56 at K. 638; ghāts in Banaras for at least a thousand years 634–637, hardly any other city in the world can claim greater antiquity, greater continuity and greater popular veneration than Banaras 618; hyperbolic descriptions of the results of bathing and dying in Kāśī in the Purānas 629-630, in the times of Buddha, Banaras was a great and famous city like Rājagrha, Śāketa, Śrāvasti 621, individual tīrthas in K. described 632-640; it is said that mere residence in K till death not only frees a man from such sins as brāhmana-murder, but also frees him from the cycle of births and deaths 566, is called Ānandakānana because it gives joy to Śiva 626, Jābālopanisad gives an esoteric meaning to Avimukta, Varanā and Nāsī 625-626; Jain works like the Kalpasūtra say that Arhat Pārśva was born in Banaras 621, Jñānavāpī, origin and importance of 638; Kapālamocana-ghāt at K. is ancient 639; Kāśīkhanda, a part of Skandapurāna, devotes 15000 verses to Banaras and subtīrthas 623, known under five names from ancient times viz. Vārānasī, Kāśī, Avimukta, Ānandakānana and Śmaśāna or Mahāśmaśāna 624; lauded and described at great length in several Purānas 623; lingas and tīrthas at K. mentioned in some purānas are numerous 639-40; Lolārka is one of the twelve shrines of the Sun in K 633n, 634; Manikarnikā pool is the most holy among tīrthas at K. 635, mantras recited when contemplating Manikarnikā 633, Mlecchas, insects, birds, beasts, worms after death in K. find happiness 630, by identifying Asi and Varanā with Idā and other nādīs mystic flavour is imparted to those names 631; name Avimukta, derived and explained in two ways 626, name Śmaśāna or Mahāśmaśāna due to various causes 626-627, name Vārānasī is derived from the two rivers Varanā (modern Barnā) and Asi, which are respectively the northern and southern boundaries of the modern city 625, name was spelt as Benares up to recent times, but now it is spelt as Banaras 618, Nāradīyapurāna says that Banaras was at first the city of Mādhava, but later on became Śaiva-ksetra 622n, Nārāyanabhatta says that in the case of Viśveśvara-linga there is no blemish due to the touch of the untouchable 633, one should not commit the slightest sin in K. as punishment is relatively far heavier 638, Pañcagangā-ghāt, so called because five rivers, Kiranā
